This is not a prediction. It is a firm judgment based on the pattern of the long struggle of American Negroes for equal rights and of the resistance to this struggle. The evidence is convincing that the violence of the resistance has generally been in direct proportion to the thrust of the Negroes' quest. At times the North has joined the South in this resistance, with varying degrees of unanimity in both sections.

THE MORE STOUTLY abolitionists condemned slavery, the more vigorously the South defended it. Some northerners supported southern views, and a few led mobs in northern cities against abolitionists, men and women, white and Negro. When Lincoln's election in 1860 caused alarm that he would prevent the expansion of slavery into free territories and that he might emancipate slaves, the Southern states began the secession which led to the Civil War and to emancipation. Draft riots in New York City in July 1863 dramatized the opposition of some Northerners to a war that was clearly being fought for emancipation.

After the war, the South resisted so successfully the efforts of the Federal Government to give Negroes a measure of civil rights that, by the beginning of the twentieth century, the Federal Government had practically abandoned its efforts. Most white leaders in the North, most leading Northern magazines and newspapers acquiesced in the victory of the South. Negro leaders, with the notable exception of the late W.E.B. Du Bois, faced the future with gloom and despair.

The first 15 years of the twentieth century were relatively calm, primarily because neither the Federal Government nor Negroes and their few white allies made efforts that seemed Court decisions, caused mild apprehension among the defenders of the old order.

This apprehension exploded in a new "Southern revolt" after the Supreme Court in 1954 declared segregation in public schools unconstitutional and in 1955 established guidelines for implementing the 1954 decision. President Dwight D. Eisenhower muted the force of this "revolt" when he sent federal troops in 1957 to prevent Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas from using the National Guard to keep Negro children out of Central High School in Little Rock.

The mild civil rights law of 1957, the first civil rights law since 1875, and the slightly stronger civil rights law of 1960 irritated the South and caused sporadic efforts to circumvent them.

After the fiasco of Faubus, Southern states resorted to ingenious laws and delaying court actions to permit only token school desegregation. Rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission which prohibited segregation in railway and bus terminals, Supreme Court decisions which extended the principle of the school cases to busses, streetcars and public recreational facilities caused further perturbations—again, especially in the South, but to some degree in the North.

The gathering storm became a hurricane when President John F. Kennedy in October 1962 used federal marshals, the Mississippi National Guard and Regular Army units to enroll a Negro, James H. Meredith, at the University of Mississippi. The hurricane hardly abated when, last June, Gov. George Wallace or Alabama made his futile stand in the doorway to prevent the enrollment of a Negro student at the University of Alabama.

MEANWHILE a strong gale had developed as the result of renewed freedom rides, sit-ins, wade - ins, kneel - ins, boycotts and, above all, of street demonstrations. These activist movements led President Kennedy to send to Congress on June 19 a special message calling for more comprehensive civil rights legislation than he had proposed in February.

In mid-August 1963, the ef-leaders in the North, most leading Northern magazines and newspapers acquiesced in the victory of the South. Negro leaders, with the notable exception of the late W.E.B. Du Bois, faced the future with gloom and despair.

The first 15 years of the twentieth century were relatively calm, primarily because neither the Federal Government nor Negroes and their few white allies made efforts that seemed to threaten the victory of the South in imposing its will on the nation. Little heed was paid to the "revolt of Negro intellectuals," led by Du Bois, then an authentic American radical.

Practically no one foresaw in 1910 the later menace of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and of the National Urban League to the supporters of second-class citizenship. Two Supreme Court decisions in 1915 which for the first time declared unconstitutional state action limiting Negro suffrage aroused little concern because the decisions involved only the border states of Oklahoma and Maryland.

WORLD WAR I jolted the complacency of opponents of Negroes' increasing demands. Negroes from the South joined Northern Negroes in a new militancy; Negro troops returning from France wanted to enjoy at home some of the democracy for which they had supposedly fought. Bloody riots in some Northern and Southern cities failed to convince many Negroes that they should continue to accept their subordinate place in American society.

In the late 1920s the Ku Klux Klan lost most of its power to frighten Negroes, Jews and Catholics, and another period of relative quiet ensued. From the late 1920s to 1941, the NAACP won many victories in the courts. The effect of these decisions disproved William Graham Sumner's dictum that "stateways cannot change folkways." But the impact was not sufficiently great to cause dismay to the defenders of the old order.

World War II shook the foundations of American society with greater force than had World War I, and a race riot in Detroit, in 1943, revealed again that some Northern communities were as determined as was most of the South to oppose Negroes' increasing demands for first-class citizenship. During and after the war, the National Urban League's quiet negotiations gained new but limited job opportunities for Negroes. Small-scale freedom rides and sit-ins by the Fellowship of Reconciliation and the Quakers in the 1940s achieved a few victories.

FEDERAL executive orders and a few laws enacted by Northern states established the principle that there should be no discrimination in employment on account of "race, religion, color or national origin"; and President Harry S Truman's executive order of July 26, 1948, declared a policy of "equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services." These executive orders and state laws, and new Supreme enrollment of a Negro student at the University of Alabama.

MEANWHILE a strong gale had developed as the result of renewed freedom rides, sit-ins, wade - ins, kneel - ins, boycotts and, above all, of street demonstrations. These activist movements led President Kennedy to send to Congress on June 19 a special message calling for more comprehensive civil rights legislation than he had proposed in February.

In mid-August 1963, the effectiveness of these activities on the local level cannot be accurately stated. For instance, Albany, Ga., remains almost as rigidly segregated as it was a year ago. Limited breakthroughs have been achieved in Durham, Charleston, Savannah, Birmingham, Philadelphia and New York. An uneasy quiet reigns in Cambridge, Md., but Salisbury and Easton, Md., profiting from the experience of Cambridge, quietly desegregated.

For a few weeks in the early summer of 1963, leaders of the NAACP deemed it politic to support the street demonstrations. Recently, they have tended to return to their traditional procedures of court action.

The persuasiveness of Burke Marshall, assistant Attorney General for civil rights, the damage to the image of the United States abroad from the use of police dogs and high-pressure fire hoses on Negro demonstrators, the growing awareness of the limited effectiveness of street demonstrations, and the intervention of the power structure, especially in the strife-torn Southern communities, have brought a lull in the storm.

TAKEN TOGETHER, the events since 1954 have created one of the most significant movements in the history of the long and difficult struggle for full civil rights. The importance of the period has been enhanced by this year's sudden burst of public interest and awareness, so frequently lacking in the past, and by the fact that President Kennedy has been forced at last to seek a relatively full program of civil rights legislation.

Difficult to forecast is the effectiveness of whatever civil rights legislation may be enacted. I do not foresee a civil war even if the pending civil rights legislation is enacted and even if an effective fair employment practices measure is added to it. Nor do I foresee willing acceptance of the legislation even if it is weakened. I expect grudging acceptance on the whole and pockets of resistance, North and South, a resistance in proportion to the vigor of enforcement.

We Negroes are not likely to get "all our rights now." I agree with a forecast made recently by President James M. Nabrit Jr. of Howard University, who predicted four years of continued struggle, then a period of relative quiet in which we Negroes will consolidate our gains before "advancing in other areas." This wise assessment, it seems to me, is rooted in the historical process of the American Negroes' struggle for equal rights and of resistance to that struggle.

Tomorrow: James Farmer, national director, Congress of Racial Equality, and Luther H. Foster, president of Iuskegers Institute.

THE NEGRO SPEAKS

Progress Cited in Race Relations Said to Appear to Negroes As Maddeningly Slow Tokenism

Anger Is Deep-Seated — Fast Changes Called Necessary if Movement Is to Remain Nonviolent

By JAMES FARMER
National Director Congress of Racial Equality

SIXTH OF A SERIES

THERE IS A SPECIAL ELOQUENCE in nonviolent direct action; it speaks in a metaphor of brutality and love. Here, in the words of Elaine Weinberger, wife of the cruelly beaten Congress of Racial Equality veteran, Eric Weinberger, is a true reason for "the mood of the Negro community." It happened in Brownsville, Tennessee.

"The action started almost immediately. Water hoses were turned on the demonstrators, the police dog was turned loose, tear gas was used (or some acid which burns the skin). Some of the assembled white crowd began to beat on the demonstrators but the police, it seemed, had one major concern: the white demonstrator, Eric. When they started dragging him, no less than six men started beating him; they sprayed tear gas on him, put the dog on his head, used electric cattle probers. There were white men still waiting with bricks, knives, etc. I've been told that they waited well past nightfall.

"One 55-year-old Negro man who happened to be in the square when the demonstrators arrived was beaten up quite badly, and he also was arrested, but released soon after. Another Negro man who witnessed this unhappy event came home in a terribly upset state, cried in disbelief, was so sickened by it all a doctor was needed. Saturday this town was in hell."

I have always felt that truth, unvarnished, is one of our most potent weapons. Yes, the Negro is angry . . . but not just in the Gethsemane of Brownsville, but throughout this ill-jobbed, ill-housed, ill-educated world.

IRONICALLY, much of the white community feels that there has been vast progress in the past few years in the areas of education, employment, housing and public accommodations. But the American Negro sees nothing but a maddening slowness and tokenism. He sees James Meredith in the University of Mississippi, but he also sees ONLY James Meredith in the University of Mississippi. He sees integrated lunch counters, but he sees a blackout in jobs which could give him the wherewithal to enjoy newly desegregated facilities.

This is the temperament, the mood, the sense of historic timing that make it manifest that the entire job must be accomplished quickly, if not immediately.

A key word here is proximity. It is only in housing, employment and educational proximity as well as proximity at the lunch counter that an even more basic problem be approached; and that is the emotional and deeply-seated resentments of the oppressed American Negro, the deeply seated discriminatory drive of the American white man. The answer lies only in the social and physical dialogue of men who work, learn, live and sit together.

No one of these tasks is more important than the other. No one of these tasks can be ignored. We must fight on all fronts at once.

IN TRUTH, the Negro wants more than freedom. The Negro wants a recovery of pride, a sense of simple dignity, a genuine competitive social and economic equality. All of this must be understood in terms of an enormous awakening within the Negro community. An awakening which places a sustained burden of proof upon the white community; the entire nation, and its entire power structure. It is not enough to grant equality when your arm is being bent; the nation must BELIEVE that the Negro is right in his petition — because there is no other choice except the choice that is written in blood.

The anger is deeply seated, historic. It is the anger of a man long taught to stare at his toes who now has proudly leveled his eyes at his antagonist. There is no geography in this anger and as the months of protest and oppression pass, the usual apathy and distance of the upper and middle class Negro are being replaced with commitment both personal and economic.

Walk in the ghetto streets, North and South, and you will sense the immediacy of the demand. Listen to the singing in the jails, where the whole white superstructure of control, the clinical redress of the state, is made lyric with a unison of Negro voices.

I DO NOT THINK it really relevant to dissect this community in the usual sociological terms . . . the "trends" are strong and inexorable, the "power structure" has overflowed into the entire body of the people.

And now there is no turning back. Brownsville must be lifted from Eric Weinberger's "hell." The arms the Negro extends are open . . . but they will not remain open. If there is no relief, the arms will close and the weapons will appear.

Eric is white, a gentle and poetic man . . . a witness to his belief that the bath of blood will begin only when the races close ranks against one another. That is why we walk unarmed into the war, Negro and white together, striking at every visible and invisible sign of racial hatred.

(Weinberger, who lives in Brownsville, took part in a demonstration with a group of Negroes Aug. 3 there. Police said that the group, carrying placards demanding racial equality, threw themselves to the pavement when ordered to disperse.)

JAMES FARMER

A founder of the Congress of Racial Equality, one of the early pioneers in developing nonviolent, direct action methods for tackling racial problems. In 1943, the year after CORE was established, it conducted a sit-in against a Chicago restaurant. From 1949 to 1953 CORE members used picket lines and sit-ins in a successful effort to break segregation at lunch counters in St. Louis.

Farmer is a tall and husky man, 43 years old. He speaks eloquently, with a note of controlled intensity seeming always to underly his deep, resonant voice. He is a graduate of Wiley College in Marshall, Tex., and of the School of Religion of Howard University, Washington.

In his adherence to nonviolent direct action techniques, he sees himself as a disciple of Mahatma Gandhi. Before becoming national director of CORE in March 1961 he had been program director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, worked in a southern union organizing drive and for the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

LUTHER H. FOSTER

As president of Tuskegee Institute of Alabama, Foster has at his command a vast amount of knowledge about the serious difficulties afflicting rural America. Study of these problems, particularly as they affect Negroes, is one of the institution's major activities.

It was at Tuskegee that the late George Washington Carver, famous Negro botanist, conducted much of his research, which had far-reaching effects on the nation's agriculture. Booker T. Washington, who won renown as a Negro educator, was first principal of the institute when it was established by the Alabama Legislature in 1881.

Foster, who has been president of Tuskegee since 1953, has a lively interest in both rural problems and higher education. In 1955 he served as American representative on a committee established by the Indian government for the study of rural education in that nation. He has been a member of a number of educational and vocational advisory committees created by federal and other agencies.

Fri., Aug. 30, 1963 ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

Negroes in the Rural South Are Most Disadvantaged of U.S.

By LUTHER H. FOSTER

President Tuskegee Institute, Alabama

IN THE LAST 25 YEARS no other segment of the population of the United States has experienced more disturbing and complex problems than have rural Southerners, particularly Negroes. They may not be a forgotten population, but they certainly enjoy no high priority in public concern, despite the fact that the rural Southern Negro is the most disadvantaged population group in the country.

In the rural South changes in social organization, including modification of the status of the Negro, have lagged behind changes in agricultural technology and in the economy. This characteristic to defend tradition and to resist change is fraught with tension and potential conflict within the area. Those who control the government often try to continue the status quo, and without Negroes sharing in the decision-making of local government, there is small hope of Negroes' having the public services in rural areas that are now common in cities.

IN AN IDEAL democratic setting, of course, the solution to the problems of rural Negroes would be for both races to work together for the benefit of all concerned. This is well-nigh impossible in most Southern rural communities, so a more realistic approach must be followed without delay.

The plight of Negroes in the rural South must have the increasing interest, intervention and vigilance of the Federal Government if there is to be relief from the limited production potential of the Negro population. Nonprofit organizations, such as the National Sharecroppers Fund and the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor, have given assistance to some facets of the problem, but the greatest help to rural Negroes will have to come through federal agencies for the foreseeable future.

The extent of the rural Negro's burden is revealed clearly by his income and education. The median family income for the United States in 1960 was $5660; for white rural families, 4981; and for nonwhite rural families, $1917. More than 80 per cent of the nonwhite rural

Yet there remain more than 5,500,000 nonwhite people in rural areas, and 85 per cent of these are in the south. Moreover, public concern — that sometimes amounts to alarm—over the influx of rural Negroes into cities has left almost unnoticed what was happening in the areas from which these persons had come.

The largest problems of Negroes in the rural South are employment and education. When they are displaced from traditional agricultural employment, new jobs are not open to them because of limited levels of skills and abilities.

Of paramount importance in raising the productivity potential of the rural Negro is a drastic change in the educational system. The dual system of education in the South is costly and has resulted in inadequate facilities and teachers for both white and Negro youth. Relief will come through rapid desegregation of public schools, federal aid to education, continued consolidation of school districts and the provision of more area trade schools.

The migratory farm bills, now before the Congress, will help. These are designed to establish a five-year program of grants to the states to provide day-care for the 415,000 children of farm workers, to build sanitation facilities at field work areas, and to provide for the added cost of educating the migratory children and of pilot adult education for their parents.

ANOTHER GREAT problem in improving the condition of rural Negroes is that programs designed to aid them do not include Negroes on a representative basis when they reach the local level. Many of the federal from the limited production potential of the Negro population. Nonprofit organizations, such as the National Sharecroppers Fund and the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor, have given assistance to some facets of the problem, but the greatest help to rural Negroes will have to come through federal agencies for the foreseeable future.

The extent of the rural Negro's burden is revealed clearly by his income and education. The median family income for the United States in 1960 was $5660; for white rural families, 4981; and for nonwhite rural families, $1917. More than 80 per cent of the nonwhite rural people in each and all the states had annual family incomes of less than $3000; more than 40 per cent had income of less than $1000. Rural white families were somewhat better off.

THE DEGREE of educational disadvantage is suggested in median years of school completed by persons 25 years and over. For the United States, the median school grade completed was 10.6, the 1960 census showed. In the South the median school grade completed was 10.4 for whites and 7.1 for nonwhites.

The median school grade completed for rural Negroes over 25 years old in Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina was between five and six years; in Texas, eight years. Rural white persons 25 years and over had completed less than nine years in Alabama, less than 10 years in Mississippi and less than 11 years in South Carolina and Texas.

Rapid and far-reaching changes in the structure of agriculture, as well as technological advances, have altered the "face" of the rural South and have resulted in chronic unemployment in an area which has long been blighted by a low economy. Farm machinery that efficiently cultivates and harvests crops has decreased the demand for farm workers. As farms grow both in terms of capital requirements and gross annual sales, the small farmer finds himself engaged in an economically unsound venture. Thus, tenant farms have decreased more than one-half during the last quarter of a century; and changes in farm enterprises from traditional crop production have resulted in further replacement of farm workers. Negroes have been most adversely affected by unemployment in this transitional period.

AGAINST THIS PATTERN of economic change and with evidence that no clear solutions to problems of unemployment were in sight, rural Negroes began migrating to urban areas to seek employment—in the last 10 years about 1,500,000 Negroes left the Southern farms.

The migratory farm bills, now before the Congress, will help. These are designed to establish a five-year program of grants to the states to provide day-care for the 415,000 children of farm workers, to build sanitation facilities at field work areas, and to provide for the added cost of educating the migratory children and of pilot adult education for their parents.

ANOTHER GREAT problem in improving the condition of rural Negroes is that programs designed to aid them do not include Negroes on a representative basis when they reach the local level. Many of the federal and state agencies have failed to serve rural Negroes in the same manner that they have rendered services to whites.

The Rural Area Development program is now attempting to meet the challenge of rural poverty by retraining large numbers of unemployed and underemployed persons. Progress of RAD will depend on co-operation between the races at the local level, which is often thwarted by the customs of prejudice and discrimination.

Problems of health are greatest in areas where income is lowest, with concomitant poor medical facilities. These are indeed grave for rural Negroes in the South. The Hill-Burton act passed in 1946 allowed "separate but equal" facilities for Negroes. Of 5888 Hill-Burton hospital and related projects, as of the end of 1961, only 98 had been constructed as segregated facilities; the remainder, however, were not integrated. The department of Health, Education and Welfare has taken the posiltion that once a project is built, the department does not inquire into its internal operations. The Federal Government should insist that any health facility for which federal funds are spent must be open to all without discrimination.

THE RURAL NEGRO in the South currently seems caught in a labyrinth of educational, economic and cultural deprivation, which is contrived and controlled by hard-core farm barons and entrenched politicians. This bewildering state of affairs will pass, however, with the continued help of the Federal Government, the dedicated work of sincere citizens and numerous nonprofit organizations and the increasingly effective action by Negroes in their own behalf.

The status of the rural Negro —just as that of Negroes throughout the United States — will be raised as soon as he can become a fully participating citizen and can enjoy opportunities which are rightfully his in a democratic society.

Sunday: Benjamin E. Mays, president, Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga.

Sun., Sept. 1, 1963 ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

The Negro Speaks: Scientists Have Repudiated Concept of Inherently Superior, Inferior Races

Doctrine Is Said to Have Inhibited Incentive

Special Programs Urged to Atone for Deprivations

By The Rev. Dr.
BENJAMIN E. MAYS
President of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga.

LAST OF A SERIES

NO ONE PERSON is wise enough to speak adequately for 20,000,000 Negroes. I believe, however, that millions of Negroes will assent to much of what I say here.

The Negro wants the abolition of segregation and discrimination in education based on race. He wants equality of opportunity in education and wants deliberate attempts made to compensate for the educational disabilities imposed on Negroes in 350 years of slavery and caste.

Slavery and segregation have been justified on the ground that Negroes are biologically inferior. This view was expressed by leading scientists of the nineteenth century and the first quarter of the twentieth century. It is only in the last 40 years that anthropologists and other scientists have unearthed new data and gained new insights which enable them to repudiate the doctrine of inherently "inferior" or "superior races.

This view of Negro inferiority was eloquently dramatized in books, magazines, newspapers, movies and on the platform. It caused the Negro to be provided with inferior education, poor paying jobs, inferior public accommodations. It denied him the use of the ballot. It reflected itself in lynching, police brutality and in inequality before the law. If it could be believed that the Negro was an inferior being, the inalienable human rights set forth in the Declaration of Independence did not apply to him.

LIVING IN SUCH an environment, the Negro suffered irreparable damage in spirit and mind. Some Negroes accepted the myth of inferiority and governed themselves accordingly. Virtually all Negroes had to aim low. There was little incentive to strive for excellence because a low ceiling and not the sky was the limit for them. Everything in the environment told Negroes that high aims were not meant for

DR. BENJAMIN E. MAYS

President of Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., for nearly 25 years, the Rev. Dr. Mays is an educator and churchman of international standing. His credentials in the field of civil rights are equally impressive. As long ago as 1929 he was writing of the "new Negro" and his challenge to the old order of society. He has written frequently on problems of integration, particularly as they affect education and the church.

He is a Baptist minister and was dean of the school of religion at Howard University in Washington, D.C., from 1934 to 1940. Prior to that he was a teacher, pastor, social worker, YMCA secretary, director of a study of Negro churches in the United States and executive secretary of an Urban League local. He was graduated with honors from Bates College in Lewiston, Me., and received M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Chicago.

He has been president of Morehouse since 1940. Established in 1867 when many persons questioned the ability of the Negro to learn, this liberal arts college for Negro men has grown over the years. It is one of six institutions affiliated in the Atlanta university system.

A compensatory educational program for Negroes in the South probably would cost millions of dollars every year.

A great responsibility rests on Negroes and all who teach Negro youth, from the first grade through college. It must be made clear to Negro stu-

Court. Some have used tokenism and devious devices to avoid full compliance and there are others who do not intend to comply at all.

A survey last December showed that in 11 Southern states — Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Tennessee, Texas, to expect wholesale voluntary action to eliminate inequality in education.

Residential segregation in housing may mean that de facto segregation in schools will be with us for some time. The Negro expects school officials to work out programs designed to eliminate all schools serving only Negroes and all schools serving only whites. Achieving this end will not be easy, for the problem is difficult and complicated.

Schools that are predominantly Negro in enrollment should be provided with up-to-date buildings, modern equipment and the best teachers, while ways are being sought to wipe out segregation. Segregated schools for Negroes are more than likely to be neglected. Faculties in de facto seggregated areas and elsewhere should be thoroughly mixed. Negroes should serve on school boards and in administrative capacities on a nonsegregated basis.

THE NEGRO does not want discrimination in education in a desegregated society. He believes that integration (I prefer "desegregation") is a two way street. Every state institution, whether formerly all Negro or all white, should be first-rate, and racial barriers should be eradicated.

The West Virginia State College and Lincoln University in Missouri have large enrollments of white students, and this pattern will be followed in Southern states in due course. No state can afford to run a second-class college. Negroes will expect nothing less than the best in state colleges. An institution, whether formerly serving all Negroes or all whites, must be judged by the quality of its education. If it is first rate in what it offers, the question of its former racial designation will have less and less significance.

The Negro expects a two-way street in education in private institutions as well. Here again an institution should be judged on need and the quality of education.

Private and church-related Negro colleges have contributed much to American life. One of their major contributions is in performing a function that Negro was an inferior being, the inalienable human rights set forth in the Declaration of Independence did not apply to him.

LIVING IN SUCH an environment, the Negro suffered irreparable damage in spirit and mind. Some Negroes accepted the myth of inferiority and governed themselves accordingly. Virtually all Negroes had to aim low. There was little incentive to strive for excellence because a low ceiling and not the sky was the limit for them. Everything in the environment told Negroes that high aims were not meant for them.

This situation explains in part the fact that although Negroes are 10 per cent of the total population, they are only about three and one-half per cent of the collegiate enrollment. If three times as many Negroes were in college, we would have three times as many competent Negroes available for jobs in government and industry. It is against this background that I shall try to state briefly what the Negro expects in education.

He wants America to make amends for the crippling circumscriptions imposed on Negroes for centuries by providing the support needed to enable them to take advantage of opportunities now opening up to them. To expect Negroes in large numbers to be ready, without previous opportunity, experience and training, to occupy the new jobs that are becoming available is to expect the miraculous.

If Negroes have been cheated of billions of dollars in the past by being provided with inferior, segregated education, it is not unreasonable for them to want and expect support needed to overcome handicaps in as short a time as possible. If special programs are needed to upgrade potentially able Negro students, they should be provided. The cost will be high.

churches in the United States and executive secretary of an Urban League local. He was graduated with honors from Bates College in Lewiston, Me., and received M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Chicago.

He has been president of Morehouse since 1940. Established in 1867 when many persons questioned the ability of the Negro to learn, this liberal arts college for Negro men has grown over the years. It is one of six institutions affiliated in the Atlanta university system.

A compensatory educational program for Negroes in the South probably would cost millions of dollars every year.

A great responsibility rests on Negroes and all who teach Negro youth, from the first grade through college. It must be made clear to Negro students that a new day is appearing and that they can strive for excellence because the sky is beginning to be the limit. Teachers can tell Negro students truthfully that top government officials in Washington and executives in industry are looking for talent, and that race is a declining factor.

WHEN THE NEGRO boy and girl get this message, dropouts will decline, more Negroes will go to college, and instead of 40 Negro men in college to every 60 Negro women, the number will be equalized or reversed.

In addition to incentive and motivation, large financial assistance must be found to guarantee aid to deserving boys and girls who for economic reasons would never be able to attend high school and college. Federal scholarship grants are needed.

Because the Negro believes that public segregated education for Negroes is almost invariably inferior to public education for whites, he wants school officials everywhere to strive honestly and speedily to eliminate segregation and discrimination based on race. Some school officials have not been honest in endeavors to abide by the May 17, 1954, school desegregation decision of the United States Supreme Court. Some have used tokenism and devious devices to avoid full compliance and there are others who do not intend to comply at all.

A survey last December showed that in 11 Southern states — Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Tennessee, Texas, Georgia, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Louisiana and Virginia — only four-tenths of one per cent of all Negro children were attending classes with white youngsters. Of 2,803,882 Negro pupils in public elementary and secondary schools, only 12,212 were in integrated classes. If the desegregation rate of the last nine years does not improve, it will take more than 2000 years to integrate fully schools in these states.

The Federal Government should be more vigorous in seeking compliance with the Supreme Court decision. In addition, new legislation may be needed requiring school districts to put desegregation plans in effect by specified deadlines and allowing the Federal Government to initiate school desegregation suits.

IT IS the responsibility of the Federal Government to see to it that its laws are obeyed. When federal money is appropriated for education, the Negro expects the Federal Government to protect him against discrimination in the use of such funds. Such protection should be expressly provided. In the use of federal money, Southern states have rarely dealt fairly with the Negro.

It is too much a strain on the goodness of human nature will expect nothing less than the best in state colleges. An institution, whether formerly serving all Negroes or all whites, must be judged by the quality of its education. If it is first rate in what it offers, the question of its former racial designation will have less and less significance.

The Negro expects a two-way street in education in private institutions as well. Here again an institution should be judged on need and the quality of education.

Private and church-related Negro colleges have contributed much to American life. One of their major contributions is in performing a function that the best white colleges have no interest in undertaking. Many Negro students enter private Negro colleges economically, culturally and educationally deprived, but after four years in these colleges they are qualified to enter the best graduate and professional schools of the nation. Many of them would have been denied admission to the freshman classes of these same universities.

THE DOORS of the private Negro colleges have never been closed to white students. Since 1954 an increasing number of white students has been enrolling and graduating from these colleges. This trend will continue. The colleges serving mainly Negroes do not have to get ready for integration. They were born integrated.

It will be good for America if these colleges, which for the most part have been meagerly supported, are now substantially supported by philanthropy so that no manpower will be allowed to go undeveloped and no potentially able person will be lost to government, industry, education, art, religion, law and business.

The Negro student must understand that larger opportunities carry with them larger responsibilities to serve the community and the nation.

Intergroup org.
Misc.

HOW AMERICANS PROTEST

A Statement on the Civil Rights Demonstrations

Published by the

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

156 Fifth Avenue New York 10, N. Y.

August,
1963

Price 15¢; quantity prices on request

Foreward

THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION views with firm hope the course being taken by the movement of our Negro countrymen toward full citizenship. A protest movement of such dimensions is bound to arouse opposition and be attended by disorders, perhaps some that will be more serious than have already occurred. But disorder is less to be dreaded than suppression of the right to protest. In our constitutional system this right is one of fundamental importance – a part of the purpose of our national being. It is also a means of resolving deep-seated problems – the loss of which threatens dangers of a much higher order.

We deem it essential, therefore, to revert to first principles – to inquire why the First Amendment forbids Congress to make any law "abridging . . . the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances," why the Fourteenth Amendment forbids State action abridging the same right, how Americans have used this right before, and how all this affects what we do in response to today's headlines.

The First Amendment prohibition was a fruit of colonial experience. Bacon's Rebellion in Virginia, the Regulator movement in North Carolina, and the movement culminating in the Boston Massacre – all originated in denial to the people of a right to assemble and voice their grievances. The colonists therefore, had had bitter experiences at the hands of an unrestrained government willing to resort to shooting and hanging to suppress popular protest. Hence the architects of the Constitution rightly put the new government under restraint.

Yet in the very act of establishing a government they placed themselves under reciprocal restraint, acknowledging this in the word "peaceably" which they wrote into their definition of the First Amendment right. Even so, the right they defined is quite as capable of being suppressed by violent citizen opponents as by an unrestrained government. Clearly, then, government is not only required to refrain from interference with peaceful assemblies; it must restrain the restrainers as well.

Those government officials and editorial writers, who have been quick to rebuke certain parts of the extraordinarily effective civil rights demonstrations of 1963, have forgotten this clear direction of the First Amendment. They have likewise forgotten that the demonstrators have shown a keen awareness of the meaning and limit of the First Amendment right. When breaches of order have occurred, the well-led civil rights assemblies have manifested truly remarkable self-discipline, and they have rarely been the agressors.

But observers of these actions owe the protesters an additional concession: the grievances sought to be redressed are themselves the denial of a carefully defined constitutional right to equality. Members of the majority that has dominated the American society and its law-making machinery for the past century cannot escape responsibility for the years of callous indifference to the demands of non-white citizens. This indifference created the frustration which now finds expression in the current demonstrations. After decades of denial of rights, is it any wonder that demonstrations show such deep emotion? Or that some actions have been taken which inconvenience – or even interfere with rights of – other citizens? The American Civil Liberties Union does not assert that every civil rights demonstration has confined itself to constitutionally-protected protests. But we remind every American who feels adversely affected by this activity that he is involved in the current crisis: he must face the issue of the deprivation of rights – rights having dignity equal with his own.

In the final analysis it is redress of the grievances that will measure the living value of the right to protest. In employing this time-honored American right, the people engaged in this movement have created an awareness of the extent of deprivation, and the justice of their cause, that never before existed among their countrymen. Yet ignorance of these matters persists, sometimes from almost conscious self-deception, more often from an unreal sense of distance from and non-involvement in the issues. None of us is free from involvement.

The blot of inequality, of persisting vestiges of that slavery which the Thirteenth Amendment undertook to outlaw, is a curse upon all of us, and threatens the security with which we all enjoy the fundamental rights of an American. Until this lesson is brought home, until the grievances to which it relates are in fact redressed, we may expect an increasingly persistent employment of the right of protest. And a decent respect for our own interest in all of the rights of an American demands that we acquire and manifest a more perfect understanding of this one.

THE AMERICAN HERITAGE OF PUBLIC PROTEST

THE MAJOR IMPACT of the civil rights demonstrations in 1963 warrants our knowing more of the American heritage of public protest. Too many of us have forgotten the important role protests have played in the history of the United States, and the constitutional rights involved.

De Toqueville's Democracy in America pertinently remarks that the exercise of the right of association in order to pursue common objectives is a potent weapon of free citizens to resist tyranny of the majority and to achieve desired legislative action.[1] The First Amendment contained in the Bill of Rights (1791) guarantees the right of the people "peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." This federal constitutional guarantee was preceded by provisions of several state constitutions guaranteeing the right of the people to "assemble together, to consult for the common good, to instruct their Representatives and to apply to the Legislature for redress of grievances."[2] Although stemming historically from the right to petition the Crown for redress, set forth in Chapter 61 of the Magna Carta (1215), the United States Supreme Court has established that the American right

[1] De Toqueville, Democracy in America (New York, 1956), pp. 194-5.
[2] North Carolina Constitution, 1776, Declaration of Rights, Article 18. See also similar provisions in the Constitutions of Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

is not limited to assembly in order to petition the Government but is an independent right, equally as important as free speech and press.[3]

The Declaration of Independence reminds us that this Nation came into being as an act of protest against discriminatory treatment of the colonies by the British Government. It is not surprising then that we find throughout our turbulent history numerous examples of public and even violent protest either against governmental action or to achieve the creation of new public policy. The formation of a Government of the United States followed such public protests as the Boston Tea Party and those of the earlier movements in Virginia and the Carolinas. In New York the protest took a less violent but no less effective form when the Sons of Liberty of New York published, on November 29, 1773, a Resolution branding as an "enemy of the liberties of America" whoever aided in transporting, selling or buying the taxed tea. The forceful suppression of these protests culminated in a war of revolution, whose successful conclusion made the paper independence of 1776 an ultimate reality. The relationship between these protests enshrined in history and the current protests on behalf of equal rights for Negroes was recognized by Senator John O. Pastore in the course of Secretary of State Rusk's July 10, 1963 testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee on the pending civil rights bill. When Senator Thurmond challenged Secretary Rusk's approval of civil rights demonstrations, Senator Pastore asked Senator Thurmond whether he believed in the Boston Tea Party.

Slavery in the United States, prior to its abolition in 1865 by the Thirteenth Amendment, was the object of vigorous public attack and support in the North as well as in the South. William Lloyd Garrison, a leading abolitionist, was a pacifist; the agitation he led and countenanced did not include physical violence or go beyond the bounds of colorful speech and symbolic burnings of copies of the Federal Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 and of court decisions enforcing it.

Determined efforts to stop his non-violent agitation for abolition involved disorderly public demonstrations and unlawful threats in several Northern cities. For example, on his return in 1835 from London, where he spoke against slavery, Garrison was criticized in the New York newspapers and met at the pier by a throng of 5000 persons opposing abolition. His appearance in Boston was met with placards urging that he be tarred and feathered. Prominent people, including members of the clergy, joined in denouncing the abolitionists and Boston's Faneuil Hall, that historic cradle of liberty, was packed with a crowd of the "best people" to listen to speeches denouncing the abolitionists and in support of states' rights and slavery. A month later a mob gathered in front of the Boston office of Garrison's newspaper, the Liberator, and dragged him through the street at the end of a rope. In 1838 a mob opposing the abolitionists rioted for several days in Philadelphia and in the process burned down the newly built Pennsylvania Hall.

[3] DeJonge v. Oregon, 229 U.S. 353, 364.

For years abolitionists could not meet in New York City without encountering organized disturbances. And even during the Civil War the New York City Draft Riots of 1863, which in large part reflected anti-Negro sentiment, resulted in thousands of deaths and several lynchings of Negroes. Southern states, such as South Carolina, of course handled abolition talk very simply by threatening to hang any abolitionist who might fall into their zealous hands. (It is only fair to add, however, that the abolition movement had its start and, prior to 1831, most of its members in the plantation states.[4])

Even though Garrison refused to support or condone them, violent demonstrations also supported the cause of abolition. The enforcement of the Federal Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 requiring the return of escaped slaves met with violent resistance. In 1854 the capture and return of Anthony Burns was met with riot in Boston as well as by Thoreau's famous denunciation, "Slavery in Massachusetts." The Supreme Court's Dred Scott decision in 1857, holding that an escaped slave remained the property of his master, aroused indignation and protest throughout the entire North. The raids, violence and killings in the struggle to determine whether Kansas would be a free or slave state culminated in John Brown's raid on the federal arsenal at Harper's Ferry seeking to arm volunteers, white and Negro, to invade the South and free the slaves. Although Brown was promptly captured and hanged, his truth that slavery is an abomination did indeed go marching on and all of the violence on both sides merged into the Civil War.

[4] Charles A. Madison, Critics and Crusades (2d ed.; New York, 1951), pp. 3-4.

After the ultimate violence of that fratricidal war, in which more Americans were killed than in any other war in which the United States participated, the struggle to secure the freedom and equal rights of Negroes "guaranteed" by the Thirteenth (1865), the Fourteenth (1868) and the Fifteenth (1870) Amendments, continued. The strongest measures were taken by the Federal Government, including the passage of the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1875, and the series of Reconstruction statutes imposing military rule on the defeated South until 1877.[5] During this period, as at present, Negroes demonstrated to obtain in fact the equal treatment under the laws which the Civil Rights Acts undertook to grant them and then, as now, their peaceful protest actions were met with counter-attacks and physical violence. For example, in May, 1871, in Louisville, Kentucky, Negroes who insisted on riding in streetcar seats reserved for whites were dragged off the cars by fellow passengers and bystanders and beaten. When the United States Attorney promised federal court action to support the rights of the Negro riders, the streetcar company capitulated and allowed passengers to sit where they pleased. The Kentucky press approved this desegregation of the streetcars as a model for good race relations and the community accepted the new state of affairs.[6]

The Supreme Court's 1883 decision in the Civil Rights Cases,[7] holding invalid the Act of 1875 which prohibited discrimination in public accommodations, brought to a halt that era of demonstrations to support the rights of Negroes. The 1954 decision in the school segregation cases[8] was the forerunner of the protests currently developing.

---

[5] Claude Bowers, The Tragic Era (New York, 1929).
[6] Alan F. Westin, "Ride-In," American Heritage Magazine, August, 1962.
[7] 109 U.S. 3.
[8] Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483.

Wholly apart from the many forms of pro and anti-slavery agitation, our history has recorded many vigorous public protests, either against action taken by state or federal authorities or urging action to be taken. Even under the Articles of Confederation it was necessary for state authority to cope with such uprisings as Shay's Rebellion. In 1794 the militia of the infant federal government was called to suppress the Whiskey Rebellion in western Pennsylvania against the federal excise tax on liquor. Public agitation against the Senate's ratification of the Jay Treaty terminating the War of the Revolution with Great Britain was so violent and extensive that John Jay, who negotiated the treaty for the United States, was burned in effigy in 1795 at the culmination of public meetings of protest in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Charleston, Savannah and other cities.[9] Convictions under the infamous Sedition Act of 1798 were protested by large assemblies before the jails demanding the release of the prisoners. In later demonstrations, the suffragettes helped secure voting rights for women; supporters of the Anti-Salon League contributed to the enactment of prohibition; a Bonus Army of thousands of jobless veterans marched on Washington, D.C. in 1932; farmers in the Middle West protested against foreclosure of farm mortgages during the economic depression of the 1930's; and extensive agitation and picketing accompanied the attainment by labor of the right to organize. All these uses of the right of public "assembly" give solid precedent for the current demonstrations against unequal treatment of Negro citizens.

THE RIGHT OF PROTEST

TWO VITAL QUESTIONS are immediately presented to the public as it views the current protests: what are the proper limits to which these demonstrations may go, and are the participants under any obligation to avoid occasions where violence may occur?

There is no doubt that some demonstrations have exceeded the proper limits of the constitutionally-protected right of protest. For example, last July 4 a protest against discrimination in employment by Jones Beach State Park in Long Island, New York, took the form, not merely of legal picketing, but in addition of blocking automobile approaches to the park by bodies of demonstrators lying across the highway. More recently the blocking of all access to the construction site for Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn, New York, in protest against the hiring policies in the construction trades, prevented persons from entering the site on their own business. Each of these violated legal protections of the public's right of movement and thereby exceeded the limits of constitutionally protected activity. The ACLU does not support such excesses; specifically we believe that physical obstruction of the right of movement does not merit civil liberties protection.

[9] Claude Bowers, Jefferson and Hamilton (Boston, 1925), pp. 265-288.

But citizens will variously judge these invasions of the rights of others – deliberately done on these occasions by persons prepared to accept the consequences of law violation. We owe these persons acknowledgement that the discrimination they object to is itself a violation of law – more outrageous in these cases because the public's funds, and thereby a measure of official sanction, are involved. Moreover, it recognizes but part of the problem to editorialize, as did the New York Times recently, that "protest certainly cannot be allowed to interfer with the rights of innocent bystanders." [10] They neglect the fact that the majority, long indifferent to racial discrimination, may scarcely be considered to consist entirely of innocent bystanders. Some men of conscience are moved to use extraordinary means only because ordinary ones have seemed to fail.

The Supreme Court has made it clear that the right of assembly is a relative, not an absolute right, subject to regulation to protect the rights of others.[11] But it may be regulated only to protect substantial rights, not merely to avoid inconvenience. Just as the distribution of non-commercial handbills (an exercise of the comparable right of freedom of press) may not be prohibited merely to avoid littering,[12] so the right to assemble and protest may not be denied to avoid possible public unrest, or even violent opposition.[13] A permit may be required for the holding of parades or public meetings, and meetings and demonstrations may be regulated, for example, to prevent undue restriction of normal traffic or to limit use of facilities to one group at a time. But this power may not be used to "protect" the public from exposure to what some members of it – or some officials – do not want said.[14]

[10] "Bounds Of Protest," July 9, 1963; See also "Right Goal — Wrong Method," July 23, 1963; "Breakthrough or Breakdown?" July 31, 1963.
[11] Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 516.

The American majority may well see the predominantly lawful activity which has characterized the current movement as bringing troublesome inconvenience. And indeed the protests forecast even more. Painful readjustments are demanded by the expressed grievances. Many people, in every section of the country, are only now beginning to understand how racism pervades our daily lives and to sense how profoundly all our ways will be affected in the process of eliminating it. As white citizens in Northern communities begin to re-examine entrenched habits and customs, particularly those involving schools, employment, and housing, many of the same emotions may be stirred as in a deep Southern community moving away from total segregation. Change is difficult and often frightening. But it is coming, and its accomplishment will occupy a towering place in history. Oliver Wendell Holmes said that a man must "share the passion and action of his time at peril of being judged not to have lived," and we are confident that Americans will increasingly welcome the sense of urgency which our time impels. We are also confident that as a beginning, each community will bend to accommodate the immediate inconveniences engendered by today's legitimate protests.

---

[12] Lowell v. Griffith, 303 U.S. 444.

[13] Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290; Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1. As Mr. Justice Douglas said in Terminiello, of an intensely provocative speech made in a public meeting, ". . . [a] function of free speech under our system . . . is to invite dispute. It may indeed best serve its high purpose when it induces a condition of unrest, creates dissatisfaction with conditions as they are or even stirs people to anger . . . It may strike at prejudices and preconceptions and have profound unsettling effects as it presses for acceptance of an idea." 337 U.S. at 4. These words apply equally to protest demonstrations.

[14] Hague v. CIO, note 11 above (holding void a municipal "permit" ordinance which had been used by local authorities to prevent public meetings on behalf of union organization); Rockwell v. Morris, 211 New York State 2d 25, Affd. 10 N.Y. 2d 721, cert. denied 368 U.S. 913 (requiring issuance of a permit to hold a public meeting for a speech by a " 'self-confessed advocate of violence' and Hitlerian methods").

The major aspect of the right to demonstrate which has had insufficient attention is found in the suggestions by many of the highest public authorities that assemblies likely to lead to breaches of the peace should be avoided. Governors of various States and even the President of the United States have been among the authors of this misstatement of principle. The point that has not been made clear is that the important constitutional right of protest cannot be abridged by the violent threats of lawless individuals opposed to the objectives of the demonstrators.

The courts have plainly declared that important constitutional rights, such as free speech and assembly and equal protection of the laws, cannot be curtailed because of apprehension that the exercise of these rights will result in riotous disturbances by lawless opponents. The United States Supreme Court very recently reiterated this point in Wright v. Georgia,[15] in reversing the "breach of peace" conviction of six Negroes for peacefully playing basketball in a "whites only" public park. There the Court said "the possibility of disorder by others [whites, whom the police anticipated would be provoked to a breach of the peace by the Negroes' presence] cannot justify the exclusion of persons from a place if they otherwise have a constitutional right (founded on the Equal Protection Clause) to be present." The constitutional rights of speech and protest are equally fundamental.[16] In Cooper v. Aaron,[17] the "lawless opponents" were state officials themselves who, encouraging mob violence and interposing state units of the National Guard forcibly to prevent compliance with federal court orders, led the school authorities in Little Rock, Arkansas to ask a federal court to postpone implementation of a desegregation plan because of extreme public hostility. The Supreme Court rejected this petition and ordered immediate reinstatement of the plan, saying that "law and order are not here to be preserved by depriving the Negro children of their constitutional rights." [18]

---

[15] 373 U.S. 284.

[16] Edwards v. South Carolina, 373 U.S. 229 (peaceful protest on State capital grounds); Rockwell v. Morris, note 14, above; Terminiello v. Chicago, note 13, above (inflamatory speech which occasioned mob violence by opponents outside the meeting hall).

[17] 358 U.S. 1.

[18] 358 U.S. at 16.

This issue arises in the streets, at police headquarters and at executive mansions before it reaches the courts and it is the Governors, the Mayors, and the police officials who must bring home the truth that demonstrations for racial equality cannot be prohibited because lawless reaction is anticipated. Means must be found to turn the forces of law and order to the protection of the demonstrators and to prevent violence by those who would attack them.

It is unthinkable that the constitutional right to demonstrate peaceably should be abridged by the least tolerant element in the community. Reversing the denial of an injunction against interference with free speech of Jehovah's Witnesses, the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in Sellers v. Johnson [19] explained:

> "Under such a doctrine [that individuals may be deprived of their constitutional rights of assembly if their unpopularity threatens a riot], unpopular political, racial, and religious groups might find themselves virtually inarticulate. Certainly the fundamental rights to assemble, to speak, and to worship cannot be abridged merely because persons threaten to stage a riot or because peace officers believe or are afraid that breaches of the peace will occur if the rights are exercised."

Of course police may be compelled to stop a public meeting or demonstration if the situation develops to the point of imminent riot. But before the tension reaches that stage police must act to prevent hostile threats agains peaceful demonstrators from being carried out and to arrest those seeking to break up an assembly.[20] There is no legal or constitutional right for other citizens to interfere with a public assembly.[21]

---

[19] 163 F. 2d 877, 881.

[20] Police Commissioner Michael J. Murphy, of New York City, on June 20, 1963 issued a public statement describing the responsibility assumed by the police department he heads. In it he said: "The police are the representatives of the government — a government of laws, not men. The police have a sworn duty to enforce the law — impartially, objectively and equally . . . They recognize and respect the right of the people to express their views on matters of public concern. The police will protect the rights of all to peacefully assemble and petition. They will brook no interference with these rights by anyone. Their impartial role is clear and set by law."

[21] See dissenting opinions in Feiner v. New York, 304 N.Y. 315; also, David Fellman, "The Constitutional Right of Association", pp. 29-33.

NEEDED: A NATIONAL COMMITMENT

THE EXERCISE of the right of assembly, protest and demonstration cannot guarantee a redress of all just grievances and of only those which are just. Not every movement of protest will be successful, nor will history necessarily judge to be just all those which are successful.

But grievances must be heard in order to be redressed — and in a forum where action can be taken that is responsive to the whole thrust of the problems raised. Underlying the emphasis which the civil rights movement now places upon public demonstrations is the proven inadequacy of the forums in which their grievances have previously been heard. The courts have responded to their suits with unequivocal declarations of the right to equal treatment. Yet nine years after the decision in the school segregation cases, but a small proportion of Negro students in biracial districts attend integrated schools, and parks and other public facilities continue to discriminate. Presidents and Governors have issued executive orders in response to the pleas of civil rights leaders, dealing among other things with discrimination in public employment. Yet lack of employment opportunities for non-white people is a problem approaching crisis proportions today. Congress has legislated that there shall be no discrimination in voting rights, but application of these laws has so far made only a small dent in the rejection that faces many Negroes seeking to vote.

Each of these forms — the judicial, the executive, and the legislative — has responded, when it acted, with an unequivocal endorsement of the justice of the civil rights demands and each has contributed important gains which have in turn given impetus to both the demands and the awakening of the American conscience. But these gains, in the context of the total problem, have afforded only a token measure of redress. What has not yet come to pass is a commitment of the whole nation to right the wrongs toward minority races embedded in the patterns of our national existence. Such a commitment can only come from a total awareness of the problems, and of the inconsistent clash that exists between our historic and constitutional standards of equality and our everyday practices. Only appeal in a larger forum – the public demonstrations – can achieve that total awareness. Only then will legislation, executive action, judicial decree and private response concur to redress not merely some grievances, but an entire pattern of second-class citizenship.

Thus it is that our aggrieved countrymen have come to state their case in the largest forum our free society provides. They follow the path of countless others – from the participants in the Boston Tea Party to the suffragettes and the trade unionists. They count on a core of humanity and decency in their fellow men to respond to a case that is well and forcefully stated. And, as their cause is just, so may we as confidently count on the Nation's ultimate response to be equal to it.

Current
October, 1963

Intergroup Org. Misc.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS MOVEMENT

The civil rights movement consists of shifting social forces in a variety of organized groups. The direction of the U.S. revolution in race relations is affected by how these elements interact on each other as well as by their impact on the general scene.

THE GROWTH OF NEGRO INFLUENCE

Mr. Meier teaches history at Morgan State College in Baltimore, Maryland, and is adult advisor to the Civic Interest Group, a student nonviolent organization in Baltimore. His book, Negro Thought in America, 1880-1915, will be published in the fall. The following analysis of new currents in the civil rights movements appeared in New Politics.

August Meier

"Two of the most significant aspects of the civil rights movement since 1960—and essential components of its dynamics—are that it has become increasingly a Negro movement and a mass movement. The two developments are not unrelated; and both of them, of course, had their origins well before 1960.

"The N.A.A.C.P. [National Association for the Advancement of Colored People] membership and branch leadership had always been almost entirely Negro; but at the start, most of the staff and executive board were white liberals. In 1921 the N.A.A.C.P. employed its first Negro executive secretary, James Weldon Johnson; in 1933 its legal staff came under Negro direction when Charles Houston took over; and today only two N.A.A.C.P. staff members are white (though the Legal Defense Fund's chief counsel, Jack Greenberg, is white). Constitutional changes made in 1947 and 1962 have permitted greater membership participation in the selection of the national board; one result has been a decline in the number of whites on it so that today they make up less than one-fourth of its membership.

"C.O.R.E. [Congress of Racial Equality] started off as a predominantly white liberal middle-class organization. As late as 1960, perhaps only one-third of its membership was Negro, and at that time its three chief executive officers, as well as its national chairman were white. With the selection of James Farmer as national director in 1961, C.O.R.E.'s image in the Negro community changed markedly, and it was thereby able to attract far more Negro support. Today, of C.O.R.E.'s four chief paid executives, two are white and two are Negro. While the majority of Northern C.O.R.E. members are still white there has been increasing Negro participation and in the South C.O.R.E.'s membership is almost entirely Negro. C.O.R.E.'s recent convention, held in June 1963, witnessed two firsts: it was the first time that a majority of the delegates were Negro, and it was the first time that a Negro was elected national chairman. And the Southern Negro delegates set the tone for the convention and moved into positions of leadership. . . .

"Organizations like S.C.L.C. [Southern Christian Leadership Conference, led by Martin Luther King] and the various local movements that have sprung up around the country have been Negro organizations from the start.

"S.N.C.C. [Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee] has avoided any form of union with the predominantly white Northern Student Movement for Civil Rights—though it and Northern white students generally have been a prime source of S.N.C.C.'s funds. S.N.C.C. has a number of white field secretaries, but it consciously projects itself as a Negro-led organization, and Negroes dominate S.N.C.C.'s power structure. There has, in fact, been a growing insistence that Negroes must take the initiative and leadership in achieving their freedom, that white liberals tend to be compromisers who cannot be fully trusted, though their financial assistance and their participation in direct action—under Negro leadership —are to be welcomed.

"C.O.R.E.'s experience has shown clearly that in order to attract large numbers of Negroes to the civil rights movement Negro leadership is essential. White liberals—and radicals—in the movement have accepted this fact. The N.A.A.C.P. had originally appealed to the élite Negroes, and during the 1930's some of the younger intellectuals like Ralph Bunche criticized it for doing nothing about the problems of the Negro working masses. The Association modified its program somewhat, and during the Forties and Fifties . . . made an increasing appeal to working-class people.

"Actually it would be impossible to make any generalization about the sources of N.A.A.C.P. branch membership and leadership today, since the variations are so great, and since so much depends on local conditions and personalities. In some branches the more élite people in the community set the tone; in others the professional and business people show no interest and blue collar workers dominate. Thus, suburban New York branches have an élite tone, while the Youngstown, Ohio, branch, for example, is under labor control and has a steelworker for president. At the risk of much oversimplification one may say that, in general, branch leadership today tends to be more middle class rather than either lower class or upper class. . . .

"C.O.R.E. originally attracted white collar middle-class Negroes. Since 1960, however, it has found blue collar skilled and even semi-skilled workers joining its ranks, both in the North, where it has started to place major emphasis on the problem of obtaining jobs for working-class Negroes, and in the South. The youthful sit-inners of 1960 and 1961 were chiefly of working-class origins—that is they tended to be upward mobile members of the Negro lower-middle and upper-lower classes, though their leadership was more likely to be of middle-class origin. From the beginning the bus boycotts of the South were mass movements, and the same is true of movements like the Albany Movement and the selective buying campaigns that appeared in a number of cities, though it should be pointed out that all classes of the community are involved in these efforts and that the upper-middle and even upper classes are disproportionately represented in their leadership.

THE GROWTH OF LOWER-CLASS INFLUENCE

"A recent development of the highest significance has been the active involvement in the civil rights movement of menial lower-class people, many of whom are chronically unemployed. Apparently it was they who were responsible for the brick and bottle throwing in Birmingham and Jackson. Generally, individuals of this group have heretofore avoided actual participation in demonstrations sponsored by the direct action groups. I personally remember how in Chestertown, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, where most of the Negro population is composed of unskilled cannery workers with only seasonal employment, few of the local people attended the mass meetings or participated in demonstrations—but they were ready, more than ready, to fight the white hoodlums who attacked the interracial teams of nonviolent demonstrators. . . .

"It is exceedingly significant that some individuals from lower lower-class background have actually begun to demonstrate with nonviolent activists. Unlike the latter, they have not remained nonviolent in the face of provocation from white mobsters, but have become involved in fracases with them in places like Cambridge and Nashville. In the North, people of this class are chiefly concerned with obtaining jobs; in the South, despite a high rate of unemployment, they are becoming involved in the struggle for public accommodations, though this is quite likely a result, at least in part, of the new practice of packaging demands for desegregation of lunch counters and so forth, with demands for jobs. . . .

Will Negro violence rise?

"There are those who believe that overt violence on the part of Negro demonstrators will rise, and that in hard-core areas of the South, Gandhian techniques will not work and disillusionment with nonviolence will set in even among those heretofore committed to it. Certainly, few of the demonstrators in C.O.R.E. or S.N.C.C. are philosophically committed to nonviolence. Rather it has been a technique that has proved successful, and has given those who use it a certain sense of moral superiority. But with the increasing police brutality as in Alabama, Danville and elsewhere, the growing frustration at the resistance to change on the part of the white South, and the expanding involvement of lower-class people whose values condone the use of violence, it is likely that the tendency to fight back rather than accept brutality passively, may increase. . . .

"Whether or not extensive racial violence occurs, astute leadership in the civil rights movement will certainly employ its possibility as a device for eliciting quicker action from the white power structure. In any event, the movement is at the point where C.O.R.E., S.N.C.C. and many N.A.A.C.P. leaders say that no matter what the risks of violence may be, they cannot stop pressing forward now. The outlook is therefore clearly for more direct action, not less. . . .

"Thus, each of the four organizations is now committed to direct action. . . . The N.A.A.C.P., however, has eschewed primary emphasis on direct action, regarding it as an extremely useful technique; the others regard direct action as the chief focus of their work and consider legal remedies of distinctly secondary value. This fact should not obscure the importance of the legal work done in support of the direct-actionists, most notably in the Supreme Court decisions secured on behalf of the demonstrators. (In fact there is evidence that one reason for the willingness of so many youth to violate Southern laws has been the fact that there was a general expectation that the Court would rule, as it has done thus far, in behalf of demonstrators convicted of trespass, disorderly conduct, parading without a permit, breach of the peace and so forth). . . .

"On the other hand, there are differences in style among the three more exclusively action-oriented bodies. King and S.C.L.C. appear to be the most cautious, and to specialize in a few showy projects. The S.N.C.C. people are the most spontaneous. For some of them, demonstrating and going to jail almost appear to have become a way of life. Status is measured by the number of arrests and amount of time spent in jail. More than any of the others the S.N.C.C. people are the 'true believers'. . . .

"One must conclude that there has emerged a real thrust for achieving 'Freedom Now' from the working class and lower-middle class people. S.N.C.C., highly critical of both the 'Black Bourgeoisie' and the white liberals, regards itself as the vanguard of the Negro masses – and to a remarkable extent that is exactly what the youthful demonstrators of the years since 1960 have proved to be. And this pressure from the working class—especially working-class youth—has been largely responsible for the greater momentum the civil rights movement has recently attained. It is ironic that what started out some time ago as a Negro middle- and upper-class and a white liberal movement, has ended up as a movement where the largest impetus is coming from the Negro working masses. In fact, the competition for prestige and power among the major civil rights organizations is in considerable degree a competition for control over the masses of working-class Negroes. It is also likely that a large part of the waxing militancy of middle- and upper-class Negroes is derived from the new militancy of the working classes. . . .

THE DECLINE OF WHITE LIBERAL INFLUENCE

"It has become fashionable in activist circles to criticize the Negro bourgeoisie and the white liberals as being conservative compromisers, wedded to gradualism and legalism. But this is a gross oversimplification of the true situation. Much of the leadership in the civil rights movement comes from the more élite Negroes. Even the leadership of S.N.C.C., which is most vociferous in its denunciation of the 'Black Bourgeoisie' is largely of middle-class origins. From Cambridge to Albany the leadership of the Southern movement is peppered with members of the middle and upper classes. And the Birmingham experience suggests that if the businessmen and leaders drawn from the upper strata wish to retain their position they will have to go along with the tide.

"It is as erroneous to stereotype the white liberals as it is to stereotype the 'Black Bourgeoisie.' 'Farewell to the white liberal,' has now become a familiar slogan. And in large part this feeling is justified. As far back as the middle Fifties, Negroes exhibited disillusionment with many white liberals who thought the N.A.A.C.P. (of all organizations) was going too fast. Liberal labor leaders have temporized on the issue of trade union discrimination in deference to prejudiced elements within their unions, especially in the South. Often white liberals, who ideologically think in terms of gradual change and compromising where necessary, and whose wide-ranging concerns sometimes lead them to feel that progress in other areas should not necessarily be sacrificed for an all-out attack on civil rights . . ., display what to Negro activists is an alarming tendency to compromise, if not betray, their cause. . . .

"Yet, all liberals are not alike; a significant number are activists themselves. Faculty members and students from Duke University and the University of Tennessee, and more recently Vanderbilt University, have participated in direct-action demonstrations, as have a handful of liberal white professors in the Negro colleges. White liberals formed an important element in C.O.R.E.'s 1961 Freedom Ride, and C.O.R.E. still draws largely from the liberal white group in the North; a very substantial share of the financial support (possibly over half) of S.N.C.C., S.C.L.C., C.O.R.E. and the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense Fund comes from liberal whites; many hundreds of Northern white liberal college youth have participated in demonstrations in Maryland, and some have worked as field secretaries for S.N.C.C. in the Deep South.

"Moreover, it seems inevitable that as desegregation progresses in the South, increasing numbers of Southern white liberal youth will want to participate. If they do so in significant numbers, the most active ones will certainly wish to participate in policy-making, and thus S.N.C.C. will have to re-examine its Negro-only leadership policy. It is natural that Negroes should want to discard paternalistic white leadership. But the ironic result is that a movement for racial equality operates ideologically with the notion that whites should be subordinate in it to Negroes. Undoubtedly this is a passing phase; as we approach genuine full citizenship for American Negroes this sort of anomaly will disappear. . . .

"Some white liberals, no longer regarded as authorities on strategy by Negro integrationists, amazed at some of the demands that Negroes are now making—such as bringing white children into Negro areas for school so as to create racially balanced educational facilities, and giving Negroes preferential treatment on jobs until employment equality is achieved—must feel rather like the Girondists did when overtaken by the Jacobins. Should violence become a common tactic rather than a sporadic reaction, more will find themselves in this position.

"Thus to some extent, there is a tendency for many white liberals to feel rather alienated from the civil rights movement today. This is true even for those who participate in the movement. They sense the general suspicion of white liberals, the deliberate exclusion of whites from leadership, and their relegation, as whites, to secondary and supporting roles. (I do not intend to suggest that this attitude toward white participation is universal. Baltimore, North Carolina and probably Nashville would be exceptions. In North Carolina a white Duke University student was elected president of the N.A.A.C.P. state youth conference in 1962; in Baltimore where the N.A.A.C.P. leadership has for years held that 'You can't trust any white people,' the nonviolent demonstrators in C.O.R.E. and C.I.G. tend to regard some of the more extreme activists in S.N.C.C. as something akin to racists.)

THE PROSPECTS FOR RADICAL INFLUENCE

"Interestingly enough there are signs that the white radicals in the civil rights movement are also somewhat alienated from it. Radicals of various hues—Socialists, Trotskyites, Russophile Communists and others—perceived in the student nonviolent movement important implications. They saw it as a potentially revolutionary movement and believed that, given the context of American life in the Sixties, in this movement lay the key to a more socialized America. . . .

"Superficially their ideas fitted in well enough with the vocabulary of the Negro activists, who were imbued with the mystique of conducting a 'revolutionary' movement destined to shake the social structure to its very foundations, and who identified themselves with the Negro masses against the 'Black Bourgeoisie'. Undoubtedly the white radicals added to the revolutionary, anti-Negro-bourgeois, anti-white-liberal psychology of the movement. Their presence was welcomed by many, though fully understood by only a few, for they seemed sincere, dedicated and uncompromising in their advocacy of civil rights. Attending the S.N.C.C. meeting in 1962 was like going to a Popular Front affair in the 1930's. . . .

"More significantly, some of the revolutionary Marxists, both Negro and white, are looking with dismay upon the signs that Southern businessmen are coming to terms with the demonstrators since this would deflect the movement from what they believe is its true revolutionary course. They regard it as regrettable that Negroes would be satisfied with the ballot, a home and a car. But they have really missed the point of the Negro protest movement. After all, the vote, a job, a decent standard of living, the right to come and go like other American citizens, are what Negroes are really striving for.

"The non-ideological activists are not aiming at radical change in the social structure—they simply talk as if they are. In speaking with Negro youth who use the vocabulary of revolution, one soon discovers that the vast majority of them are attempting to reform American society. They want to 'revolutionize' the system of race relations, and anticipate that in the process the political system of the South will undergo a radical transformation into a two-party system. But they contemplate no change in the basic political and economic structures; at most, some of them talk rather vaguely of the identity of interest between poor white and poor Negroes. More fundamentally what most of them want is the opportunity to participate fully in American society as it stands.

The direction of Negro militancy

"Since the American Negro is now an emerging class that demands the opportunity to participate fully in the American social structure, one would expect that, like thwarted emerging classes elsewhere, if the employment situation is not improved, and if unbreakable resistance should persist in the South, or if a period of reaction should reverse the present trends, he might become a genuine revolutionary radical, and reject entirely the American system and what it stands for. But in such an eventuality the trend is not likely to be toward Marxism—which has had practically no impact upon the Negro activists—but toward some form of nationalism. Until recently, in fact, it seemed quite possible that the unskilled, lowest-class urban Negroes might turn to the escapist nationalistic ideology of the Black Muslims, for this sect offered a sense of dignity and a hope for the future to those whom the civil rights movement neglected. . . .

"Prejudice and discrimination have produced strong ambivalences in the psychology of American Negroes. They wish to be accepted as Americans, and yet are forced to an ethnocentric loyalty to the black race. Basically they wish to participate in the American social structure, yet they are forced into revolt against it. But revolutionary radicalism, whether of the nationalist or the Marxist variety, seems to be an unlikely haven for the majority of Negroes, simply because, in contrast to the Africans, they are in a minority that is too small and too dispossessed. . . .

"Unless the problems posed by automation prove insoluble within the framework of a capitalist economy, the United States is likely to remain dominated by a middle-class ideology; the routes of upward mobility for Negroes will be the same as those for whites; and Negroes consequently will share in the typical bourgeois values and aspirations of American life.

"The new thrust from the Negro masses, the complex patterns of rivalry and cooperation among the civil rights organizations, the increasing power of the Negro vote in the urban centers North and South, the growing realization of the Negro's economic power that he has learned from successful boycotts, the obvious sensitivity of the government to foreign criticism of our racial system, have together resulted in a broadening and intensification of the Negro protest. Year by year and month by month, Negroes have been growing more militant, more immediatist, more fed up with limited successes and tokenism.

"Paradoxically both the increasing pace of advancement and the growing resistance in the South are leading to greater and greater Negro militance. It is conceivable that a stiffening of Southern white intransigence, or large-scale unemployment may complicate matters and encourage the development of a Black nationalist revolutionary ideology. But two things are quite certain—Negro militance is bound to grow, and an accelerated tempo of improvement in civil rights appears almost inevitable." ("New Currents in the Civil Rights Movement," New Politics, Summer 1963)

MIDDLE CLASS VERSUS LOWER CLASS

The executive director of the National Urban League, writing in Ebony, discusses the danger of estrangement between the Negro middle class and the Negro lower class.

Whitney M. Young, Jr.

The Negro middle class, growing and influential, is playing a crucial role in the current Negro upheaval, but very little has been written about the Negro middle class or, for that matter, about the class structure of the United States Negro population in general. This is because, with rare exceptions, most Negroes in America have been rather uniformly lower class by socio-economic standards.

Now, however, "available figures on Negro income levels reflect the growth of a new and vital middle class. Some twenty per cent of the Negro family population are in the $7,000 a year or over income bracket, while some sixty per cent are in an income bracket of $3,000 or under. This means that the conventional way of looking at general social class divisions does not hold true for Negroes because there is a distinct, drastic jump from the low-income level to the middle-class group with no upper income class, and only a tiny lower middle class."

The gap between the two groups is not only great but it is growing. The great problem, therefore, of the emerging Negro middle class is that it is not identifying with the lower-class Negro. Because of the gap, "the American Negro has far less social mobility than the white citizen. In the white community there are more stages in social advancement. The rise from low-income status to upper is marked by various class levels between the two extremes—lower middle class, upper middle class, etc. For the Negro, there is no in-between status; he must jump directly from lower-class status to the higher with no way stops or intermediate stops.

"The Negro in America today all too often faces a choice between being a highly skilled technician or professional, or being a waiter, porter or domestic; between living in a fabulous house in the suburbs or in a tenement in the slums; between sending his kids to a fashionable prep school or to an overcrowded, ill-equipped public school in a deprived neighborhood; between acceptance by heads of government and barons of industry or daily rejection by callous and indifferent human beings. . . .

"This poses serious problems for those who work in the field of race relations and who are concerned about what is happening in the Negro community. There is a grave danger of the posssible alienation of the middle-class Negro from those of his race, who, due to automation or other factors, are in an almost dependent category of the lower class. This alienation works both ways. The middle-class Negro often (sometimes unconsciously) disassociates himself from the lower-class Negro, not because of any personal dislike of him, but because he is symbolic of a phase in history that he wants to forget. . . .

"For generations in the South an established middle-class leadership group existed which could identify with the lower-class masses they represented because they were subjected to the same pressures because of skin color. One of the chief differences between the status of the Negro in the South and the North is that in the South Negroes have experienced prejudice regardless of economic level. In the North the middle-class Negro is able to escape some of the pressure of racial prejudice by physically withdrawing from the ghetto. . . .

"The flight to the suburbs of the Negro middle class is not a response to racial factors, whereas when the white middle class does it, race often plays a major part in the decision to move. The middle-class Negro who withdraws from the city is also escaping all that the ghetto means. He is getting away from the racial ghetto and all that it symbolizes, he is seeking healthier and more attractive surroundings and better schools for his children. These are non-racial factors. He wants those things that his white counterpart wants. . . .

Social mobility as seen by lower-class Negroes

"On the other hand the Negro in the lower-class groups sees in the flight of the middle-class Negro from his neighborhood a desire to disassociate himself from the rest, and this causes a tension. This is of real concern to those of us involved in efforts to advance the Negro community because while the desire of the middle-class is to escape a condition, his flight often results in a loss of leadership that is needed to inspire and uplift the group which cannot afford escape. . . . Unless the rate of growth of the latter group is not checked we will soon see in America a large class of dependent, permanently unemployed, with Negroes contributing a disproportionate share. This holds alarming implications for the economic future of the Negro middle class because its income and wealth still derive preponderantly from the Negro community. Most Negro professionals earn their living from Negro clienteles. . . .

"Another problem created by the withdrawal of the middle-class Negro is the development of different values and different goals by the two groups. Middle-class Negroes possess status or symbolic goals to which the lower class may be completely indifferent. Negroes in the low or poorer class are concerned with reality or welfare goals. For example, the opening to Negro use of rest-room facilities in a Southern airport terminal may mean a great deal to middle-class Negroes, but little or nothing to the lower class. Winning such a right would be of symbolic importance primarily to the middle class.

"Today, almost without exception, the leadership of the Negro's civil rights struggle is drawn from the middle-class group. The danger exists, therefore, that because of the widening alienation of the classes, each class may at times be working toward different goals. This is evidenced in support by working or lower-class Negroes for certain schools and public housing projects near or in their ghetto districts, and a resultant clash with middle-class Negroes who may oppose erection of such buildings because they regard them as strengthening segregation instead of weakening it. The welfare values of the lower-class Negro can force him to see tangible benefits in such facilities wherever they may be built.

"The lack of social structure in the Negro community is disturbingly reflected in a growing social gap between Negro middle-class leadership and the masses they are called on to lead. The estrangement of the Negro èlite from the Negro masses encourages the former to stop regarding themselves as Negro." ("The Role of the Middle-Class Negro," Ebony, September 1963)

ACTION FOR DEMOCRACY

SPONSORING ORGANIZATIONS

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee

Atlanta Committee for Cooperative Action

Southern Christian Leadership Conference

Committee on Appeals for Human Rights

All Citizens Registration Committee

Atlanta Negro Voters League

Operation Bread Basket

Ghandi Youth Society

November 1, 1963

ACTION FOR DEMOCRACY

(Recommendations from the City-Wide Leadership Conference of October 19, 1963)

Published by

Steering Committee

A. T. Walden, Co-chairman
John H. Calhoun, Secretary
Warren R. Cochrane
James Alexander
Leroy Johnson
Vernon Jordan
Albert M. Davis
John A. Middleton
Q. V. Williamson
Larry Fox
Julian Bond
James Forman
Tilman C. Cothran
J. D. Grier
Clarence D. Coleman, Co-chairman
Jesse Hill, Jr.
Archie Black
B. R. Brazeal
Clinton Warner
Ralph Abernathy
Ruth Sturdevant
Samuel Williams
Reba Greenwood
Thomas McPherson
Kenneth B. M. Crooks
Eliza Paschall
Lionel Newson
W. S. Mercer

Prepared by

Editorial Committee

Tilman C. Cothran, Chairman
Jesse Hill, Jr.
Eliza Paschall
Warren R. Cochrane
Larry Fox
B. R. Brazeal
Samuel Williams

Address all correspondence to ACTION FOR DEMOCRACY, 26 Butler Street, N.E., Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Printed through the courtesy of the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations and the Unitarian Service Committee.

INTRODUCTION

On Saturday, October 19, 1963, at the Interdenominational Theological Center, more than two hundred outstanding leaders of the Atlanta Community met and addressed themselves to the problems of segregation and discrimination still facing Atlanta.

Democracy stands at the point of becoming either the greatest motivating force in the lives of human beings or of going down in history as an ignoble failure of a great experiment in man's search for human happiness. Presently, Atlanta enjoys the enviable opportunity of being in a position to help resuscitate America's soul and to help revitalize the hopes and aspirations of free peoples everywhere. If democracy survives in its battle for the hearts and minds of men, history will speak glowingly of those who dared to initiate programs to make democratic institutions apply to all peoples regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin.

The conference participants believe that Atlanta's race relations image, often proudly used to bolster America's democratic image abroad, needs considerable improvement. In order to enhance the essence of individual dignity, the conference leaders unanimously request the speedy removal of all racial barriers to the full enjoyment of all activities and institutions in this community. This is Atlanta's challenge and Atlanta's opportunity to boost freedom.

We cannot believe that delay is an asset. The time is now! It is impossible to move too fast in providing recognition for the dignity of the human soul; it is not necessary to engage in a long, laborious, and agonizing process of social change in order to provide equality for all people.

We cannot believe that token desegregation represents a noteworthy achievement. Limited desegregation admits the moral impropriety of segregation and prolongs a social situation which is completely unacceptable to Negroes and to other sincere believers in democracy.

We cannot believe that the citizens of Atlanta are content to allow their favorable national and international image to rest upon changes that already have occurred as a consequence of legal, economic, and protest actions. We believe that most of the citizens of Atlanta possess the moral courage to actualize racial equality without delay and without the necessity of overt pressures to effectuate the needed changes.

Since the various aspects of life are so intricately interwoven that lasting change in a limited area of behavior is practically impossible, total desegregation must apply to all areas of community life. We request, therefore, that public officials, leaders in business and industry, the churches, and all others in positions of authority institute immediately total desegregation and meaningful equality in housing, employment, education, political participation, law enforcement, voter registration, health and social services, and public accommodations. Our immediate concerns in each of these facets of life are delineated in the requests that constitute this document.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

A severe blight on the alleged good image of Atlanta

is the continuing refusal on the part of many businessmen to desegregate completely public accommodations for all citizens. Yet, hopefully, we define our city as suitable for major league sports, as ready to produce a world's fair, and as being cosmopolitan in character.

Limited desegregation of hotels, motels, and restaurants as put into effect in Atlanta is an affront to the dignity of Negroes as individual citizens and, thereby, is completely unacceptable to all fair-minded people. Continued segregation in this vital area is based upon an unreasonable allegiance to tradition at a time in history when such allegiance is unnecessary and impractical.

The denial of freedom and equality for all Atlanta citizens in the use of public accommodation facilities cannot be rationalized under the smoke-screen that property rights are being violated. We contend that, morally and legally, the rights of American citizenship, irrespective of race, religion, or national origin, negate the long-standing practice of excluding categorically individual citizens from free access to businesses licensed to serve the public. Democratic principles are oriented toward individual dignity and responsibility rather than toward group membership and responsibility.

Therefore, we strongly request the following:

1. That all public accommodations and facilities, including restaurants, hotels, motels, and recreational facilities, be totally desegregated immediately.
2. That the Atlanta Board of Aldermen pass a Public Accommodations Ordinance guaranteeing human rights to all citizens.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The absence of equal employment opportunities is one of the key problems facing Negroes in Atlanta. Discrimination in employment finds expression through making Negroes the last hired and the first fired, through assigning them to sub-standard jobs, through applying differential wage scales when Negroes and whites engage in the same type of work, through preferential employment of white workers, and through limiting the training and the up-grading of Negro workers. Even Federal Civil Service and State, County, and City Merit Employment utilize various types of subterfuges to prevent Negroes from obtaining many jobs for which they are qualified.

Because of the conditions described above, a Negro's chance of finishing high school is half that of a white's, his chance of finishing college is one third of a white person's chance, and his chance of earning $10,000 a year is one thirtieth of the chance of his white fellow citizens. Other consequences of economic discrimination affecting the Negro are inability to support adequately his family, disproportionate numbers of his children among juvenile delinquents, and large numbers forced to live in substandard housing.

Since these conditions produce intense frustration and discontent and serve to motivate the general Negro protest movements, we call upon all agencies of government — Federal, State, County, and City —, upon all private employers, and upon labor leaders to initiate the following changes:

1. Start positive programs of equality of opportunity in employment, up-grading, and apprenticeship training for all people regardless of race, religion or national origin.
2. Establish machinery in government and private places of employment for the implementation of fair employment practices.
3. Give serious consideration to offsetting the Negro's lack of opportunities for education and training.

HOUSING

Despite rulings of the Georgia and the United States Supreme Courts that racial clauses in real estate dealings are not enforceable and despite the President's Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing, Atlanta Negroes (39.9 percent of the population) occupy only 16 percent of the residential land area within the city limits. Of the total of 185,816 non-whites in the city, 47 percent live on the Westside.

The Atlanta Housing Authority still operates racially segregated housing projects, separate tenant selection offices for Negro and white applicants, and still has no Negroes employed on the Housing Authority or on the Central Administrative Staff.

Although the majority of public housing units are occupied by Negroes, the Atlanta Housing Authority has 253 Negro applicants approved and waiting and 2,500 more eligible and waiting for approval. There are only 50 white applicants approved and waiting. These data reveal the dramatic need of drastic plans to improve housing for Negroes.

Therefore, we request that the following measures be instituted immediately:

1. Immediate desegregation of all public housing units, with one tenant selection system and assignments made without regard to race, and with the appointment of qualified Negroes to the Central Administrative Staff.
2. Appointment of qualified Negroes to the Atlanta Housing Authority.
3. Immediate desegregation of all facilities built on land acquired under Urban Renewal.
4. A proclamation by the Mayor and an ordinance by the Board of Aldermen declaring open occupancy and pledging the resources of the city to a vigorous program of implementation.

EDUCATION

We recognize education as one of the essential cogs in the engine of democracy. It contributes to the effectiveness of the individual's community participation and to the ultimate achievement of maximum happiness for the greatest number of people.

We further recognize that the complete integration of Negro Americans into the total fabric of American life is dependent upon a quantity and quality of education that is no different from that which is received by any other citizen. In Metropolitan Atlanta, according to 1960 census data, median school years completed by Negroes is only 63 percent of the white median. Equal educational opportunities are unattainable under segregation or under limited desegregation. A totally desegregated school system is the minimal essential in providing quality education for the Negro and white children of Atlanta.

Accordingly, we strongly request the following:

1. That the Atlanta Board of Education develop and implement a plan for the total desegregation of schools in Atlanta. By total desegregation, we refer to administration, clerical and teaching personnel, students, maintenance personnel, special education, and other relevant activities and services not enumerated here.
2. That, in the implementation of the plan to desegregate students, the primary criteria should be availability of space and availability of desired programs of study.
3. That the Atlanta Board of Education plan and institute immediately in-service training programs in inter-group relations for administrators, specialists, and teachers.

REGISTRATION AND VOTING

The most important single privilege of the individual citizen in a democracy is the right to register, to vote, and to have his vote counted without distinction based on color, religion, or national origin. While Georgia's voter registration laws and the administration of these laws in Fulton County are relatively liberal, there are inherent in the registration procedures certain subtle and practical obstacles which severely restrict the registration of the working people in which the bulk of Negroes fall.

Since Negroes suffer from the adverse effects of long years of systematic deprivation, denial, and isolation from the mainstream of community life, and since the masses of Negroes and many white people are engaged in confining daytime jobs, we recommend to the Fulton County Commissioners, the Fulton County Manager, the Fulton County Personnel Director, and other concerned officials that the following changes be made:

1. Take the necessary steps for instituting and maintaining a system of registration that will permit citizens to register at night as well as during the daytime hours.
2. Institute a program of neighborhood registration away from the Fulton County Court House for the convenience of the citizens of the County. This may be accomplished in cooperation with local civic groups.
3. Develop a coordinated program of citizenship education particularly in the use of voting machines and printed ballots.
4. Support a registration system requiring age and residence as the only valid qualifications for registration.
5. Employ qualified Negroes on the staff in the Registration Office.

HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICE

Negroes in Atlanta are being denied health and welfare services because of race. Segregation is practiced in the administration of public and private hospitals (staff and patients), in the administration of public and private social service programs and institutions, and in programs of special care and education.

According to information secured from admission offices of hospitals in the area, there are 1,937 beds available (in 13 hospitals) for white paying patients and 467 beds available (in 6 hospitals) for Negro paying patients. Hill-Burton facilities serve Negroes on a segregated basis, with specific quotas of beds set aside for Negro patients.

The state-operated Georgian Clinic has forty beds for white alcoholics, none for Negroes.

The recent report of the Community Council of Atlanta, Inc., entitled "Atlanta's People," shows that of those persons living in the census tracts with both the lowest socio-economic and housing indexes, 81 percent are non-white.

Since the problems of health affect Negroes and whites alike, we make and seek immediate implementation of the following:

1. Complete and immediate desegregation of services and staffs in all public health facilities, including Grady Hospital, and of all health facilities and programs which receive public funds.
2. Removal of racial restrictions from any agency receiving funds from the United Appeal.
3. Denial of approval by the Atlanta Fund Appeals Board of community-wide financial campaigns for funds to support programs which restrict services or employment by race.
4. Increased representation of Negroes on policymaking bodies of health and social service agencies.
5. Appointment of qualified Negroes to state boards which set up policies for health and welfare services and professions.
6. Legislation to prohibit restricting health and social services by race.

POLITICAL ISSUES

Negroes are interested in all matters which affect the welfare of the City, the County, the State, and the Nation and are anxious to make their maximum contribution to the common weal.

We think that it is only fair to acknowledge with appreciation the fact that the concept of total inclusion and participation of all segments of our citizenry in many important areas of public affairs has made some progress toward fulfillment.

However, in view of the complexity and urgency of the community problems still awaiting solution, it is imperative that there shall be an acceleration in the efforts to assure the participation of the entire citizenry in arriving at solutions to these problems. We wish to maintain Atlanta's good image and to magnify it in order that it may become a shining symbol of democracy in action for the rest of the Nation and the world.

It is not too much to request that Negroes be given representation on all boards, commissions, and agencies appointed by City, County, State, and Federal officials to handle the people's business.

Specifically, we request the following:

1. That Negroes be appointed to the Jury Commission and that they be used in larger numbers on petit and grand jury panels.
2. That Negro lawyers be appointed to the staffs of City and County Attorneys.
3. That Negroes be appointed to all governmental agencies and boards wherein policies are made.
4. That Negroes be appointed to judgeships on the Municipal and Traffic Courts.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

The impartial enforcement of the law is the bulwark of protection for the individual citizen and for society. Therefore, we pledge an allegiance to the observance of the law of the land.

The badge of authority, which adorns the breast of the law officer, should be recognized as the symbol of the majesty of the law rather than as the shield behind which undeserved immunity may be sought by officers who overtly have abused their authority. When the law is not enforced fairly, Negroes and, to a lesser extent, poor whites are the victims.

We deplore the law, custom, and practice which sanction the taking of the life of a misdemeanor suspect who is seeking to escape or evade arrest. No law officer should be permitted to be the arresting officer, the complaining witness, the prosecuting officer, the jury, and the executioner when the maximum punishment would not have exceeded twelve months on the chain gang.

We therefore request:

1. That a public defender be provided in all the criminal courts for indigent defendants.
2. That the prison laws and administration be revised to the extent that equal, if not greater, emphasis be placed upon the rehabilitation of the miscreant rather than upon punishment.
3. That the Aldermanic Police Committee of the City of Atlanta take appropriate steps to discipline those officers who abuse persons in their custody.
4. That there be equality of assignment of duties to prisoners working out sentences.
5. That there be total desegregation in penal and correctional institutions.
6. That Negroes be appointed in larger numbers as Probation and Police Officers.
7. That misdemeanor first offenders be placed on probation and not be incarcerated with hardened criminals.

We believe that the foregoing objectives and requests are reasonable, proper, and valid and that we ask only those things which are possessed already by other citizens as a matter of course.

We would prefer, by far, to attain these objectives through cooperative action rather than through conflict. Thus, in order to achieve justice for all Atlanta citizens, we appeal to the basic integrity and good will of the leaders of this City and hope that the "good name" of Atlanta will continue to shine throughout the Nation and the world.

While these requests are addressed to City, County, State, and Federal officials, and to all other persons in positions of formal and informal authority and influence, we do not overlook our responsibility as leaders. We pledge our unswerving support to all persons who are willing to join with us in the task of securing and consolidating these rights; we dedicate our efforts to working with members of the Negro community in order to develop a sympathetic understanding of the problems involved in rapid social change and in the creation of a climate of peace and good will with malice toward none.

This document represents the composite thinking and action of more than two-hundred leaders representing eighty-two different organizations.

Council of the Southern Mountains, Inc.
College Box 2307
Berea, Kentucky

RETURN POSTAGE GUARANTEED

BEREA COLLEGE

BEREA KY COLLEGE U.S. POSTAGE 04 PB METER P.D. 395461

Intergroup Org Mtg

NEW SOUTH
5 FORSYTHE N.W.
ATLANTA 3,
GEORGIA

NEWSLETTER #1 - 1963

YOU ARE INVITED TO ATTEND THE 51ST ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE COUNCIL OF THE SOUTHERN MOUNTAINS, INC. - FEBRUARY 19-22, 1963
GATLINBURG, TENNESSEE

Theme - The Role of the Appalachian South in a Changing America

For over half a century, the Council of the Southern Mountains has served the people of the Appalachian South. Its past 50 Annual Conferences have brought together the leadership of the region to discuss problems, listen to new ideas, and to work toward common solutions. At this 51st Conference, we shall study change and how it effects underdeveloped areas such as the Appalachian South, and plot strategy for revitalizing our institutions so as to do a better job in preparing our people for a new age.

- CONFERENCE HIGHLIGHTS -

Tuesday - February 19

2:00 P.M. REGISTRATION begins and continues throughout the Conference - (Registration Fee $2.00)

6:30 P.M. DINNER MEETING - Presiding: Mr. Stuart Faber, President of the Council.
Election of Officers.
Keynote Address: "Must We Always Back Into The Future?"
Mr. P. F. Ayer, Executive Secretary of the Council.

ENTERTAINMENT - Billy Edd Wheeler, singer and composer, New York City.

Wednesday - February 20

8:00 A.M. MORNING WORSHIP - Led by Rev. Wendell Belew, Secretary, Department of Associational Missions, Division of Missions, Home Mission Board, Southern Baptist Convention, Atlanta, Georgia.

9:00 A.M. ADDRESSES: "The New America", Dr. Solon Kimball, Professor of Anthropology and Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, and "The Ending of Appalachian Isolation and the Tightening Web of Relationships with the Greater Society", Dr. James S. Brown, Associate Professor of Sociology, University of Kentucky.

GROUP DISCUSSION

12:30 P.M. YOUTH LUNCHEON - Address: Mr. Charles Drake, writer, educator, Lexington, Mass.

2:00 P.M. DISCUSSION GROUPS based on the morning presentation.

4:00 P.M. Council Committee Meetings

6:30 P.M. DINNER PROGRAM - "An Evening of Folk Music", featuring Edna Ritchie, folksinger, Viper, Kentucky, and Billy Edd Wheeler.

Thursday - February 21

8:00 A.M. MORNING WORSHIP - Rev. Wendell Belew.

DETACH AND MAIL

- - - -

Interpp Org - Misc

Publications

1963

ANNUAL SUMMER PROGRAM OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES WITH THE COOPERATION OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

Enjoy a Workshop Experience

Participating in a workshop is different from taking a course. General meetings and small group discussions constitute the core of the workshop activities, and time is provided for individual reading, program planning, and conferences with the workshop staff. Recreation and informal group activities are arranged by the members and staff. Many workshops provide pleasant living quarters for their members on campus. Such live-in workshops make for easy, natural, informal relationships among the participants, and thus reinforce the ideas developed by lectures, readings and group discussions. In a very real sense a workshop is a laboratory for democratic intergroup relations.

The workshops are a regular part of summer school programs and fully accredited by the colleges and universities which offer them. Regional and national offices of the National Conference of Christians and Jews cooperate with the colleges' and universities' workshops by providing materials, consultant and staff services, and some scholarship aid to participants who need such assistance.

Workshops Provide for a Variety of Interest

Each workshop has its distinctive features. Some offer a general orientation to the field of intergroup relations, emphasizing the social forces and psychological dynamics that underlie prejudice and discrimination. Others offer more specialized work in such areas as urban problems, program planning for community agencies, group dynamics, and curriculum development. Still others focus on such topics as moral and spiritual values in public education and problems arising from desegregation. Whatever your particular needs and interests, you can almost certainly find among the workshops listed one that fits your individual requirements.

THE WORKSHOP WAY OF LEARNING

Plan Now to Attend the Workshop of Your Choice

INSTITUTION	DATES
ADELPHI COLLEGE, Garden City, L. I.	7/8-7/19
AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, Washington, D. C.	6/24-7/12
BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE, Daytona Beach, Fla.	6/17-6/29
BOSTON UNIVERSITY, Boston, Mass.	6/28-7/12
CALIFORNIA WESTERN UNIVERSITY San Diego, Calif.	7/8-7/19
CITY COLLEGE OF NEW YORK	7/5-7/25
EASTERN MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY, Ypsilanti, Mich.	8/5-8/16
HOFSTRA COLLEGE, Hempstead, L. I.	7/1-7/19
HOWARD UNIVERSITY, Washington, D. C.	6/17-6/28
KENT STATE UNIVERSITY, Kent, Ohio	7/22-8/9
KUTZTOWN STATE COLLEGE, Kutztown, Pa.	7/15-8/2
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY, Brooklyn, N. Y.	7/1-7/18
LOS ANGELES STATE COLLEGE, Los Angeles, Cal.	8/5-8/23
LOYOLA UNIVERSITY, Los Angeles, Cal.	6/24-8/2
MERRILL-PALMER INSTITUTE, Detroit, Mich.	7/8-7/19
MOUNT MERCY COLLEGE, Pittsburgh, Pa.	6/24-7/16
OAKLAND UNIVERSITY, Rochester, Mich.	8/12-8/16
OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY, Columbus, Ohio	7/22-7/26

INSTITUTION	DATES
OUR LADY OF THE LAKE COLLEGE, San Antonio, Texas	6/4-6/22
PACIFIC UNIVERSITY, Forest Grove, Oregon	6/17-7/3
PACIFIC LUTHERAN UNIVERSITY, Tacoma, Wash.	7/22-8/9
RUTGERS UNIVERSITY, New Brunswick, N. J. (3 workshops)	7/2-7/20 7/14-7/20 7/21-7/27
ST. LOUIS UNIVERSITY, St. Louis, Missouri	6/18-7/26
SAN FERNANDO VALLEY STATE COLLEGE, Northridge, Cal.	8/5-8/16
SAN FRANCISCO STATE COLLEGE, San Francisco, Cal.	6/24-7/12
SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas, Texas	6/10-7/5
STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Stanford, Cal.	8/4-8/16
SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, Syracuse, N. Y.	7/1-8/9
WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY, Detroit, Mich.	8/19-8/30
WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE, Westminster, Md.	7/29-8/16
WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY, Cleveland, Ohio	6/17-7/26

INSTITUTION	DATES
UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK AT BUFFALO, N. Y.	7/1-7/19
UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI, Cincinnati, Ohio	6/17-7/12
UNIVERSITY OF DENVER, Denver, Colo.	7/8-7/19
UNIVERSITY OF DETROIT, Detroit, Mich.	6/24-7/19
UNIVERSITY OF HARTFORD, Hartford, Conn.	6/24-8/2
UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY, Lexington, Ky.	6/17-7/12
UNIVERSITY OF MAINE, Orono, Maine	7/8-7/26
UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN, Ann Arbor, Mich.	8/5-8/16
UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO, Albuquerque, New Mexico	6/24-7/19
UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA, Norman, Okla. (2 workshops)	7/8-7-19 8/5-8/9
UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, Oregon	8/12-8/23
UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC, Stockton, Cal.	7/22-8/2
UNIVERSITY OF RHODE ISLAND, Kingston, R. I.	6/23-6/29 ABROAD:
ST. LOUIS UNIVERSITY, Spain and the British Isles	7/29-8/31
UNIVERSITY OF PUERTO RICO, San Juan, P. R.	7/8-8/10

How to Choose Your Workshop

Human relations and intergroup workshops are valuable, stimulating educational experiences because they deal with important current issues in practical, down-to-earth ways. But the needs and interests of the people who attend workshops vary, and so the most satisfied participants are those who choose carefully the workshop they want to attend.

Obtain accurate and adequate information about the workshops you can attend. Many factors, such as the time you have available, travel, vacation plans, and cost, may limit your choice of workshops. The list of workshops will help you decide which are possible for you to attend. Obtain brochures describing the workshops which interest you from your regional or national NCCJ office.

Analyze your particular needs in terms of a specific, back-home professional problem you would like help in solving. Perhaps you need help in planning a program for parent education activities, or in developing a reading program in human relations for your eighth grade class. You may wish to take a fresh look at your in-service teacher education work if you are a school administrator, or discover more effective ways of gaining community support for a program of intergroup education.

Try to get at least one other person from your school or community organization to attend the workshop with you. The experience of many workshop participants indicates the value of a team approach in solving the intergroup problems of a school or community. A team can better interpret ideas to their colleagues than can any individual, however gifted and persuasive.

If you need some financial help in order to attend a workshop, apply to your regional NCCJ office for a scholarship, Many, but not all, local NCCJ offices have some scholarship funds to assist teachers who wish to attend a workshop. The number of scholarships is limited, and so an early application is advisable.

What is the NCCJ?

NCCJ is a civic organization engaged in a nationwide program of intergroup education. It enlists Protestants, Catholics and Jews who without compromise of conscience or of their distinctive and important religious differences work together to build better relationships among men of all religions, races and nationalities. Its operation is civic and social although, obviously, the roots of the brotherhood which it seeks to build are in the moral law and in religious faith.

National Conference of Christians and Jews • 43 West 57 St., New York 19

CO-CHAIRMEN: Carrol M. Shanks, Robert D. Murphy, Lewis L. Strauss
PRESIDENT: Lewis Webster Jones

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.
8500 Rio Grande Blvd., N.W.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
910 Southeastern Bldg.
Greensboro, N. C.

ATLANTA 3, GA.
1144 Bank of Georgia Bldg.

BALTIMORE 2, MD.
514 Keyser Bldg.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
P.O. Box 2465

BIRMINGHAM 3, ALA.
927-8 Comer Bldg.

BOSTON 8, MASS.
73 Tremont Street

BRONX 51, N. Y.
529 Courtlandt Ave.

BROOKLYN 1, N. Y.
105 Court Street

BUFFALO 2, N. Y.
Suite 36
Hotel Statler-Hilton

CHARLOTTE 2, N. C.
121 E. 3rd Street

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
3323 Windsor Court

CHICAGO 1, Ill.
203 No. Wabash Ave.

CINCINNATI 2, O.
313 Keith Bldg.

CLEVELAND 14, O.
304 Investment Ins. Bldg.
E. 6th St. & Rockwell Ave.

DALLAS 1, TEX.
1028 Dallas Athletic Club Bldg.
1805 Elm Street

DENVER 2, COLO.
307 Denver Natl. Bldg.
821 - 17th Street

DES MOINES 9, IOWA
707 Empire Bldg.

DETROIT 2, MICH.
150 W. Boston Blvd.

DULUTH 2, MINN.
313 Bradley Bldg.
10 East Superior St.

EL PASO, TEX.
614 E. Yandell Blvd.

FORT WORTH 2, TEX.
214 Danciger Bldg.
Fifth & Throckmorton

GREENSBORO, N. C.
910 Southeastern Bldg.

HARTFORD 3, CONN.
983 Main Street

HOUSTON 2, TEX.
1109 Scanlan Bldg.

INDIANAPOLIS 4, IND.
108 E. Washington St.
Room 1501

JAMAICA 33, N. Y.
92-32 Union Hall St.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
916 Walnut St.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
P.O. Box 685

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
United Fund Bldg.
1622 South A Street

LOS ANGELES 5, CALIF.
Suite 202
3335 Wilshire Blvd.

LOUISVILLE 2, KY.
501 Republic Bldg.

MEMPHIS 3, TENN.
414-15 Com. Title Bldg.

MIAMI 32, FLA.
305 Calumet Bldg.
10 N. E. Third Ave.

MILWAUKEE 2, WISC.
759 N. Milwaukee St.
Room 419

MINNEAPOLIS 2, MINN.
520 National Bldg.

NEWARK 2, N. J.
790 Broad Street

NEW ORLEANS 12, LA.
610 International Bldg.
611 Gravier Street

NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
43 West 57th Street

NORFOLK, VA.
269 Boush St.

OKLA. CITY 2, OKLA.
310 Com. Exch. Bldg.

OMAHA 2, NEB.
848 Insurance Bldg.

PHILA. 7, PA.
1211 Chestnut St.

PHOENIX 4, ARIZ.
624 Luhrs Bldg.

PITTSBURGH 22, PA.
1307 Keenan Bldg.

PORTLAND 5, ORE.
729 S.W. Alder St.

PROVIDENCE 6, R. I.
92 Benevolent Street

RICHMOND 30, VA.
203 Westwood Bldg.
2317 Westwood Ave.

SAN ANTONIO 5, TEX.
632 Three A Life Bldg.
118 Broadway

SAN FRANCISCO 3, CALIF.
Suite 815
Central Tower
703 Market Street

SEATTLE 1, WASH.
701 Seaboard Bldg.

SOUTH BEND 1, IND.
128 Franklin Place

ST. LOUIS 1, MO.
1615 Chemical Bldg.

TUCSON, ARIZ.
2819 E. Beverly Drive

TULSA 3, OKLA.
515 S. Denver

UPPER NEW YORK STATE
43 West 57th St.
New York 19, N. Y.

WASHINGTON 5, D. C.
735 Southern Bldg.
1425 H St., N.W.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
175 Main Street

WICHITA 2, KAN.
257 No. B'way.
Suite 104

WICHITA FALLS, TEX.
718 10th St.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.
28 Rose Street
Forty Fort, Pa.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
R.D. #2 Montoursville, Pa.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
1011 Washington St.

Intergroup Org. Misc

QUAKER Service

Bulletin of AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

SUMMER 1963

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM TO OPEN IN PERU IN SEPTEMBER

IN SEPTEMBER of this year the AFSC will begin a five-year community development program to help meet some of the problems in the "barriadas" on the outskirts of Lima, Peru.

A barriada is a whole village that has migrated as a unit. These units have illegally established themselves on land surrounding the city, forming a fringe population of 500,000 without employment or adequate dwellings. Barriada dwellers are largely Indians from the interior areas of Peru. Others are city inhabitants who—seeking to improve their lot but owning no land—move onto the government-owned land where they erect shacks of tin, wood, or cardboard. Living in appalling poverty, they lack sanitation, health services, recreational facilities, child-care centers, and schools.

Cooperation Needed

AFSC workers will cooperate with Peruvians who are concerned for the welfare of these people, and will seek to develop a program which will encourage the barriada dwellers themselves to take increased responsibility for their own future.

AFSC efforts, in one or several of the barriadas, might include counseling the inhabitants on effective ways to acquire the facilities they need. Classes in literacy, cooking, and nutrition could be established. Tradesmen and artisans might be helped to obtain supervised credit and to develop credit unions.

As the program expands, it is hoped that other interested Peruvians —social workers, young professional people, and university students— will become involved in it.

To lay the groundwork for these plans, Alan and Margery Walker have been appointed to go to Lima in September for two years. Alan Walker holds degrees in psychology from Stanford University and Michigan University, and has taught at Earlham College in Indiana. Most recently he has directed a community development program at Goddard College in Vermont. Margery Walker is a graduate of Stanford University. Both are members of the Religious Society of Friends.

The new program in Peru represents an expansion of the Committee's work in Latin America which now includes activities in Mexico and Guatemala. The AFSC has also had program experience in El Salvador. This experience, the encouragement of Peruvians who have worked with AFSC in Mexico, and the needs which exist in Peru have together convinced the Committee that the work should be undertaken.

Urban Population Growing

The barriada problem toward which efforts will be directed is the result of several factors in the life of Peru today. The nation has a rapidly growing urban population. Difficult living conditions on the High Andean plateau are causing thousands of rural people to emigrate toward the cities in search of work and in hope of a better life. But a lack of industrialization in Peru limits the jobs available. Lima, the capital, is particularly hard hit by this rural influx.

The barriadas surrounding Lima form a fringe population of 500,000 unemployed people living in makeshift dwellings.

• • • to assume new tasks • • •

Philadelphia, Pa.
May 1963

Dear Friends,

This issue brings you word of several new developments in AFSC work—in Washington, in Peru, in Ghana, in Russia, in the Far East.

Our efforts to help enrich the lives and the spirits of our fellowmen—and our own in the process—find us closely engaged in the dynamics of a changing world. Even as we continue our commitment to ongoing programs, we are steadily gratified to devolve some projects into the able hands of local groups—and freshly challenged to assume new tasks.

There are now almost 3 billion people in the world. There are resources in all these minds and hearts which are an untold wealth. It is the business of our lives to find ways to unlock at least some of these resources—by helping others to "spend themselves" creatively and in those purposes which enrich us all and leave no man a victim.

The characteristics of an AFSC program have been shaped through the interweaving of belief and practice during 45 years of experience. All AFSC programs are based on the belief that love can be the most potent force in the ordering of a good society. The significant point is that we believe this, and we have found it to be true whenever men trust love.

AFSC programs try to be experiences and experiments shared with others rather than acts done for them. It is our belief that free men solve their problems from the inside out, rather than by the superimposition of an answer, by however kind an administrator.

AFSC programs seek to influence individual lives in depth, rather than masses on a more superficial level. Here, again, our convictions and our experience coincide. We are concerned for the whole worth of each individual. At the same time, we see that other agencies, both private and public, are able to tackle quantitatively larger tasks with bigger resources.

Thus we try to serve those needs which are not being met by others, to avoid duplication of existing efforts, to break new ground and find new techniques to reach closer into the causes of the problem, and to develop our projects as the local people feel their own needs widen.

As we move into the busy and demanding seasons ahead, we take this moment not only to comment on the purposes of our work, but also to thank you for your invaluable support.

Yours sincerely, Colin W. Bell

Executive Secretary

Behind the Quaker center in the Algerian village of Souk el Tleta is a steep hillside which is badly eroded. One of the first projects of the agricultural course, now offered to teen-age Algerian boys, was the planting of this slope in olive and eucalyptus trees to hold the life-giving soil. These activities are part of the long-range AFSC resettlement program in Algeria which now follows upon the conclusion of the interim relief work.

WASHINGTON HOUSING WORK BEGINS

IN RESPONSE to a growing need to ease the housing restrictions imposed upon American Negro citizens in the District of Columbia, the American Friends Service Committee has inaugurated the Washington Metropolitan Housing Program, projected as a five-year effort.

Because of its 12 years of practical experience in seeking open-occupancy housing, the AFSC was invited by a number of private Washington agencies to establish a program in the area. These agencies include Neighbors, Incorporated; the Capital Clearing House; and the Urban League.

Although the program has been in operation only six months, there have been several specific developments.

A local citizens group—Suburban Maryland Fair Housing, Incorporated—has been formed with a membership of 150 persons. The organization is patterned upon the Burlington County Fair Housing Council, which AFSC helped establish, and which has been responsible for assisting more than 50 non-white families to locate peacefully in Burlington County, New Jersey.

Twenty-eight Negro families, all seeking homes, have registered their desire to buy or rent in areas traditionally restricted to white owners in Maryland, Virginia, or the District of Columbia.

Fifteen white home owners have informed the Maryland group that they are willing to sell their homes on an open-market basis.

Unexpected interest and support for fair housing has developed in the northern Virginia suburbs of Alexandria, Arlington, and Falls Church. Several homes have been listed.

Personal Experience Cited

In December Helen Baker, AFSC consultant who opened the housing program, testified at the hearing held by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia on a fair housing ordinance. She told of her own experience of being discriminated against when she sought housing in the District in November of 1962. Her testimony included an account of having been turned away from 31 apartment houses, each of which had listed available space, when she applied in person for occupancy.

In a final instance, after negotiations for an apartment had been concluded with the aid of friends, the option was withdrawn when the landlords discovered that Helen Baker was a Negro. Eventually appropriate housing was found in the District.

During the hearing, Helen Baker also told of the color paradox in the Merlin Myers heads new program.

District of Columbia. Dark-skinned foreigners—either students or persons with diplomatic status—can get rental housing in areas where American citizens, also dark-skinned, are rigidly excluded. She and her son, a career diplomat, were both turned away from apartments housing foreign consular personnel.

The Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia have been thwarted by their Congressional overseers in seeking a fair housing ordinance. It may be that Helen Baker's

continued on page 4

AFSC CONFERENCE HELD IN GHANA

A FOUR DAY "consultative conference" was held at the University of Ghana in April as a step toward developing a seminars and conferences program in West Africa in the fall of 1963.

The group of 27 men and women included outstanding Africans from both French-speaking and English-speaking countries, as well as Quaker representatives and other friends of the program. Some had previously participated in AFSC seminars and conferences in the United States, Europe, or Asia. Others, representing government ministries, had become interested in the project as a result of exploratory staff work carried out in West African countries in 1962.

The group recommended the topic "Africa Today—Common Tasks and Aspirations" as a theme around which a program might be developed. It further recommended that the program be undertaken as a "discussion for understanding."

The conference participants agreed that leaders of African thought and life would welcome opportunities to meet with each other for an exchange of information and views. It was noted that others who obviously will become part of this leadership in the near future would also benefit from such exchange. In expressing this opinion, the participants recognized that many conferences are now held in Africa with a view to action, yet, because of language or cultural or economic barriers, there is little communication among these countries. Therefore, only a meagre basis of knowledge exists on which governments can develop cooperative action in meeting the needs and aspiration of the West African people. Educators, older students, young professional people, civil servants, those who carry diplomatic responsibilities, and any others who help their people learn to become responsible citizens—all were identified as key groupings from which participants should be drawn.

The International Conferences and Seminars programs, of which these plans are a part, is jointly sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and the Friends Service Council of Great Britain.

YOUTH PROJECT LOCATED IN RUSSIA

THE 1963 Tripartite Work and Study Project to be held this summer in the northern Caucasus of the Soviet Union is the second stage of a three-year project sponsored jointly by the Friends Service Council of Great Britain, the Committee of Youth Organizations of the Soviet Union, and the AFSC. Each of the sponsors will send 10 participants between the ages of 20 and 30. The young people will help construct a new dormitory at a childrens' home.

In 1962 the project was held in Bristol, England, where participants helped build a community center. They worked mainly in the mornings, leaving the afternoons free for discussion. Discussion topics included disarmament, education, and the United Nations, each of which was introduced by a member of the group. Through a free exchange of views and opinions, participants felt they had increased their knowledge of each other's life and thought, and experienced a growth in mutual understanding. During the final week of the project the group toured in other parts of England, sightseeing, visiting with local residents, and staying in private homes. Similar activities are planned for this summer's project.

All of the American participants selected for the current project have some proficiency in the Russian language. Their experience is wide and varied. One American participant worked for the World Bank. Another, a lawyer, is attached to a U.S. District Court in California. A third member of the group is a former member of the Russian language study tour of Indiana University to the USSR. Another, who has traveled widely in western Europe, is studying for a doctorate in political science.

British and American participants will assemble in London on July 27 and travel together to the Soviet Union in time for the project opening on July 29. The project, located at Natlchik, will conclude on August 28.

In 1964, a third project will be held in the United States, rounding out the original three-part plan.

"QIAR" ACTIVITIES BASED IN TOKYO

NORMAN WILSON has been appointed Quaker International Affairs Representative in the Far East to begin in September. He will base his activities in Tokyo, Japan, but will be concerned with international relations in Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and the Philippines as well.

In the course of his work in the Far East, Norman Wilson will meet members of the diplomatic community. He will bring together people in government to discuss common problems and will share with them the concern of Friends for peaceful settlement of international problems.

A graduate of Antioch College, Norman Wilson holds a master's degree from the University of Chicago, and will receive his doctorate in education from Columbia University this summer. He was a Fulbright scholar at Utrecht in the Netherlands, 1955-56, and has taught at Bronxville High School, Bronxville, New York, since 1956. He and his wife, Claire, are members of the Scarsdale Friends Meeting, Scarsdale, New York.

Washington Work Begins

continued from page 3

testimony will help the commissioners to invoke an 1863 law which permits them to take unilateral action to provide for the safety and welfare of their citizens if Congress has neglected to do so.

The second phase in the development of the AFSC Washington housing program came in February when Merlin Myers, a sociologist from Oregon, became director of the project. Working with Helen Baker, who had accepted the position of consultant for six months, Merlin Myers began seeking prospective Negro home buyers as well as white home owners who would sell on the open market.

Meanwhile, Merlin Myers has been carrying forward Helen Baker's community commitments—working with the real estate industry, the fair housing groups, and with non-white buyers—interpreting both the housing needs and the opening opportunities under the new Executive Order.

In undertaking this housing program in Washington, the AFSC also believes it is in the national interest for a private agency to bring such inequities to the attention of the lawmaking and executive branches of the government with examples of discrimination gathered in its own neighborhood.

THE AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE, a Quaker organization, attempts to relieve human suffering and find creative solutions to tensions between individuals, groups, or nations. We believe there is that of God in every man, and that love in action can overcome hatred, prejudice, and fear.

Our work is open to anyone regardless of race, religion, or nationality. We depend upon your contributions. Checks may be sent to the American Friends Service Committee at any of its offices.

American Friends Service Committee
Southeastern Regional Office
1818 S. Main St.
P. O. Box 1307
High Point, N. C.

Return Requested

Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St. N. W.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Non-Profit Org.
U. S. POSTAGE PAID
HIGH POINT, N. C.
Permit No. 86

New Politics
1963

August Meier

Intergroup Org. Misc.

New Currents In the Civil Rights Movement

EVENTS THIS SPRING have made it abundantly clear that gradualism and tokenism in civil rights will no longer pass for progress. The Negro protest movement has become suffused with a new militancy, a new sense of urgency. This is evident in the widespread use of deliberate mass jail-ins, open sneering and jeering at white policemen, a disposition to meet violence with violence, a tendency to package several demands together—to demand "total integration" rather than to work for one reform at a time—and the involvement of greater and greater numbers of people from all strata of the Negro community. "Freedom now!" has become the new slogan.

What happened in Birmingham epitomizes this new militancy, and was itself a major stimulus for the events that have transpired since. But the basic forces operating in Birmingham were operative elsewhere. Birmingham basically functioned as the spark that ignited some highly inflammable material.

INDICATIVE OF THE NEW MOOD was the Northwood Theater demonstration in Baltimore, which occurred in February, over two months before Birmingham. Enjoying unusual support in the white community, a rather fair police force and often favorable judges, and moving over the years from one victory to another, the Civic Interest Group—as the student nonviolent movement in Baltimore is called—had been characterized by a relatively mild spirit. Seldom had demonstrators stayed in jail even overnight and the notion of deliberate large-scale arrests was dismissed as unworkable, for no one would ever be able to get that many students from Morgan State College to go to jail. But it was a continuing insult to the dignity of the Morgan student that the neighborhood theater, less than a block from the school, should have resisted negotiations and picketing for over eight years, and this in the face of the desegregation of practically every other business establishment in the same shopping center, and of all the other theaters in that part of the city.

When Civic Interest Group leaders and student government officials met once more to discuss the matter early last February, it was obvious that the students were in a mood to employ some new and dramatic techniques. The upshot was that over four hundred Morgan students (and several white students from Goucher College and Johns Hopkins University) were arrested, filling the city jail to overflowing. Punitively high bail set by the judge only encouraged further arrests. Finally, after three days of distressing turmoil, embarrassed by the nationwide publicity and facing a primary election in two weeks, the city's mayor compelled the theater to capitulate.

The Negro community in Baltimore was stirred as it had not been in all the previous years of demonstrations. Students who had been skeptical of direct action found themselves trespassing and going to jail, and for the first time large numbers of fraternity members, honors students and outstanding athletes participated along with the more anonymous students who had heretofore formed the backbone of Civic Interest Group activity. Adults who wondered about all the fuss over one single theater were told that it was the principle that counted. Parents whose mixed feelings of anger and fear soon turned to pride, even urged that their children be kept in jail until the theater opened its doors. Certain powerful figures in the community, themselves previously sympathetic to the student activists, at first frankly questioned the wisdom of this particular action, but eventually came to give the students their militant support. And at the other end of the social scale, it was reported that for the first time the nonviolent demonstrations were a topic of excited conversation in the lower class bars of East Baltimore.

The whole experience was clearly a new departure for Baltimore. Few if any towns had witnessed so many arrests at a single place of business. And though the jails were filled at Albany, Ga. and on the Freedom Ride to Jackson, this was one of the first successful attempts to deliberately disrupt the city's political and judicial machinery by mass arrests and filling the jail. The experienced veterans of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) regarded the Northwood Theater demonstration as a highly significant development. And SNCC, itself, shortly thereafter launched its Greenwood, Miss. registration drive, in the heart of the White Citizens Councils' territory—the most difficult and dangerous task any of the civil rights organizations had yet undertaken in their voter registration work. Then came the William Moore memorial trek, Birmingham, and the outbreak of new demonstrations around the country.

OUR CASE STUDY OF THE Northwood Theater demonstration illustrates in microcosm an essential factor that has been at the base of all the demonstrations this Spring—a rising mood of frustration with previous tactics due to the lack of concrete progress, a sense of frustration that made these communities especially sensitive to the stimulus that came from Birmingham. What occurred this Spring is in a way remarkably like what happened in 1960, when the demonstration at Greensboro, N.C. sparked a sit-in movement throughout the South, because youth were becoming impatient and disillusioned with older techniques. In practically all of the Southern cities where direct action has taken place this Spring there has been a history of such action, often of a sustained nature. In Savannah, Georgia a brilliant campaign conducted by the NAACP that included a fifteen month boycott, had obtained not only the desegregation of buses, lunch counters and municipal facilities but also over a hundred new jobs for Negroes as sales clerks and cashiers. But since then little or no progress had been made. In Jackson, following the Freedom Ride, both NAACP and SNCC stimulated nonviolent action there for a brief period (and disagree as to which organization deserved the credit for it), while both SNCC and CORE joined in the voter registration work there. Danville, Virginia, it is true, had had no previous demonstration, but for two years an affiliate of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), had been working unsuccessfully.

The North Carolina communities had a rich history of demonstrations and achievements in 1960–1961, though little had been accomplished recently. In Cambridge, Md. there had been a year of bitter conflict with city authorities that began with the Civic Interest Group's Eastern Shore Freedom Ride in the Spring of 1962, but intermittent efforts by the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee founded at that time had brought no results. In the North, the past three years had witnessed sharply increased agitation over both jobs and de facto school segregation; and frustration there was augmented—as it was in the South—by the serious unemployment problem. Thus, everywhere there was growing disillusionment with methods that seemed to be bringing little in the way of tangible accomplishments. In essence what Birmingham did was transform this disillusionment and frustration into constructive, direct action efforts for social change throughout the nation.

Actually what is going on today is the culmination of efforts under way since the late 1950's. There was a shift in emphasis from legalism to direct action, and a broadening of the scope of civil rights activity. In membership and leadership the civil rights movement became more and more a Negro movement, and more and more a mass movement. The competitive rivalry among civil rights organizations supplied additional impetus. The emerging African states, and their importance in international affairs, gave American Negroes a new self-image. There was the goad of swelling unemployment at the very time that the gradually accelerating pace of change in American race relations and the embarrassment the American race system was causing in the conduct of the nation's foreign policy, combined to create a revolution of expectations in Negro thinking. All of these are interrelated and interlocking phenomena; but the net result was that here, indeed, was a classic case of a rising class in society, confident of itself and its future, but denied its just place in the social structure, and therefore turning to increasingly radical tactics in order to secure that goal.

TODAY, THE FOUR LEADING CIVIL RIGHTS organizations are—in order of historical appearance—the NAACP, the Congress of Racial Equality, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. (We omit from the discussion, as being somewhat peripheral to our interests, the Urban League. This, the most conservative of the Negro advancement organizations, is not strictly a civil rights institution, but a cross between that and a social welfare agency.)

A decade ago the NAACP was easily preeminent among civil rights organizations. Often interlocked with it were the voter registration groups that had been formed in the South after the Supreme Court invalidated the white primary in 1944. Called conservative today, the NAACP's program of protest and political and legal action had originally been regarded as radical, in contrast to the accommodating ideology of Booker T. Washington in the ascendancy when the NAACP was founded in 1909. By the mid-Fifties the NAACP's legal arm had secured an impressive series of Supreme Court decisions which appeared to guarantee voting rights and set forth a set of legal precepts that unequivocally banned any official support for segregation—whether in transportation, housing, or in publicly owned facilities. During the late fifties the NAACP's Southern work consisted largely of litigation against the South's resistance to the school desegregation decision, and fighting the attacks an aroused white South was now making on the organization and its leaders. In the North there was a broadening program, with increasing emphasis on fair housing and especially on employment. The organization's vigorous labor department scored some significant breakthroughs in both the North and the South, most notably the opening up of several hundred jobs at the Lockheed Plant in Marietta, Georgia.

Throughout the country there was major stress on voter registration as the fundamental technique by which to obtain civil rights legislation and the favorable ear of public officials. More recently Northern branches have been giving major attention to eliminating de facto school segregation. Prior to 1960, nonviolent direct action was a peripheral NAACP concern, though in 1958 and 1959, NAACP college and youth groups in Oklahoma City and St. Louis engaged in successful sit-ins and elsewhere, as in Louisville and Baltimore, adult branches had sponsored direct action projects.

CORE, a decade ago, was still a small, chiefly white organization, confined to the Northern and border states, and lacking even a single paid staff member. Founded in 1942, CORE utilized methods that had been developed over the preceding two or three years by the Fellowship of Reconciliation. This group of religious pacifists had, at the suggestion of A. J. Muste, combined Gandhi's method of satyagraha with the sit-down tactics of the Detroit automobile strikers to produce the technique known as the sit-in. The synthesis of union methods (including picketing) with Gandhian nonviolence having proved successful as far South as Baltimore and St. Louis, CORE in 1956 hired its first field secretary, and soon thereafter began its Southern work in earnest (though actually its first foray in that direction had been the Freedom Ride in the Upper South in 1947). CORE's major emphasis throughout the Fifties was on public accommodations. Early in the decade, however, it had pioneered in the method—later so effectively employed and popularized by the Philadelphia ministers—of selective buying to obtain employment; and in 1958–1959 it began using direct action to secure desegregation of privately owned apartment houses. Today, in the North, CORE concentrates on employment and housing, with some work in school desegregation; in the South it concentrates on public accommodations and to a lesser extent on voter registration.

CORE pioneered in satyagraha in the United States, but it was the Montgomery bus boycott in 1955–1956 that dramatically brought it to the attention of the nation, and popularized its use among Negroes. And it has been Martin Luther King, catapulted into prominence by the boycott, who has become the leading symbol of this strategy. Before the court decision (obtained by NAACP Legal Defense Fund lawyers) had spelled success for the Montgomery Improvement Association, a similar movement had started in Tallahassee, under the leadership of Rev. C. K. Steele, (president of the NAACP branch, and later a vice-president of SCLC). Later, similar action was undertaken in Birmingham where, following the state's injunction against NAACP operations, a group of ministers headed by Fred Shuttlesworth had established the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. About the same time, there appeared the Tuskegee Civic Association, which conducted a three-year boycott of local merchants in response to the state legislature's gerrymandering Negro voters out of the town's limits. This campaign attained its object when the Supreme Court ruled the gerrymander illegal in 1960.

The events in Montgomery, Tallahassee and Tuskegee were widely heralded as indicating the emergence of a "New Negro" in the South—militant, no longer fearful of police harassment, jails and white hoodlums, and determined to use his collective economic strength to obtain his freedom. Seizing upon the new mood, King in 1957 organized the Southern Christian Leadership Conference—an organization of affiliates rather than a membership organization like the NAACP and CORE. Ideologically committed to a thoroughgoing pacifism of the Gandhian persuasion, SCLC's program includes not only the familiar mass demonstrations, but also citizenship training institutes which prepare local leaders to work on voter registration in their communities.

The NAACP perceived the beginning of the end to the Negro's second-class citizenship in the 1954 Supreme Court decision. Yet, impressive as it was to cite the advances made in the post-war years, in spite of state laws and Supreme Court decisions, something was clearly wrong. Negroes were still disfranchised in most of the Deep South; legal decisions in regard to transportation were still largely ignored there; discrimination in employment and housing was the rule, even in states with model civil rights laws; the Negro unemployment rate grew constantly due to recessions and automation; and, rather than giving in, the South responded with the White Citizens Councils.

At the very time that legalism was thus proving itself a limited instrument, Negroes were gaining a new self-image as a result of the rise of the new African nations; King and others were demonstrating that nonviolent direct action could be effective in the South; and the new laws and court decisions, the gradually increasing interest of the federal government, and the evident drift of white public opinion developed a new confidence in the future among American Negroes. As a result of this revolution in expectations, Negroes no longer felt that they had to accept the humiliations of second-class citizenship, and consequently these humiliations—somewhat fewer though they now were—appeared to be more intolerable than ever. This increasing impatience accounted for the rising tempo of nonviolent direct action in the late 1950's which culminated in the student sit-ins of 1960. Ironically, the NAACP by its very successes in the courts and legislatures had done more than any other agency to create the revolution in expectations that was to disillusion so many Negroes with the limitations of the NAACP program.

Many date the "Negro Revolt" from the Montgomery Bus Boycott of 1955—and the significance of this event cannot be overemphasized. Yet it seems to me that the truly decisive break with the past came with the college student sit-ins that began spontaneously at Greensboro in 1960. These sit-ins involved, for the first time, the employment of nonviolent direct action on a massive South-wide scale that led to thousands of arrests and elicited the participation of tens of thousands of people. Moreover, a period was inaugurated in which youth were to become the spearhead of the civil-rights struggle. And this is still the case—for it has been the youth who have been the chief dynamic force in compelling the established civil-rights organizations to revamp their strategy, which they found it imperative to do to retain their leadership in the movement.

The NAACP quickly went into action, and the national office deliberately speeded up the creation of youth councils and college chapters with the specific intent of engaging in demonstrations, while national staff members "knocked heads together" at regional conferences that Spring in a vigorous effort to obtain local NAACP participation and support for this type of mass action. In fact, a great deal of the sit-in activity during 1960 and 1961 was carried on by NAACP youth councils and college chapters. Like the NAACP, SCLC sought to get on the student bandwagon, and it sponsored the Raleigh Conference in April, at which the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee was founded—though SNCC and SCLC later drifted apart. CORE in 1960, seemed to be a dying organization, its methods appropriated by more enterprising successors. But in 1961, after the Freedom Ride to Alabama and Mississippi, CORE re-emerged as the most imaginative and resourceful of the civil-rights agencies in the application of the tactics in which it had pioneered.

THUS, EACH OF THE FOUR ORGANIZATIONS is now committed to direct action. In other ways also the differences between them appear largely to be differences of emphasis. All four are now engaged in voter registration; all of them have moved energetically into the employment problem; and both CORE and NAACP—the only two with Northern operations—are stepping up their activities in regard to de facto school segregation and housing. The NAACP however has eschewed primary emphasis on direct action, regarding it as an extremely useful technique; the others regard direct action as the chief focus of their work and consider legal remedies of distinctly secondary value. This fact should not obscure the importance of the legal work done in support of the direct-actionists, most notably in the Supreme Court decisions secured on behalf of the demonstrators. (In fact there is evidence that one reason for the willingness of so many youth to violate Southern laws has been the fact that there was a general expectation that the Court would rule, as it has done thus far, in behalf of demonstrators convicted of trespass, disorderly conduct, parading without a permit, breach of the peace and so forth.

Even the differences in emphasis between the NAACP and the other organizations seem likely to disappear in the light of what happened at the NAACP's recent national convention, where militants among the rank and file and the "radicals" on the paid staff triumphed against the more conservative elements. The convention enthusiastically endorsed direct action as the major NAACP tactic for the future. Undoubtedly the 1963 convention will mark a real turning point in NAACP history.

However, there has been one important difference in the way in which direct action is conducted by national NAACP leaders as compared to that of the leaders of other organizations. The NAACP has tended to act on the premise that the "professionals" should not go to jail; while all the others believe that the "professionals" should not only go to jail along with their followers, but they should also stay there with them. Roy Wilkins' arrest in Jackson was thus a highly significant symbolic act.

On the other hand, there are differences in style among the three more exclusively action-oriented bodies. King and SCLC appear to be the most cautious, and to specialize in a few showy projects. The SNCC people are the most spontaneous. For some of them, demonstrating and going to jail almost appear to have become a way of life. Status is measured by the number of arrests and amount of time spent in jail. More than any of the others the SNCC people are the "true believers."

As in other great movements for the advancement of human welfare, the idealistic and egoistic motivations among civil-rights leaders become so inextricably intertwined that one often cannot tell where one ends and the other begins. Consequently, it is not surprising that the events of 1960 and 1961 ushered in a period of intense competitive rivalry for power and prestige in the civil-rights field. It has been a four-way struggle between SCLC, NAACP, SNCC and CORE, and even the Urban League has become more aggressive.

Of the four it may be said that SNCC has probably been the most dynamic force closely seconded by CORE. SNCC, theoretically a coordinating committee of affiliated college and youth groups, ordinarily operates through a small group in Atlanta which engages in action of its own choosing and enlists the aid of people in the communities where it decides to work. SNCC has been extraordinarily effective. Though it has the most modest budget of any of the four (its field secretaries, currently reported as numbering about ninety, work on a subsistence basis), and although it has, until very recently, received far less publicity than the other organizations, it can probably be said that it has supplied the major drive for the civil rights movement in the South.

While various SCLC affiliates have taken the lead in non-violent action in certain communities, especially in NAACP branches dominated by conservative leadership, King himself functions as a symbolic or "spiritual leader." Ordinarily, he moves into situations after they have been started, and then lends the magic of his image to the support of the local movement. King operates effectively in this way both because he is a superb symbolic figure, and also because he is easily the most effective interpreter of Negro aspirations to white America. Elsewhere there have arisen numerous local organizations, often established by ministers, taking various names and unattached to any national body. Sometimes these are "umbrella" groups, including local units of national bodies; at other times they are independent of, though not necessarily hostile to the NAACP or other established groups. As the oldest and therefore the most bureaucratic of the civil rights agencies, in many localities dominated by older conservative leaders, the NAACP has quite naturally been on the defensive in a number of cities. Yet, while the NAACP can scarcely take credit for initiating the use of direct action techniques, it is clearly invalid to stereotype it as run by a conservative Black Bourgeoisie irrevocably wedded to legalism. Pushed and shoved by the more exclusively action-oriented groups, the NAACP has pretty effectively met the challenge posed by them —though its dominance in the civil rights field, not seriously contested as late as 1960, has been broken. Often, in fact, one gets the impression that rivalry among the different groups is not due so much to differences in philosophy, tactics or degree of militancy, as much as to a power struggle for hegemony in the civil rights movement. Painful as these conflicts have been, the rivalry of the civil rights groups has actually proved to be an essential ingredient of the dynamics of the Negro protest movement over the past three and a half years. For, in their attempt to outdo each other, each organization puts forth a greater effort and is constantly searching for new avenues along which to develop programs. And despite all rivalries, when the chips are down, the different agencies can and usually do manage to cooperate. Especially significant has been the growing cooperation between CORE and SNCC in the past few months. The best example of this cooperation amidst rivalry is, of course, the fact that all four of these organizations, along with others, are currently working together in sponsoring the March on Washington to take place late in August.

It is impossible to generalize about the NAACP. To arrive at a valid account of the relationship of the NAACP to the nonviolent movement one would have to make a detailed study of the complexities in various local situations, and the policies of the national staff. The patterns of what actually happened seem infinitely varied. Some branches have resisted the direct action approach; others have embraced it wholeheartedly. In some branches there has been fierce internal fighting. Thus in Philadelphia one faction denounced the branch leaders for being conservative, picketed their homes with signs calling them "Uncle Toms," and having captured the branch offices has subsequently enjoyed an unusual degree of support from the masses of people. In Lynchburg a few years ago, the initiative in civil rights passed to a group of ministers affiliated with the SCLC because the branch leadership there was a conservative group, consisting chiefly of businessmen and school people. (Teachers, because of their vulnerability have been the most cautious group in the Negro community. When, therefore, the Birmingham teachers openly sided with their demonstrating students it was an event of major significance.) In some instances adult leadership worked well with youth, as in Durham, one of the first action groups in the South to add successful work in the area of employment to its achievements in desegregating places of public accommodation. In Memphis militant NAACP adult leadership maneuvered originally autonomous youth groups into the NAACP, and misunderstanding and some bitterness followed when the adults and youth did not agree on tactics, since the adults did not see the necessity of so many arrests.

In a number of places it was the youth chapters that pushed the adult branches into action. Thus in St. Louis there was also some friction. There adults organized the youth council, then thought the youth were moving too fast and finally when dramatic youth action brought results, they wished to take the credit for the achievement. In Charlotte and Richmond also, the college activists quarreled with adult NAACP leadership over tactics and credit, the students being action-oriented, impatient with negotiating, and intolerant of anything that smacked of compromise. Such personality and tactical conflicts undoubtedly explain why CORE, in the aftermath of its Freedom Highways project in the summer of 1962, has been able to enlist so much support from NAACP people in North Carolina—so much so, in fact, that the state youth conference leaders were tempted to go lock, stock and barrel over to CORE. In Durham the activists now refer to themselves as NAACP-CORE, and that town's unusually able and dedicated NAACP lawyer, Floyd B. McKissick, was this past June elected National Chairman of CORE. Something of the same order occurred in Savannah, where there was a break between an unusually militant branch president and the youth leader. The upshot was that the NAACP predominance in civil rights activity in Savannah was broken. Both the NAACP branch and the SCLC affiliate there now have vigorous, but independent programs, with some cooperation. However, it is the work of the SCLC affiliate that is currently receiving national attention.

The story of the interaction between the NAACP and the more activist groups is therefore one that defies easy generalization. In at least three cases—Atlanta, Tallahassee, and Nashville—dynamic NAACP branch presidents became heads of local SCLC affiliates. What the NAACP has been aggrieved about is not their direct action work, but the fact that its leaders' identification with SCLC subtracted deserved credit from NAACP. In Danville, a project initiated by the local SCLC affiliate, CORE and SNCC sent field workers to assist, and both the local and state NAACP are also cooperating. In Baltimore, the NAACP's effort to dominate the Civic Interest Group led to a bitter quarrel; but the local arrangements for the CIG's Eastern Shore demonstrations in the Spring of 1962 were set up by an NAACP field secretary, and on the basis of these demonstrations he was able to establish or reactivate several NAACP branches in the area, to the benefit of the Maryland State NAACP Conference, presided over by the head of the Baltimore branch.

In some cases the NAACP's problem seems to be that it is too aggressive, as in Baltimore and Philadelphia. In other cases its problem arises from the fact that it is not aggressive enough. In New York, CORE and NAACP have worked together on picketing the Harlem Hospital construction site in an effort to secure employment for skilled Negroes in the building trades, but there has been some disagreement on who deserves the credit. In Philadelphia, the problem is more serious; but even there, though the fractionalization of leadership has been deplored, analysis of the situation reveals that the nasty rivalry over who is going to do most to secure new employment opportunities in the skilled trades, has led both groups to step up their activities more than otherwise anticipated, and has thus led to more rapid progress than would otherwise have been possible. In Jackson, on the other hand, SNCC and CORE people who had been assisting the NAACP in its recent major effort there, felt that the NAACP's failure to conduct continuous massive demonstrations was a serious tactical error arising from NAACP timidity and lingering faith in legalism, and eventually they withdrew from the demonstration. The NAACP itself was not unified on the matter; not only were certain local elements anxious to have more vigorous action, but it has been reported that national leaders who were on the scene were not agreed among themselves.

In Louisville, the tension between the NAACP and other organizations operated in quite a different fashion. For some reason the NAACP there was quiescent during 1960, and not until a tiny CORE group led the way at the end of the year was the NAACP galvanized into action. After some bickering, a coordinating committee was organized to run the demonstrations which included the NAACP, CORE and a voter registration group. Under the forcible leadership of the son of the local Negro newspaper publisher, a mass boycott of all downtown Louisville, mammoth parades, mass arrests and other colorful—if, at the time, rather unorthodox—techniques, resulted in the complete desegregation of downtown Louisville. The campaign cost the local NAACP treasury some $6,000—given under the compulsion of circumstances—and most of the demonstrators happened to be members of the NAACP. But the organization did not get the lion's share of the credit. The NAACP is still bitter about this; Roy Wilkins referred specifically to the Louisville situation in his acid remarks last month about other organizations taking the credit and letting the NAACP foot the bills. Yet the truth in Louisville is a complex one, for youthful dynamism, CORE's prodding, the resourceful leadership of a person on the NAACP executive board who neither spoke for the branch, nor was an officer of it, and NAACP money were all essential ingredients of the movement's spectacular and probably unparalleled success.

These questions of finances and credit are touchy ones. Concern with the latter is not entirely unjustified. As responsible officials in both CORE and NAACP have put it to me, it is essential for their respective organizations to receive full credit for what they are doing, since each needs a good image if it is to attract the members and funds necessary to carry on and expand its work. And it is, in fact, in large part this need for a good public image that has propelled the NAACP into more and more direct action throughout the nation, either by itself or in coalition with other organizations. The NAACP, particularly the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, the two wealthiest civil rights organizations, have played an important role in financing the direct action movement. The Legal Defense Fund has performed an exceedingly important function in representing activists both in and out of the NAACP, in the courts. However, it should be noted that since 1955, the NAACP Legal Defense Fund has been a completely independent organization, legally, administratively, and financially. As for the other groups, CORE and SNCC are in chronic need of funds; while the best heeled of the more strictly actionist organizations is easily the SCLC. There is a widespread feeling in the civil rights movement that King is able to get a great deal of money because of his excellent public relations image, but that most of it is spent on overhead. His field staff, for example, is small—half a dozen compared to the dozens that are employed by SNCC, whose annual budget has not been much more than $100,000.

SINCE 1960 THE PUSH FROM THE YOUTH and the competitive rivalry between the various organizations have galvanized the civil rights cause. Organizations and leaders just have to take more dramatic action if they are to maintain their position since arrests numbering fifty or a hundred are scarcely news any longer. Both the NAACP and SCLC, as we have observed, attempted to tie the student movement to its image. But youth have a way of being independent, overthrowing the yoke of their elders. The importance of the work of NAACP youth in 1960 and 1961 was made very evident at the NAACP 1961 convention, when the organization was faced with a serious revolt of its own youth councils and college chapters, which regarded themselves as setting the pace for the adults. They demanded and received greater autonomy and representation on convention committees and on the national board. As one youth was overheard to remark: "We can do without the adults, but they can't do without us." Though in view of the students' dependence upon the adults for financial and legal aid this statement was clearly an oversimplification, it did epitomize the dynamics of the situation. Thus, when CORE recouped itself by the 1961 Freedom Ride, it was the Nashville students who were responsible for continuing it when it bogged down in Alabama. Later, when CORE and SCLC leaders thought it was time to call the whole thing to a halt, the students insisted on continuing to bring Freedom Riders into Jackson.

Student groups have kept things humming ever since. King, the youth tend to say, stays in jail only long enough to obtain the publicity necessary to maintain his symbolic leadership. Especially revealing is an incident reported to have occurred during the recent Birmingham demonstration. The decision to use young children was not King's, but was made by two younger men—one a man on King's staff (and a former leader in the student movement), and the other a CORE representative—while King and other adult leaders were out of the city. By the time King returned the children were ready to move, and at the very moment when King was questioning the tactics at a strategy meeting—so the report goes—the two young men slipped the children out of the church and led them on their way to jail in what probably proved to be the most brilliant tactic of the whole campaign. And just as King, many felt, had to help lead the Birmingham campaign in order to revive his fading image,* so it was obvious that the NAACP had to do something. That this something proved to be Jackson was apparently due not only to the external pressures facing the NAACP, but also, in part, to the considerable pressure from the youth groups in Jackson itself for direct action. Similarly the acclaim accorded Paul Zuber for his victory in the New Rochelle school case must have been a major stimulus for the

* His reputation had been severely damaged by his two defeats in Albany, Ga.

NAACP's all-out attack on educational segregation in the North. As we shall point out below there are several factors that account for the recent burgeoning civil rights activity in the North, but surely the competition between CORE and NAACP is partly responsible for the vigor with which these two organizations are now working on de facto school segregation, job discrimination and housing. Finally, the pressure of competing organizations was very largely responsible for the turn taken by the NAACP annual convention held in July, 1963. Not only did the convention resolve to emphasize direct action work, but the youth were granted greater autonomy than ever, and the convention recommended to the national board procedures for removing do-nothing conservative branch officials.

TWO OF THE MOST SIGNIFICANT aspects of the civil rights movement since 1960—and essential components of its dynamics—are that it has become increasingly a Negro movement and a mass movement. The two developments are not unrelated; and both of them, of course, had their origins well before 1960. The NAACP membership and branch leadership had always been almost entirely Negro; but at the start, most of the staff and executive board were white liberals. In 1921 the NAACP employed its first Negro executive secretary, James Weldon Johnson; in 1933 its legal staff came under Negro direction when Charles Houston took over; and today only two NAACP staff members are white (though the Legal Defense Fund's chief counsel, Jack Greenberg, is white). Constitutional changes made in 1947 and 1962 have permitted greater membership participation in the selection of the national board; one result has been a decline in the number of whites on it so that today they make up less than one-fourth of its membership. CORE started off as a predominantly white liberal middle-class organization. As late as 1960, perhaps only one-third of its membership was Negro, and at that time its three chief executive officers, as well as its national chairman were white. With the selection of James Farmer as natonal director in 1961, CORE's image in the Negro community changed markedly, and it was thereby able to attract far more Negro support. Today, of CORE's four chief paid executives, two are white and two are Negro. While the majority of Northern CORE members are still white there has been increasing Negro participation and in the South CORE's membership is almost entirely Negro. CORE's recent convention, held in June 1963, witnessed two firsts: it was the first time that a majority of the delegates were Negro, and it was the first time that a Negro was elected national chairman. And the Southern Negro delegates set the tone for the convention and moved into positions of leadership.

The March on Washington Movement during the Second World War encouraged current tendencies insisting upon an all-Negro membership and leadership; and the same holds true of the Negro American Labor Council formed in 1960, to combat discriminatory trade-union practices within the AFL-CIO. Organizations like SCLC and the various local movements that have sprung up around the country have been Negro organizations from the start. SNCC has avoided any form of union with the predominantly white Northern Student Movement for Civil Rights—though it and Northern white students generally have been a prime source of SNCC's funds. SNCC has a number of white field secretaries, but it consciously projects itself as a Negro-led organization, and Negroes dominate SNCC's power structure. There has, in fact, been a growing insistence that Negroes must take the initiative and leadership in achieving their freedom, that white liberals tend to be compromisers who cannot be fully trusted, though their financial assistance and their participation in direct action—under Negro leadership—are to be welcomed.

CORE's experience has shown clearly that in order to attract large numbers of Negroes to the civil rights movement Negro leadership is essential. White liberals—and radicals—in the movement have accepted this fact. The NAACP had originally appealed to the élite Negroes, and during the 1930's some of the younger intellectuals like Ralph Bunche criticized it for doing nothing about the problems of the Negro working masses. The Association modified its program somewhat, and during the forties and fifties, largely as a result of the energetic work of its labor secretary, made an increasing appeal to working-class people. Actually it would be impossible to make any generalization about the sources of NAACP branch membership and leadership today, since the variations are so great, and since so much depends on local conditions and personalities. In some branches the more élite people in the community set the tone; in others the professional and business people show no interest and blue collar workers dominate. Thus, suburban New York branches have an élite tone, while the Youngstown, Ohio branch, for example, is under labor control and has a steelworker for president. At the risk of much oversimplification one may say that, in general, branch leadership today tends to be more middle class rather than either lower class or upper class. For example, the noted work of the Savannah branch was carried out under the leadership of a postal worker.

CORE originally attracted white collar middle-class Negroes. Since 1960, however, it has found blue collar skilled and even semi-skilled workers joining its ranks, both in the North, where it has started to place major emphasis on the problem of obtaining jobs for working-class Negroes, and in the South. The youthful sit-inners of 1960 and 1961 were chiefly of working-class origins—that is they tended to be upward mobile members of the Negro lower-middle and upper-lower classes, though their leadership was more likely to be of middle-class origin. From the beginning the bus boycotts of the South were mass movements, and the same is true of movements like the Albany Movement and the selective buying campaigns that appeared in a number of cities, though it should be pointed out that all classes of the community are involved in these efforts and that the upper-middle and even upper classes are disproportionately represented in their leadership.

A RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF THE HIGHEST SIGNIFICANCE has been the active involvement in the civil rights movement of menial lower-class people, many of whom are chronically unemployed. Apparently it was they who were responsible for the brick and bottle throwing in Birmingham and Jackson. Generally, individuals of this group have heretofore avoided actual participation in demonstrations sponsored by the direct action groups. I personally remember how in Chestertown, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, where most of the Negro population is composed of unskilled cannery workers with only seasonal employment, few of the local people attended the mass meetings or participated in demonstrations—but they were ready, more than ready, to fight the white hoodlums who attacked the interracial teams of nonviolent demonstrators. In fact a riot at that time (the Spring of 1962) was only narrowly averted. Especially remarkable was the situation in Jacksonville, Florida, a year or so ago, where youthful Negro gangs started to defend the NAACP demonstrators from attacks by white gangs. The NAACP was able to establish contact with the Negro gangs and creatively channeled and coordinated their activity to fit in with NAACP direct action strategy.

It is exceedingly significant that some individuals from lower lower-class background have actually begun to demonstrate with nonviolent activists. Unlike the latter, they have not remained nonviolent in the face of provocation from white mobsters, but have become involved in fracases with them in places like Cambridge and Nashville. In the North, people of this class are chiefly concerned with obtaining jobs; in the South, despite a high rate of unemployment, they are becoming involved in the struggle for public accommodations, though this is quite likely a result, at least in part, of the new practice of packaging demands for desegregation of lunch counters and so forth, with demands for jobs. CORE's experiments with direct action to secure improvement of slum housing in Newark and Brooklyn suggest that the major civil rights organizations will soon be deliberately making a bid, through concrete action projects, for the support of this most underprivileged element in the Negro population.

There are those who believe that overt violence on the part of Negro demonstrators will rise, and that in hard-core areas of the South, Gandhian techniques will not work and disillusionment with nonviolence will set in even among those heretofore committed to it. Certainly, few of the demonstrators in CORE or SNCC are philosophically committed to nonviolence. Rather it has been a technique that has proved successful, and has given those who use it a certain sense of moral superiority. But with the increasing police brutality as in Alabama, Danville and elsewhere, the growing frustration at the resistance to change on the part of the white South, and the expanding involvement of lower-class people whose values condone the use of violence, it is likely that the tendency to fight back rather than accept brutality passively, may increase. In retrospect, the incident involving Robert Williams of Monroe, North Carolina, who was suspended as NAACP chapter president in 1959, because he held that Negroes should fight in self-defense when attacked, which at the time seemed to be a unique and relatively inconsequential phenomenon, turns out to be something of a harbinger of the future. Williams later said that only if Negroes fought back would federal intervention on their behalf occur—and recent events in Birmingham suggest that there was an element of truth in this prediction. There are some who believe that rioting and bloodshed are inevitable and could even be of value in compelling the intervention of federal authority and the recognition of the Negro's constitutional rights. Moreover, it is possible that the dire predictions in the daily press about the likelihood of racial violence may act in the nature of a self-fulfilling prophecy. Whether or not extensive racial violence occurs, astute leadership in the civil rights movement will certainly employ its possibility as a device for eliciting quicker action from the white power structure. In any event, the movement is at the point where CORE, SNCC and many NAACP leaders say that no matter what the risks of violence may be, they cannot stop pressing forward now. The outlook is therefore clearly for more direct action, not less.

One must conclude that there has emerged a real thrust for achieving "Freedom Now" from the working class and lower-middle class people. SNCC, highly critical of both the Black Bourgeoisie and the white liberals, regards itself as the vanguard of the Negro masses—and to a remarkable extent that is exactly what the youthful demonstrators of the years since 1960, have proved to be. And this pressure from the working class—especially working-class youth —has been largely responsible for the greater momentum the civil rights movement has recently attained. It is ironical that what started out some time ago as a Negro middle- and upper-class and a white liberal movement, has ended up as a movement where the largest impetus is coming from the Negro working masses. In fact, the competition for prestige and power among the major civil rights organizations is in considerable degree a competition for control over the masses of working-class Negroes. It is also likely that a large part of the waxing militancy of middle- and upper-class Negroes is derived from the new militancy of the working classes. As Bayard Rustin wrote concerning Birmingham in the June, 1963 issue of Liberation, here was a "black community [that] was welded into classless revolt. A. G. Gaston, the Negro millionaire who with some ministers and other upper-class elements had publicly stated that the time was not ripe for such a broad protest, finally accommodated himself, as did the others, to the mass pressure from below and joined the struggle." There is, however, a wide range of patterns. Thus in Baltimore it has been the example of certain prominent ministers and the Urban League Executive Secretary, who were arrested July 4, at the Gwynn Oaks Amusement Park demonstration, that is galvanizing large numbers of adults in the community to a willingness to participate in direct action activity.

It has become fashionable in activist circles to criticize the Negro bourgeoisie and the white liberals as being conservative compromisers, wedded to gradualism and legalism. But this is a gross oversimplification of the true situation. Much of the leadership in the civil rights movement comes from the more élite Negroes. Even the leadership of SNCC, which is most vociferous in its denunciation of the Black Bourgeoisie is largely of middle-class origins. From Cambridge to Albany the leadership of the Southern movement is peppered with members of the middle and upper classes. And the Birmingham experience suggests that if the businessmen and leaders drawn from the upper strata wish to retain their position they will have to go along with the tide.

It is as erroneous to stereotype the white liberals as it is to stereotype the Black Bourgeoisie. "Farewell to the white liberal," has now become a familiar slogan. And in large part this feeling is justified. As far back as the middle Fifties, Negroes exhibited disillusionment with many white liberals who thought the NAACP (of all organizations) was going too fast. Liberal labor leaders have temporized on the issue of trade union discrimination in deference to prejudiced elements within their unions, especially in the South. Often white liberals, who ideologically think in terms of gradual change and compromising where necessary, and whose wide-ranging concerns sometimes lead them to feel that progress in other areas should not necessarily be sacrificed for an all-out attack on civil rights (a point of view that plagued the Kennedy Administration during its first two years and more in office) display what to Negro activists is an alarming tendency to compromise, if not betray, their cause. Certain white liberals who have entered the Establishment since Kennedy became President, tend to urge a go-slow approach because they do not like to see the President placed in a difficult position.

Yet, all liberals are not alike; a significant number are activists themselves. Faculty members and students from Duke University and the University of Tennessee, and more recently Vanderbilt University have participated in direct-action demonstrations, as have a handful of liberal white professors in the Negro colleges. White liberals formed an important element in CORE's 1961 Freedom Ride, and CORE still draws largely from the liberal white group in the North; a very substantial share of the financial support (possibly over half) of SNCC, SCLC, CORE and the NAACP Legal Defense Fund comes from liberal whites; many hundreds of northern white liberal college youth have participated in demonstrations in Maryland, and some have worked as field secretaries for SNCC in the Deep South. Moreover, it seems inevitable that as desegregation progresses in the South, increasing numbers of Southern white liberal youth will want to participate. If they do so in significant numbers, the most active ones will certainly wish to participate in policy-making, and thus SNCC will have to re-examine its Negro-only leadership policy. It is natural that Negroes should want to discard paternalistic white leadership. But the ironic result is that a movement for racial equality operates ideologically with the notion that whites should be subordinate in it to Negroes. Undoubtedly this is a passing phase; as we approach genuine full citizenship for American Negroes this sort of anomaly will disappear.

The sharpest censure of liberal whites is of course reserved for those labor leaders and politicians who, subjected to many cross-pressures, do not act fully in accordance with their ideals. Southern union locals and vested interest groups who do not wish to share their monopoly of skilled jobs or their power within the unions with others, resist granting equality to Negro union members. Even unions that pass resolutions in support of Negro rights, significantly compromise the rights of their own Negro members. The situation in the ILGWU, for example, where non-whites make up a large proportion of the membership is a scandal. There is not a single Negro on the union's General Executive Board, and though non-whites make up over 90% of the membership of certain locals all managers are white. Not only are there no Negroes in positions of real leadership in the ILGWU, but Negroes have difficulty in entering the skilled craft local unions. Even the UAW, known for years for its outstanding liberalism on the race issue, has lacked Negro participation in its top circles. Not until the 1962 convention was a Negro elected to the International Executive Board—and this came about only after a Negro caucus conducted a spirited two year fight on the floor of the convention. The situation, of course, is far worse in most of the old-line illiberal AFL unions, especially in the building trades, printing and skilled metal crafts. In the South, union locals are sometimes identified with the white supremacists, as in Savannah, Front Royal, Virginia, Lithonia, Ga., and elsewhere. In the steel center of Birmingham, the most highly unionized town in the South, and in Little Rock, Atlanta and New Orleans, which are all well unionized, organized labor failed to take a stand in behalf of civil rights during the racial crises in those cities. Union leaders have simply abdicated their responsibilities on this issue. All this is not lost on Negro workers. As far as Negroes are concerned, the theory of Negro-Labor unity is meaningless. Thus, with few exceptions, labor, which many conceive of as the natural ally of the Negro, is under attack from Negro protest groups.

THE TREMENDOUS PRESSURES generated by the Negro protest movement in recent months have forced the President to finally come out forcefully for Negro citizenship rights on moral grounds and to make some relatively strong legislative recommendations to Congress. While pleased with the step forward Kennedy has taken, Negro leaders, even Roy Wilkins, are nevertheless dissatisfied with his proposals. In many ways, they feel that the legislative package could and must be strengthened. They are particularly disappointed that Kennedy's recommendations do not attack the heart of the employment problem, whose solution they are now coming to recognize as the key to the solution of the whole problem of racial discrimination. And there have been strong rumblings of dissatisfaction over the Administration's seeming willingness to compromise on the public accommodations proposals. Thus Kennedy is caught between the accelerating Negro demands and the counter-pressures from groups hostile to civil rights. Under the circumstances, whatever he feels able to do will not satisfy the integrationists.

Yet in attacking white liberals, and in making the incontrovertible assertion that Negroes through their own actions have brought about more changes in the past three years than took place in all the preceding fifty, it seems to me that the civil rights activists appear to be taking a somewhat narrow view of social causation. Leaving aside the role of white liberals in creating the climate of opinion which makes more rapid advancement now possible, it should be pointed out that the civil rights movement even now depends a great deal financially upon the contributions of liberal white. Kennedy acts too late and then too little on civil rights matters, but it is doubtful that if Nixon had won the presidency with southern support there would have been much significant progress. Indeed, undoubtedly the current Negro mood is partly rooted in the expectation that Kennedy would act decisively. Disillusionment set in when he did not.

Some white liberals, no longer regarded as authorities on strategy by Negro integrationists, amazed at some of the demands that Negroes are now making—such as bringing white children into Negro areas for school so as to create racially balanced educational facilities, and giving Negroes preferential treatment on jobs until employment equality is achieved—must feel rather like the Girondists did when overtaken by the Jacobins. Should violence become a common tactic rather than a sporadic reaction, more will find themselves in this position. Thus to some extent, there is a tendency for many white liberals to feel rather alienated from the civil rights movement today. This is true even for those who participate in the movement. They sense the general suspicion of white liberals, the deliberate exclusion of whites from leadership, and their relegation, as whites, to secondary and supporting roles. (I do not intend to suggest that this attitude toward white participation is universal. Baltimore, North Carolina and probably Nashville would be exceptions. In North Carolina a white Duke University student was elected president of the NAACP state youth conference in 1962; in Baltimore where the NAACP leadership has for years held that "You can't trust any white people," the nonviolent demonstrators in CORE and CIG tend to regard some of the more extreme activists in SNCC as something akin to racists.)

INTERESTINGLY ENOUGH THERE ARE SIGNS that the white radicals in the civil rights movement are also somewhat alienated from it. Radicals of various hues—Socialists, Trotskyites, Russophile Communists and others—perceived in the student nonviolent movement important implications. They saw it as a potentially revolutionary movement and believed that, given the context of American life in the sixties, in this movement lay the key to a more socialized America. They may yet be right, not because their aims are the aims of the Negro activists, not because they will be able to generate a truly revolutionary movement out of the Negro protest, but because the unemployment problem facing Negro workers is of such serious dimensions that the government may be compelled to take what by American standards would be highly radical steps to solve it. For civil rights leaders are on the road to making employment their chief area of direct action, and it is the area most fraught with the danger of explosive violence in the North. In a sense, the solution to the nation's growing economic problems is a key to the solution of the civil rights question. Integration will be meaningless without jobs, and not very meaningful if the jobs are the old menial ones. In fact, a major source of the very urgency characterizing the Negro protest movement today is the economic deprivation suffered by millions of unskilled and semi-skilled Negro workers and their families.

The Socialists, and particularly the more militant revolutionary Marxists saw a golden opportunity in the student movement and the expanding work of SCLC. Superficially their ideas fitted in well enough with the vocabulary of the Negro activists, who were imbued with the mystique of conducting a "revolutionary" movement destined to shake the social structure to its very foundations, and who identified themselves with the Negro masses against the Black Bourgeoisie. Undoubtedly the white radicals added to the revolutionary, anti-Negro-bourgeois, anti-white-liberal psychology of the Movement. Their presence was welcomed by many, though fully understood by only a few, for they seemed sincere, dedicated and uncompromising in their advocacy of civil rights. Attending the SNCC meeting in 1962 was like going to a Popular Front affair in the 1930's.

Lately one can discern some disenchantment on the part of the white radicals. In the Winter 1963 issue of Freedomways, Ann Braden voiced concern over the second-class position accorded to Southern white radicals in the civil rights movement.

More significantly, some of the revolutionary Marxists, both Negro and white, are looking with dismay upon the signs that Southern businessmen are coming to terms with the demonstrators since this would deflect the Movement from what they believe is its true revolutionary course. They regard it as regrettable that Negroes would be satisfied with the ballot, a home and a car. But they have really missed the point of the Negro protest movement. After all, the vote, a job, a decent standard of living, the right to come and go like other American citizens, are what Negroes are really striving for.

The non-ideological activists are not aiming at radical change in the social structure—they simply talk as if they are. In speaking with Negro youth who use the vocabulary of revolution, one soon discovers that the vast majority of them are attempting to reform

American society. They want to "revolutionize" the system of race relations, and anticipate that in the process the political system of the South will undergo a radical transformation into a two-party system. But they contemplate no change in the basic political and economic structures; at most, some of them talk rather vaguely of the identity of interest between poor white and poor Negroes. More fundamentally what most of them want is the opportunity to participate fully in American society as it stands.

SINCE THE AMERICAN NEGRO IS NOW an emerging class that demands the opportunity to participate fully in the American social structure, one would expect that, like thwarted emerging classes elsewhere, if the employment situation is not improved, and if unbreakable resistance should persist in the South, or if a period of reaction should reverse the present trends, he might become a genuine revolutionary radical, and reject entirely the American system and what it stands for. But in such an eventuality the trend is not likely to be toward Marxism—which has had practically no impact upon the Negro activists—but toward some form of nationalism. Until recently, in fact, it seemed quite possible that the unskilled, lowest-class urban Negroes might turn to the escapist nationalist ideology of the Black Muslims, for this sect offered a sense of dignity and a hope for the future to those whom the civil rights movement neglected. More than anything else increasing unemployment joined with the revolution in expectations created a climate in which the Black Muslims thrived. The Black Muslims are simply one of several nationalist movements, but the only one of any size, and though their number is almost certainly below 100,000 they have many admirers. Historically, extreme nationalism of this sort has been usually found among the most dispossessed of the Negro masses (the chief exception being the discouraging decade prior to the Civil War when considerable interest in colonization was to be found among the Negro élite), though there are certain tiny groups of nationalist intellectuals, like the avowedly Marxist Monroe Defense Committee, and like the Liberation Committee for Africa, which seems to lack any coherent program.

JUST AS THE GARVEY MOVEMENT was the lower-lower-class counterpart of the New Negro of the 1920's, so the Black Muslims are the counterpart of the new "New Negro" of the 1960's. They preach an eschatological vision of the doom of the white devils and the coming dominance of the black man, promise a Utopian paradise of a separate territory within the United States in which Negroes will establish their own state, and offer a more practical program of economic accumulation and building up Negro business through hard work, thrift, middle-class morality, and racial unity. Nevertheless, despite the stark contrast between the integrationist aims of the civil rights organizations, and the separatist ideology of the Black Muslims, it is important to recognize that the two have much in common. Both are manifestations of a militant rejection of white discrimination and doctrines of Negro inferiority. Both are essentially a quest for recognition of the Negroes' human dignity. Both reflect the new self-image of American Negroes arising out of the emergence of the new African states. Both exhibit profound dissatisfaction with the traditional Christianity of the Negro masses which offered rewards in heaven rather than a correction of abuses here on earth. Both work for a future in which Negroes lead the life of bougeois Americans. Both exhibit a skepticism about liberal whites. And both are indications of Negro rejection of the philosophy of gradualism. In part, perhaps because they have sensed the increasing attraction for the masses of the direct-action activists of the civil rights organizations which have been moving more vigorously into the area of employment discrimination; in part, undoubtedly, because they thought the moment opportune to make a bid for leadership of the entire Negro community, since March 1963, the Black Muslims appear to have made a turn to the right. They now give less emphasis to separatism, and place more emphasis on the generalized abstractions of justice and freedom; they even urge support of the programs of the civil rights groups which are working for freedom and justice for the race.

The influence of the Black Muslims on the civil rights movement is somewhat speculative. Negroes of all classes approve of their searing indictment of the American race system, and of their ability to place white men on the defensive. Their renown may have contributed to some extent to the vogue of asserting pride in being black that has enjoyed some popularity among Negro activists in recent years. Their presence has also probably contributed not a little to the intensified activities of the more traditional organizations like the NAACP and Urban League, and may in fact have helped alert the civil rights organizations generally to the importance of vigorous action on behalf of the unemployed. This of course will, in turn, almost certainly undermine the Black Muslims' appeal. And finally, the fear of the Black Muslims has certainly accelerated the efforts of influential whites to satisfy the demands of the civil rights organizations. Ironically, the Black Muslims, by frightening white people, are putting themselves out of business.

IT IS FAREWELL TO THE WHITE LIBERALS, and probably also to the white radicals, and quite likely it will be the same shortly for the Black Muslims. Prejudice and discrimination have produced strong ambivalences in the psychology of American Negroes. They wish to be accepted as Americans, and yet are forced to an ethnocentric loyalty to the black race. Basically they wish to participate in the American social structure, yet they are forced into revolt aganst it. But revolutionary radicalism, whether of the nationalist or the Marxist variety seems to be an unlikely haven for the majority of Negroes, simply because, in contrast to the Africans, they are in a minority that is too small and too dispossessed to obtain freedom and dignity by either of these methods. But they are numerous enough to be a crucial factor in national and in many state and local elections; they are numerous enough to disrupt the normal operations of city life by demonstrations; and they are numerous enough and prosperous enough to wield a mighty economic threat through the power of selective patronage. The future success of the Negro protest movement therefore lies in the use of economic and political pressures, dramatized by nonviolent demonstrations, that will compel the politicians and the business community (in the South the so-called moderates) to accord equal treatment to Negroes in American society. I do not conceive of the politicians or the business community as allies of the Negroes; rather they are the power blocs most susceptible to pressures that Negroes are able to exert.

If, as I think, this will be the likely course of events, we will be faced with another interesting irony in that certain groups that in the past have done so much to advance the cause of civil rights will be the least to benefit from the results. I refer to the Black Muslims who have advanced civil rights by scaring the white man, and to the white liberals and radicals who have worked directly for racial equality. Though one may anticipate that for some time Negroes will remain a relatively distinct group in view of the ethnic pluralism traditional in our society, there will no longer be a base upon which the Black Muslims can erect a powerful movement although they will continue to appeal to the thousands of disadvantaged people whose problems cannot be solved even if tremendous progress is made. Nor will Negroes have any more cause to be liberals or radicals than Americans generally.

Unless the problems posed by automation prove insoluble within the framework of a capitalist economy, the United States is likely to remain dominated by a middle-class ideology; the routes of upward mobility for Negroes will be the same as those for whites; and Negroes consequently will share in the typical bourgeois values and aspirations of American life.

The new thrust from the Negro masses, the complex patterns of rivalry and cooperation among the civil rights organizations, the increasing power of the Negro vote in the urban centers North and South, the growing realization of the Negro's economic power that he has learned from successful boycotts, the obvious sensitivity of the government to foreign criticism of our racial system, have together resulted in a broadening and intensification of the Negro protest. Year by year and month by month, Negroes have been growing more militant, more immediatist, more fed up with limited successes and tokenism. Paradoxically both the increasing pace of advancement and the growing resistance in the South are leading to greater and greater Negro militance. It is conceivable that a stiffening of Southern white intransigeance, or large-scale unemployment may complicate matters and encourage the development of a Black nationalist revolutionary ideology. But two things are quite certain —Negro militance is bound to grow, and an accelerated tempo of improvement in civil rights appears almost inevitable.

AUGUST MEIER teaches history at Morgan State College, Baltimore. He is adult advisor to the Civic Interest Group of Baltimore. His book, Negro Thought in America, 1880–1915 will be published in the Fall by the University of Michigan Press.

Intergroup - Gen

ANNUAL REPORT

FALL 1962 - FALL 1963

Quaker House

1384 FAIRVIEW ROAD, N.E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30306

Appal Intergroup Org. Misc.

WORKING TOGETHER

Rev'd 1963

COUNCIL OF THE SOUTHERN MOUNTAINS INC.

SCHOOL AUTHORITIES

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT WORKERS

STATE GOVERNMENTS

PRIVATE CITIZENS

HEALTH AGENTS

RELIGIOUS LEADERS

RECREATION COUNSELORS

More than 8,000,000 people live in 257 counties in nine states—the Appalachian South. Inter-related problems of limited education and unemployment have resulted in under-nourishment, health deficiencies, substandard housing and clothing, out-migration, and low social morale. Only two of these counties are above the national medians in adult education and family income; 204 counties are more than two years below the national norm in number of years of schooling of adults over 25 years old; 100 counties have a family income median of less than half the national median.

MR. P. F. AYER
EXEC. SECRETARY

The Council of the Southern Mountains, Inc., is a 50-year old voluntary fellowship of professional, lay, and organizational leadership which brings to bear the best of the positive efforts in the region in a united movement of self-help to which is added assistance available from sources outside the area.

Research, conferences and workshops, publications, and field service in the areas of education, health, religion, economic and community development, welfare, and recreation and folklore are among the specific ways the Council works through established agencies.

THE COUNCIL OF THE SOUTHERN MOUNTAINS HAS MANY FUNCTIONS:

Through the Council, the Sigma Phi Gamma Sorority financially assists over 36 schools and institutions in the mountains. For administrative aid it turns to the Council which, through long experience, is able to designate those places where the greatest need exists among mountain children.

This cooperative effort between Council and sorority has resulted in hot lunch programs, examinations and inoculations antivenin for snakebite, dental work, clothing, shoes, tonsillectomies, Christmas treats, milk programs, seeds and fertilizer; making a continuing and vital contribution to the welfare of many who would otherwise suffer from serious handicaps.

O

Mountains speak to the soul of man, not as a gale but as a whisper. To hear it one must stop, be very still, and want to hear... then, having heard, be doomed to hear it forever.

New highways slash through tranquil eddies of yesterday's obscurity, bringing the new and taking away the old.

The Save-the-Children Federation, with used clothing outlets throughout the Region, was interested in an evaluation of the effectiveness of its program. It called upon the Council to conduct a survey. The Council, in turn, contacted key personnel who were given questionnaires to use in representative clothing centers. In a brief time the survey was completed at a nominal cost to the Federation. As a non-profit service organization in the region, the Council was able to provide such help at cost.

Over the years, the Council has amassed extensive data on all facets of mountain living. Statistics, reports, correspondence, as well as its specialized library, provide a literal cross-section of the developmental history of the mountain area.

In addition to what it has collected in its files, the Council also publishes, in its quarterly magazine, MOUNTAIN LIFE & WORK, folktales and mountain poetry, songs, and other traditional materials, as well as surveys and studies on education, attitudes and health. These surveys include those sponsored and financed by the Council, as well as others.

As an agency of information, the Council has been frequently called upon to supply specific data which, in many instances, are available from no other source.

From Mount Mitchell, the Unaka range, the Cumberlands and up through New River Valley, across the miles of peaks to stoic Black Mountain—on all these ancient heights verdant tracery appears anew each year through the sleeping umber.

The Council has distributed thousands of dollars worth of multi-vitamin preparations, toothpaste, cold and cough medicine, diaper rash protective cream, as well as a wide variety of the latest in medicative preparations which are provided only under the authorization of a physician. The Council is able to extend this vital help to the area through the generosity of major pharmaceutical firms which send large shipments to the Council offices for this purpose.

Through the efforts of its members both in and outside the Region, the Council receives shoes from manufacturers and is able to provide distribution through its volunteer workers in the areas of greatest need.

The Council provides a limited number of nursing scholarships as another of its contributions toward improving health in the Appalachian South.

It provides, on a loan basis, two excellent 16mm color films: one on menstrual hygiene and one on planned parenthood.

O

Northward away from Tusquittee, the peaks reach higher and higher and warm themselves slowly in ripe, green-gold afternoons through August until, brimmed over with torpor, they explode in color. Luminous and enchanted, range after range, they lure all with their leaf-crisp laughter.

In many counties of the Appalachian South, over three-fourths of the young people drop out of school before completing high school. Of those few who do go on to college or into technical training, a great number go out of the region and do not return, leaving the area with a stark future unless this outflow of competence and talent is checked and reversed.

The emphasis of the Council's work with youth is on the need for young people with knowledge, technique and skills, and on the opportunities which service to an underdeveloped region offers.

The Council plans youth meetings as part of the Annual Conferences, brings in specialized leaders in fields of particular interest to youth, and even provides scholarships to enable outstanding young people to attend the conferences.

The Youth Committee sponsors annual workshops which stress the problems and opportunities of the region, and the ideals of service to society, whether in or outside of the area. The Council continually emphasizes the need for education. In fact, youth groups are sponsored on college and secondary school campuses, Council staff members working with them in arranging for authorities in various fields to help in group discussions.

In these ways, through the Council, young people of the Southern Mountains are informed of the needs of their home territory, and of ways in which they can help in filling these needs.

Finally, ashamed of splendor, the valleys settle down to meditation and prepare to be oblivious to winter's storms. Rebirth, blossoming, decline and rest; the mountains sing their ballads to the sky.

For years the Council has cooperated effectively with folklore collectors and researchers throughout the area, as well as many from elsewhere, in the preservation and appreciation, and even in a revival in current use, of the music, stories, and cultural patterns of the mountains.

Much of this folklore is documented in the Council's quarterly magazine MOUNTAIN LIFE & WORK and in other Council publications. Folk games, songs, and dances are preserved through use by many qualified leaders, including specialists employed by the Council for this purpose. Folk festivals and folk dance groups under many auspices are encouraged and often co-sponsored by the Council. Teachers and other leaders who attend the annual conferences of the Council are reoriented to the value of certain folklore and mountain traditions.

O

From primordial time, the iron and coal, the zinc and slate and limestone, the asbestos, mica, emery, granite, and over all of it the forests. And man. For two hundred years the mountains' mother lode of timber has been used and abused. The forests have been loved, championed, ignored, taken for granted, stripped.

O

The shoulders of the mountains have been gouged and flung into the valleys; the streams, black with the offal from the pillaged cores of the mountains, ink their shame upon the land. From seasons, growth; from growth, minerals; from minerals, greed; from greed, destruction; from destruction, poverty.

The Community Development Counselor works with communities in the Appalachian South to help in bringing about a greater utilization of the region's potential.

His services are available, at no cost, to any community interested in working for greater opportunities which a broader economic base will provide.

He is prepared to consult with communities on the following bases:

- ✔ To help them make inventories and evaluations of their own natural, human, and economic resources;
- ✔ to aid them in planning and organizing a total and continuing developmental program based on these inventories and involving all resources which can help broaden the economic base of the community;
- ✔ to assist communities in the preparation of publicity material if the development program indicates a need for such action;
- ✔ to help communities avail themselves of technical and professional services of federal, state and private agencies for which the inventories indicate a need;
- ✔ to help to create, through community organization, a closer relationship between town and rural people.

In the mountains there is a wish to know and yet a fear to know what progress teaches. The folk are trusting. They listen when you come with missions, clinics, meetings and new songs. Radios bring new voices. But the question in their hearts is this: "What part of our lives should we keep reserved and hidden; how much of the new can we believe in?"

The Council program of workshops in community development is producing tangible results in areas where they have been held.

By providing expert professional personnel, the Council has succeeded in stimulating community awareness of the problems and of the available resources and methods which will be helpful in seeking solutions.

The workshops emphasize the importance of a trained leadership which can involve the whole community and, un so doing, lay the foundation for a sound community organization, capable of planning and carrying out projects for economic and social improvement.

The workshops prepare people to use what they have as well as to use the assistance available from federal, state and private agencies.

By pointing out the need for such workshops and appropriate follow-up sessions, the Community Development Counselor is able to provide the initial impetus to communities where there is potential without direction for its best use.

Through the co-sponsorship of interested organizations, honoraria and expenses for teaching personnel are provided, as well as scholarships for individual participants to assure the attendance of those most qualified to apply such training for the benefit of the entire community.

And this, too, the heart ponders: "Even as we accept your knowledge, we know that what we truly want is to GIVE. Can't those in the outer world find something in us to admire? The virtue of the mountains is our virtue. We, too, are quiet, patient, strong, and filled with faith. Look to us for something of beauty, of value, and pray God that you find it."

In some of the states within the Council's definition of the Appalachian South there is a functional illiteracy rating of over 20%.

A high drop-out rate is one of the contributing factors. In Kentucky, for instance, of the 57,960 pupils enrolled in the first grade in 1944-45, only 11 plus per cent graduated in 1956! This figure is somewhat influenced by those who left the state during their school years, and others whose schooling may have been interrupted and completed at a later time.

In Tennessee, of 51,530 who enrolled in the first grade in 1944-45, only 31,664 pupils completed the fifth grade!

Consequently, there are many adults in the Appalachian South (as well as migrants from this region in urban centers of the North) who have remained at a 3rd or 4th grade reading level.

To help combat the situation, the Council has conducted workshops aimed at teaching adults the difficult technique of rewriting adult literature so that it can be read by a person with a 4th grade reading level.

The Council's Communicators Guild, composed of those who have attended its workshops, is a nucleus of writers whose efforts contribute to a growing library of easy-to-read adult material which the Council distributes free of charge.

There are many organizations dedicated to helping this nation's ten million functional illiterates. The Council's main concern is with those of the Appalachian South whose low reading level might mean the difference between employment and unemployment whether they remain in their homeland or migrate to large urban centers in search of a better life.

The Council's goal is the publication of simply-written materials covering all urban problems common to newly-arrived migrants, as well as topics helpful to those who choose to remain in the mountains.

There is a song the singers know. It tells of a son away from home. It tells of those who remember and wait. Waiting is a way of life. There is play, and there is learning, suffering, singing and crying, but always there is waiting. Even the houses wait.

In any valley you can find a house with no one to live in it, melancholy with dark-remembered touches of faded laughter, bitter songs and the lonely strain of footsteps now silent. With blind eyes the cabin stares at the tragic, echo-laden mountains while nature moves with strangling fingers back to claim her own.

WOULD THIS MOUNTAIN MAN TAKE TO THE CITY?
WOULD THE CITY TAKE TO HIM?

FROM THE FREEDOM OF THE MOUNTAINS TO THE HURLY-BURLY CITY

C. Williams

Some go when they do not wish to go, but others stay. Even when hungry they stay because they have a greater hunger; hunger for home, for old, familiar scenes, for peace, for the known and the understood, the ties of kith and kin. Those who do go look to the day when they will again walk the paths in their own land in better times.

Mountain migrants cross, or expect to cross, many kinds of bridges, the most difficult, perhaps, being social. The awesome sight of a great city is only a prelude to the awesome problems of trying to be accepted by it as a stranger.

Between 1950-60, 697,180 such strangers from mountain counties in Kentucky and West Virginia alone sought shelter, employment, education for their children, and social acceptance in what was, for them, the completely alien atmosphere of large Northern urban centers.

The Council has worked with the Ford Foundation in its Great Cities Program, developing understanding and attitudes among public school personnel and leaders in other urban agencies which will promote more successful assimilation of minority-status people from every source.

The Council's role of liaison agent between migrant and metropolis makes it, in a sense, another bridge—a bridge of understanding.

The mountains speak to the soul of man. And in the crowded cities where there is noise and concrete, tensions and wall-lined, congested corridors, the mountain man remembers. Yearningly he is drawn home to the cathedraled mountains where he can see and smell and touch his God's creations, wild and green and growing in a quiet land.

LOYAL JONES
ASSOCIATE
EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

ROBERT F. CONNOR
DIRECTOR OF PUBLICATIONS

WILLIAM SUTERS
HEALTH EDUCATOR

MILTON OGLE COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT COUNSELOR

WHILE TWO STAFF MEMBERS ARE SUPPORTED BY SPECIFIC GRANTS, THE COUNCIL RECEIVES FAR LESS THAN ENOUGH FOR THE MAINTENANCE OF THE BALANCE OF ITS EVER-GROWING OFFICE AND FIELD FORCE OR FOR THE EXPENSES OF DAY-TO-DAY OPERATION: RENT, ELECTRICITY, TELEPHONES, AND THE MANY AND VARIED SUPPLIES WHICH ARE VITAL NOT ONLY TO THE COUNCIL'S EFFECTIVENESS BUT TO ITS VERY EXISTENCE. WON'T YOU HELP IN THIS IMPORTANT ASPECT OF COUNCIL SUPPORT?

O

This is a land of old, rich values, of painful transition—dignified in its suffering; patient in its need; questioning in its direction—but hopeful that those who try to help will learn as much as those they hope to reach.

BY PHYLLIS CONNOR

ACCOMPLISHED, BEING DONE, PLANNED FOR THE FUTURE

Region-wide Annual Conference held, attended by leaders who come to pool their concern and knowledge and to plan coordinated activities.

Conferences and workshops held, initiated and co-sponsored by the Council in fields of health, education, religion, leadership training, and other major aspects of life in the mountain region.

A Study Of Health Care Facilities in the Appalachian South published and widely distributed throughout the country.

A study of immunization attitudes and cooperation—reviewed in Mountain Life & Work, issue No.3, 1959.

Scholarships awarded for technical training in the field of health to those planning to serve in the area.

Health education program with full-time field worker.

Field service by a Spiritual Life coordinator.

Dental and medical clinics established and supported through developmental periods.

Studies and initial contacts made in locating hospitals and in establishing mid-wifery services.

Multi-vitamin, mineral deficiency and other preparations distributed to needy children in cooperation with pharmaceutical companies and responsible and competent local contacts.

Shoes, clothing and other materials distributed to needy children through Council contacts.

Statistical studies of education in this region made in response to specific and general questions.

Workshops in the preparation of reading materials for adults with limited reading abilities.

Publication and distribution of simplified reading materials for adults with limited reading skills.

Publishes the works of new and established writers in the mountains so that, through fiction, poetry and prose, they may help project a truer picture of mountain life to those outside the area.

Educational recruitment and scholarship aid for formal schooling.

Publication and distribution of lists of financial assistance to needy students.

Evaluation studies of specific educational, health and other projects undertaken as a continuing responsibility.

Directs an annual workshop on the Urban Adjustment of Southern Appalachian Migrants.

Cooperation with city programs of follow-up to migration workshops.

Leadership in Ford Foundation Great Cities program in the public schools oriented toward the minority status groups of which our Southern Appalachian Migrants comprise a large portion.

Representatives sent to regional and national meetings dealing with problems common to the Appalachian South and the rest of the nation.

Publishes Mountain Life & Work, a quarterly magazine with circulation in 45 states and 5 foreign countries.

Newsletter sent to a wide mailing list.

Folk songs, folk tales, and other traditional materials published, as well as approved and recommended recreational aids distributed.

Leadership training provided for community organization in recreation suited to local and individual need; co-sponsored by church, school and civic groups.

Close cooperation maintained with church efforts, including all interested denominations.

Field service by Community Resources Development Counselor.

Per capita income levels in this Region are well below those of the U.S. as a whole and, generally, below those of the states in which the Region lies. Estimates of the 1960 incomes in the Region indicate that only in the primarily urban counties containing about a quarter of the area's population do per capita incomes rise above $1,400 per year as compared to a nationwide figure of about $2,200. A 1952 Index indicates 94 mountain counties where Farm Family Level-of-Living is more than 50% below the national average; many counties showing a per capita income of less than $500 annually.

The Council's relationship to this vast area is one of promoting volunteer coordination of the efforts of organizations, institutions and individuals, both within and outside the Appalachian South; a service of administration, information and distribution.

* * * * *

Your participation, either by financial contribution to our program or in supplying materials, is deductible for tax reporting purposes.

. . . . . .

I WISH TO SUPPORT THE COUNCIL'S UNIQUE FORM OF REGIONAL ASSISTANCE. ENCLOSED FIND $_____ FOR MY MEMBERSHIP, TO INCLUDE A ONE-YEAR SUBSCRIPTION TO THE MAGAZINE, "MOUNTAIN LIFE & WORK."

STUDENT MEMBERSHIP $1.50 • INDIVIDUAL MEMBERSHIP $3.00 TO $4.00 • SUPPORTING MEMBERSHIP $5.00 TO $24.00 • SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIP $25.00 OR MORE INSTITUTIONAL MEMBERSHIP $5.00 OR MORE.

THE COUNCIL OF THE SOUTHERN MOUNTAINS, INC.
(A NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION)
COLLEGE BOX 2307 BEREA, KENTUCKY

Interpr Misc 1963

NOTES FROM THE SOUTH

HUMAN RELATIONS SPECIAL PROJECT of the NATIONAL STUDENT YWCA in the SOUTHERN REGION

By Staff Internes:
MARY KING
and
BOBBI YANCY

YWCA Voter Registration Project

The National Student YWCA in the Southern Region and the Ecumenical Voluntary Commission of the National Student Christian Federation will co-sponsor a Voter Registration and Education Project in Nashville, Tennessee, from June 22nd through August 17th. The major goal of the project will be to stimulate qualified Negroes to vote. Other emphases are: assistance in developing citizenship, education, and organization in a specific section of the city; and the gathering of data on urban Negro political interest.

The project will work with a local committee consisting of representatives from existing civil rights and voter registration groups. The project will have a maximum of sixteen student participants. Students from all sections of the country with experience and understanding in the area of civil rights are invited to apply.

The group will live in or near the working area and will work out its own discipline and procedures. A fee of $115.00 will cover board, insurance, and administrative and leadership costs. Some scholarship aid is available. Applications are available from this office and must be received by April 15th. Selection of participants will be made by a joint committee representing both organizations by April 30th.

Conference on Urban Problems

"The City: Dialogue and Encounter" will be the theme for a work conference sponsored by the National Student YWCA in the Southern Region, June 2nd - 8th, in Atlanta, Georgia. Teams of four to eight students will work four hours a day on one of eight projects. Several of the projects are: studying the resources and policies of Georgia's work with youth with the help of the community council and the League of Women Voters; investigating employment possibilities and problems with resources from the YWCA and the American Friends' Service Committee Merit Employment Program; voter registration and survey; a survey of attitudes related to urban renewal with the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations.

A special seminar in "The Changing Roles of Men and Women" will be held for non-students.

COLLEGES

Atlanta University

The Henry Grady hotel in Atlanta is named after the man who coined the phrase "The New South," and is owned and leased by the state of Georgia. On March 13 five students from the Atlanta University complex (one white) "slept-in" in the lobby of the hotel after they were refused rooms. A white female student at Spelman College had made reservations for the five and when she arrived alone she was shown to her room. The Negro students arrived soon after and she accompanied them to the registration desk where they were told that there were no more rooms. When two students were arrested for refusing to leave, Negro and white students from the Atlanta University center began picketing with signs such as "Dallas, Houston, Miami - Why Not Atlanta?"

The next day about 400 students from the Atlanta University center marched on City Hall to protest hotel segregation and to ask for a conference with Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr. The students converged on City Hall singing "Freedom, freedom, freedom's coming and it won't be long." The mayor was presented with a letter from the Atlanta University-based Committee on Appeal for Human Rights. The letter read in part, "It is our opinion that, despite many attempts at negotiation with prominent officials of the hotels in the city, the progress being made is almost negligible.... We must say in all candor that we plan to use every legal and non-violent means to our disposal to secure full citizenship rights."

(OVER)

Following the demonstration, the Atlanta Journal wrote, "We have been making haste so slowly on this question for so long now that when the decision to desegregate is reached it should have no shock value at all. It will be simply part of an orderly pattern dictated by common sense."

Prior to this it was announced that the airport Hilton Inn is now desegregated.

Rice University

Trustees of Rice University asked a federal district court to authorize removal of a racial barrier included in the will that founded the school. Industrialist William Marsh Rice wrote before his death, "Texas received me when I was penniless, without friends... and now in the evening of my life I recognize my obligations to her and her children. I wish now to leave to the boys and girls ... the fortune that I have been able to accumulate." It is good that the trustees recognize that there are Negro children of Texas.

University of Kentucky

Early in March the Interfaith Council at the University of Kentucky drew up a letter requesting managers of restaurants in Lexington to desegregate their facilities. Student Congress voted to reject the Council's proposal on March 3rd, because it was felt that the letter indicated that U.K. students would boycott any establishment which would not put the recommendations into effect.

In a letter to the editor of the Kentucky Kernel, the U.K. newspaper, 27 Negro students asked, "Just what is the prime interest of the Student Congress, to protect the small businesses surrounding the University campus or to protect the best interest of the students?"

The Interfaith Council revised its' letter to read, "The great majority of our members are definitely willing to patronize an integrated restaurant." Student Congress chose to endorse the proposal.

In a survey conducted by the Kentucky Kernel 57% of the U.K.'s students said that they would object to rooming with a Negro, while more than two-thirds of the students stated that they would not object to living next door to a Negro student.

Mercer University

Mercer University in Macon, Georgia is currently agonizing over a definition of a Negro because of an application from an African student who was converted to Christianity by a Mercer graduate. (Can a student from any foreign country really desegregate an American college?)

Mississippi State University

Congratulations to the Mississippi State Bulldogs for recognizing the Union through its participation in the N.C.A.A. basketball playoffs. They won a moderate third place.

Clemson College

The Clemson College student newspaper, The Tiger, carried a letter not long ago which hits the nail on the head. It was in reaction to an article in the March 16, 1963 Saturday Evening Post entitled "Integration with Dignity" about the recent desegregation of Clemson College. The letter said that the "Article dealt mainly with the endeavors of a few prominent politicians and businessmen. Granted, they did a fine job and should be commended. However, without the cooperation of the Clemson students and the general public of South Carolina, all their talks and planning would have been in vain." A gaping hole was left in the article when mention was omitted of the preparation by students and student groups and the fact that "the students of Clemson College were the real reason for the success of peaceful integration in South Carolina."

Morgan State College

Since 1955 Morgan State College (primarily Negro, Baltimore, Maryland) students have been working to gain admittance to nearby Northwood Movie Theatre. Recently, joined by white students from Johns Hopkins University and Goucher College, the members of the Civic Interest Group were finally successful in purchasing a ticket, but it cost the jailing of over 400 students who were crowded six and seven into small cells and overflowed into the prison corridors.

Fisk University

Eight Fisk University students were sentenced to 90 days on workhouse gangs and fined $50.00 each in Nashville for attempting to eat at the B&W Cafeteria. They were convicted of interfering with commerce and business. The main issue involved is the integration of privately owned (public) facilities and the case is probably headed for the Supreme Court.

Included in the group of students was John Lewis, Chairman of the Student Nonviolent Movement in Nashville. Also active with the Nashville Student Nonviolent Movement have been students from Tennessee A & I State University, Peabody Teachers College, and a professor and students from Vanderbilt University.

Arkansas AM&N

Fifteen students have been expelled from Arkansas AM&N College because they participated in sit-ins and anti-segregation activities. This recent violation of academic freedom is as picturesque as any that historian C. Vann Woodward highlighted in his article "The Unreported Crisis in the Southern Schools," in the October 1962 issue of Harpers magazine. As a result of these students' efforts three restaurants have been desegregated, and attacks are being continued on Woolworth's and Walgreen's. SNCC field secretary Bill Hansen was beaten and stomped on during a sit-in by a white youth while police looked on. This is the first strong attack on segregation in Arkansas since school desegregation in Little Rock.

Mississippi Southern University

About the same time that Clyde Kennard was undergoing surgery for cancer, John Frazier, president of the student body at Campbell Junior College, said that he would make another effort to be admitted to Mississippi Southern University at Hattiesburg. As a result of attempting to do the same thing in 1958 Kennard was sentenced to a seven-year prison term for alledgedly stealing chicken feed. After serving two years of his sentence and in a condition "near death," Kennard's sentence was indefinitely suspended, no thanks to the Justice Department. Frazier will continue to try for entrance during the summer quarter. Frazier said that he wanted to "prove to myself and the world that authorities at Southern are fair-minded and will accept me without a court fight."

Mary Washington College

A scheduled concert of the Williams College Glee Club at Mary Washington College of the University of Virginia in Fredericksburg, Virginia was cancelled because Mary Washington refused to house two Negro members of the Glee Club. Plans still called for the Glee Club to continue its itinerary for Goucher College (Baltimore) and Hollins College, (Hollins College, Virginia) both womens' colleges.

(OVER)

COLLEGE PRESS

University of Kentucky

An editorial in the U.K.'s Kentucky Kernel called for withdrawal from the Southeastern Conference and recruitment of Negro athletes: "We can stand up and tell the world that we, a Southern University, are sick and tired of having a doctrine of inferiority rammed down our throats." (We hope that U.K. will soon be able to swallow easily.)

Tulane University

The Tulane University (New Orleans) newspaper, The Hullabaloo, recently reprinted an editorial from the University of Alabama's Crimson & White. Following are a few lines from that editorial: "An invitation for Gus Hall, chairman of the American Communist Party, to speak at Yale University was withdrawn this month. Also, George Lincoln Rockwell, self-styled fuhrer of the American Nazi Party, was quite recently denied the right to speak at Indiana and Northwestern. We are unalterably opposed to this basic limitation on freedom of speech... Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett spoke at Harvard this month without converting the Harvard Student Body to his brand of conservatism... Despite the dim ideas of some college administrators toward the intellectual capacities of their students, the students are capable of applying reason to the speeches they hear. So the argument that these men subvert the government by speaking is discredited."

University of Alabama

Melvin Meyer, editor of the University of Alabama student newspaper, Crimson & White, was named "outstanding student editor of the year" by the United States Student Press Association for his "courageous and significant contribution to American student journalism." Meyer was attacked by his university, fellow students, governor of his state and the Ku Klux Klan. His life was repeatedly threatened, a cross was burned on the lawn of his fraternity house, and the university was forced to hire two body guards, as a result of the printing of an editorial which called for integration in the South on "moral,legal and pragmatic" grounds.

University of South Carolina

The student newspaper of the University of South Carolina, The Gamecock, in the February 8 issue carried a column by graduate student, Hayes Mizell in which he asked, "But was Gantt's entry actual progress or mere realism? Granting that progress is a relative term and that in the case of South Carolina realism might be considered commensurate with progress, it would appear that this state must prove herself in other areas before she can be considered as entering into a progressive era." He then called upon members of the General Assembly to "... Have the honesty to present (the tuition grant plan) for what it really is -- a device to side-step federal decree, promote discrimination at public expense, and further cripple our educational system."

Spelman College

The front page of the Spelman Spotlight, student newspaper at Spelman College in Atlanta, recently carried this item: "According to an unofficial Federal edict, high-level government employees are prohibited from addressing segregated groups. However, recently as in the past, Robert M. Ball, Commissioner of Social Security for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, acted as guest speaker at a three-day lily-white conference of the Fulton County (Atlanta) Welfare Department. Twenty Negro employees were asked to attend but all withdrew when separate accomodations were made by the owners of Atlanta's much talked about Dinkler-Plaza Hotel."

MISSISSIPPI

Delta Poverty

Greenwood, Mississippi is the "Land of Emmett Till," part of the Delta and located in Leflore County where Negroes outnumber whites 2 to 1. According to the Civil Rights Commission only .9% of the Negroes of voting age in Leflore County are registered. According to the State Education Department's Division of Finance and Administration $175.38 is spent yearly for education per white student and $9.52 for Negro students in Leflore County. The local Board of Supervisors has cut off 22,000 people (90% Negro) from federal commodity aid in retaliation for their voter registration efforts. In the past few months shootings and hunger have reached sufficient heights to arouse national attention to what it means to be a Negro who wants to vote in the Delta.

"From February 19th-21st," writes Charles Cobb, a student working on voter registration in Greenville, Mississippi, "22 persons have made registration attempts. This is directly due to our food program. The commodity roll in Washington County has been reduced by 10,000. The cotton season has been a poor one for hand pickers. Their need is much, but we have little since most goes for Leflore and Sunflower."

Contributions of food, clothing and money for Delta residents whose surplus food supply has been cut off should be sent to: Samuel Block, c/o Wesley Methodist Church, 800 Howard Street, Greenwood, Mississippi.

Near Fatal Shooting

On February 28th, James Travis, 20 year old field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, was driving from Greenwood to Greenville, Mississippi, accompanied by Robert Moses, director of the SNCC's statewide Mississippi project, and Randolph Blackwell, field director of the Atlanta-based Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, when three white men fired into his car. According to Moses, the car was an untagged white 1962 Buick which had tailed them from the Greenwood office for seven miles. All side windows in Travis' car were smashed. Travis received a shoulder wound and another bullet entered the back of his skull and became lodged behind his spine.

Greenwood police arrested two white men in connection with the shooting, charging them with "felonious assault."

Despite his near fatal wounds Travis has vowed: "I am going back to Greenwood. People there need all the help they can get. They are hungry, and their children are hungry, but they want to register and vote."

Burnings and Lawlessness

Four buildings adjacent to the SNCC's Greenwood office were destroyed by fire several weeks ago. Samuel Block, a SNCC field secretary, was arrested and charged with "public utterances calculated to cause a breach of peace" after he said that the fire was started by persons who wished to burn the SNCC office in retaliation for SNCC's distribution of food sent from Chicago.

At midnight on Sunday, March 24th, SNCC's Greenwood office was destroyed by fire.

In the March 19 edition of the New York Post columnist James Wechsler wrote: "Nothing the U. S. government has done in Mississippi has convinced Block and his 'freedom fighters' that they have any real personal protection against the lawless local structure.

(OVER)

"Nor do they have any faith in the willingness of the Associated Press bureau in that state to transmit the full and true story of their travail. (They have some kinder words for UPI.)

"But loneliness and isolation seem unterrifying to such men. It is a cruel joke on the white supremacists that the indestructible figure in the modern South so often turns out to be black."

(A cruel joke? Or is it merely the ironic twist of a poor experiment?)

Shots were fired late in the evening of March 26th into the home of Dewey Green, Sr., shortly after George Green, one of the students working on voter registration had entered his home. George Green's brother, Dewey Green, Jr., is a recent applicant to the University of Mississippi.

Recent Arrest

James Foreman, Executive Secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and 10 field secretaries were arrested in Greenwood, Mississippi on March 27th, as they were taking groups of Negroes to register and vote. They were charged with inciting to riot.

Land of Terror

Speaking of certain sections of Mississippi and Louisiana, Senator Allen Ellender, Democrat of Louisiana, recently stated that, "The white people are just scared to death by all the Negroes in those areas where the Negroes are in the majority. If they get the vote, why they'll have all the offices in those parishes - counties - of course." He went a bit further and said, "It's the states who should determine who should and should not vote."

In thirteen Mississippi counties there are no Negroes registered to vote. Only 4.4% of the Negroes of voting age in the state are registered. Is this what the senator from Louisiana will permit a state to determine?

The Mississippi Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission reported in February that, "Mississippi is a land of terror for Negroes who refuse to accept their color as a badge of inferiority." For the Travis's, the Block's and other native black Mississippians, the badge of inferiority is a gaudy and worthless antique.

Public School Desegregation

The first federal suit to desegregate Mississippi public schools has been filed by six Negro families in Jackson. They have requested a preliminary injunction hearing before Federal District Judge Harold Cox on April 12th. State law authorizes the closing of any public school to prevent desegregation.

Members of the State Board of Education, the Mississippi Economic Council and the Parent-Teacher Association said recently that the schools must remain open. State Superintendent of Education, Jack Tubb, said not long ago that, "Closing the schools would bring to a halt the wheels of industry on the borders of our state and destroy the dreams we have had for a great state whose economy would be based upon agriculture and a great industry."

The Justice Department has filed a suit involving schools in the Harrison County "impacted area" on behalf of children of Negro military and governmental personnel in that area. "Impact areas" receive federal funds to compensate for enrollment increases caused by children from families of federal personnel. Similar suits have been filed in Alabama and Georgia.

In September the Department of Health, Education and Welfare will provide on-base schools so that children living on military bases "will no longer be required to attend segregated schools at federal expense," according to President Kennedy.

According to James Quigley, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, if the parents of military dependent children wish to continue to send their children to local schools, be they segregated or not, the government will continue to pay the local school boards "federal-impact" money.

IN SOUTHERN CITIES

Birmingham, Alabama

On April 2nd, former Lt. Governor Albert Boutwell and Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor will meet in a runoff for the mayoralty of Birmingham. Bull Connor is from the old school, so to speak, which permitted the riots during the Freedom Rides and attempted to punish Negroes by cutting off surplus food. In the first City Council government since 1911, the city commission which allowed Bull Connor to achieve a one-man reign of fear over the city's Negroes will be replaced. Two Negro candidates survived the primary last month and are among eighteen seeking seats on the nine-man council.

Eugene Patterson, editor of the Atlanta Constitution wrote, "The Birmingham press is speaking. Boutwell has newspaper backing. Many Alabamans are trying to lay a restraining hand on Governor Wallace. Moreover -- and with politics and the mayor's race aside -- Birmingham's long-accepting people and their business leadership are beginning to demand something better than they have been getting in government-by-stridency. A great weariness of fear and foolishness is growing in the South and it can be sensed now in Birmingham."

Albany, Georgia

There is vertical integration in Albany, Georgia now which is probably a huge mistake. Because feet hurt regardless of color. And when people start telling each other about their aching feet, and leaning on each other for support, it's going to be something else down there. Carnegie Library in Albany, Georgia was recently opened for a 30-day trial period on an integrated basis..... with no chairs. The Southwest Georgia city has decided to drop all segregation ordinances and to leave the race problems to individual citizens. The Atlanta Journal cites a spokesman for the city as saying: "This action simply gets the city out of the legal position of attempting to compel any practice of any individual operating a business."

New Orleans, Louisiana

Bargain of the month: The New Orleans White Citizens Council has just warned the city of Dayton, Ohio to expect a group of reverse "freedom riders" soon. (Visit ancient New Orleans friends and ride home for freedom. The more you cooperate the quicker the Council's budget will be dissolved.)

Atlanta, Georgia

Two articles have recently appeared about Atlanta and Georgia, one in the Saturday Evening Post entitled "Progress Goes Marching Through Georgia,"(February 16, 1963) and the other in Hearst class Town and Country called "The Miracle in Atlanta," (February, 1963). We hear they almost weren't published as a result of what Editor Eugene Patterson of the Atlanta Constitution called "an absurd fence across a road to wall off Negroes." One way to solve the dilemma of being forced to puncture myths about Atlanta's liberality by a full story was simply to stop short of the "little Berlin wall" incident.

On March 1, 1963 a Fulton Superior Court Judge ruled the barricades illegal and unconstitutional and within an hour the construction department had been asked to tear them down. On March 2, the roads were cleared. Just prior to that however, it had been announced that a Negro real estate man had bought a home south of the wall. Earlier, Georgia Governor Carl Sanders ("In my case, a 'moderate' means that I'm a segregationist but not a damned fool.") had unwittingly made a pun in an interview with a UPI reporter when he said, "Georgia has a great reservoir of people with fiber and moral courage. They are coming out of the walls these days."

FEDERAL FRONT

The U. S. Commission on Civil Rights presented a report to President Kennedy in February in which it was concluded that "the last battle for equal rights" for the Negro may have to be fought in the North. In the South, the report stated, "the irrestible force is moving the object which was thought to be immovable. Progress is slow and often painful, but it is steady and it appears to be inevitable." The inevitability of this force is often in spite of, rather than because of, governmental aid as any observer of the struggle in the South can say. And as far as the civil rights acts of 1957 and 1960 go, the Atlanta Journal said on March 7 that the acts "Have strong provisions which the administration has not chosen to utilize fully.

(OVER)

Those working for rights in Mississippi and numerous potential Albanys know that this administration's record is clear, although not as clean as it might be, only where a stark breakdown of law and order was imminent such as at Oxford, Mississippi.

In the December 1, 1962 issue of The Nation, ("Kennedy: The Reluctant Emancipator") Howard Zinn, Professor of History at Spelman College pointed out that although voting rights are protected by specific legislation of the Civil Rights Acts, the First Amendment rights of free speech and assembly and the guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment for equal treatment by local officials are not. He said that "The national government has an undeserved reputation, both among Southern opponents and Northern supporters, as a vigorous combatant for Negro rights." He continued that this administration is acting essentially the same as its predecessors when you compare it not to past performances but to today's demands. In the case of Albany, Georgia in particular, "The federal government showed cautiousness to the point of timidity." (Professor Zinn's full report on Albany - a study in national responsibility - is available from the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth Street, N. W., Atlanta 3, Georgia.)

STUDENT NONVIOLENT COORDINATING COMMITTEE

Unsung Heroes

On January 31, 1963, the Manchester Guardian said the following about the members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee: "They are the commandos, fighting not only the enemy but against the apathy of their own side, committed to nonviolence against an enemy who often has no answer but violence. They are no more beloved than commandos ever are --- senior Negro strategists often frown on them for stirring up trouble, especially if the strategists are far from the suffering of the front line --- but they have a panache that sends them sweeping successfully about the South with hardly a dime in their pockets....

"Deviously and subtly, the idea is being sown in the receptive minds of some senators that there must be some Reds in so militant an organisation, and this of course could be an excellent way of trying to kill off the organisation without facing what it represents....

"But if they are not in the least committed to communism, they are no more committed to the America of Madison Avenue and the Rat-Race: they are obviously much closer to a Jeffersonian idealism in their dangerous and often painful task, and their meetings are always full of Christian songs and feeling (much more so than the segregated churches of the South.)"

The author, W. J. Weatherby, continued about the fall meeting at Fisk University in Nashville, "Then, as if cleansing themselves of the bitterness... they sang out their freedom song. 'We Are Not Afraid...' went out over the Fisk campus, mocking not only the segregationists in the town but also those Negroes still sunk in apathy in the fraternities and sororities."

Freedom Singers

The Freedom Singers -- four young people with experience as field secretaries for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee -- have just begun the second part of an extended tour of Northern colleges, They have completed forty-eight concerts in the North.

Request from SNCC

The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee urges that protests be made to the national offices of chain stores where segregation policies are being attacked by the Jackson, Mississippi, NAACP Youth Council. The stores include: Bakers Shoes; Bell Brothers Shoes; Bomar Shoes; Garyson's Dress Shops; H.L. Green's; J. C. Penney's; Lerner's Dress Shops; National Shirt Shops; Nora Day Shop; Owens Ltd.; Parisian; Schobilt; Shainberg's; Thom McCann Shoes: Walgreen's and Woolworth's.

IMPRESSIONS

LENA HORNE announced that she was leaving her career as night club singer to get into a production of political satire which would finally bring pressure to help the southern student movement and the cause of freedom generally. She said she was "astounded and overwhelmed by the courage and sheer power of those young students in the South. " "Let's face it," she remarked, "All Negroes have the same problems; we're hampered and limited in no matter what we undertake." She continued, "I believe in politics and this freedom fight could also use some Madison Avenue arranging. Those Southern students are pointing the way. I'm inspired by their actions and in my way, I want to do my best. I won't sit and vegetate."

RALPH MCGILL, highly regarded publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, said last week over Atlanta television that during his extended stay in West Africa two-thirds of the questions directed to him were about racial problems in America. "We live not in glass houses, but in a glass world and something that happens anywhere is known around the world," he said. He continued that Africans know about Mississippi and Little Rock, and that in fact there had been two column headlines in one newspaper when the Atlanta wall went down.

After the demonstration about hotel segregation before City Hall by 400 Atlanta University students, BOB ZELLNER, field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee said, "During the demonstration which has just ended, a white man, obviously from the lower socio-economic level, approached me as I was taking pictures. He said, 'If you don't look out Mister Reporter, in a few years those niggers are going to take your job away from you.' Knowing that I was a field secretary for SNCC I thought to myself that I certainly hoped they didn't take my job away from me because I see this as an integrated movement."

Recently, at a public affairs forum called the Hungry Club, EUGENE PATTERSON, Editor of the Atlanta Constitution remarked, "I thought I would be full of fear, worry, and trepidation (regarding racial progress) but I, as a South Georgia born man, feel relief." He continued that, "The South may astonish itself by finding that it can solve its problems in good faith sooner than the North. We are not just discovering our problems here, we are working on them." Further, "The North is being shaken with doubt in the face of demands it had not forseen; it has some distance to go along the melancholy paths which the South has already travelled."

"The role of the Northern student," said JULIAN BOND (Administrative Assistant to the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) "is fourfold: to raise funds, to act in supporting groups, to attack problems in his own locale, and to join in the fight wherever he finds himself."

STUDENT CONFERENCES

National Student Association

The South Central Region of the U. S. National Student Association will sponsor the second Deep South Human Relations Seminar for students from Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas, April 11th-13th at Xavier University in New Orleans. Five workshops will deal with such topics as: "Techniques of Change;" Academic Freedom;" Southern Religion at the Crossroads;" and "The Image of the Southerner in American Culture." The planning committee consists of students from seven colleges in New Orleans.

Young Adult Council

An All-South Human Relations Youth Conference will be held May 2nd - 5th at Chapel Hill, North Carolina sponsored by the Young Adult Council. Leaders from southern rural and labor groups, and colleges will convene to consider the relation of human relations to economics, politics, religion, international affairs and education. Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund head attorney for the Ole Miss and Clemson College cases will give the keynote address.

Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee

Over 300 students from every Southern state, and several Northern states, are expected to attend the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee's annual conference here on Easter weekend, April 12th - 14th. There will be workshops on Nonviolence, Voter Registration, Direct Action and the history of the protest movement for the participants who have been active in anti- segregation campaigns.

March, 1963

1/7/63 - ...

The New Leader

DEAR EDITOR

Intergroup Org NAACP

NAACP AND LABOR

As one who has been a longtime reader of, and occasional contributor to, THE NEW LEADER, I was shocked to read J. C. Rich's diatribe against the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People ("The NAACP vs. Labor," NL, November 26). I thought it was generally known that the NAACP was established and exists to combat racial discrimination wherever it may be found and in whatever quantity.

In his letter of December 7 to George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO, Roy Wilkins, NAACP Executive Secretary, made it clear that the Association has no intention of shirking its responsibilities to Negro workers hamstrung by the discriminatory practices of some trade unions. Responding to Meany's letter of November 20, the NAACP leader committed the Association to "the resolute employment of every technique which offers the hope of relief" and affirmed that the anti-bias campaign would continue to "be directed at every barrier extant." This course of action, he told the labor leader, does not "constitute an 'attack' upon organized labor."

How Rich arrived at the conclusion that the NAACP "had to beat a hasty retreat" in regard to the United Automobile Workers defies understanding. The NAACP has made no charges nor instituted any actions involving the UAW. On October 18, UAW President Walter Reuther issued a statement in which he conceded that "a few unions still have not met their moral obligations and continue to deny equal opportunity to all workers." Later he scotched a published report that he intended to resign from the NAACP Board of Directors.

Responding to the Reuther statement, Wilkins expressed appreciation for "the active cooperation of the UAW on civil rights matters over a period of more than 20 years," and affirmed the NAACP obligation "to press the campaign to eliminate these inequalities [within trade unions] so that American Negro workers may have their rightful share of the abundant American economy."

The fact is, discrimination against Negroes does exist in labor unions, including all of those against which actions have been instituted. Some of the trade unions' bias exists only at the local level and some exists as the entrenched policy of the internationals. All of it persists despite the declared anti-discrimination posture of the AFL-CIO.

In his eagerness to discredit the NAACP, Rich puts words in Herbert Hill's mouth which the organization's Labor Secretary never uttered. He attributes to Hill a statement made last August by a spokesman for the AFL-CIO as reported in Newsweek [August 20, 1962]. On the basis of this misrepresentation he proceeds to berate the NAACP staff member.

Contrary to Rich's assertion, Charles Zimmerman never held any official position in the

The New Leader

THE NEW LEADER welcomes comment and criticism on any of its features, but letters should not exceed 300 words.

NAACP itself. He has been active with the Legal Defense Fund, a separate corporation. The charge that the NAACP is anti-Semitic on the basis of a reference in the Hill statement to the "ethnic composition" of the ILGWU leadership is childish. It is like crying, "You're another!" Too many eminent Jews, including distinguished rabbis, have served in too many capacities with the NAACP to validate that charge.

As for Rich's reference to the ILGWU's Dressmakers Local 89, the continued existence of an all-Italian local—or, for that matter, an all-Negro, all Jewish, or all-Irish unit—within an international which prides itself on its liberalism and integration is in this day an anachronism.

The Herbert Hill on whom Rich now focuses his attack is the same Herbert Hill whose role in prevailing upon Negro workers not to allow themselves to be used to break a strike of the United Hatters against the Hat Corporation of America was heralded in the columns of The Hat Worker on February 15, 1954, edited then as now by Rich.

In publishing this distorted version of the challenging issue which confronts the American labor movement and of the NAACP role in trying to eradicate discrimination against Negro workers, THE NEW LEADER, I believe, has done a grave disservice to the cause of liberalism.

New York City HENRY LEE MOON
Director of Public Relations, NAACP

J. C. Rich replies:

It is pleasant to note that NAACP executives do recall the gratitude and regard with which I myself, and the trade union of whose newspaper I serve as editor, responded to an act of fair play by the organization and its labor specialist, Herbert Hill. Inasmuch as Henry Lee Moon thereby establishes my credentials as a friend of the NAACP—an outraged friend—perhaps he will appreciate the dismay that impelled me to write the article to which he files objection.

There is little refutation and much evasion in Moon's letter. One of the evasions is a typical Pecksniffian turn in respect to Charles Zimmerman, manager of the New York Dressmakers Joint Board and a vigorous opponent of racial bigotry. My article referred to Zimmerman's resignation from the NAACP, giving his reasons for this harsh severance. To this Moon interposes the legalism that Zimmerman was a member of an affiliate of the NAACP, not the main body of the organization. How this refutes Zimmerman's charges against the NAACP and the argument of my article is hard to determine.

Similarly, there is the detail about Dressmakers Local 89 which Herbert Hill presented as the horrible example of anti-Negro bias. I pointed out that Local 89 was a "language" local with an all-Italian membership, that so far as is known there are no

"A dramatic, daring and fascinating film that everyone will enjoy." —Bosley Crowther, N. Y. Times

Few of man's great adventures can challenge his journey into the uncharted depths of the human mind.

Universal proudly presents
JOHN HUSTON'S PRODUCTION OF FREUD

STARRING
MONTGOMERY CLIFT
SUSANNAH YORK · LARRY PARKS
SUSAN KOHNER · EILEEN HERLIE
FERNAND LEDOUX · DAVID McCALLUM with ROSALIE CRUTCHLEY · DAVID KOSSOFF
JOSEPH FURST · ALEXANDER MANGO · LEONARD SACHS AND CO-STARRING ERIC PORTMAN

Screenplay by CHARLES KAUFMAN and WOLFGANG REINHARDT · Story by CHARLES KAUFMAN Directed by JOHN HUSTON · Produced by WOLFGANG REINHARDT · A UNIVERSAL PICTURE

World Premiere Now

CINEMA I | CINEMA II
3rd Ave. at 60th St. PLaza 3-6022 3rd Ave. at 60th St. PLaza 3-0774

DEAR EDITOR

*Can't

Italian-speaking Negroes in the dress trade, and that it was thus base and malicious to accuse the local and its manager, Luigi Antonini, of invidious bigotry because the local had no Negro members. Moon dismisses the deceitfulness of Hill's fabrication with the airy observation that a local of Italian dressmakers is an "anachronism." Presumably it would be less of an anachronism if an NAACP caucus, instead of the Italian membership, chose the local's officers. But Hill did not accuse Local 89 of maintaining an outmoded system of organization; he accused it of racial malpractice, knowing full well that his charge was false and contrived. Does the NAACP find such violence to integrity acceptable?

In an amazing example of political connivance, Hill made himself available to two Tammany stalwarts—Representatives Herbert Zelenko (now ex-Congressman) and Adam Clayton Powell—to prepare a case against the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, of which David Dubinsky is president. Each to his own taste; perhaps the NAACP feels that Powell and Zelenko have acquired sufficient moral and ethical stature to sit in judgment over Dubinsky, Antonini and Zimmerman. Personally I doubt whether liberals would accept these statesmen as proctors of ethical conduct.

In any case, at hearings of a subcommittee appointed by Powell and chaired by Zelenko, Hill submitted a bill of indictment running to some 14 pages of supposed "evidence." The document was rejected by the subcommittee, but it was "leaked" to the press in advance of the hearings and has since been published in toto. And the astounding aspect of the entire maneuver is that Hill was caught with his facts down. Inaccuracies, distortions and outright prevarications by the dozen abound in his bill of indictment—as Gus Tyler of the ILGWU Educational Department has demonstrated. But instead of apologizing for Hill's hooliganism, instead of disassociating itself from this dreadful onslaught on a decent trade union, instead of steering clear of Powell's and Zelenko's politically motivated inquisition, the NAACP gave its blessings to the anti-union smear.

To validate this violence to liberal morality, Moon now cites a letter that Roy Wilkins, NAACP Executive Secretary, sent to George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO. When I wrote my article for THE NEW LEADER I was not aware that Wilkins had given the AFL-CIO two weeks to get out of town. I now suggest to the NAACP that it recall Wilkins's letter and hide it from view. For bombast and pompous self-righteousness it tops anything a Senator Claghorn could have uttered on the lily-white side of the racist street.

Rationally considered, the letter commits the NAACP to the idea that, by-and-large, all whites are anti-Negro, only organized labor is more so than most. As a matter of current practice, NAACP strategists find that progressive laborites are more vulnerable targets for calumny than the porkchop artists and boodle hounds of the labor movement. Therefore, Meany, Dubinsky, McDonald and Paul Hall become subjects of attack, while Hoffa teammates and walking delegates with the social morality of hyenas become acceptable to the NAACP.

To the extent that the NAACP indulges in its present behavior its credentials as a liberal and libertarian organization become as suspect as those of the Muslim band among Negroes. I stated in my article that the liberal community has a right to demand the NAACP behave according to the code of ethics long-established and respected among liberals and laborites. In response to Moon's objections, I repeat this assertion.

*Can't at top

A FRATERNAL GROUP FOR LIBERALS

Offering insurance benefits — life, disability, hospitalization, funeral, cemetery, and — in larger cities — medical-surgical and social service.

ALSO cultural and social activities — Jewish schools (secular) — choral groups.

The WORKMEN'S CIRCLE
(Arbeter Ring)

For 60 years the foremost Jewish labor fraternal order in America.

------ CLIP AND MAIL ------

The Workmen's Circle
175 E. Broadway, N. Y. 2

Please send me membership information and a dues estimate.

Name .....

Address .....

City .....Zone....State.....

Age..... Wife's Age.....

EVES. at 8 P.M. (SUN. at 7:30) MATS. Wed., Sat. & Sun. at 2 P.M.

"ONE OF THE ALL-TIME GREAT FILMS!"
—Winston of the N.Y. Post

COLUMBIA PICTURES presents
The SAM SPIEGEL-DAVID LEAN production of

LAWRENCE OF ARABIA
TECHNICOLOR® SUPER PANAVISION 70®

RESERVED SEATS NOW AT BOX-OFFICE
BOX-OFFICE OPEN 10 A.M. DAILY—12 NOON SUNDAY
CRITERION B'WAY & 45th. • JU 2-1795

FABIAN'S B'KLYN FOX FLATBUSH TR 5 AT NEVINS 9350

ROSALIND RUSSELL
in
"GYPSY"

LATE SHOW TONIGHT

THEATER PARTIES

All trade union and fraternal organizations are requested when planning theater parties to do so through Bernard Feinman, Manager of The New Leader Theatrical Department, 7 East 15th St., N.Y.C. Phone: Algonquin 5-8844.

MILLIONS USE EX-LAX

For Gentle and Thorough Relief

Don't dose yourself with a bad-tasting, upsetting laxative. Get pleasant relief with Ex-Lax!

Ex-Lax tastes like delicious chocolate! It works easily, smoothly...thoroughly. Ex-Lax is America's largest selling laxative—the favorite of old and young.

Buy the Economy 89c size
Save as much as 55c
Also available in 39c and 18c sizes

When Nature "forgets"...remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

STATEMENT BY NAACP FUND ATTORNEYS
ON THE JAMES MEREDITH CASE

January 8, 1963

NEW YORK -- (The following is a joint statement issued January 7, 1963, by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, attorney for James Meredith, and Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.)

"Though Mr. Meredith has announced he cannot continue his studies next semester at the University of Mississippi because of the unfavorable conditions and hostility there, this will not lessen our efforts to secure for other qualified Negro students the right to enter the University of Mississippi, or other southern state universities which are now segregated.

"In South Carolina, Harvey Gantt's case to enter Clemson College is now pending. But in addition, students in Mississippi, Alabama and other young people in South Carolina have solicited our aid to enter various state institutions of higher learning, and we are now preparing pleadings which will be filed in their cases at an early date."

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

GANTT'S ATTORNEYS TO PROCEED IMMEDIATELY
FOR INJUNCTION IN CLEMSON CASE January 16, 1963

NEW YORK -- Attorneys for Harvey Gantt plan to proceed immediately to secure Gantt's admission to Clemson College on January 28, 1963, as ordered by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. A motion for judgment in accordance with the Fourth Circuit's opinion will probably be made on January 17, 1963.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, chief attorney for Gantt, said: "With today's historic ruling by the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit every southern state has now either voluntarily or by court order admitted Negroes to a formerly all-white state school." She noted that in Alabama, where no Negroes are now attending integrated schools, though a desegregation decision was won in 1956, "Negroes have filed to enter the University of Alabama, and we will support their applications with legal action."

The three-judge appeals court, in reversing a December 21st decision by South Carolina District Judge C. C. Wyche, said: (1) Gantt is fully qualified; (2) he should be treated as all other transfer applicants; (3) the District Court should issue an injunction to secure his admission for the second semester; and (4) the injunction should include all other Negro students qualified to attend Clemson.

Gantt had attempted to transfer to Clemson from Iowa State College since January 1961. Since then he has written many letters to the Registrar and other Clemson officials in an attempt to complete his application. At the trial in November 1962, Legal Defense Fund attorneys argued that this delay in considering Gantt's application was evidence that his papers were handled differently from those of white students. His attorneys also argued that Clemson, in not admitting Gantt, was simply following a long-standing "whites only" admission policy.

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys for Gantt are Matthew J. Perry and Lincoln C. Jenkins, Jr., of Columbia, S. C., Donald J. Sampson and Willie T. Smith of Greenville, S. C., and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Jack Greenberg of New York City.

######

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

PRINCE HALL MASONIC SHRINERS
PRESENT $3,000 CHECK TO DEFENSE FUND

January 23, 1963

NEW YORK -- The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund received this week a $3,000 donation from the Prince Hall Masonic Shriners.

The check, presented to Director-Counsel Jack Greenberg and Associate Counsel Constance Baker Motley in the Fund offices in New York, represented the annual Shriner contribution to the NAACP Legal Research Department.

Charles A. Dargan, National Director of the Prince Hall legal fund drive, in presenting the check, said "we are fully cognizant of, and vigorously applaud the tremendous battle being waged in the area of first-class citizenship for all. We pledge ourselves to even greater support of the leaders of this fine organization, of which we are part and parcel."

At the presentation were Leon Berry, Deputy Imperial Potentate, New York State; W. C. Kilpatrick, Advisor, Imperial Council; Elmer A. Carter, Public Relations, Prince Hall Lodge, New York; Baxter F. Jackson and Rev. David Licorish, Medina Temple; Rufus Allen, Alfred Fields and Robert Taylor, Abu Bekr Temple, Brooklyn; and Kenneth Rhone, musical director.

Mr. Greenberg cited the Prince Hall Shriners for their continued annual support of the Legal Defense Fund and its activities.

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

STATEMENT OF JAMES H. MEREDITH

January 30, 1963

I notified everyone concerned that I would announce my decision at this time for two reasons. First, newsmen from every area of the news services had requested that they be given sufficient notification so that they could be present if they so desired. Secondly, I have found in the past that by not giving such notification, I have had to spend too much time answering the same questions for each individual newsman. Therefore, it was suggested by many of them that this procedure would be more advantageous both to them and to me.

It is a great tragedy for America that whether a student will attend a University has become a big news item. For the past several days, I have pondered this question. I have, in various ways, been informed of the feelings and opinions of most of the people in this country, and many throughout the world regarding this question.

After listening to all arguments, evaluations and positions, and weighing all this against my personal possibilities and circumstances, I have concluded that the "Negro" should not return to the University of Mississippi. The prospects for him are too unpromising. However, I have decided that I, J. H. Meredith, will register for the second semester at the University of Mississippi.

Many things have taken place in recent months, and I see signs that give me hope that I will be able to go to school in the future, under adequate, if not ideal, conditions.

I want to thank the people of the United States of America for their support. With so many of our citizens genuinely concerned with this grave racial problem we are bound to find an adequate solution. I also want to thank the many people throughout the world who have shown such a great interest in the struggle of men for the equality of opportunities.

#####

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND JOINS IN AIRLINE DISCRIMINATION BRIEF

February 1, 1963

WASHINGTON -- Can a state fair employment law be invoked to bar job discrimination by an interstate airline?

Three national civil rights groups argued "Yes" today in a joint friend-of-the-court brief submitted to the U. S. Supreme Court. They urged the high Court to overrule a Colorado Supreme Court decision which held that the state anti-discrimination law could not be constitutionally applied to the employment policies of Continental Air Lines, Inc., a Denver-based interstate carrier.

The three groups that filed the joint "amicus" brief were the American Jewish Congress, American Civil Liberties Union, and NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund. "The outcome of this case can affect the proper working of all the state fair employment and other civil rights laws throughout the North," commented Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the Legal Defense Fund.

The brief said the three organizations were "deeply concerned" by the Colorado decision, which -- if allowed to stand -- would prevent the "many state and local fair employment laws that have operated effectively in this country for more than seventeen years" from being applied "to a substantial and vital segment of the nation's economy."

The case, now before the Supreme Court, involves a Negro pilot, Marlon D. Green, who sought a flying job with Continental Air Lines in 1957. The company's job application form included a question on race. Green was not hired, although white pilots interviewed later did receive job offers.

An investigation by the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission, a state body, found that Green was fully qualified for the position he had sought and that Continental had failed to hire him solely because of his race.

The finding was appealed by the airline, which claimed an exemption from the requirements of the Colorado fair employment law on the ground that it was engaged in the interstate transportation of passengers, which can be regulated only by the Federal Government. The Colorado Supreme Court sustained the airline's appeal, holding that "with reference to interstate carriers, the regulation of racial discrimination is a matter in which there is a 'need for national uniformity,' and...the states are without jurisdiction to act in that area."

Quoting a concurring opinion by retired Justice Felix Frankfurter in a case in 1945, the brief urged the high Court to support the Colorado policy under which the State has "put its authority behind one of the cherished aims of American feeling by forbidding indulgence in racial or religious prejudice to another's hurt."

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND CALLS
CONFERENCE OF NAACP LAWYERS

February 6, 1963

NEW YORK -- A working conference of NAACP attorneys will be held February 15-17 at the Howard University Law School in Washington, D. C., it was announced today by Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

The conference will deal particularly with a discussion of the President's Housing Order, Labor Board Proceedings, health facilities, and voting cases.

The sessions will begin at noon, February 15th, and end Sunday afternoon, February 17th. Approximately 80 lawyers, primarily from southern States, are expected to attend.

Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will address the group at noon, February 16th.

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

NEGRO DENTIST SUES TO DESEGREGATE NASHVILLE MOTEL

February 11, 1963

NEW YORK -- A federal suit challenging segregation in a Nashville, Tenn. motel was filed this morning by a Negro resident of Memphis.

The suit is considered extremely significant by NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys representing the plaintiff, Vasco A. Smith, Jr., because the motel, Holiday Inn-Capitol Hill, was constructed as part of an urban redevelopment project.

The complaint was filed by Nashville NAACP attorney Avon N. Williams in the federal district court for the Middle District of Tennessee. It alleges that the motel "is the product of indispensable federal, state, and local governmental, as well as private action", and is thus subject to the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and the President's executive housing order of November 20, 1962 prohibiting racial discrimination.

The suit asks that the court enjoin the motel from discriminating on the basis of race, and open its facilities to all Negroes in addition to the plaintiff.

A reservation for Dr. Smith, a dentist who lives in Memphis, was made December 4, 1962 by Mr. Carroll Barber of Nashville for the following night. When Dr. Smith, in the company of Mr. Barber, went to the motel desk to claim his room, he was told that his reservation could not be honored as the motel did not serve Negroes. A few minutes later, the complaint states, a white man, Rev. Robert C. Palmer, entered the motel and was informed that single rooms were available.

Holiday Inn-Capitol Hill was built on land acquired from the Nashville Housing Authority in 1958 and 1959 for an estimated cost of $194,771. The Nashville Housing Authority had condemned the redevelopment project area in 1952, of which 50% of the land, it is alleged, was owned or occupied by Negroes. The area is being redeveloped through a 1952 contract between the Nashville Housing Authority and the federal Housing and Home Finance Agency, under which the federal government agreed to pay two-thirds of the net cost of the project, and the city of Nashville the remaining one-third.

The complaint points out that "defendants serve the public purpose of providing lodging, dining and recreational facilities to motorists visiting the capitol of the State of Tennessee, while at the same time enjoying the opportunity to pursue private gain."

It adds that "there are no adequate, first-class motel facilities open to Negroes in the central commercial district of Nashville."

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys for Mr. Smith are Avon N. Williams and Z. Alexander Looby of Nashville, Tenn.; A. W. Willis of Memphis, Tenn.; and Jack Greenberg and Constance Baker Motley of New York City.

STATEMENT BY LEGAL DEFENSE FUND DIRECTOR-COUNSEL
JACK GREENBERG ON THE NASHVILLE MOTEL SUIT

"This case is far more significant than the question of desegregating a single motel. It involves the constitutionality of excluding Negroes from an urban renewal site that is the product of local, state and federal planning and financing.

"The cities of the nation are being remade by urban renewal. Negroes generally are cleared out of the central city sites where the plans are carried out and shunted off to new and more crowded ghettos.

"This suit has the same goal as the President's new housing order, but has the advantage of enabling the injured parties themselves to commence a case in the federal district court."

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

FIRST MISSISSIPPI SCHOOL
DESEGREGATION SUITS FILED

March 8, 1963

NEW YORK -- NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys launched a new attack on segregated schools in Mississippi this week.

In two suits filed in the Federal District Court in Jackson, bi-racial schools in the City of Jackson and Leake County were challenged by Negro plaintiffs.

This week's actions were first Legal Defense Fund suits against segregated elementary and high schools in Mississippi.

The Jackson complaint was signed by ten Negro minor plaintiffs, including the two children of Mississippi NAACP Field Secretary Medgar Evers. The complaint alleges that the Jackson Municipal Separate School District is "pursuing a policy, custom, practice and usage of operating the public school system...on a racially segregated basis."

The Jackson school system is described as operating 34 schools for white children, and 16 schools for Negroes, with attendance and assignment areas, teachers, budgets, construction plans and appropriations all operated on a segregated basis. Negro elementary and junior high schools feed into Negro high schools, the complaint states, as white schools feed into more advanced white schools. Students are assigned by race, even if they live nearer a school which is maintained for members of the other race.

The Negro plaintiffs petitioned the school board to desegregate Jackson schools on August 15, 1962, but no answer was received from the Board. The names of the signers were published in Jackson newspapers, however.

The Jackson suit asks the District Court to enter a decree enjoining segregation in all aspects of the Board's operation, or, in the alternative, to require the Jackson School Board to submit a plan which would reorganize the school district into "a unitary non-racial system."

Thirty Negro minor plaintiffs signed the Leake County Complaint. Almost all of the plaintiffs are from the Negro community of Harmony, Miss., about 65 miles northeast of Jackson and ten miles from Carthage, the largest city in the county. Slightly more than 50% of the county residents are Negro.

The complaint points out that: 1) Negroes are assigned to Negro schools located further from their homes than schools limited to whites, and 2) all curricula and extra-curricular activities are provided on a racially segregated basis, in addition to bus transportation.

The Leake County plaintiffs first petitioned the County School Board for desegregation on February 23, 1962. They received no reply from the Board, but during March 1962, Mr. O. E. Jordens, Principal of the Negro High School in Carthage, personally wrote each of the petitioning parents telling of the advantages of segregated schools and urging them not to take further action because the white community would react adversely to such efforts.

In August 1962, the parents sent a second petition to the Board, but have still received no answer. During the height of the University of Mississippi controversy last fall, on the nights of October 4th and 5th, the homes of two of the plaintiffs, Mr. James Overstreet and Mrs. Ruthie McBeth, were shot into.

The Leake County complaint asks, as in the Jackson case, that the District Court enjoin all segregation in the operation of the County school system, or that the Board be required to submit a plan which would establish a "unitary nonracial system."

Local NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys are Jack Young of Jackson, for the Jackson plaintiffs, and R. Jess Brown of Vicksburg, Miss. for the Leake County plaintiffs.

Other Legal Defense Fund attorneys are Jack Greenberg, Constance Baker Motley and Derrick A. Bell, Jr., of New York City.

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

SUPREME COURT TO HEAR
TENNESSEE SCHOOL CASE APPEAL TUESDAY

March 12, 1963

NEW YORK -- The United States Supreme Court will hear two important and potentially far-reaching school desegregation cases Tuesday, March 19th.

The cases, from Knoxville and Davidson County, Tennessee, are consolidated appeals brought by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund challenging "racial option transfer" provisions adopted by the two school boards which were approved by the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit last April.

The plaintiffs, who will be represented before the Court by the Fund's Director-Counsel Jack Greenberg, contend that the transfer provisions operate to perpetuate segregation rather than further desegregation and, thus, should be ruled inconsistent with the Supreme Court's 1955 decision requiring desegregation of local school systems "with all deliberate speed."

Under the "racial option" system, as adopted by the Knoxville and Davidson County school boards and approved by the Sixth Circuit, children assigned to schools which previously served the other race are permitted to transfer to schools where their race is in the majority; they may also transfer if they are assigned to any school or grade where their race is in the minority. White children who are required, through rezoning effected via the desegregation plan, to attend schools with a higher percentage of Negro students can therefore transfer back to the "white" schools, thus resegregating the system.

The Fund petition to the Court points out that this racial transfer device has "become a significant and effective method for limiting desegregation. Its use insures that the traditional all-Negro school will remain all-Negro, even after every grade is covered in a grade-by-grade plan. This has been the uniform experience with this device." The petition also hits the "racial option" procedure for expressly recognizing race as a ground for transfer.

Both Knoxville and Davidson County, which is adjacent to Nashville, adopted school plans for grade-per-year desegregation beginning with the first grade -- Knoxville in 1960, Davidson County in 1961. The District Court in the Davidson County case ordered the first four grades desegregated at the outset. The Court of Appeals in the Knoxville case ordered the plan accelerated. Both plans contain provisions for rezoning and for transfers, but it is the transfer issue which is specifically attacked in the Supreme Court appeal.

The Fund petition argues that acceptance of the transfer provision in the Tennessee cases by the Sixth Circuit conflicts with holdings on similar transfer procedures by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (deep South states) and the Fourth Circuit (southeastern seaboard states). It cites a ruling by the Fifth Circuit in the Dallas, Texas school case prohibiting a transfer provision based on race, and similar holdings by the Fourth Circuit in the Roanoke, Va. and Durham, N. C. school cases.

In addition to Mr. Greenberg, NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys for the Negro children are Carl A. Cowan of Knoxville, Tenn., Z. Alexander Looby and Avon N. Williams of Nashville, and James M. Nabrit, III, of New York City.

####

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

U. OF ALABAMA SUIT FILED
ON BEHALF OF THREE NEGRO PLAINTIFFS

April 15, 1963

NEW YORK -- NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys today filed suit against the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa on behalf of three Negro plaintiffs.

The suit was filed in the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Alabama in Birmingham by attorney Fred Gray of Montgomery, Ala.

The University of Alabama was previously sued by Legal Defense Fund attorneys in 1956 for Negro student Autherine Lucy. Miss Lucy's admittance was ordered by the Federal District Court, but after a period of rioting, she was expelled for allegedly making derogatory statements about University officials. She never attended classes at the University.

Today's action is the first on behalf of Negro students to enter the University since the Lucy case in 1956. It completes legal efforts by Negro students to gain entrance to state universities in Mississippi South Carolina and Alabama.

The three plaintiffs are Vivian J. Malone, 20, a resident of Mobile, Ala., a junior at Alabama A. & M. College; Sandy English, 21, of Birmingham, Ala., a freshman at Stillman College in Tuscaloosa, Ala.; and Jimmy A. Hood, 20, of East Gadsden, Ala., a sophomore at Clark College in Atlanta, Ga. All "are students in good standing in the collegesof their present enrollment and are eligible for transfer to the undergraduate schools of the University of Alabama" according to the complaint.

The complaint alleges that in November, 1962 the three Negro students applied for transfer to the University of Alabama for the February 1963 term. On November 30, 1962, they were informed by the Dean of Admissions that they could not be admitted for the spring semester "due to the pressures of enrollment," but their applications would be considered for a "subsequent semester."

A second letter was sent to the Dean of Admissions by the three students in February 1963, inquiring about the status of their applications. The Dean wrote Miss Malone and Mr. English that he could take no action until he received grades from their present (Spring 1963) semester of schooling. Mr. Hood has received no reply.

The complaint alleges that the handling of these applications by the Dean, Hubert E. Mate, was based on racial discrimination, that "white students similarly situated who have applied have been admitted or advised of conditional admission."

Dean Mate is cited as defendant. The complaint asks the court to enjoin him from refusing to consider the applications of Negro students on the same basis as those of white applicants and "from continuing to pursue the policy, practice, custom and usage of limiting admissions to the University of Alabama to white persons."

The suit further alleges that a policy of racial segregation by the University is in violation of the injunction in the Lucy case and asks the court to enjoin Dean Mate for this additional reason.

Jimmy Hood, the suit states, wishes to begin study at the University in June 1963. Vivian Malone and Sandy English desire to enter the University in September 1963.

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys for the Negro plaintiffs are Fred Gray of Montgomery, Ala., Jack Greenberg, Constance Baker Motley and Leroy D. Clark of New York City.

####

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

MISSISSIPPI TRANSPORTATION AND
LOUISIANA DEMONSTRATION CASES
APPEALED BY NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE FUND April 17, 1963

NEW YORK -- Two cases were appealed to higher courts this week by NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys.

The first is an appeal of the conviction of Dion Diamond of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee for "disturbing the peace" in Baton Rouge, La. in January 1962.

The second case asked for effective relief in a Jackson, Miss. transportation case which has been pending in the Federal District Court of Judge Sidney Mize since March 1962.

Diamond's appeal asks the United States Supreme Court to hear his case. His conviction and sentence of 60 days and $100 fine has been upheld in Louisiana courts.

Diamond was arrested on February 1, 1962, after making speeches for three days at Southern University in Baton Rouge encouraging students to miss classes as an expression of sympathy with students who had demonstrated against segregation in December 1961 and suffered reprisals from University officials.

Diamond served almost a month of his sentence, and was finally released from jail in March after a demonstration on his behalf by other students in the office of Attorney General Robert Kennedy in Washington. An original charge of "criminal anarchy" was dropped.

The brief submitted to the Supreme Court by Legal Defense Fund attorney James M. Nabrit, III argues that Diamond was convicted for engaging in his constitutionally protected right of free speech under a law too vague and indefinite to provide due process of law.

"It is submitted that petitioner's (Diamond's) advocacy that students voluntarily attending a public University refuse to attend classes as a form of protest was a form of speech on public issues which a state cannot prohibit," the brief states. "There was no evidence that petitioner was ever ordered not to enter the campus, or to leave it, and no evidence that he was ever told that he could not make speeches on the campus or that he needed any permission to do so."

In the Jackson transportation case, the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (which ordered James Meredith's admission to the University of Mississippi last summer) has been asked by Legal Defense Fund attorney Derrick Bell, Jr. to grant: (1) an injunction against state and private agencies in Mississippi which continue to segregate transportation facilities, and (2) make the relief apply to not only the three original plaintiffs but to all Negroes, as was requested in the complaint.

The case was filed in the Federal District Court in Jackson on June 9, 1961, asking for an end to all segregated transportation facilities, at the time when the Freedom Rides were at their height. The case went through several complicated legal maneuvers before Judge Sidney Mize ruled on May 3, 1962, that the three litigants had a personal right to unsegregated transportation service, but Negroes as a class did not.

In subsequent proceedings Legal Defense Fund attorneys asked the Judge to amend his findings alleging that segregated facilities had not ceased in Jackson, and that racial signs had not been removed. On August 24, 1962, Judge Mize again held that each of the three litigants -- Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob -- could use the facilities of airline, railway or bus terminals on an unsegregated basis, but refused to issue an injunction against the defendants, and refused to declare class relief for other Negro citizens.

Attorneys for the Legal Defense Fund in the Bailey case are R. Jess Brown of Vicksburg, Miss., Constance Baker Motley, Jack Greenberg and Derrick A. Bell, Jr. of New York City. Attorneys in the Diamond case are Johnnie A. Jones of Baton Rouge, La., Jack Greenberg and James M. Nabrit, III of New York City.

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

SUPREME COURT HEARS MEMPHIS
RECREATION SUIT ARGUMENT

April 18, 1963

WASHINGTON -- The United States Supreme Court heard argument this week on a suit involving desegregation of park and playground facilities in Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, Associate Counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, argued on behalf of the Negro petitioners.

She asked the Court to reverse opinions by the Federal District Court in Memphis and the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit which held that the Memphis Park Commission could desegregate their 130 park and playground facilities on a gradual basis in accordance with the second Brown "all deliberate speed" decision on schools.

Mrs. Motley told the high Court that the rights of Negro citizens should have been immediately enforced, and that the Brown case is not applicable to public recreation. She told the Court that Negroes are now excluded from 58 public parks and playgrounds in Memphis.

District Judge Marion S. Boyd had ruled on June 20, 1961, that the Park Commission must submit a plan within six months -- and the Commission submitted to the Court of Appeals a plan which it had drawn up calling for desegregation over a ten year period. On June 12 1962, the Court of Appeals upheld Judge Boyd's decision.

Supreme Court Justice William Brennan asked Mrs. Motley if this case involves "primarily the rights of Negro children." Mrs. Motley said that it did, adding that Negroes were excluded from CrumpStadium, the museum and 40 additional playgrounds operated but not owned by the City.

"The rights involved here are basic, fundamental, and are personal and present," Mrs. Motley said, "and should be immediately enforced."

She added that the Brown decision should not apply because public recreation is not as complex as a public school system with its vast personnel and administrative problems. "All that's involved is removal of racial signs and a public announcement that these facilities are now desegregated," she told the Court.

Thomas R. Prewitt represented the City of Memphis. He argued that the Supreme Court could not consider the question of whether Judge Boyd's decision was justified because the entire record in the case was not before the Court. Upon questioning by Chief Justice Earl Warren, it was brought out that the record was before the Court.

Mr. Prewitt said that recreational facilities in Memphis encompassed a "vast system," involving supervision of 100,000 children of which 65% are white, 35% Negro. "Recreational facilities," he said, "should be desegregated in accordance with all other desegregation in Memphis, on a gradual basis."

Argument began Wednesday afternoon, April 17th, and was completed Thursday morning, April 18th.

Attorneys for the Negro petitioners, in addition to Mrs. Motley, are A. W. Willis, Jr., B. L. Hooks, C. O. Horton, B. F. Jones, H. T. Lockard and R. B. Sugarmon, Jr., all of Memphis, Tenn., Norman C. Amaker, Derrick A. Bell, Jr. and Jack Greenberg of New York City.

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

NEGRO GOVERNMENT ECONOMIST ASKS FHA
TO INSURE RIGHTS OF HOME BUYERS
UNDER PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER

April 20, 1963

NEW YORK -- A government economist who was denied a home in a Levitt & Sons housing development because he is a Negro, asked the Federal Housing Administration today to take "further action" against the builder under the provisions of the President's Executive Order against discrimination in housing.

The request by Karl D. Gregory of Washington, D. C. was revealed in a letter sent yesterday to Commissioner Philip N. Brownstein of the Federal Housing Administration. The letter noted that Mr. Gregory and his attorney, Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, met with Mr. Adolphus Protho, General Counsel of the FHA and Oliver Hill, Assistant to Commissioner Brownstein, in a conference on Wednesday. Mrs. Motley is Associate Counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund in New York.

Mr. Gregory submitted his complaint to the FHA on December 17, 1962, alleging that Levitt & Sons refused to sell him a house in their Belair development at Bowie, Md. solely because of his race. The FHA found that his complaint was justified and fell within the purview of Section 102 of the President's housing order of November 20.

Mr. Gregory was notified by Commissioner Brownstein early this year that after two conferences with Mr. Levitt he had been unsuccessful in getting him to abandon his "all-white" policy. The letter stated there was "nothing further" the FHA could do. Mr. Gregory replied on March 26th that he was not satisfied with this answer. He retained Mrs. Motley and requested the meeting with FHA officials which was held last week.

Mr. Gregory moved from Detroit in September 1961 to work in the Executive Office of the President for the Bureau of the Budget. He earned a Ph.D. in Economics from the University of Michigan and was assistant professor of economics at Wayne State University before his government appointment.

In a statement made in January, he recounted his frustrating attempts to obtain adequate housing for his family in Washington. His wife is now expecting a second child and they live in a four-room house which he has said is "more inadequate than ever for our needs."

Mrs. Motley said today, "We think that the FHA has not done all that it can to enforce the President's Executive Order for housing which was insured prior to the effective date of the order. We certainly intend to do what we can to get the Executive Order fully implemented by FHA."

Mr. Gregory's letter said, in part, "It is inconceivable to me that the President's Executive Order...should be of so little practical benefit to those of us who have been so long deprived of equal opportunity to secure decent, safe and sanitary housing." He suggested that the FHA:

(1) Recommend to the President that his Executive Order be extended to cover previously existing FHA mortgage insured housing;

(2) Extend the order to housing financed by savings and loan institutions insured by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board;

(3) Refuse to grant FHA mortgage insurance commitments to developers who violate the public policy of the United States by continuing to discriminate against Negro applicants, even when such housing was insured prior to the effective date of the President's order;

(4) Ask the Attorney General of the United States to institute legal action against Levitt & Sons, Inc. to secure their compliance; and

(5) Require FHA's local insurance offices to make available to the public a list of all housing in an area for which FHA commitments have been issued.

Levitt & Sons is one of the nation's largest home builders. He has developed Levittowns in Long Island, N. Y., Pennsylvania, New Jersey--all since World War II--and initiated building ventures in Puerto Rico, Paris, Matteawan, N. J. and the Belair project. The originally all-white New Jersey Levittown development was sued by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund in the mid-1950's. Mr. Levitt lost and homes are now sold to Negroes in the New Jersey development.

###

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND TO APPEAL
KING CONTEMPT RULING

April 26, 1963

NEW YORK -- NAACP Legal Defense Fund Director-Counsel Jack Greenberg said today the conviction of Rev. Martin Luther King and 10 of his supporters in Birmingham County Court will be appealed immediately to the Alabama Supreme Court.

Circuit Judge W. A. Jenkins of Birmingham ruled this morning that the Negro leaders were guilty of criminal contempt and sentenced them to 5 days in jail and $50.00 fine each, sentencing to begin on May 16. There was no finding of civil contempt.

In addition to Mr. Greenberg, the Negro leaders were defended by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Attorney Arthur Shores of Birmingham. The trial took place Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in a tense courtroom which included Rev. King and Southern Christian Leadership Conference officials Ralph Abernathy, Fred Shuttlesworth and Wyatt Tee Walker.

The evidence put on by Birmingham City Attorneys J. M. Breckinridge and Earl McBee sought to prove that Negro demonstrators had violated an injunction against unlawful picketing and parading issued by Judge Jenkins on April 13, specifically by demonstrations on Good Friday, when King and Abernathy were arrested, and Easter Sunday. They also cited a press conference which SCLC officials held in which they said the injunction would not stop them from protesting against segregation in Birmingham.

Greenberg told the court that the injunction was a prior restraint on free speech and that the demonstrations by Negro leaders were lawful exercises of free speech "in its most pristine form."

An unusual feature of the trial was the calling to the witness stand by Legal Defense Fund attorneys of Eugene "Bull" Connor, Commissioner of Public Safety and an avowed "tough" segregationist. He

"And the Lord God called unto

ADAM

and said unto him

WHERE ART THOU?"

Genesis 3:9

The NAACP and Adam Clayton Powell

ADAM CLAYTON POWELL, JR.
16TH DISTRICT, NEW YORK

NEW YORK OFFICE:
132 WEST 138TH STREET
AUDUBON 6-2626

SECRETARY:
HATTIE FREEMAN DODSON

Anti-Segregation Amendment

Congress of the United States
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

WASHINGTON, D. C.
SUITE 459
OLD HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING
NATIONAL 8-3120
EXTENSION 418 OR 1917

SECRETARY:
LOUISE MARIENNE DARGANS

Adam Clayton Powell

RW

July 21, 1955

Mr. Roy Wilkens
N A A C P
20 West 40 Street
New York, New York

17650 JUL 22 '55

My dear Roy:

Just a brief note of thanks for the magnificent support of the NAACP given me, both in New York and Washington, with the hope that it will continue to preserve.

With every good wish.

Sincerely,

Adam

Dictated but not signed:
ACP:nb

The NAACP was all right with Congressman Powell in 1955, even though it had more white members on its Board then than it had in March, 1963, when Rep. Powell attacked it for having white Board members. Apparently, it is not the color of the Board members that counts, but whether they give Mr. Powell what he considers to be "magnificent support."

THE NAACP AND ADAM CLAYTON POWELL

The Powell Position

Three times within a brief period of 11 days, March 21-31, Repsentative Adam Clayton Powell (D., N.Y.) attacked the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at open meetings, first in Washington and twice later in Harlem. The March 23 speech was at an outdoor rally sponsored by a nationalist group and included Malcolm X of the Black Muslims as a speaker.

Each time he berated the NAACP, the National Urban League, Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference and CORE for including white persons among their officers and board members.

In the Harlem rally which was recorded in part by NBC television cameras, Congressman Powell said the public "should consider a boycott" of the NAACP because, he stated, it had white people in "policy-making" positions.

His main speech was given in his best rabble-rousing, street corner style and gave approval to the Black Muslims, although he said there were "some differences." He said Malcolm X was his "friend." When asked by a reporter if he were calling for a boycott of the Association he did not then deny it. The denial came later after public reaction against the proposal.

After a week of discussion back and forth, on Sunday, March 31, Congressman Powell spoke at the Upper Park Avenue Baptist Church in Harlem, with the NAACP as his principal topic.

In this speech Congressman Powell again called for the ousting of white people from the NAACP, naming specifically, the president, what he called "the secretary-treasurer," the chairman of the life membership committee and the director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.

Mr. Powell again embraced the Black Muslim approach by repeating that the NAACP was "controlled" by white people and that Negroes should not support any organization that they themselves did not control. During his speech he again repeated his assertion that Mrs. Agnes Meyer, widow of the former owner of the Washington, D.C., Post and the late Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt had proposed at an NAACP Board meeting that the Association not support the Powell amendment to the Federal Aid to Education Bill. Congressman Powell asserted for the second time that the white members of the Board "voted solidly" not to support the Powell amendment.

He offered free advice on the selection of NAACP Board members and assigned racial quotas, saying he would not object to "four or five" non-Negroes.

NAACP Position

The general position of the NAACP is that Congressman Powell simply does not know what he is talking about when he discusses the workings of the NAACP. He is completely ignorant of how it is organized, how it functions, who is on its Board of Directors, how its policy is made and who supports it financially.

Item: Mr. Powell does not know (or has chosen to forget) that the NAACP Board at its meeting February 14, 1955, voted all-out endorsement of the Powell amendment in the following language:

"BE IT RESOLVED: That any new Federal legislation in aid of education in the states at whatever level or of whatever character should contain corrective and safeguarding features which make such aid available only to such states as comply fully with the spirit and purpose of the Constitution."

The white members of the Board present voted for this endorsement.

Mr. Powell does not know (or chooses to forget) that at the NAACP Board meeting on May 9, 1955, the Board voted to maintain its position as stated at the February meeting, despite a letter signed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. (Mrs. Agnes Meyer, named by him as a participant in this move, is not now and never has been a member of the NAACP Board.)

The white members of the Board present in May voted to let stand the February resolution supporting the Powell amendment; they did not vote "solidly" against Powell as he has charged repeatedly.

Item: But while the NAACP was giving 100 percent support to that amendment, Mr. Powell does not want the public to remember that he, Adam Clayton Powell, ran out on his own amendment in 1961.

Not only did he run out on it and refuse to introduce it, but he promised to "take the floor and fight against" any such amendment if any other Congressman proposed one.

One Congressman, Peter Frelinghuysen (R., N.J.), did propose such an amendment to HR 7300 in 1961 and Mr. Powell opposed it in committee, thus helping to kill the amendment before it reached the floor.

The Congressional Quarterly Almanac for the 87th Congress, First Session, 1961, records on page 223 that Congressman Powell, as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, led within the committee the opposition to Representative Frelinghuysen's amendment which would have denied Federal funds to states which discriminate. The amendment was killed by a vote of 16-13.

In an April 13, 1961, dispatch from Washington, the Associated Press reported that Congressman Powell ". . . promised today to withhold his anti-segregation amendment from pending school aid legislation.

"He said that if anyone else offered an anti-segregation amendment — and some Congress members have indicated they will — he would lead the opposition to it."

So, the record shows that the Congressman's big to-do about the NAACP Board of Directors fighting the Powell amendment is not true.

And the record also shows that he did run out on his own amendment and that he did oppose a similar amendment proposed by another Congressman.

Item: Mr. Powell does not know that the NAACP has been in the thick of the sit-in, picketing protest movement.

Of the hundreds arrested in the State of South Carolina, notably at Orangeburg and Columbia, all but a dozen or so were NAACP youth, organized into NAACP units, working under direction of the NAACP. Two recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions reversed the convictions of South Carolina NAACP young people.

The Savannah, Georgia, NAACP selective buying campaign against downtown merchants was one of the many successful ones over the country.

The successful Memphis, Tennessee, public library and lunch counter desegregation campaigns were exclusively NAACP Youth Council efforts under the general direction of the Memphis Branch, largest in the South. The San Antonio, Texas, movement was that of NAACP youth and adult units. In Louisville, out of 267 arrested, more than 250 were NAACP youth. Other organizations were and are at work, but the NAACP was not on the sidelines, nursing its "legal approach." When the sit-ins and Freedom Riders had rough going, it was NAACP attorneys and NAACP bond money that came to their aid.

So, it is not true that the NAACP is "nit-picking" about other organizations and is refusing to use sit-ins and picketing and other active methods of protest. Representative Powell is wrong again.

Item: All members of the NAACP Board have been elected in annual balloting by NAACP Branches in at-large, regional and youth voting.

The nominations are made by delegates to the Annual Convention or by a committee of seven, four of whom are elected by the Convention.

In addition, independent nominations may be made by petitions signed by the requisite number of members in good standing.

Of the present 52 members, 11 are white. Is Mr. Powell serious in suggesting that these 11 "control" the other 41? Especially since the 41 (and the 11) are elected by the people in the NAACP Branches?

Item: Most NAACP Board members have come up through the ranks of the Association. The Board Chairman is a former president of the District of Columbia Branch. The treasurer is a former officer of the Greenwich, Connecticut, Branch.

For 27 years, until the NAACP could afford its own legal staff, the president, now 85, gave his services without fee in legal cases as chairman of the one-man legal department. Other Board members include NAACP state presidents in North Carolina, New York, Pennsylvania, Northwest Area (Oregon-Washington), Georgia, Missouri, Michigan and Maryland. Also Branch presidents, ex-presidents or other officers in Fort Worth, St. Louis, Richmond, Camden, Philadelphia, Detroit, New Orleans, Los Angeles, Columbia, S.C., Norfolk, San Francisco, Baltimore, Meridian, Miss., Wichita, Chicago, Nashville, Boston, Cleveland, Sacramento, Oklahoma City, East Orange, N.J., and Miami.

So, NAACP Board members are elected by the membership. The vast majority comes up through the ranks, serving the Association effectively on the state and local levels. They are not designated or hand-picked by an Adam Powell or someone else because they are identified with some other organized group; they are elected by NAACP members on the basis of their service to the NAACP and to the general cause of civil rights.

No color line is drawn. No quotas are assigned. No tokenism (like Mr. Powell's "four or five") is used. Negro Americans have been fighting quotas and tokenism all their lives and now the Congressman wants to apply them to people whose skin happens to be white!

Item: No one knows the exact percentage of white membership in the NAACP. No records are kept by race and color. For years we have been estimating the white membership at 10 percent. We do know that the overwhelming majority of the membership is Negro.

No one knows the exact amount of financial support given by white people, but we do know that the overwhelming bulk of the funds (85% to 90%) is contributed — in one form or another — by the NAACP members themselves, not by outsiders, or by big givers or by funds or foundations.

"White" money does not "control" the NAACP. The Association is controlled by its membership. Its national policy is laid down by the elected delegates to its annual conventions in the form of resolutions. Its funds are raised in large degree by its members.

No one owns the NAACP except its members.

The white and Negro members and officers work in partnership, not only nationally, but locally, for Branches and state organizations also have white members and officers. This is the way it has been since the NAACP was organized in 1909. The late Arthur Capper, U.S. Senator from Kansas, was once president of the Topeka, Kansas, Branch and helped fight the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" back in 1917.

The late Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior under FDR, was once president of the Chicago Branch. John R. Shillady, an early white national secretary of the NAACP, was beaten badly by an Austin, Texas, mob in 1919.

After the Supreme Court decision of 1954, local units of the National Urban League were thrown out of Southern Community Chests because their leadership — white and black — supported desegregation.

In the CORE Freedom Rides it was a white CORE leader, James Peck, who was unmercifully beaten in Birmingham in May, 1961.

When Powell's conduct was criticized on the floor of the Senate by Senator John J. Williams (R., Del.), the only man who spoke up against such criticism of a fellow legislator was a white vice-president of the NAACP, Senator Wayne Morse (D., Ore.).

White NAACP members and officers have been insulted and slandered for their loyalty to the Association, accused of being everything from a prostitute to a communist. The late Mary White Ovington, a gentle and cultured aristocrat, a founder of the NAACP, was called a "degenerate" because she ate with Negroes in a Brooklyn restaurant. We all know the filthy names hurled at white sit-in students, Freedom Riders, and sympathizers by white Southern elements during recent years.

Adam Powell wants to take the membership money of these people, assign them a quota, set a ceiling on their participation and bar them from office — all because of skin color! They believe in justice and equality. They serve the cause with their talents, their money and sometimes their blood. But Mr. Powell says that is not enough.

We of the NAACP say it is. We say so in the name of John Brown and of the other white martyrs for Negro human rights. We say so in the name of the record of advancement against heartbreaking odds that this NAACP interracial partnership of freedom fighters has achieved. The goal is not yet won, but the fight goes forward.

But in our NAACP fight for decency, we believe black racism is as bad, inherently, as white racism or yellow racism or brown racism. We will have none of it.

If Adam Clayton Powell, an elected national legislator in a nation whose historic Declaration of Independence includes "all men," will have some of racism, then democracy (for all men) is betrayed.

If Adam Clayton Powell, minister in the Christian church whose most famous minister, Paul, wrote on bigotry to the church at Rome, "What then, are we better than they? No, in no wise . . ." will have some of racism (even in behalf of a sorely tried race) then prayers should be said for the Powell ministry.

The prophet Isaiah, put it this way in the fifth verse of the sixty-fifth chapter:

[A people] "Which say, stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day."

To which the NAACP says a fervent "Amen!"

Negro Public Reaction

The Negro press and other spokesmen for the Negro public have almost unanimously rallied to the support of the NAACP and rejected Mr. Powell's racist appeal. The following are some of their published statements:

Philadelphia Tribune, March 26:

> What Congressman Powell has suggested, if he doesn't realize it, is that Americans of color should turn their backs on men and women who have suffered criticism from other white people because of their advocacy of constitutional rights withheld from Negroes. Must we at this late date turn our backs on the Spingarns, Mary White Ovingtons, Louis Marshalls and Eleanor Roosevelts, just to name a few of America's distinguished citizens who have thrown the full weight of their influence into the struggle to make democracy more than a word in the United States of America?
>
> Congressman Adam Clayton Powell is confused. How in the name of heaven can he logically advocate segregation within the ranks of the NAACP which has as its basic purpose the ending of segregation in America?

Atlanta Daily World, March 27:

> Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, D-N.Y., has made an unfortunate attack on the NAACP in criticizing the presence of whites in responsible positions. His position is extreme, irrational and vindictive. It is not becoming for the New York solon to take such a narrow, restrictive and irresponsible attitude toward an organization which has practiced the principles in which it affirms for the nation . . .
>
> The NAACP Board of Directors is fully capable of seeing that qualified persons carry out its policies without influence or interference from Congressman Powell.
>
> At the same time it will require Negroes and whites, working in partnership, to break down the barriers which have handicapped our national and racial development.

California Eagle, March 28:

> Adam Clayton Powell opened the spring silly season last week with advice to Negroes to boycott the NAACP until it ousts white officials. He sounds as if he had been reading and giving credence to literature of the White Citizens Councils . . .
>
> The important thing about the NAACP is not whether it is composed of Negroes alone or of whites and Negroes but what it does relative to fighting for and securing the rights of Negroes. As long as it voices the aims and aspirations of Negroes it deserves the support of Negroes.

St. Louis Argus, March 29:

Representative Adam Clayton Powell, who has had his share of headlines recently, has run into a veritable buzz-saw from Roy Wilkins and Whitney Young in reply to his reported boycott plea.

According to dispatches, Powell at a rally up in Harlem last Saturday, called for a boycott by Negroes of all organizations not controlled by or without the presence of white persons. Wilkins of the NAACP immediately . . . said that Powell was "talking through his hat." Young, a little more of a diplomat, called the Powell plea "unfortunate."

We deplore the idea of separation, whether proposed by Talmadge, Eastland, Hitler or Malcolm X. We deeply regret that Congressman Powell would lend the prestige of his name to such an idea . . . We wished he hadn't said it.

Kansas City (Mo.) Call, March 29:

When Rep. Powell attacks the NAACP because it has white members on its national board of directors, we know that something has happened to Adam. The NAACP, principal champion of the Negro's fight for first class citizenship for the last 50 years, has always had an interracial board . . .

Surely, Rep. Powell cannot be serious when he urges Negroes to boycott the NAACP because of the interracial make-up of its board.

Powell's blast at the NAACP fell on deaf ears as far as most American Negroes are concerned but it's sweet music to the ears of the Black Muslims whose sect is built around the "black supremacy" theme.

Michigan Chronicle, March 30:

We cannot attribute Mr. Powell's inappropriate, unwarranted, and untimely criticism of our major civil rights organizations to ignorance of the history of the Negro's struggle for freedom in this country. We are certain that he is aware of the tremendously influential role of white abolitionists, before and after the Civil War, in fighting, and in the case of John Brown, dying for the freedom of the American Negro.

We are more inclined to believe that Congressman Powell gains great satisfaction and self-esteem from being controversial. However, we would suggest to the colorful congressman that he not sell our bread and butter organization down the Mississippi River for self aggrandizement; that he not crown himself as a supreme judge of who is to participate in the civil rights movement, and that Powell be careful in the future about letting his expenditures of speech transcend his income of logical ideas.

The Carolina Times, March 30:

Outside of Harlem, Powell's appeal to the Negroes of this nation to boycott the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will be about as effective as a gnat kicking against the Rock of Gibraltar. In fact, we suspect that in some sections of the country his attack on the NAACP will help the organization financially and numerically. Every Negro in the United States, with an ounce of sense, should be against practically everything Powell is for.

It is hard to rationalize a lawmaker of the greatest democracy in the world, to say nothing of a minister of the gospel, advocating the NAACP or any other organization fighting for the rights of an oppressed people, closing its doors in the face of another human being merely because he is white and referring to those of the same race as "crackers." This is not only conduct unbecoming a Christian minister but a congressman as well. It is the same method employed by southern demagogues in their attacks on Negroes.

New Jersey Herald News, March 30:

Surely the spectre of Congressman Adam Clayton Powell berating, downgrading, and generally maligning the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People . . . gave aid and comfort to the enemies of the Negro everywhere.

Houston Informer, in column by Carter Wesley, editor, March 30:

Congressman Adam Clayton Powell broke into headlines the other day by saying that he wanted to boycott, or wanted to see the NAACP boycotted, because it has whites in it. I don't agree with Congressman Powell's stated position of boycotting all of our higher institutions that have whites in them in high places. If the NAACP was organized by white and colored at its initial effort at improving situations, what sense would it be to turn around now and put all of the whites out, because there may be a certain number of whites in high positions. It seems that Congressman Powell is not sincere, or he is full of prunes.

The Pittsburgh Courier, April 6:

It was not as paradoxical as it seemed that Representative Adam Clayton Powell and Muslim Minister Malcolm X should speak from the same Harlem outdoor platform recently for the delectation of 2,500 of their followers.

The Congressman used the occasion to score such organizations as the NAACP, the National Urban League, CORE and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and to call upon the Negroes to boycott them because of alleged white leadership and support.

It is the essence of demagoguery to attack that which is established, stable and constructive in order to destroy and thus create a vacuum into which demagogues may march with whatever program they are promulgating.

The Afro-American, April 13:

Favorite target of two extremist groups, the White Citizens Councils and the Black Muslims, is the NAACP.

This is not surprising since both organizations are dedicated advocates of racial segregation.

But it comes as a surprise to see Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, no segregationist in the past, adding his voice to the shrill chorus . . .

We have come to Mr. Powell's defense on numerous occasions. We have not hesitated to speak out when we felt he was right and his attackers wrong.

But this time Mr. Powell errs . . .

We know the reason these two organizations [White Citizens Councils and Black Muslims] so bitterly oppose the NAACP.

Mr. Powell, what's yours?

Jackie Robinson in a syndicated open letter to Congressman Powell, March 28:

I write it because it is my sincere belief that you have grievously set back the cause of the Negro, let your race down and failed miserably in the role which our people justly expect you to play as an important national leader of the Negro in this nation.

I refer to your vicious attacks upon the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, your intemperate and ill-advised suggestion that the Negro people boycott the NAACP because of the participation in its affairs of white people and your rallying call to the Negro people to support Malcolm X and the Black Muslims.

You know, Adam, that the NAACP, whatever shortcomings it may have, has been and still is the greatest organization working in behalf of all those principles of freedom and human dignity for the black man in America which was ever put together in this nation.

Whitney Young, Executive Director, National Urban League, in an address before a Brooklyn chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, March 31:

Mr. Powell did attack our major organizations. And in so doing called for a purge of white citizens which would result in all-Negro institutions. When he made this attack he confused the Negro masses, and endeared himself to the Barnetts, the Eastlands, and every southern or northern racist who has been advocating separatism for generations on the grounds that Negro citizens prefer to be segregated.

If these were normal times we could dismiss this as "racism — Negro style." But these are not normal times. The Negro citizen stands today at a most critical point in relation to his economic future.

Frank R. Crosswaith, labor leader, in a letter to the New York Amsterdam News, April 6:

The NAACP should be judged by its policy and program, not by who are the people working to make that program a reality. Mr. Powell did not say what he thought was wrong with the program of the NAACP and until he does so his attack should be disregarded by right-thinking people. He might as well have attacked the Supreme Court's decisions because the judges are white.

Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Secretary-Treasurer, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, in interview over Radio Station WTVD as reported in The Carolina Times, March 30:

However, at this point I disagree with him [Powell] whole-heartedly because I am not concerned — and he must not be — and none of us who believe in social justice must not be — with any particular race.

Beulah Lodge, Grand United Order of Oddfellows, Columbia, S.C., in resolution as reported in the Afro-American, April 6:

The work of the NAACP under the present leadership and its open membership are more in keeping with the democratic principles and ideals for which colored persons are striving in their drive for political and economic equality.

The Carver Democratic Club (New York City), J. Raymond Jones, leader, in a statement issued, March 25:

As we approach the ninth anniversary of the Supreme Court decision outlawing discrimination in schools during the Centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation, we must be very mindful of the dominant role of the NAACP in the fight for equality, school desegregation as well as integration in other areas of American life. This fight has been fully supported by members of the NAACP regardless of their race or religion.

The resolution further reaffirmed the conviction "that the NAACP is an effective medium through which full attainment of the aspirations of Negroes and other minority groups can be achieved." It called upon the members of the Carver Club of the Harlem community to reinforce their support of the NAACP through full participation in the New York Branch's current membership drive.

Mr. Jones announced at the meeting that he would purchase a life membership for his oldest grandson.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE
20 West 40th Street, New York 18, N. Y.

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

ATTORNEYS ASK ALABAMA SUPREME COURT
FOR STAY OF JAIL SENTENCES FOR NEGRO LEADERS IN BIRMINGHAM

May 15, 1963

NEW YORK -- NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys Arthur D. Shores and Norman Amaker asked the Supreme Court of Alabama today to stay the sentences, issued April 26th by a Birmingham Circuit Court, of Dr. Martin Luther King and ten of his aides. An appeal was filed Monday with the Alabama high court.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference officials are scheduled to begin serving five day jail terms tomorrow. They were also fined $50 each. They were convicted of criminal contempt by Judge W. A. Jenkins for violating his injunction against anti-segregation demonstrations which was issued April 10th. The injunction prohibited unlawful picketing, parading and other forms of demonstrating.

SCLC officials who face sentence, in addition to Dr. King, are Ralph Abernathy, F. L. Shuttlesworth, Wyatt T. Walker, Andrew Young, James Bevel, T. L. Fisher, J. W. Hayes, A. D. King, John T. Porter and Nelson H. Smith, Jr.

The brief filed by Legal Defense Fund attorneys argues, among other things, that the "injunction [of April 10th] is void as a denial of due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Fund attorneys are representing all of the more than 2,000 Negro citizens who have been convicted in Birmingham for demonstrations during the last month. The attorneys are Arthur D. Shores and Orzell Billingsley, Jr. of Birmingham, and Norman C. Amaker, Leroy Clark, Jack Greenberg and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York City.

###

strated that "it can happen here," and that not only are the Communists pushing, striving, and trying to take over, but, perhaps in a somewhat less redical way, perhaps not so well organized, although I think they are pretty well organized; perhaps not financed by the Government, but certainly financed by a number of misguided individuals who can provide that kind of financing—we are also faced with the dangers of an ignorant or perhaps a calculated, radical right.

I think it has been most helpful to the ntry to have this pointed out. It is icularly timely at this moment, when e facing such grave dangers of vio- r other acts of desperation which aracterize our terrible mistakes— n we are paying now—in the field racial relationships. At such n the name of law and order, asy to characterize as "Com- nything which one does not like one fears. In such circum- is so easy to take extreme our society we face threats radical left and the radical ll the facts are known, it rent that we face these arily because of the stub- plicity, the cupidity, and alings which emanate from munist society itself; and when ilar presentation of the subversive aracter of the radical left is not made by such extremists, it is all too easy for them to emphasize their views as members of the radical right.

So, Mr. President, I think the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL] has rendered a marked service by both the timing and the content of his speeches, and also by giving us the benefit of the editorial comments—both the overwhelmingly great number of commendatory and approving editorials, and also the very small number of disapproving editorials—which his remarks have generated in the press of the country.

Inasmuch as a Member of this body almost necessarily has to be a specialist, almost as a matter of natural selection, I hope very much that the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL] will be encouraged by the satisfaction to his own conscience and by the public interest displayed, as well as by the approval of his colleagues. I highly approve of his action. I hope he will continue his efforts in this field and will remain a permanent sentinel to warn and to point out the abyss which lies at our very feet while e maintain our struggle against communism, which is so active in many parts the world.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I wish to speak in support of the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] in commending the action of the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL] for bringing to our attention and to the attention of the country this serious problem.

A little more than a year ago it was my privilege to visit California, together with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCCARTHY], who, with me, spoke at a meeting of persons who were deeply concerned about the radical right in that part of the country. Those who sponsored the meeting said they had the highest regard for the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL] and for his understanding of the issues involved.

I mention this matter because I think it important to have the country understand, in fairness to the State of California, that it was before his recent reelection, not after it, that his position on this issue became so well known, and that it is not true that it is politically dangerous in California to be as outspoken a supporter of decency as is the Senator from California—although I am sure he did not take this position in any sense because of political motivation. However, it is obvious that it is an advantage politically to be on the right side of issues of this sort in California, as it is elsewhere in the country; and I am very glad that the Senator from California has taken the floor of the Senate to speak on these occasions.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL]. Coming from New England, where we have a smaller quantity of hatemongerers than seem to be prevalent in other parts of the country, I realized my blessings as I listened to the thoughts of my colleague. I believe that if there is one way of truly protecting our country from weaknesses from within, it is by ventilating and exposing the diatribes of the hatemongers and letting the people of the country as a whole be aware of what they are doing, so that those who hear an individual hatemonger will not thing that he alone is being honored by his attentions.

NAACP SUIT TO ENFORCE CONSTITUTIONAL REDUCTION OF REPRESENTATION OF STATES WHICH DENY THE RIGHT TO VOTE

Interpoint Org. NAACP

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the Federal Government has fallen far behind in the march toward progress on civil rights.

As a result of the failure to enact meaningful civil rights legislation, we have forced the victims of discrimination to resort more and more to self-help. Those who have insisted upon watering down or obstructing every attempt to provide the Federal Government with the authority it needs to deal effectively with deprivations of constitutional rights cannot complain now that more drastic action is necessary.

A vacuum has been created by the inability or refusal of Congress and the executive branch to respond to the urgent demands of the situation. Ignoring the injustices and inequities which have existed for so many years has only served to aggravate them and develop a greater insistence upon action now.

It was almost 7 years ago when I was a Member of the other body—at that time the ranking minority member of the House Committee on the Judiciary—that a determined effort was made by the chairman and myself and others, to give the Department of Justice authority to initiate suits for preventive relief in all cases involving denials of constitutional rights. We succeeded in maintaining this provision in the 1957 Civil Rights Act which passed the House, only to witness its elimination in the Senate. Those who thought they won a great victory by their successful insistence that this provision be stricken as the price for any action on civil rights bear a heavy responsibility for the crisis in civil rights which has since become evident.

It should be apparent to everyone now that the longer these problems are allowed to exist without solution, the longer resentment against second-class citizenship is allowed to fester without remedy, the longer denials of constitutional rights are condoned without action, the more likely it is that impatience will turn to outrage and demonstration to riots. We must come to our senses before it is too late. I am not suggesting that we act out of fear, but I am pleading that we act out of a new awareness of our obligations to the Constitution, the heritage of freedom we so proudly proclaim, and the understanding of the mood and determination of fellow Americans who have struggled for so many years against intolerance and oppression.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People today has initiated a legal action to enforce the provisions of the 14th amendment requiring the reduction of representation of States which deny or abridge the right to vote. I have always been more concerned with removing impediments to the free exercise of the franchise than with reducing the number of Representatives from particular States. But it must be conceded that the Constitution is clear on this point. It says that the basis of representations shall be reduced in States which do not permit qualified citizens to vote. The fact that this provision has not been enforced has not eliminated it from the Constitution, and it continues to have the same force today which it had almost a hundred years ago when it was written into the fundamental law.

We can expect the action of the NAACP to be greeted by the same outbursts which have been vented against other attempts to enforce the provisions of the Constitution. The same cries of states' rights which were raised against the school desegregation decision and the State reapportionment cases will be heard. Well, there are such things as states' wrongs as well as states rights. How about State responsibilities? After a hundred years, is it not time that the 14th Amendment was enforced either by compliance with its standards or by implementation of its sanctions?

The action of the NAACP would be unnecessary if Congress had taken steps before now to make certain that citizens of the United States were not denied the right to vote. If the Supreme Court now holds that the 14th Amendment has been violated by the unfair apportionment of representatives, can it be fairly said that it is usurping legislative powers? In my judgment the answer is no, because Congress has forfeited the opportunity to act and the Constitution cannot be ignored indefinitely. Let those who would condemn the courts consider the conditions which they have created. In truth, they have forced resort to the courts for the vindication of Constitutional rights by their own successful exploitation of the many devices for blocking legislative action in the Congress. If the anti-civil rights claims of victory in the past now have a hollow ring, they have no one to blame but themselves.

The suit initiated by the NAACP is of historic significance and is destined to rank with the school desegregation suit and the State reapportionment cases in importance. I commend this organization for pressing its efforts to enforce the Constitution and to give authority to its eloquent commands.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the suit which is being started today by the Legal Defense Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to enforce the 14th amendment provision which requires reduction in the congressional representation of any State which denies the right to vote arbitrarily in violation of the Constitution.

The suit signalizes the relative roles of the judiciary and the Congress in the struggle for equality, which is so rapidly coming to a head at this time. In 1945, in Saunders v. Wilkins, 152 F. 2d 235, a suit brought in Federal court in Virginia to enforce this section of the Constitution because of the disenfranchisement of 60 percent of the voters because of the poll tax, the court stated:

> It is well known that the elective franchise has been limited or denied to citizens in various States of the Union in past years, but no serious attempt has been made by Congress to enforce the mandate of the second section of the 14th amendment, and it is noteworthy that there are no instances in which the courts have attempted to revise the apportionment of Representatives by Congress.

The court dismissed the suit as raising a "political question" which the court could not adjudicate.

Since Congress has continually defaulted on such "political questions" the Supreme Court has been increasingly pressed to resolve them. The Court has accepted the responsibility. In 1961, in the case of Gomillion against Lightfoot, the Court rejected the "political question" rationale which had been used by the district court in Virginia and held the virtually total exclusion of Negro voters from the city limits of Tuskegee, Ala., was a violation of the 15th amendment guarantee against discrimination on grounds of race, creed, or color.

This decision was followed by the Tennessee apportionment case, Baker against Carr, which completely put to rest the "political question" doctrine in regard to apportionment.

Because of this display of understanding of the legal doctrine involved by the Supreme Court, the legislatures of the Nation are now stirring with long overdue action toward reapportionment to reflect the enormous changes in population which have occurred in this century, only a fraction of which had been reflected by the legislatures themselves.

The case now filed by the NAACP legal defense fund is of the same order. Congress has failed to take account of even the unanimous findings of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission in its 1961 report on voting that "substantial numbers of Negro citizens are, or recently have been, denied the right to vote on grounds of race or color in about 100 counties in 8 Southern States" through literacy tests and other qualification tests, arbitrary and discriminatory registration procedures, threats and intimidation, or the fear of retaliation.

The response of the Congress has been rejection of even the mild sixth-grade literacy test bill and passage of only the antipoll tax constitutional amendment, which is still wending its way through State legislatures and which, I believe all agree, is hardly a major step toward eliminating flagrant denials of the right to vote, though I welcome it.

Section 2 of the 14th amendment to the Constitution provides a clear remedy for denial of the right to vote: Reduction of the representation of the State in the House of Representatives. The NAACP legal defense fund suit lays the groundwork for such reduction by ordering the Secretary of Commerce and the Director of the Bureau of the Census to compile the figures as to the denial of the right to vote at the next census and to submit the proper apportionment of Representatives to Congress in accordance with the 14th amendment provision.

Again the issue is clearly posed: Will Congress fulfill its responsibility, or will the courts be required to take the lead?

The NAACP action to which I have referred is now pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, with a long list of plaintiffs, and is directed against the Secretary of Commerce and the Director of the Bureau of the Census.

This is a real first, and will be looked at with the greatest of interest by all of us. As one who has fought in the Senate for 7 years for the so-called part III of the Civil Rights Act, granting power to the Attorney General to sue in representative civil rights cases, I welcome very much this initiative of the NAACP. I point out that it represents a direction which, had it been taken sooner, might have prevented the dread national crisis now confronting us, and to which, many of us are determined, there must be brought national attention and national legislation. However, this initiative is most useful and most worthwhile, and I am delighted that the NAACP is taking the initiative, knowing that it will be pushed with vigor and effectiveness, as, indeed, it is the same type of approach which brought about the landmark decision in the Brown against Board of Education School desegregation case in 1954.

THE WHEAT REFERENDUM, THE FARMER, AND THE FARM BUREAU

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, a week ago today the U.S. wheat farmers decided they did not want a certificate plan for the 1964 wheat crop. They rejected a carefully designed program which sought to reduce the burden of surplus stocks and the cost of the farm program while at the same time protecting the income of farmers. Secretary of Agriculture Freeman, one of the most dedicated and able men in public life today, worked long and hard with his department advisers and the Congress to develop a program that would balance the interest of farmers, taxpayers and consumers.

A major share of credit for the rejection of this plan is being given to the leadership of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which, as we know, led the campaign for a "No" vote in th referendum.

Farm Bureau officials have not b reluctant in accepting this credit, they should not be. They condu vigorous campaign, largely alo negative lines in which they have increasingly skilled.

There was, however, one positiv to the Farm Bureau's effort t a "no" vote. Wheat growers time and time again, by the tion's spokesmen, from Pres man on down to clerks in c Bureau offices, that if t plan were voted down would replace it with a n and more constructive prog

This pledge, this promis day after day, night after the fact that the referendu spelled out the alternate program event wheat growers rejected the cert cate plan.

All through the Farm Bureau's written and spoken pleas for "no" votes, the words "new" and "better" and "constructive" appear in descriptions of the promised legislation.

On May 7, just 2 weeks before the referendum of last Tuesday, President Shuman of the Farm Bureau Federation testified on the new feed grain bill before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and devoted a great deal of time to criticism of the proposed Certificate Plan for wheat.

At that time, as a member of the committee, I specifically asked Mr. Shuman—a man for whom I bear no personal malice and, in fact, one with whom I enjo cordial personal relations—if he believe new legislation would be passed to give our wheat farmers a better income at less cost to the taxpayers should th referendum fail. He answered with definite, unqualified "Yes."

Now, this consistent reference of the Farm Bureau to new legislation placed upon the organization responsibility t submit to the Congress a proposal for new wheat bill.

Within a few days after the refere dum, the American Farm Bureau r sponded to this challenge.

But the response is a pathetic delusion.

It does not uphold the promise contained in the word "new" that was used so liberally in the antireferendum propaganda. It is, in fact, a slightly warmed over version of the extravagant Farm Bureau land retirement bill that has been floating around the Halls of Congress for years without being taken seriously by the Congress.

It does not uphold the promise contained in the words "better" or "constructive." It, in fact, cuts total farm

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

SECOND NEGRO ADMITTED TO

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI

May 29, 1963

New York — N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense Fund attorneys won admission to the University of Mississippi for a second Negro student this week.

Cleve McDowell, 21, won the right to enter the university's law school for the summer semester beginning June 5th when District Court Judge Sidney Mize issued on May 28th a Temporary Restraining Order against the Board of Trustees of state universities and the Registrar and Chancellor of the university.

Attorneys Constance Baker Motley and Derrick Bell filed suit before Judge Mize yesterday. The judge issued the restraining order in open court. He set a hearing on a Preliminary Injunction in the case for June 3rd.

Mr. McDowell had applied to law school last fall and was reportedly accepted by law school officials without the formal filing of case. His scholastic record at Jackson State College, from which he graduated this week, is excellent. The suit became necessary when the Board of Trustees voted to reject McDowell's application because of campus "unrest." Judge Mize said in issuing his order "in every respect, he has been shown to be qualified."

Mr. McDowell is a close friend of James Meredith, who hopes to complete his work at the university this summer. Mrs. Motley on May 28th also asked Judge Mize for an order requiring the university to grant Mr. Meredith married-student quarters for the summer term so that this wife and son can join him. Judge Mize set June 3rd as the date for a hearing on this motion.

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

CONFERENCE ON PROTEST DEMONSTRATIONS
CALLED BY LEGAL DEFENSE FUND

May 31, 1963

WASHINGTON -- This weekend for the first time in a single meeting the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and its 80 cooperating southern attorneys will meet with representatives of all the principal direct action organizations to outline the legal contours of the protest against segregation in months to come.

The meeting was called by Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the Legal Defense Fund. It will be held June 1st and 2nd at the Howard University School of Law. Special emphasis will be given the Supreme Court's sit-in decisions, and what protest demonstrations can do within their limits.

Mr. Greenberg stated, "We will try to project the extent to which demonstrations will develop in months and years to come and to advise protest demonstrators what actions they may take which ultimately will be upheld by the courts.

"The decisions on what to do and how to do it, however, will be entirely those of the organizations and their members. Our role will be instructional only.

"Our lawyers will prepare and frame a course of action in the courts to enjoin the type of laws and practices which the courts just have held unconstitutional. We also are preparing a handbook of constitutional law setting forth the rights of the demonstrators.

"We reiterate the pledge made by Thurgood Marshall when he was Director-Counsel, to defend every nonviolent demonstrator who requests our aid. The cases we handle now number more than 6,000 but we will continue to handle all such cases as long as our resources hold out and the public supports us."

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

COURT RULES TO SPEED-UP DESEGREGATION IN SCHOOLS STATEMENT BY DIRECTOR-COUNSEL JACK GREENBERG

June 3, 1963

NEW YORK -- The United States Supreme Court unanimously reversed this morning two school desegregation plans from Knoxville and Davidson County, Tennessee.

The cases were brought on appeal from the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and argued before the Supreme Court March 19th by Director-Counsel Jack Greenberg.

The Court held unconstitutional the 'racial option' transfer system as applied by the two school boards. Under this plan, children assigned to schools which previously served the other race are permitted to transfer to schools where their race is in the majority; they may also transfer if they are assigned to any school or grade where their race is in the minority.

Mr. Greenberg contended before the court that the plan operated to perpetuate segregation rather than further desegregation.

He said of today's decision: "This decision closes another loophole for those who have been trying to avoid the ruling of May 17, 1954.

"Along with the Memphis Park case of last week which held that delays in desegregation will not be tolerated, today's case represents a substantial advance.

"We now have pending more than 60 school cases, and in all of them we will be filing papers based on these two decisions to speed up the desegregation process."

Intergroup Org. N.AACP

DISUNITY & UNITY IN N

By Ralph McGill
Publisher of the Atlanta Constitution

ATLANTA

In "John Brown's Body," the compassionate and moving epic of the Civil War, Stephen Vincent Benet said of the man who had led the foredoomed raid on Harper's Ferry, and who was hanged by the State of Virginia: "Sometimes an image that has stood so long it seems implanted as the polar star is moved against an unfathomed force that suddenly will not have it any more. That force exists and moves. And when it moves it will employ a hard and actual stone to batter into bits an actual wall and change the actual scheme of things."

Bull Connor and Birmingham, Alabama, were such a stone. And it was true of them as it was of John Brown more than a century before that the sparks struck off by this stone "fell like live coals on every state in the Union." Precisely why Birmingham became this stone of fate and decision may not be dissected out of the whole. But that it did may not be denied. Almost a decade had passed since the U. S. Supreme Court ruled against segregated education. The turmoil of Little Rock was in 1957. The screaming, cursing mothers of New Orleans, the mobbing of freedom riders in Anniston, Birmingham, Montgomery, and Oxford, where two men had been murdered by snipers in the mob seeking to prevent James Meredith from registering at the University of Mississippi—all these, and more, had come and gone without a nation-wide commitment at the grass roots level. Birmingham was the catalyst.

BULL: DOGS, HOSES

When the historians of the future research the story they likely will make Birmingham's Commissioner of Police the symbol of grass roots fire. His show was not snipers firing in the dark. He gave a day-time performance of police dogs attacking persons, of children being hustled into patrol wagons, of a policeman with his foot on a Negro's neck, of fire hoses sweeping elderly men and women off their feet along with the young. Whether it was this or whether Birmingham was simply the final straw breaking the back of the segregation camel will never be known. But Birmingham and its Bull Connor were the hard and actual stone that began to batter into bits an actual wall and change the scheme of things.

It all seemed to happen so quickly (though actually it did not), that no over-all plan of strategy or tactics existed. The Congress of Racial Equality, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee; the Urban League, the NAACP, and individuals led by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King jr. spoke and acted. There was unity. Yet, the more mature knew that even though civil rights were won after a long hard fight, this, too, would be but a step. There would still be need for implementation. There were others who knew that because of the isolation of the Negro from American life, a cultural and educational lag existed which would make it difficult for many Negroes—especially those in the

A WA
as e
the dirt
the land.
its fury,
and rece
Some nee
Some nee
All need impact o whole p
McGill, c winning

rural South and those who had gone from it, untaught and unskilled, to the industrial cities of the East and West—to take advantage of the rights attained.

There were knowledgeable persons who were aware that for many Negroes in the North jobs were of more immediate emotional appeal than civil rights. A poor, unemployed Negro can see that discrimination lies more heavily on him than on a skilled wage earner of the middle class or a professional man of major income. In fact, the poorer Negro can look about him and see a certain economic kinship, at least, with the long-jobless white man, who, also, more often than not, is a product of the segregated educational system that has cheated both.

NAACP: ZEAL, CLAIMS

So, while the organizations and those who spoke for them all were commonly agreed, they all suffered from a lack of communication, co-ordination and planning. The oldest organization, and the one on which all were the most dependent—the NAACP—had, and has, the most difficult role. It must defend them all. And it often finds itself with clients who have no basis for defense. The direct action groups were, in the main, enormously productive. They operated generally in fields where there was little or no "law." In their competitive zeal, direct action groups also indulged occasionally in what might be described as "claim jumping" and found themselves competing with one another in the field of action and in appeals for money. Frequently, the NAACP found itself with clients who had organized and acted with such carelessness as to make it expensive, if not impossible, to defend them. Yet, the NAACP could not fail to take all clients. This was its job. Sometimes these action groups complained that the NAACP, the legal arm, was not active enough in propaganda, or that it did

Reprinted by the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE AD
from the New York HERALD TRIBUN

w York Herald Tribune Sunday, June 23, 1963

N NEGRO EQUALITY FIGHT

A WAY OF LIFE is changing in the South as events move like a whirlwind, raising the dirt of racial conflict in every corner of the land. Trying to ride the whirlwind, control its fury, are the Negro organizations of old and recent vintage. But their views differ. Some need demonstrations to get direct action. Some need planning to achieve a stable future. All need money. Their conflicts, their startling impact on the old way of doing things—the whole picture—is here presented by Ralph McGill, a distinguished Southerner, a prize-winning journalist, a perceptive human being.

ntaught and nd West—to re aware that re immediate unemployed eavily on him ass or a pro-poorer Negro ic kinship, at o, more often tional system

ho spoke for fered from a anning. The were the most most difficult ds itself with direct action uctive. They little or no n groups also bed as "claim n one another
y. Frequently, ad organized it expensive,
NAACP could
b. Sometimes CP, the legal or that it did not seem to know all the myriad inequities tucked away in the crannies of ghettos or isolated rural towns. Some of the students, meeting with frustration, also complained the NAACP was not aggressive enough, and that it was not always standing at the jail door with bail. But always it was the great rock in the weary land.

The NAACP, however, could not complain—even had it wished so to do. Its task was many times multiplied. Its expenses grew like Jack the Giant Killer's bean stalk. The direct action groups were on stage and in a world spotlight. They were on the streets, in the picket lines, in boycotts, and in demonstrations. This cost money. Their appeals for funds were answered.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, illustrated the problem familiar to all, in a speech at Alexandria, Va., on June 16. He explained to his audience that while the direct action groups, such as CORE, were in the publicity spotlight, everyone should keep in mind that it was the NAACP that had not merely to pay the final bill, but to steer the myriad cases growing out of demonstrations in many Southern cities through the lower courts to the higher ones—and on to decision.

Mr. Wilkins said, with truth, that the NAACP is the only organization that can handle a long, sustained fight. As an example, there are the several cases involving trespass which the U. S. Supreme Court has accepted and scheduled for argument in the fall term. These are extremely important. And the cost of getting these cases to the court is substantial—and cannot be paid in full until they are argued next autumn.

CORE and other direct action groups, whose value and purpose may not be minimized, none the less have been single-purpose groups. They have as an objective the end of segregation. But the NAACP must be multi-minded. If the others have no blueprint beyond that end, the NAACP must. If there is no legal and social planning for what comes after Jim Crow, then there will be no real victory. There must be a legislative push behind employment laws; adequate, low rental housing, and job opportunity—to name but three areas with which the future must contend.

An end to housing discrimination would not create housing. There is, in most cities, including New York, an oversupply of medium and high rental housing. But there is, in most urban areas, a decline in housing within the means of the low income groups. Automation steadily is decreasing the number of jobs in industrial areas, where most of the present-day Negro skills exist. There will be need for the NAACP for years after the immediate objectives have been attained.

Meanwhile, those persons committed to defiance, and who somehow see the Negro's campaign for civil rights as something inspired by the Kennedys or a few overly ambitious Negroes seeking financial contributions, are being stimulated to renewed efforts by the promised filibuster of the die-hard Southern Senators. But, in the main, there is a growing realization that the issue has been settled. That is why there is an increasing belligerency, anger, and occasional hysteria in the voices and letters of the die-hards, which are most revealing. The vice-president of a bank sends a long, dictated letter on stiff, crackling bond which wanders in irrelevancy and recriminations to a final conclusion that what the Negro wants most he will never attain—respect of the white race. One thinks of the banker in his paneled, air-conditioned office, with perhaps an autographed picture from Governor Wallace on his desk, and turns to a scrawled, penciled message on tablet paper insisting that intermarriage and destruction of the white race is the one objective. In between are those who conjure up the decline and fall of the Roman Empire and predict a like end for a desegregated U. S. A., but one reads between all the lines an awareness that a citizen cannot longer be deprived of justice and a full participation in all public aspects of citizenship and of opportunity in his country's economic future merely because he has a dark skin.

U. S.: FEAR, DEFIANCE

There are an estimated 185 million Americans, and one of the features of the present desperate plight of the Negro that will interest the historian of the future is the fact that many of the 167 million of them were so fearful and defiant about doing the moral, just, and right thing in behalf of a mere 18 million. That such an action should be difficult is a testimonial to the enduring qualities of myth, prejudice and custom. But, assuredly, generations of the future will shake their heads in wonder that 167 million had so much trouble with what, after all, was a simple decision.

448

FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE
ALD TRIBUNE Sunday, June 23, 1963

VJ, PA, ML, JT on Telegram org. NAACP 6/25/63

Medgar Evers Offered His Life, His Fortune, His Sacred Honor

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DONALD M. FRASER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 1963

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, the funeral of Medgar Evers at Arlington National Cemetery was a solemn tribute to an American hero in mankind's struggle for freedom. Charles W. Bailey, correspondent for the Minneapolis Tribune, captured the mood and significance of the event in his report in the Tribune for June 20:

AT BURIAL IN ARLINGTON—"HE WAS CUT DOWN LIKE A FLOWER," EULOGIZER SAYS

ARLINGTON, VA.—The humid haze of early summer lay hot and heavy on Washington, D.C., but here across the river, under the oak trees, the air was fresh and cool.

The little girl sat on a folding chair, her mother on one side and her older brother on the other. The child's face was blank and bemused, almost dazed. Around her stood a thousand others. Closer in, a score of men with cameras crept and scuttled and snapped their shutters at her.

In the center of the crowd, just in front of the girl and her brother and her mother, stood six soldiers. They held an American flag stiffly over the casket in which the little girl's father was to be buried.

All around stood the small white headstones. Closest to the new grave, they marked men from New Mexico, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Minnesota, North Carolina.

"In the midst of life," the preacher said, "we are in death * * * he cometh up and is cut down like a flower." A big airliner, just airborne from the nearby field, drowned out the rest of the prayer, and the little girl twisted her feet and looked up, trying to see the plane.

Something touched the girl's hand and she looked down. It was her mother's hand, seeking hers and enfolding it.

The words went on, but the little girl seemed not to be listening. She sat still in her wide-skirted white dress, its color seeming brighter in contrast to the black clothes of all around her.

A man's voice snapped out a muted command, higher up on the hill, and there was the rattle of rifle bolts, a warning in the quiet. But neither the child nor her mother seemed to have heard this, for the crash of the three volleys shattered their composure.

Then, from above, came the long sad sweet notes of taps, just 24 notes in all. The bugler stood over the crest of the hill, out of sight of graveside, and it was probably just as well. Surely no man could play those notes every day, as this one must, if he had also to look at those who have to listen.

The little girl wept for the first time now, as did her mother. The boy gave his sister a clean handkerchief. She twisted it in her hands as other men spoke at the graveside.

There were two men from the American Veterans Committee, which had long known the girl's father as a worker and a companion, and which only a fortnight ago had elected him to its national board. Their words seem not to touch the girl or her family, despite the sorrow in them and in the speakers.

Then another man, the director of the organization for which her father worked, began to speak, and the little girl began to listen.

This man did not pray or read from scriptures, as others had earlier. Instead, he spoke the words of the Declaration of Independence:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

He said that the man being buried "believed in those principles" and that when the time came, he had put on his uniform and gone "far from Decatur, Miss. * * * to help a strange people who, like those he left behind, were threatened by racism."

He told how the little girl's father came home to Mississippi—to "the land he refused to disown"—and how he turned down opportunities to move elsewhere.

The speaker referred again to the Declaration of Independence, this time to its closing sentence. "Every time he left his family," he said, "he too was offering his life, his fortune, his sacred honor. That offering was finally accepted. He believed in his country. It now remains to be seen whether his country believes in him."

When the speaker finished, another man stepped forward and led the crowd in a hymn—the only one sung. It was a song the little girl's father had often led at home:

"We shall all be free;
We shall all be free;
We shall all be free;
Oh, deep in my heart
I do believe
We shall all be free—someday."

Now the little girl wept again, and then, looking at her mother and seeing her weeping too, sobbed aloud and clung to her uncle's arm. He lifted her into his lap.

The six soldiers at the grave, moving for the first time in a half hour, silently and in intricate pattern folded the flag. Silently they passed it to a chaplain; silently he took it to the widow. She hugged it to her, seeing nothing as the chaplain saluted her and turned away.

Then the little girl and her brother and her mother were taken away, leaving their father and husband under the oak trees with the others who, like him, earned in war their right to lie there.

In a few weeks, he too will have a little headstone, with an inscription like all the thousands of others on the hills and in the hollows under the trees. His will say: Medgar Evers, Mississippi.

Full Justice to the Negro

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DONALD M. FRASER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 1963

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Minneapolis Star expressed the overwhelming sentiment of the people of Minnesota in favor of President Kennedy's civil rights program.

Yesterday my colleagues from Minnesota, Congressmen ALEC OLSON, JOHN BLATNIK, and JOE KARTH, and I backed up the President by each introducing the Civil Rights Act of 1963.

Let us hope that the debate on these proposals will be dignified and orderly as suggested by the Star editorial. Let us proceed with the crucial business of guaranteeing full justice to the Negro.

The editorial follows:

J.F.K. ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The civil rights program which Mr. Kennedy submitted to Congress Wednesday is a far-reaching one. It contains many elements of controversy. Ideally it should be considered in an atmosphere purged of emotion; the debate should be dignified and orderly, the background one of national restraint, if not of calm.

There are two possibilities which weigh most heavily against this ideal situation. The first is the threatened filibuster by southern Senators. This could tie the Senate into knots for weeks. Old wounds would be opened, new ones created, passions inflamed, relationships embittered.

The second disturbing possibility lies in the threats of some Negroes to carry their street demonstrations into the Halls of Congress. This would not help their cause; it would, in our opinion, seriously harm it. The resentment of Congress against coercive action of this sort would be wholly justifiable. The President's warning against "unruly tactics or pressures" is quite in order.

The civil rights program extends to many areas. These include voting, education, employment, equal access to hotels, restaurants, theaters, etc., and vocational training. The equal access proposals may provoke some of the angriest debate.

We believe that most Americans favor the objectives of this program. We think that they sense, with the President, "the growing moral crisis" in race relations and that they share his hope that Congress, setting aside political and sectional ties, will proceed with the crucial business of guaranteeing full justice to the Negro.

Is Congress Becoming Nonessential?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BRUCE ALGER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 1963

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, the great strength of the system of government adopted by our Founding Fathers was in the constitutional powers of three distinct branches of Government, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial.

There is a grave danger that Congress may become so ineffective through the delegation of its constitutional responsibilities that the people may, indeed, determine it is not an essential part of our Government. If this day comes to pass, we, the Members of Congress, must bear the responsibility because we will have failed to stop the erosion of the powers and the responsibilities invested in the legislative by the Constitution. In the past 3 years Congress has, on repeated occasions, abrogated its authority and given unconstitutional powers to the President in such fields as spending, tariffs, and in areas going to the very heart of legislative responsibility. The Congress has wrung its collective hands, but has taken no action to halt the raid on legislation powers by the Supreme

6/29/63

Resolved, That the President is urged to invite the United Kingdom, France, and any other interested nations to join with the United States in a collective defense agreement with Israel, and any other Middle East state which is willing to join and carry out its obligations under such an agreement, and to provide such military and other assistance and cooperation as may be necessary to protect the territorial integrity and political independence of any nation in the Middle East which is a party to the agreement against armed attack by any other nation.

In Europe and in Asia we have joined with other free nations to mutually guarantee the defense of our common interests. These agreements have served to prevent aggression. And when aggression did occur in one or two instances, the United States has immediately come to the aid of her ally. Such an agreement with Israel would serve notice that we will not countenance any attack upon her and that, in addition, we are mindful of our responsibilities for the maintenance of world peace.

But Nasser's ambition does not end with the liquidation of Israel. He has ambitions which encompass all the Middle East. At the moment, Syria, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia, are being subjected to subversion, threats and invective. In Yemen, Egyptian troops are engaged in wholesale massacre. Eyewitness reports charge that Egyptian bombers have been using poison gas against helpless villagers. Despite the fact that Nasser agreed some months ago to withdraw all his troops from Yemen, Egyptians are still actively engaged there.

Nasser obtains the armaments for his campaign in Yemen and for his buildup against Israel from the Soviet Union. But it is our foreign aid which allows him to purchase quantities of sophisticated Soviet weapons. Our aid may be for economic development—it may consist in great part of surplus foods—but the fact is that our aid does ease the economic burden at home so that Egypt can afford to buy the armaments for aggressive adventure abroad.

The immediate need in the Near East is stability and an agreement which will guarantee the peace.

But the real key to peace in the Near East does not lie with security agreements or with limiting the acquisition of arms. To achieve a lasting peace and to spread development and a higher standard of living throughout the whole region, Israel, and Arab leaders must sit down and negotiate their differences.

I have introduced a resolution calling upon our delegation to the United Nations to introduce and support a resolution favoring direct negotiations between Israel and the Arab States "as an indispensable condition toward the attainment of peace and cooperation." The text of the resolution is as follows:

Whereas warlike threats in the Middle East, accompanied by increased arms shipments to the area from the Soviet Union are taking place; and

Whereas continuing Arab-Israel conflict is a threat to the peace, menacing the security of all the peoples of the Middle East and disrupting their progress and development because of the wasteful diversion of their resources for armaments; and

Whereas article II, section 3 of the United Nations Charter provides that "all members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means"; and

Whereas the United Nations should be strengthened in its efforts to uphold that provision of the United Nations Charter: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the United States delegation to the United Nations introduce and support a resolution favoring direct negotiations between Israel and the Arab States as an indispensable condition toward the attainment of peace and cooperation and the settlement of all outstanding disputes between them.

Two weeks ago, at his first press conference, the new Prime Minister of Israel, Levi Eshkol, reiterated Israel's willingness to meet with President Nasser "or any other Arab leader at any time, anywhere * * * without making any prior conditions." It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that our Government should do everything in its power to bring about such a meeting. I urge that in the next session of the U.N. General Assembly our delegation call for efforts to lead the Arab leaders to the peace table.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I wish to insert some pertinent excerpts from recent statements of the American Jewish Committee:

The United States, as leader of the free world, must assume a primary and continuing responsibility, both directly and through the United Nations, for the maintenance of peace and security in this turbulent region. * * * The United States should vigorously pursue all avenues of negotiation, particularly with the Soviet Union, to remove the Middle East from the cold war arena. * * * A peace settlement between Israel and the Arab States is essential to the creation of a stable and secure Middle East. We urge our Government steadfastly to continue its efforts toward this prime objective.

The American Jewish Committee believes that implementation of U.S. policy requires our Government to (1) clearly define what it would consider aggression; (2) intensify efforts to end the arms race in the area, meanwhile assuring that the balance of arms is not upset; (3) provide a formal guarantee, upon request, of the independence and integrity of any state in the region; (4) vigorously discourage the violent hate campaign against Israel conducted by the Arab States; and (5) reevaluate the present U.S. policy of impartiality toward peaceful nations and those nations pursuing belligerent policies inimical to the peace and stability of the Middle East.

Blue Island, Ill., Issues Captive Nations Proclamation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 29, 1963

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, during Captive Nations Week, 1963, Governors of most of our States and mayors of major cities issued proclamations directing the interest of their citizens to commemorations of Captive Nations observances.

The National Captive Nations Week Committee is especially pleased to note the participation of municipalities throughout the country. Typical of the proclamations is one issued by Hon. John M. Hart, mayor of the city of Blue Island, Ill., on the occasion of Captive Nations Week, which I am pleased to insert into the RECORD at this point:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America have by resolution requested and authorized the President of the United States to designate the week of July 14 through July 20, 1963, as Captive Nations Week; and

Whereas we Americans are proud that many refugees from the oppressed countries have found asylum in the United States; and

Whereas the citizens of the United States are linked by bonds of family and principle to many of the captive nations peoples; and

Whereas it is appropriate and proper to manifest to these people of the captive nations the support of the Government and the people of the United States for their just aspirations for freedom and national independence; and

Whereas the citizens of the city of Blue Island are fully aware of and grieve for the plight of those made captive under the heavy yoke of Russian communism: Now, therefore,

I, John M. Hart, mayor of the city of Blue Island, do hereby designate the week of July 14–20, 1963, as Captive Nations Week in the city of Blue Island, and urge the widest possible cooperation in the observance of this week.

JOHN M. HART,
Mayor.

Interlocking org. NAACP

Subversive Character of NAACP

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. E. C. GATHINGS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 29, 1963

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, February 23, 1956, I spoke under special order on the subject of the "Subversive Character of NAACP." Records from the files of the Committee on Un-American Activities, U.S. House of Representatives, of quite a number of the officers, members of the board of directors, legal, health, and other committees, as well as certain members of the executive staff of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, were incorporated at that time. Since only a few copies of this particular RECORD are available today, I have been requested to ask permission to again incorporate a good portion of this material into the RECORD, so that the same may be made available to anyone who may desire it.

A copy of "NAACP in Action—Report for 1961," the most current copy of this booklet which is available at this time, has been used as a guideline in checking over the current members of the staff of officials, board of directors, and various committees of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Out of the 77 persons listed as officials of the NAACP in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, 1956, 59 are still active and serving in an official capacity as of 1961. All of those who are not at this time associated with the NAACP as revealed by this publication have been deleted from the material which is being incorporated herewith.

Remarks made by me with respect to the original founder of the NAACP, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, together with a statement with reference to or regarding the history and development of the American Negro movement in the United States, are also included herewith. The colloquy on the floor of the House between various Members is not being made a part of the current extension of remarks.

Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include certain material contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, 1956, which came from the files of the Committee on Un-American Activities of the U.S. House of Representatives, regarding various officials of the NAACP, as of 1961, together with a brief statement made by me with respect to the history of the American Negro movement in the United States:

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Roy Wilkins, national administrator and executive secretary, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow-traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of July 15, 1949 (p. 5), in an article datelined Los Angeles, July 14, reported that 'Roy Wilkins, acting secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told a press conference * * * he voted for Benjamin J. Davis, Negro Communist, at the last election. Davis is now on trial for his Communist beliefs, along with 11 other national Communist Party leaders in New York City. Wilkins, however, refused any comment on the trial itself.' The same information appeared in the Daily People's World of July 13, 1949 (p. 1).

"Mr. Wilkins was a member of the national committee, International Judicial Association, as was shown on the leaflet entitled 'What is the IJA?' and a letterhead of the group dated May 18, 1942; he was identified as being from New York State. The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the International Judicial Association as 'a Communist front and an offshot of the International Labor Defense' (report 1311 of March 29, 1944); the Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as having 'actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line' (report dated September 17, 1950, p. 12.)

"A letterhead of the Conference on Pan American Democracy dated November 16, 1938, contains the name of Roy Wilkins in a list of sponsors of that group, cited by the Attorney General as subversive and Communist (press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948; also included on his consolidated list released April 1, 1954); the special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Conference as a Communist-front organization which defended Carlos Luiz Prestes, a Brazilian Communist leader and former member of the executive committee of the Communist International (report 1311 of March 29, 1944; also cited in report dated June 25, 1942).

"According to the Daily Worker of September 24, 1937 (p. 6), Roy Wilkins was one of the sponsors of a joint meeting of the American League Against War and Fascism and the American Friends of Chinese People.

"The American League Against War and Fascism was cited by the Attorney General as subversive and Communist (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also consolidated list of April 1, 1954); it had previously been cited by the Attorney General as a 'Communist-front organization' (in re Harry Bridges, May 28, 1942, p. 10); and as 'established in the United States in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union.' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Septembr 24, 1942, p. 7683.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the American League * * * as 'completely under the control of Communists' (reports of March 29, 1944; January 3, 1939; January 3, 1940; and June 25, 1942). American Friends of the Chinese People was also cited by the special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist-front organization (report of March 29, 1944).

"The Daily Worker of January 23, 1937 (p. 8), reported that Roy Wilkins spoke for the International Labor Defense in Brooklyn. The International Labor Defense was cited by the Attorney General as the legal arm of the Communist Party and as subversive and Communist. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7686; and press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list released April 1, 1954.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the ILD as the legal arm of the Communist Party (reports of January 3, 1939; January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944); the Committee on Un-American Activities also cited the group in a report released September 2, 1947.

"Roy Wilkins spoke at a New York State convention of the Workers Alliance, as reported in the Daily Worker of February 11, 1939 (p. 1), and February 7, 1939 (p. 5). The Workers Alliance was cited as a Communist-penetrated organization and later as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7684; and press releases on December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; included on consolidated list released April 1, 1954). The special committee cited the Workers Alliance as among the successes in the Communist-front movements (report dated January 3, 1939; also cited in reports of January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944).

"In an article by Blaine Owen which appeared in the Daily Worker of June 17, 1936 (p. 1), entitled '1936 Communist Party Convention Significant to Negroes,' he stated: 'The greatest significance undoubtedly attends the 1936 convention of the Communist Party,' Roy Wilkins, assistant national secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and editor of the Crisis, said today. 'It must be patent to anyone who has kept track of the news that the political leftwing—and especially the Communist program—has been an important factor in bringing the plight of the Negro people, along with other underprivileged groups, more sharply to the attention of those parties which have been in power. * * * Nevertheless, there is no doubt in my mind that the program and demands of the Communists have had a very wholesome effect of the Negro people themselves. They have been emboldened by the basic and basically right demands put forth.' This, it was pointed out to Wilkins, is what the Communist Party means when it bases its entire campaign on the proposal for and toward the realization of the broad People's Front. He nodded.

To understand the civil rights movement as propagated by the NAACP, I feel that a person must know something of the history and development of the American Negro movement here in the United States subsequent to the reconstruction period.

In 1895, Booker T. Washington, president of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, was selected to speak for the southern Negro at the Atlanta Exposition. Dr. Washington stated his position clearly and with great effect. I would like to quote several paragraphs from Booker T. Washington's address which I feel sum up the entire philosophy enunciated by him and his group:

"The wisest among my race understand that the agitation of questions of social equality is the extremest folly, and that progress in the enjoyment of all the privileges that will come to us must be the result of severe and constant struggle rather than of artificial forcing. No race that has anything to contribute to the markets of the world is long in any degree ostracized. It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly more important that we be prepared for the exercises of these privileges. The opportunity to earn a dollar in a factory just now is worth infinitely more than the opportunity to spend a dollar in an opera house."

Also:

"Cast it down in agricultural, mechanics, in commerce, in domestic service, and in the professions. And in this connection it is well to bear in mind that whatever other sins the South may be called to bear, when it comes to business, pure and simple, it is in the South that the Negro is given a man's chance in the commercial world, and in nothing is this exposition more eloquent than in emphasizing this chance. Our greatest danger is that in the great leap from slavery to freedom we may overlook the fact that the masses of us are to live by the productions of our hands, and fail to keep in mind that we shall prosper in proportion as we learn to dignify and glorify common labor and put brains and skills into the common occupations of life; shall prosper in proportion as we learn to draw the line between the superficial and the substantial, the ornamental gewgaws of life and the useful. No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem. It is at the bottom of life we must begin, and not at the top. Nor should we permit our grievances to overshadow our opportunities."

There was an entirely different school of thought, however, which was headed by Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, of Atlantic University. Dr. DuBois was a very bitter critic of the Washingtonian movement, which he referred to as "the Tuskegee machine." Dr. DuBois was the leader of the leftwing element of American Negro Society which, in 1905, met at Niagara Falls, N.Y., and devised plans whereby complete social equality could be attained. This group was subsequently called the Niagara movement.

The Niagara movement was not very effective, because it was hampered by lack of funds. However, in 1908, a race riot occurred in Springfield, Ill., the home of Abraham Lincoln, which aroused the interest of the dormant abolitionist movement in the North. As a result of the feeling which was aroused by the Springfield race riots, William English Walling made a strong appeal for the emancipation of the American Negro in the fields of political and social equality. This appeal later became the clarion for the formation of a new organization, called National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which joined the white liberals of the northern abolitionist traditions with the Negro liberals of the Niagara movement.

Dr. DuBois was one of the founding fathers of the present-day NAACP, which was founded in 1909. This Dr. DuBois, who broke away from the Booker T. Washington group, was the leader of the Niagara movement. His record of citations from the House Committee on Un-American Activities takes up on nine pages single spaced:

"FEBRUARY 21, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, founder NAACP, leader Niagara movement.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Worker (Sunday edition of the Communist publication, the Daily Worker) on April 27, 1947, reported that "almost 100 Negro leaders, headed by W. E. B. DuBois, Paul Robeson, and Roscoe Dunjee, last week called upon President Truman 'to repudiate decisively' steps to 'illegalize the Communist Party.' * * * As Negro Americans * * * we cannot be unmindful that this proposal to outlaw the Communist Party comes precisely when our Federal Government professes grave concern over the democratic rights of peoples in far distant parts of the world" (p. 8 of the Worker).

"Dr. DuBois sponsored a statement attacking the arrest of Communist Party leaders (Daily Worker, Aug. 23, 1948, p. 3); he sponsored a 'Statement by Negro Americans' on behalf of the Communist leaders (the Worker of Aug. 29, 1948, p. 11); he filed a brief in the Supreme Court on behalf of the 12 Communist leaders (Daily Worker, Jan. 9, 1949, p. 3); he signed statements on behalf of Communist leaders, as shown in the following sources: Daily Worker, January 17, 1949 (p. 3); February 28, 1949 (p. 9); Daily People's World, May 12, 1950 (p. 12); Daily Worker, September 19, 1950 (p. 2); and in 1952, he signed an appeal to President Truman, requesting amnesty for leaders of the Communist Party convicted under the Smith Act (Daily Worker, Dec. 10, 1952, p. 4); also an appeal on their behalf addressed to President Eisenhower (Daily People's World, Nov. 17, 1954, p. 2). Dr. DuBois was one of the sponsors of the National Non-Partisan Committee To Defend the Rights of the 12 Communist Leaders, as shown on the back of their letterhead dated September 9, 1949.

"A statement on behalf of Eugene Dennis, a Communist, contained the signature of Dr. DuBois, identified as an educator (Daily Worker of May 5, 1950, p. 2); he signed a telegram of the National Committee To Win Amnesty for Smith Act Victims, greeting Eugene Dennis on his 48th birthday (Daily Worker, August 11, 1952, p. 3); Eugene Dennis was formerly secretary general of the Communist Party.

The Daily Worker of August 2, 1949 (p. 2), disclosed that Dr. DuBois endorsed Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., well-known Communist leader; he was honorary chairman of the Committee To Defend V. J. Jerome, chairman, cultural commission of the Communist Party, United States of America (letterhead dated June 24, 1952). A leaflet of the Civil Rights Congress (dated March 20, 1947) named Dr. DuBois as having defended Gerhart Eisler, Communist. He was one of the sponsors of the Committee To Defend Alexander Tractenberg, former member of the national committee of the Communist Party (Daily People's World of April 17, 1952, p. 7; and the Daily Worker of April 18, 1952, p. 6).

"The Daily Worker of February 16, 1948 (p. 16), reported that some '80 leading New York civic leaders, trade unionists, and professionals yesterday joined Dr. William Jay Schieffelin, president emeritus of the citizens union, to demand the prompt seating of Simon W. Gerson to the city council seat made vacant by the death of Councilman Peter V. Cacchione, Brooklyn Communist. * * * The civic leaders' statement is directed to Mayor O'Dwyer and city council majority leader Joseph T. Sharkey. It is a reprint of a letter to the New York Times by Dr. Schieffelin in which he charges that the real reason for the refusal to seal German (sic. Gerson) is "the current anti-Communist hysteria."' Dr. DuBois was named as having signed the statement. (See also advertisement in New York Times of February 19, 1948, p. 13.)

"Dr. DuBois was a member of a committee formed to protest the arrest of Pablo Neruda, Communist Chilean senator and world famous poet; he signed a statement of the organization in support of Neruda. (Daily Worker of April 7, 1948, p. 13, and April 10, 1950, p. 2, respectively.) He was sponsor of a reception and testimonial for Harry Sacher, defense attorney for the Communist leaders. (Daily Worker of December 5, 1949, p. 2.)

"When Earl Browder (then general secretary, Communist Party) was in Atlanta Penitentiary serving a sentence involving his furadulent passports, the Communist Party's front which agitated for his release was known as the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder (special Committee on Un-American Activities in Report 1311 of March 29, 1944); the Attorney General of the United States had cited the Citizens' Committee as Communist (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687, and press release of Apr. 27, 1949). Dr. DuBois was a member of the Citizens' Committee * * * in 1942, as shown on their letterhead dated February 11, 1942; he sponsored a dinner of the group, according to the Daily Worker of February 5, 1942, and signed the call to the National Free Browder Congress, as shown in the Daily Worker of February 25, 1942, pages 1 and 4.

"A 1950 letterhead of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born carries the name of Dr. W. E. B. DuBois in a list of sponsors of that organization; the same information appears on an undated letterhead of the group, distributing a speech of Abner Green at the conference of December 2–3, 1950; a letterhead of the Midwest Committee for Protection of Foreign Born dated April 30, 1951, names him as a national sponsor of the organization. He signed the group's statement opposing the Hobbs bill (Daily Worker, July 25, 1950, p. 4); he signed their statement opposing denaturalization (Daily Worker of August 10, 1950, p. 5); and signed a telegram prepared and dispatched by the organization to the Attorney General of the United States, protesting holding nine noncitizens without bail under the McCarran Act. (Daily Worker of November 24, 1952, p. 3.) He was also listed in the Daily Worker of October 21, 1954 (p. 2) as one of 95 sponsors of the National Conference to Defend the Rights of Foreign Born Americans, to be held December 11, through 12 in New York City by the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born.

"The special committee cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as 'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States' (report of March 29, 1944; also cited in report of June 25, 1942); the Attorney General cited the organization as subversive and Communist (press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948; also redesignated pursuant to Executive Order 10450, see consolidated list of April 1, 1954).

"'For years, the Communists have put forth the greatest efforts to capture the entire American Labor Party throughout New York State. They succeeded in capturing the Manhattan and Brooklyn sections of the American Labor Party but outside of New York City, they have been unable to win control' (Special Committee's Report 1311 of March 29, 1944). Dr. DuBois spoke at a State conference of the American Labor Party (Daily Worker of December 12, 1950, p. 5); he spoke at a dinner, April 18, opening the presidential campaign in New York City (Daily Worker of April 14, 1952, p. 8, an advertisement; and the Daily Worker of April 21, 1952, p. 1); he spoke at an election rally in Madison Square Garden, May 13, held under the auspices of the American Labor Party (Daily Worker of May 8, 1952, p. 8, an advertisement; and May 14, 1952, p. 1); and he spoke at an election rally in Madison Square Garden, October 27 (Daily Worker of October 22, 1952, p. 8, an advertisement; and October 29, 1952, p. 2).

"The Daily Worker of March 29, 1948 (p. 7), named Dr. DuBois as a member of the executive board and of the Policy Committee, Council on African Affairs; he signed the council's petition to the United Nations as shown in the Daily Worker of June 5, 1950 (p. 4); drafted their statement against the policy of the United States in Korea (Daily Worker of July 25, 1950, p. 3) and spoke at the council's conference on April 24 at Friendship Baptist Church in New York City (Daily Worker, April 23, 1954, p. 8 and April 26, 1954, p. 6). The Attorney General cited the Council on African Affairs as subversive and Communist (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948); also redesignated—consolidated list of April 1, 1954.

"The Attorney General cited the Jefferson School of Social Science as an 'adjunct of the Communist Party' (press release of Dec. 4, 1947); also redesignated—consolidated list of Apr. 1, 1954); the Special Committee reported that 'at the beginning of the present year, the old Communist Party Workers School and the School for Democracy were merged into the Jefferson School of Social Science.' (Report 1311 of Mar. 29, 1944.) Dr. DuBois was honored at the Jefferson School, as shown in the Daily Worker on Feb. 1, 1951 (p. 2); it was announced in the Daily Worker on Jan. 2, 1952 (p. 7), that Dr. DuBois was scheduled to conduct a seminar on 'Background of Africa Liberation Struggles' at the Jefferson School; the Jan. 26, 1952, issue of the same publication (p. 7), named him as a faculty member of that school, as did the Worker, October 4, 1953 (p. 10) and the Daily Worker, Oct. 14, 1953 (p. 8)—advertisement. He signed statements on behalf of the Jefferson School as shown in the Daily Worker, Nov. 25, 1953 (p. 2) and the Daily People's World, July 6, 1954 (p. 7).

"In a report of the special committee, dated Mar. 29, 1944, the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship was cited as having been, in recent months, the Communist Party's principal front for all things Russian (report dated Mar. 29, 1944); the organization has been cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General (press releases of Dec. 4, 1947, and Sept. 21, 1948; also redesignated consolidated list of Apr. 1, 1954). Dr. Dubois signed a statement of the national council in 1947 (Daily Worker, Oct. 17, 1947, p. 4); he signed the organization's statement protesting the Iron Curtain, as reported in the Daily People's World on May 20, 1948 (p. 5); he signed a statement of the council, praising Henry Wallace's Open Letter to Stalin in May 1948 (from a pamphlet entitled 'How To End the Cold War and Build the Peace,' p. 9); he signed their statement calling for a conference with the Soviet Union (Daily Worker, June 21, 1948, p. 3); he signed their Roll Call for Peace (Daily Worker of Aug. 31, 1948, p. 5); he sent greetings through the national council on the 31st anniversary of the Russian Revolution (Daily Worker, Nov. 10, 1948, p. 11); he signed the council's appeal to the United States Government to end the cold war and arrange a conference with the Soviet Union (leaflet entitled 'End the Cold War—Get Together for Peace,' dated December 1948); he spoke at the Congress on American-Soviet Relations, Dec. 3–5, 1949, arranged by the national council and signed the council's letter to the American people, urging that a unified democratic Germany be established (Daily People's World, Aug. 13, 1952, pp. 4 and 6).

"A letterhead of the Conference on Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact, dated Aug. 21, 1949, lists the name of Dr. W. E. B. DuBois as having signed an open letter of the organization, addressed to Senators and Congressmen, urging defeat of President Truman's arms program; he answered a questionnaire of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy in favor of recognition of Chinese Communist Government, as shown in Far East Spotlight for December 1949-January 1950 (p. 23).

"The Conference for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact was cited as a meeting called by the Daily Worker in July 1949, to be held in Washington, D.C., and as having been instigated by 'Communists in the United States (who) did their part in the Moscow campaign' (Committee on Un-American Activities in Report 378 on the Communist Peace Offensive dated Apr. 1, 1951). The Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy has been cited as Communist by the Attorney General (press release of Apr. 27, 1949); also redesignated-consolidated list of Apr. 1, 1954.

"A page of signatures from the Golden Book of American Friendship with the Soviet Union, 'sponsored by American friends of the Soviet Union, and signed by hundreds of thousands of Americans' was published in the November 1937 issue of Soviet Russia Today (p. 79); the Golden Book was to be presented to President Kalinin at the 20th anniversary celebration. The page carried the title, 'I hereby inscribe my name in greeting to the people of the Soviet Union on the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the Soviet Republic,' and a facsimile of the name, W. E. B. DuBois, appeared on that page.

"The Golden Book of American Friendship was cited as a 'Communist enterprise' signed by 'hundreds of well-known Communists and fellow travels' (Special Committee on Un-American Activities in Report 1311 of March 29, 1944).

"A letterhead of the New York Committee To Win the Peace, dated June 1, 1946, contains the name of W. E. B. DuBois in a list of New York committee members. The National Committee To Win the Peace, with which the New York committee is affiliated, was cited as subversive and Communist by the United States Attorney General. (Press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also redesignated consolidated list of April 1, 1954.)

"Dr. DuBois sponsored a petition of the American Council for a Democratic Greece, as disclosed by the Daily People's World of August 23, 1948 (p. 2); he signed a statement of the same organization, condemning the Greek Government, as reported in the Daily Worker of September 2, 1948 (p. 7). The American Council for a Democratic Greece has been cited as subversive and Communist, an organization formerly known as the Greek-American Council (Attorney General of the United States in press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948); also redesignated—consolidated list of April 1, 1954.

"Dr. DuBois was a sponsor of a conference of the National Council of Arts, Sciences and Professions, October 9–10, 1948, as shown in a leaflet entitled 'To Safeguard These Rights,' published by the Bureau of Academic Freedom of the National Council; a letterhead of the National Council (received for files January 1949) named him as a member-at-large of that organization; he was named as vice chairman of the group on the leaflet, Policy and Program Adopted by the National Convention, 1950; a letterhead of the same organization's southern California chapter, dated April 24, 1950, lists him as a member-at-large of the national council; he was elected vice chairman of the group in 1950 (Daily Worker, May 1, 1950, p. 12); a letterhead of the group dated July 28, 1950, names him as vice chairman of the group; he endorsed a conference on equal rights for Negroes in the arts, sciences, and professions sponsored by the New York Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions (Daily Worker, November 9, 1951, p. 7); the call to the conference contained the same information. A letterhead of the national council, dated December 7, 1952, named him as vice chairman.

"The call to a Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace, issued by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions for New York City, March 25–27, 1949, as well as the conference program (p. 12), and the Daily Worker of February 21, 1949 (p. 9), named Dr. DuBois as one of the sponsors of that conference; he was a member of the program committee of the conference, honorary chairman of the panel at cultural and scientific conference (program, p. 7), and spoke on the Nature of Intellectual Freedom at that conference (p. 78 of the edited report of the conference entitled 'Speaking for Peace').

"The National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions was cited as a Communist-front organization by the Committee on Un-American Activities in its review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace, released April 19, 1949; in the same review, the Scientific and Cultural Conference was cited as a Communist front which 'was actually a supermobilization of the inveterate wheelhorses and supporters of the Communist Party and its auxiliary organizations.'

"The Daily People's World of October 28, 1947 (p. 4), named Dr. DuBois as one of the sponsors of a national conference of the Civil Rights Congress in Chicago, November 21–23, 1947; he sponsored their Freedom Crusade (Daily Worker, Dec. 15, 1948, p. 2); the call to a Bill of Rights Conference, called by the Civil Rights Congress, for July 16–17, 1949, in New York City, named him as one of the sponsors of that conference; the program of the National Civil Rights Legislative Conference, January 18–19, 1949, called by the Civil Rights Congress, lists him as one of the conference sponsors; he was chairman of a conference of the Congress, as reported in the Worker of January 2, 1949 (p. 5); Dr. DuBois was defended by the Civil Rights Congress (Daily Worker, Feb. 13, 1951, p. 3); he signed the organization's open letter to J. Howard McGrath, U.S. Attorney General, on behalf of the four jailed trustees of the bail fund of the Civil Rights Congress of New York (advertisement paid for by contributions of signers which appeared in the Evening Star on Oct. 30, 1951, p. A–7); he participated in the organization's sixth anniversary dinner in New York City, March 26, 1952 (Daily Worker, Mar. 28, 1952, p. 4).

"The Civil Rights Congress was formed in 1946 as a merger of two other Communist-front organizations, the International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties; it is 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it' (Rept. 1115 of the Committee on Un-American Activities, dated Sept. 2, 1947); the Attorney General cited the congress as subversive and Communist (press releases of Dec. 4, 1947 and Sept. 21, 1948); also redesignated—consolidated list of April 1, 1954.

"Dr. DuBois spoke in Washington, D.C., on May 9, 1947, under the auspices of the Washington Book Shop, as shown by a leaflet of the Book Shop, cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General; it had previously been cited by the Attorney General as follows: 'Evidence of Communist penetration or control is reflected in the following: Among its stock the establishment has offered prominently for sale books and literature identified with the Communist Party and certain of its affiliates and front organization' (press releases of Dec. 4, 1947, and Sept. 21, 1948; also redesignated—consolidated list of Apr. 1, 1954; and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7688, respectively). The special committee cited the Washington Book Shop as a Communist-front organization (report of Mar. 29, 1944).

"The Workers Book Shop catalog for 1948 (p. 5), advertised Dr. DuBois' 'The World and Africa' for sale; the 1949–50 catalog (p. 11) advertised his 'Black Folk Then and Now; the Worker for March 1, 1953 (p. 16), carried an advertisement of Dr. DuBois' books, 'The Battle for Peace' and 'Black Reconstruction' on sale at the Workers Book shop, New York City. The Workers Book Shops are a chain of Communist bookshops which are official outlets for Communist literature.

"As shown on the following sources, Dr. DuBois was a member of the advisory council of Soviet Russia Today: Letterhead of the publication dated September 8, 1947; a letterhead of September 30, 1947; and an undated letterhead received April 1948. The Daily People's World of November 6, 1952 (p. 7), reported that Dr. DuBois had written an article for the November issue of New World Review; and his article entitled 'Normal United States-China Relations' appeared in the issue of August 1954 (pp. 13–15). He was also shown by the Daily Worker of October 20, 1954 (p. 7), as one of those who attended the annual banquet held by New World Review on October 14 at which special tribute was paid to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Robeson. Soviet Russia Today has been cited as a Communist-front publication by the special committee in reports of March 29, 1944, and June 25, 1942; the Committee on Un-American Activities also cited it as a Communist-front publication in a report dated October 23, 1949. Soviet Russia Today changed its name to New World Review, effective with the March 1951 issue.

"The Daily Worker of July 6, 1951 (p. 7), reported that Dr. DuBois was author of the pamphlet, 'I Take My Stand for Peace,' published by the New Country Publishers, official Communist Party publishing house which has published the works of William Z. Foster and Eugene Dennis, Communist Party chairman and executive secretary, respectively. (Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of May 11, 1948.)

"In 1947 and 1948, Dr. DuBois was contributing editor on the staff of New Masses magazine and later, of Masses and Mainstream. (New Masses, July 22, 1947, p. 2; Masses and Mainstream, Mar. 1948, vol. 1, No. 1; and issue of August 1950, p. 1; June 1954, inside front cover.) He contributed articles to the following issues of New Masses and Masses and Mainstream-New Masses for September 10, 1946 (p. 3) and June 10, 1947 (p. 20); Masses and Mainstream for April 1951 (pp. 10–16); and February 1952 (pp. 8–14).

"In 1940, Dr. DuBois signed New Masses' letter to President Roosevelt as shown in New Masses for April 2, 1940 (p. 21); he was honored at a dinner in New York City, January 14, 1946, arranged by New Masses and at which awards were mad for greater interracial understanding (Daily Worker of Jan. 7, 1946, p. 11, cols. 1 and 2); he endorsed New Masses, as reported in the Daily Worker of April 7, 1947 (p. 11): he sponsored a plea for financial support of New Masses, as disclosed in the issue of that publication for Apr. 8, 1947 (p. 9); he received the New Masses award for his contribution in promoting democracy and interracial unity at the publication's second annual awards dinner (New Masses of Nov. 18, 1947, p. 7); the February 1953 issue of Masses and Mainstream carried a chapter from Dr. DuBois' book, 'The Soul of Black Folk,' written 50 years ago (Daily Worker, Feb. 23, 1953, p. 7); he was author of 'In Battle for Peace,' described as the story of his 83d birthday, and which was published by Masses and Mainstream (the Daily Worker of June 18, 1952, p. 7; Daily People's World of Sept. 17, 1952, p. 7; the Daily Worker of Sept. 23, 1952, p. 7; and the Worker of Dec. 21, 1952, p. 7).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited New Masses as a Communist periodical (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 24, 1942, p. 7688); the special committee cited it as a nationally circulated weekly journal of the Communist Party (report of March 29, 1944; also cited in reports of January 3, 1939 and June 25, 1942.) Beginning with the March 1948 issue, New Masses and Mainstream (Marxist quarterly) consolidated into what is now know as Masses and Mainstream, with the announcement that 'here, proudly, in purpose even if not in identical form, is a magazine that combines and carriers forward the 37-year-old tradition of New Masses and the more recent literary achievement of Mainstream. We have regrouped our energies, not to retire from the battle but to wage it with fresh resolution and confidence' (Masses and Mainstream for March 1948, p. 3).

"A letterhead of the Committee To Secure Justice in the Rosenberg case, dated March 15, 1952, carried the name of Dr. W. E. B. DuBois in a list of sponsors; he joined in a request of that committee for a new trial for Ethel and Julius Rosenberg (Daily Worker of June 2, 1952, p. 6); he participated in a rally October 23 in New York City, to demand clemency for the Rosenbergs (Daily Worker, Oct. 27, 1952, p. 8); he signed an amicus curiae brief presented to Supreme Court in Washington, D.C., urging a new trial for the Rosenbergs (Daily Worker of November 10, 1952, p. 3; and the Daily People's World of November 13, 1952, p. 8). He wrote an article entitled 'A Negro Leader's Plea To Save Rosenbergs' (The Worker of November 16, 1952, p. 3M); and the Daily Worker of January 21, 1953 (p. 7), reported that he had urged clemency for the Rosenbergs.

"The Daily Worker of April 11, 1949 (p. 5), reported that Dr. DuBois was a member of the Sponsoring Committee of the World Peace Congress in Paris; he was cochairman of the American Sponsoring Committee of the Congress, as disclosed on a leaflet entitled 'World Congress for Peace, Paris,' April 20–23, 1949, he was proposed as a candidate for the World Peace Prize, awarded by the World Peace Congress (Daily People's World of December 7, 1951, p. 4); he was a member of the Executive Committee of the World Peace Congress (Daily Worker of September 14, 1950, p. 5); he was one of the sponsors of the Second World Peace Congress in Sheffield, England (Daily Worker of October 19, 1950, p. 3); he was elected to the Presiding Committee of the World Peace Congress (Daily Worker of November 17, 1950, p. 1); he was a member of the World Peace Council of that Congress (Daily Worker of November 24, 1950, p. 9); a mimographed letter dated December 1, 1950, contains his name in a list of sponsors of the American Sponsoring Committee for Representation at the World Peace Congress.

"Dr. DuBois was a member of U.S. Sponsoring Committee of the American Intercontinental Peace Conference (Daily Worker of December 28, 1951, p. 2, and February 6, 1952, p. 2); the Peace Conference was called by the World Peace Council, formed at the conclusion of the Second World Peace Congress in Warsaw; he was awarded the International Peace Prize for "six world figures" by the World Peace Council (Daily People's World of January 29, 1953, p. 7; the Worker of February 8, 1953, p. 5; and Daily People's World, November 25, 1953, p. 4). He awarded the Stalin Peace Prize for 1953 to Howard Fast in ceremonies held in the Hotel McAlpin in April 1954. (See Daily Worker, April 26, 1954, pp. 3 and 6 and the Worker, May 9, 1954, p. 9.)

The Daily Worker of June 20, 1950 (p. 2), reported that Dr. DuBois signed the World Peace Appeal; the same information appears on an undated leaflet of the enterprise, received by this committee September 11, 1950. A mimeographed list of individuals who signed the Stockholm World Appeal To Outlaw Atomic Weapons, received for filing October 23, 1950, contains the name of Dr. DuBois. He was Chairman of the Peace Information Center where the Stockholm peace petition was made available. (Daily Worker of May 25, 1950, p. 2; and August 16, 1950, p. 5.)

"The World Peace Congress which was held in Paris, France, April 20–23, 1949, was cited as a Communist front among the 'peace' conferences which 'have been organized under Communist initiative in various countries throughout the world as part of a campaign against the North Atlantic Defense pact' (Committee on Un-American Activities in reports of April 19, 1949; July 13, 1950; and April 1, 1951). The World Peace Council was formed at the conclusion of the Second World Peace Congress in Warsaw and was 'heralded by the Moscow radio as the expression of the determination of the peoples to take into their own hands the struggle for peace.' (Committee on Un-American Activities in a report dated April 1, 1951.)

"The World Peace Appeal was cited as a petition campaign launched by the Permanent Committee of the World Peace Congress at its meeting in Stockholm, March 16–19, 1950; it 'received the enthusiastic approval of every section of the international Communist hierarchy' and was 'lauded in the Communist press, putting every individual Communist on notice that he "has the duty to rise to this appeal."' (Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of April 1, 1951.)

"The American Peace Crusade, organized in January 1951, was cited as an organization which 'the Communists established as a new instrument for their "peace" offensive in the United States' (Committee on Un-American Activities in its reports of Feb. 19, 1951, and Apr. 1, 1951); Dr. DuBois was one of the sponsors of the crusade (Daily Worker of Feb. 1, 1951, p. 2); minutes of the sponsors meeting which was held in Washington, D.C., March 15, 1951 (p. 4), named him as one of the initiators of the crusade and also as having been proposed as cochairman of that meeting; he was a sponsor of the American People's Congress and Exposition for Peace, which was held in Chicago, June 29–July 1, 1951, called by the American Peace Crusade to advance the theme of world peace (Daily Worker, Apr. 22, 1951, p. 2; May 1, 1951, p. 11; the American Peace Crusade, May 1951, pp. 1 and 4; the Daily Worker of May 9, 1951, p. 4; Daily Worker of June 11, 1951, p. 2; a leaflet of the congress; Daily Worker of July 1, 1951, p. 3; a leaflet entitled "An Invitation to American Labor To Participate in a Peace Congress"; the call to the American People's Congress; the Daily Worker of July 3, 1951, p. 2). He signed a petition of the crusade, calling on President Truman and Congress to seek a big-power pact (Daily Worker, Feb. 1, 1952, p. 1); he attended a meeting of Delegates Assembly for Peace, called by the crusade and held in Washington, D.C., April 1 (Daily Worker, Apr. 3, 1952, p. 3); he was one of the sponsors of a peace referendum jointly with the American Peace Crusade to make the end of the Korean war a major issue in the 1952 election campaign (Daily People's World of Aug. 25, 1952, p. 8).

"Dr. DuBois issued a statement on the death of Stalin which read in part as follows: 'Let all Negroes, Jews, and foreign born who have suffered in America from prejudice and intolerance remember Joseph Stalin' (Daily Worker of Mar. 9, 1953, p. 3); the Daily Worker of January 18, 1952 (p. 8), reported that he had renewed his fight for a passport in order to attend the American Intercontinental Peace Conference in Rio de Janeiro; it was reported in the Washington Evening Star on May 10, 1952 (p. B–21), that Dr. DuBois was refused admission to Canada to attend the Canadian Peace Congress because he refused to undergo an examination by the Canadian Immigration Service. On September 14, 1952, the Worker (p. M6) reported that Dr. DuBois had experienced passport difficulties when leaving the United States; and on May 4, 1953 (p. 2), the Daily Worker reported that U.S. Delegate Betty Sanders told the opening session of the Continental Cultural Congress in Santiago, Chile, that DuBois would have attended in person 'as well as in spirit,' if he had not been denied a passport."

According to Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary, "subversion" means "act of subverting, or a state of being subverted; overthrow; utter ruin; destruction. That which subverts."

The time element would prevent my reading all of these citations on the various individuals who compose the high echelon of this organization. I will, however, read excerpts from some of them and would like to ask later for permission to incorporate each of them in full in the RECORD.

"OCTOBER 13, 1955.

"Subject: Arthur B. Spingarn, national president, member of board of directors, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow-traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Arthur B. Spingarn is listed as an individual participating in the Conference on Africa, held by the Council on African Affairs in New York City, April 14, 1944, according to the Council's pamphlet, for a New Africa (p. 37).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Council on African Affairs as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The Attorney General redesignated the organization April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated.

"An undated leaflet, 'The Only Sound Policy for a Democracy' and the Daily Worker of March 18, 1945 (p. 2), listed Arthur Spingarn, president NAACP, New York, N.Y., as one who signed a statement of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties supporting the War Department's order on granting commissions * * * to members of the Armed Forces who have been members of or sympathetic to the views of the Communist Party. An advertisement in the New York Times, April 1, 1946 (p. 16), listed Arthur B. Spingarn as a signer of a statement of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties opposing use of injunctions in labor disputes.

"The Attorney General cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The group was cited previously by the Attorney General as part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the National Federation as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the National Federation * * * as among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"An undated letterhead of the Public Use of Arts Committee listed Arthur B. Spingarn as a sponsor of the organization. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 112), cited the Public Use of Arts Committee as a Communist front which was organized by the Communist-controlled Artists Union."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Grace B. Fenderson, national vice president, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The pamphlet, 'For a New Africa' (p. 37), proceedings of the Conference on Africa held under auspices of the Council on African Affairs, April 14, 1944, named Mrs. Grace B. Fenderson as a conference participant.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Council on African Affairs as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated.

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: A. Philip Randolph, national vice president, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow travel unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of September 12, 1950 (p. 2), reported that A. Philip Randolph, president, AFL Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, opposed the jailing of the Communist leaders.

"The Attorney General of the United States reported that A. Philip Randolph, president of the National Negro Congress, refused to run in April 1940 'on the ground that it was "deliberately packed with Communists and Congress of Industrial Organizations members who were either Communists or sympathizers with Communists"' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688).

"Walter S. Steele, in testimony in public hearings, Committee on Un-American Activities, July 21, 1947 (p. 92), referred to A. Philip Randolph as follows:

"'A. Philip Randolph, one-time president of the National Negro Congress, resigned his position because of the Communist control thereof. At the time of his resignation, at a meeting held in Washington, D.C., he charged that the congress was controlled by the Communist Party, through which he found it was chiefly financed.'

"George K. Hunton, testified in public hearings, Committee on Un-American Activities, July 13, 1949 (p. 451), concerning the Communist infiltration of the National Negro Congress with reference to A. Philip Randolph as follows:

"'In the National Negro Congress they did make progress. That was a sound, constructive organization started about 10 years ago. It was a good organization, with a sound, constructive program, and the Commies moved in, and within a year and a half the white Communist members completely outnumbered the Negro members and took over. Be it said to his credit that the then president, A. Philip Randolph, roundly denounced them and then resigned, and said no longer would the National Negro Congress represent the feeling of the Negro people who organized it * * *.'

"Manning Johnson testified in public hearings, Committee on Un-American Activities, July 14, 1949, as follows concerning the National Negro Congress and A. Philip Randolph:

"'Mr. TAVENNER. What was the relationship of that commission (Negro Commission of the Communist Party) to the American Negro Labor Congress, the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, and the National Negro Congress?

"'Mr. JOHNSON. The Negro League was formed by the Communist Party, and its program was identical with the program of the Communist Party for the Negro.

"'The majority of members of the American Negro Labor Congress were Communists or fellow-travelers. It was a very narrow, sectarian organization, and the party decided to change its name and broaden its activities, so the name was changed to the League of Struggle for Negro Rights. * * *

"'The League of Struggle for Negro Rights was never successful in penetrating any broad sections of the Negro people. It remained a very narrow and sectarian organization. So the party, after having received the open letter, which was really drawn in Moscow and called for breaking away from narrow organizations, in line with this open letter, at a meeting of the national committee which, as I recall, was in the latter part of 1934 or early part of 1935, we discussed the general situation among Negroes, and the conclusion was that there was considerable unrest among them and that the time was historically right for the formation of a broad and all-inclusive organization.

"'As a result of that discussion and that conclusion, the national committee of the party, upon the recommendation of one of the members of the Negro commission present at that meeting, decided to set up the National Negro Congress. The national committee gave James W. Ford the responsibility, along with the Negro commission of the national committee, to form that congress.

"'We were fishing around for someone to head the congress, and we found there was no finer person to get who was not a member of the party than A. Philip Randolph. He was approached and agreed.

* * * * *

"'The third—and fatal—National Negro Congress was held in Washington, D.C. The Communists had become so drunk with power, and they felt they had such strong control over the congress, that they thought they could walk roughshod over the liberals, and they antagonized A. Philip Randolph and he began to fight James W. Ford and others.

"'James W. Ford and others insisted I fight A. Philip Randolph, and I refused to do so, and at that time I predicted they were on the road to breaking up the congress.

"'The fight widened to such an extent that Randolph began to speak openly against Communist domination. I used to wonder how Randolph could be so naive as to not know it was a Communist-front organization.

"'Before the third congress met, we got wind that Randolph was going to resign. We had Communists go to that congress representing various paper organizations so as to give them control in voting.

"'When Randolph saw the congress was packed with Communists, Randolph resigned and walked out * * *.' (Pp. 510–512.)

"A Philip Randolph supported a statement to Congress issued by the American League Against War and Fascism against neutrality measures as reported by the Daily Worker of February 27, 1937 (p. 2). The Daily Worker of April 22, 1938 (p. 2), reported that A. Philip Randolph was one of the signers of a letter urging open hearings on the neutrality act which was sent to Congress under auspices of the American League for Peace and Democracy. A Philip Randolph was nominated as a member of the National Labor Committee of the American League for Peace and Democracy at the American Congress for Peace and Democracy held in Washington, D.C., January 6–8, 1939, as shown by the pamphlet, '7½ Million * * *' (p. 32). Letterheads of the China Aid Council of the American League for Peace and Democracy dated May 18, 1938, and June 11, 1938, name him as a sponsor of the council. He was a sponsor of the Easter drive of the China Aid Council of the American League * * *, as shown by the Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 2). A photostatic copy of a letterhead of the American League for Peace and Democracy dated April 6, 1939, listed A. Philip Randolph as a national sponsor of that organization.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the American League Against War and Fascism as subversive and Communist, in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947 and September 21, 1948. The organization was redesignated by the Attorney General April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist-front organization (in re Harry Bridges, May 28, 1942, p. 10). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated March 29, 1944 (p. 53), cited the American League Against War and Fascism as 'organized at the First U.S. Congress Against War which was held in New York City, September 29 to October 1, 1933. Four years later at Pittsburgh, November 26–28, 1937, the name of the organization was changed to the American League for Peace and Democracy. * * * It remained as completely under the control of Communists when the name was changed as it had been before.'

"The Attorney General cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Attorney General cited the group previously as established in the United States in 1937 as successor to the American League Against War and Fascism 'in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union * * * The American League for Peace and Democracy * * * was designed to conceal Communist control, in accordance with the new tactics of the Communist International' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684). The special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of January 3, 1939 (pp. 69–71), cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as 'the largest of the Communist-front movements in the United States.'

"A letter head of the organization, Commonwealth College, dated January 1, 1940, listed A. Philip Randolph as a member of the National Advisory Committee. He endorsed the reorganization plan of Commonwealth College, as shown by the August 15, 1937, issue of Fortnightly, a publication of the college (p. 3).

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited Commonwealth College as a Communist enterprise in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 76 and 167). The Attorney General cited the Commonwealth College as Communist in a letter released April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"An undated leaflet of the League for Mutual Aid listed A. Philip Randolph as a member of the executive committee of that organization. He was a guest of honor at the 17th annual dinner of the League for Mutual Aid held February 1, 1937, as shown by New Masses, January 26, 1937 (p. 37).

"The League for Mutual Aid was cited as a Communist enterprise by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 76).

"A. Philip Randolph was a sponsor of the Medical Bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy, as shown by letterheads of the organization dated July 6, 1938, and February 2, 1939. The Daily Worker of June 2, 1938 (p. 5), reported that A. Philip Randolph was a supporter of a meeting of the Medical Bureau * * *.

" 'In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for, in support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations.' Among these was the Medical Bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy. (Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report Mar. 29, 1944, p. 82.)

"New Masses for October 26, 1937 (p. 11), reported that A. Philip Randolph was chairman of the National Negro Congress. A. Philip Randolph was president of the National Negro Congress, as shown by the Daily Worker of January 1, 1938 (p. 4), January 13, 1938 (p. 3), April 19, 1938 (p. 3), and the pamphlet, Second National Negro Congress, October 1937. He was president of the Third National Negro Congress, as reported by the June 1940 issue of the Communist (p. 548). The official proceedings of the 1936 National Negro Congress (p. 41), listed A. Philip Randolph as a member of the national executive council of the organization. He spoke at a gathering of the congress, as reported by the Daily Worker of March 8, 1938 (p. 3). The Daily Worker of February 15, 1938 (p. 7), reported that A. Philip Randolph contributed to the official proceedings of the Second National Negro Congress.

"The Attorney General cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist-front group (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes * * *.'

"A. Philip Randolph was a consultant of the Panel on Citizenship and Civil Liberties of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, as shown by an official report of the organization, dated April 19–21, 1942. The call to the second conference, Southern Conference for Human Welfare, April 14–16, 1940, listed A. Philip Randolph as a sponsor of that conference.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 147), cited the Southern Conference for Human Welfare as a Communist front which received money from the Robert Marshall Foundation, one of the principal sources of funds by which many Communist fronts operate. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of June 12, 1947, cited the Southern Conference for Human Welfare as a Communist-front organization 'which seeks to attract southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South' although its 'professed interest in southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States.'

"The Daily Worker, issues of March 28, 1938 (p. 3) and April 4, 1938 (p. 3), listed A. Philip Randolph as a sponsor of the World Youth Congress. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 183), cited the World Youth Congress as a Communist conference held in the summer of 1938 at Vassar College.

"A. Philip Randolph signed a petition of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy to lift the arms embargo as shown by the Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 4). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 82), cited the American Friends of Spanish Democracy as follows: 'In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for the support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations * * * such as * * * American Friends of Spanish Democracy.'

"A. Philip Randolph is listed as a sponsor on a letterhead of the American Relief Ship for Spain dated September 3, 1938. The American Relief Ship for Spain was cited as 'one of the several Communist Party front enterprises which raised funds for Loyalist Spain (or rather raised funds for the Communist end of that civil war).' (Special Committee on Un-American Activities Report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 102.)

"The proceedings of the Congress of Youth of the American Youth Congress, July 1–5, 1939 (p. 3), listed A. Philip Randolph as a signer of the call to the congress.

"A Philip Randolph was a sponsor of the Conference on Pan-American Democracy (letterhead, Nov. 16, 1938). The booklet, These Americans Say, published by the Coordinating Committee To Lift the Embargo, named him as a representative individual. He was a sponsor of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights (program of conference, Feb. 12, 1940).

"The Conference on Pan-American Democracy (known also as Council for Pan-American Democracy) was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 161 and 164), cited the organization as a Communist front which defended Carlos Luiz Prestes, a Brazilian Communist leader and former member of the executive committee of the Communist International.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 137 and 138), cited the Coordinating Committee To Lift the (Spanish) Embargo as one of a number of front organizations set up during the Spanish civil war by the Communist Party in the United States and through which the party carried on a great deal of agitation.

"The Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights was cited as a Communist front which was succeeded by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties (special committee report, Mar. 29, 1944, pp. 96 and 129). The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general, but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"A. Philip Randolph was a sponsor of the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign, as shown by the back cover of a pamphlet, Children in Concentration Camps. He signed the call to a United May Day conference, according to the Daily Worker of March 17, 1937 (p. 4). An undated letterhead of the United May Day Committee listed him as chairman.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Spanish Refugee Campaign as a Communist-front organization (report, Jan. 3, 1940, p. 9).

"The United May Day conference was cited as 'engineered by the Communist Party for its 1937 May Day demonstrations' and also organized by the party in 1938 (special committee report, Mar. 29, 1944, pp. 124 and 139).

"The Attorney General cited the United May Day Committee as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, U.S.A., which seeks 'to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means.' (Letter released December 4, 1947; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.)

"The Daily Worker of January 23, 1937 (p. 3), announced that A. Philip Randolph was scheduled to speak at the Southern Negro Youth Congress, Richmond, Va., February 12–14. 'The People Versus H.C.L.' listed him as a sponsor of the Consumers National Federation. He was shown as a sponsor of the Public Use of Arts Committee on an undated letterhead of that organization.

"The Southern Negro Youth Congress was cited as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, U.S.A., which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means. (Attorney General, letter released December 4, 1947; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on April 1, 1954, consolidated list.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1940 (p. 9), cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of April 17, 1947 (p. 14), cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as 'surreptitiously controlled' by the Young Communist League.

"The Consumers National Federation was cited as a Communist-front group by the special committee in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155).

"Public Use of the Arts Committee was cited as a Communist front by the special committee in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 112)."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: L. Pearl Mitchell, national vice president, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of April 18, 1936 (p. 3), named L. Pearl Mitchell, identified as national director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as chairman of a committee for a benefit dance which was held by the Joint Scottsboro Defense Committee, Cleveland, Ohio, for the purpose of raising money to be sent to New York.

"The Scottsboro Defense Committee was cited as a Communist front by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in its reports of January 3, 1939 (p. 82); and March 29, 1944 (p. 177).

"Miss L. Pearl Mitchell, of Cleveland, Ohio, was one of the endorsers of the National Negro Congress, as shown by the call for National Negro Congress, Chicago, Ill., February 14, 1936.

"The National Negro Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also included in the Attorney General's consolidated list of April 1, 1954.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities stated that 'the officers of the National Negro Congress are outspoken Communist sympathizers, and a majority of those on the executive board are outright Communists' (special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, January 3, 1939, p. 81; also cited, reports, January 3, 1940, p. 9; June 25, 1942, p. 20; March 29, 1944, p. 180; and included in the Attorney General's consolidated list of April 1, 1954)."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Bishop W. J. Walls, national vice president, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"As shown in Soviet Russia Today for December 1942 (p. 42), W. J. Walls was a sponsor of the Congress of American-Soviet Friendship. He was named as a sponsor of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship on a letterhead of the group dated March 13, 1946, and a memorandum issued by the organization March 18, 1946.

"The National Council of American-Soviet Friendship was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list of April 1, 1954); the special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the National Council * * * (in a report dated March 29, 1944) as having been 'in recent months, the principal front' of the Communist Party.

"Bishop W. J. Walls, Chicago, Ill. supported the National Negro Congress, as shown in the Daily Worker of February 3, 1936 (p. 2). The National Negro Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list of April 1, 1954); the Attorney General had previously cited the National Negro Congress as 'sponsored and supported by the Communist Party' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687–7688). The special committee cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes' (report of January 3, 1939; also cited in reports of January 3, 1940; January 3, 1941; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944).

"A petition to the United Nations, drafted and circulated by the Council on African Affairs, contained the signature of Bishop W. J. Walls, according to the Daily Worker of June 5, 1950 (p. 4). The Attorney General cited the council as subversive and Communist (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also consolidated list of April 1, 1954).

"Bishop Walls also signed a statement of the National Committee To Defeat the Mundt (anti-Communist) Bill, according to the Daily Worker of April 3, 1950 (p. 4). The national committee * * * was cited by the Committee on Un-American Activities as 'a registered lobbying organization which has carried out the objectives of the Communist Party in its fight against antisubversive legislation' (report of the Committee on Un-American Activities on the National Committee To Defeat the Mundt Bill, released December 7, 1950).

"Identified as secretary of the board of bishops, A.M.E. Zion Church, Bishop W. J. Walls was named as having endorsed the World Peace Appeal (undated leaflet received by the committee September 11, 1950), and the Daily Worker of August 14, 1950 (p. 2). The World Peace Appeal was cited as a petition campaign launched by the Permanent Committee of the World Peace Congress at its meeting in Stockholm, March 16–19, 1950; as having 'received the enthusiastic approval of every section of the international Communist hierarchy'; as having been lauded in the Communist press, putting 'every individual Communist on notice that he "has the duty to raise to this appeal" '; and as having 'received the official endorsement of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. * * *' (report of the Committee on Un-American Activities on the Communist Peace Offensive, April 1, 1951).

"Bishop Walls was one of the sponsors of the American Sponsoring Committee for Representation at the World Peace Congress, as shown on a mimeographed letter of December 1, 1950; he was a delegate to the World Peace Congress, as shown in the Daily Worker of November 7, 1950 (p. 2); he signed a protest made by the American Sponsoring Committee for Representation at the World Peace Congress (Daily People's World of Nov. 20, 1950, p. 2). The protest was made against exclusion by the British Government of more than 50 Americans, five-sixths of the U.S. delegation to the World Peace Congress. In the latter two sources, he was identified as secretary of the board of bishops of A.M.E. Zion Church.

"The World Peace Congress was cited as a Communist front among the 'peace conferences' which 'have been organized under Communist initiative in various countries throughout the world as part of a campaign against the North Atlantic Defense Pact' (report of the Committee on Un-American Activities dated April 1, 1951).

"According to the Daily Worker of October 28, 1949 (p. 2), Bishop W. J. Walls, of Chicago, endorsed Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., Communist, and urged his reelection to the New York City Council. Benjamin J. Davis was 1 of the 11 leaders of the Communist Party on trial."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: John Haynes Holmes, national vice president, NAACP, 1954–61.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Rev. John Haynes Holmes was shown to be a member of the advisory board of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born on a letterhead of the organization dated April 27, 1938, on a letterhead dated January 1940, and in the call to the third annual conference. The American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States (letters to Loyalty Review Board, released June 1 and September 21, 1948; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954). The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as "one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States" (report, March 29, 1944, p. 155; also cited in report, June 25, 1942, p. 13).

"In a bulletin, Spot News (p. 1), John Haynes Holmes was listed as a sponsor of the American Committee to Save Refugees, which was cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, March 29, 1944 (pps. 49, 112, 129, 133, 138, 167, 180).

"A letterhead dated November 18, 1936, showed John Haynes Holmes to be a member of the general committee of the medical bureau, American Friends of Spanish Democracy. 'New Masses' (January 5, 1937, p. 31) also listed John Haynes Holmes as a member of the general committee of that organization. 'In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for the support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations * * * such as * * * American Friends of Spanish Democracy' (special committee on Un-American Activities, report, March 29, 1944, p. 82).

"The Daily Worker (January 11, 1937, p. 2) reported that John Haynes Holmes was a sponsor of the New York City Conference Against War and Fascism. The Daily Worker (February 23, 1938, p. 2) reported that he signed a letter which was sponsored by the American League for Peace and Democracy. A contribution from him appeared in Fight (September 1935, p. 2), a magazine published by the American League Against War and Fascism; he was identified as minister, Community Church, New York. The following is quoted from an editorial comment on the article:

" 'In a recent sermon Dr. Holmes made an eloquent appeal for unity of Christians and Communists in opposition to the forces of reaction driving toward war and fascism, and in struggle for the achievement of a better world based on brotherhood and cooperation among men.

" 'If churchmen will unite with Communists, Socialists, trade unionists, and everyone else opposed to war and fascism, our forces will be tremendously strengthened, and war and fascism will not be inevitable. Already the American League Against War and Fascism has brought together in its ranks people of diverse political and religious beliefs, liberals, radicals, and revolutionists, of all races and creeds * * *.

" 'The American League Against War and Fascism was organized at the First United States Congress Against War which was held in New York City, September 29 to October 1, 1933. Four years later at Pittsburgh, November 26–28, 1937, the name of the organization was changed to the American League for Peace and Democracy. There was, however, no fundamental change in the character of the organization. It remained as completely under the control of Communists when the name was changed as it had been before' (special committee report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 53; also cited in reports, Jan. 3, 1939, pp. 69 and 121; Jan. 3, 1940, p. 10; June 25, 1942, p. 14). The Attorney General of the United States cited the league as subversive and Communist (letters to Loyalty Review Board, released Dec. 4, 1947, and Sept. 21, 1948; also included in consolidated list released Apr. 1, 1954). The Attorney General cited it as a 'Communist-front Organization, in re Harry Bridges,

May 28, 1942 (p. 10) and said it was 'established in the United States in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7683).

"The Daily Worker (Sept. 24, 1940, p. 5) reported that an open letter sponsored by the Communist Party and the American Civil Liberties Union, demanding discharge of Communist Party defendants in Fulton and Livingston Counties, was signed by John Haynes Holmes.

"The Daily Worker of February 13, 1937 (p. 2), reported that 'aroused by the Fascist tactics displayed by the Brazilian Government in its treatment of hundreds of political prisoners held without trial since November 1935, outstanding among them Luiz Carlos Prestes, leader of the liberation movement of the Brazilian people, and Arthur Ewert, ex-deputy in the German Reichstag, outstanding Americans have signed their names to a cable of protest forwarded to President Vargas of Brazil.' Among those named as signers was Dr. John Haynes Holmes, Community Church. A letterhead dated November 16, 1938, of the conference on Pan American Democracy, listed John Haynes Holmes as a sponsor. The Attorney General cited this organization as subversive and Communist (letters to Loyalty Review Board, released June 1 and Sept. 21, 1948; also included in consolidated list released Apr. 1, 1954). The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as a Communist front which defended Carlos Luiz Prestes, a Brazilian Communist leader and former member of the executive committee of the Communist International (report, Mar. 29, 1944, pp. 161 and 164; also cited in report, June 25, 1942, p. 18).

"The Daily Worker of February 13, 1939 (p. 2), reported that Dr. John Haynes Holmes was a member of the Descendants of the American Revolution. The Daily Worker (Jan. 21, 1938, p. 2), also referred to him as a sponsor and as a member of the advisory board of that organization. A pamphlet, Descendants of the American Revolution (back page), listed him as a member of the advisory board of the organization. The special committee (report, June 25, 1942, pp. 18 and 19) cited the Descendants of the American Revolution as 'a Communist-front organization set up as a radical imitation of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The descendants have uniformly adhered to the line of the Communist Party. * * * The educational director * * * is one Howard Solzam, an instructor at the Communist Party's Workers School in New York.'

"A program of the conference (February 12, 1940), named John Haynes Holmes as a sponsor of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights. This conference was cited by the special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist front which was succeeded by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties (report, March 29, 1944, pp. 96 and 129). It was also cited by the congressional Committee on Un-American Activities (report No. 1115, September 2, 1947, p. 3).

"An open letter to the U. S. Senate, initiated and distributed by the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, in protest of the Dempsey deportation bill and the McCormack rider attached to the Walter espionage bill, was signed by the Reverend John Haynes Holmes (photostat of open letter). 'It will be remembered that during the days of the infamous Soviet-Nazi Pact, the Communists built protective organizations known as the National Emergency Conference, the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, which culminated in the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties' (Committee on Un-American Activities, report No. 1115, September 2, 1947, p. 12). The special committee cited the National Emergency Conference * * * as a Communist front in the report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 48 and 102).

"The Daily Worker of February 8, 1939 (p. 7), reported that John Haynes Holmes was contributor to a booklet published by the League of American Writers. The league was cited as a Communist-front organization in three reports of the special committee (report, January 3, 1940, p. 9; June 25, 1942, p. 19; March 29, 1944, p. 48). It was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General (letters to Loyality Review Board, released June 1, and September 21, 1948; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954). Previously, the Attorney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7685 and 7686) stated that the overt activities of the league 'leave little doubt of its Communist control.'

"An undated letterhead listed John Haynes Holmes as a sponsor of the New York Tom Mooney Committee, which was cited as a Communist front by the special committee (report, March 29, 1944, p. 154).

"An undated leaflet published by the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder named Dr. John Haynes Holmes, Community Church, New York City, among those who appealed to President Roosevelt for justice in the Browder case. The Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder was cited as Communist by the U.S. Attroney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687; letter to Loyalty Review Board, released April 27, 1949; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954). 'When Earl Browder (then general secretary, Communist Party) was in Atlanta Penitentiary serving a sentence involving his fraudulent passports, the Communist Party's front which agitated for his release was known as the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder * * *' (special committee report, March 29, 1944).

"Soviet Russia Today for December 1933 (p. 17) listed John Haynes Holmes among the endorsers of the National Committee, Friends of the Soviet Union. A pamphlet issued by the Friends of the Soviet Union entitled 'Welcome. "Land of Soviets" Moscow-New York 1929' listed John Haynes Holmes as a member of the Reception Committee for the Soviet Flyers. The Attorney General cited Friends of the Soviet Union as Communist (letters to Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, June 1 and September 21, 1948; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954). The special committee cited it as 'one of the most open Communist fronts in the United States' whose purpose 'is to propagandize for and defend Russia and its system of government' (report, January 3, 1939, p. 78).

"Rev. John Haynes Holmes, New York, N.Y., was shown to be a sponsor of the Mid-Century Conference for Peace on the call to that conference. The conference was cited by this committee at a meeting held in Chicago, May 29 and 30, 1950, by the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact and as having been 'aimed at assembling as many gullible persons as possible under Communist direction and turning them into a vast sounding board for Communist propaganda' (report 378, April 25, 1961, p. 58).

"A letterhead dated March 16, 1937, listed John Haynes Holes as a member of the National People's Committee Against Hearst, cited by the special Committee on Un-American Activities as a subsidiary organization of the American League for Peace and Democracy, which was described on page 2 of this report (report, June 25, 1942, p. 16).

"A letterhead dated March 20, 1926, listed Rev. John Haynes Holmes as a member of the advisory board of Russian Reconstruction Farms, Inc., cited by the special committee as a Communist enterprise which was directed by Harold Ware, son of the well-known Communist Ella Reeve Bloor (report, March 29, 1944, p. 76).

"New Masses for March 31, 1936 (p. 2) named John Haynes Holmes as a member of the League for Mutual Aid, cited as a Communist enterprise by the special committee (report, March 29, 1944, p. 76).

"According to the Daily Worker of February 16, 1958 (p. 16) Rev. John Haynes Holmes signed a statement to the mayor and city council in behalf of Simon Gerson, a Communist. An advertisement in the New York Times (February 19, 1948, p. 13), listed him as a supporter of the Citizens Committee to Defend Representative Government, supporting the seating of Gerson.

"The following was reported in the Daily Worker on September 22, 1948 (p. 5): 'Prof. Ralph Sarton Perry of Harvard University released yesterday the names of 93 prominent educators, churchmen, and individuals in other cultural fields, who have formed a committee of welcome for the Very Reverend Hewlett Johnson, D.D., dean of Canterbury Cathedral. Dean Johnson had been invited to visit the United States by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship for a countrywide tour under its auspices. A visa was refused him on the ground that the sponsoring organization was on the Attorney General's list. The Committee of Welcome had extended to Dean Johnson an invitation to come to the United States under its independent auspice in November and December of this year and to speak at public gatherings.' The article named Dr. John Haynes Holmes, minister, the Community Church, New York, among the members of the committee.

"The National Council of American-Soviet Friendship was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General (letters to Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947 and September 21, 1948; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954). The special committee cited the National Council * * * as 'the Communist Party's principal front for all things Russian' (report, March 29, 1944, p. 156).

"The Daily Worker of February 19, 1951 (p. 2), reported that Rev. John Haynes Holmes was a signer of a statement addressed to the Attorney General, urging withdrawal of contempt of Congress proceedings against a number of persons who had been indicted for refusing to answer questions before congressional committees.

"The Daily People's World of August 1, 1951 (p. 2), reported that the Rev. John Haynes Holmes endorsed a statement attacking the Smith Act, which was anti-Communist legislation. It was reported in the Daily Worker of January 15, 1953 (p. 8), that Rev. John Haynes Holmes, minister-emeritus, the Community Church of New York, signed a letter to President Truman asking for amnesty for 11 leaders of the Communist Party arrested under the Smith Act.

"In testimony before this committee on July 7, 1953, Benjamin Gitlow, former member of the Communist Party, said: 'Before the creation of the front organizations, the ministers who carried out the instructions of the Communist Party or collaborated with it were limited in numbers. The outstanding ones among them were * * * Rev. John Haynes Holmes * * *' (Communist Activities in the New York Area, p. 2077).

"The Daily Worker of January 1, 1953 (p. 1), reported that Rev. John Haynes Holmes signed a petition for clemency for the Rosenbergs. The same newspaper on January 13, 1953 (p. 2), published a list of 'the clergymen of various faiths and other religious leaders who have urged President Truman to use his power of clemency to save the lives of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg.' The name of Dr. John Haynes Holmes, New York, appeared on the list. The Rosenbergs had been convicted of conspiracy to commit espionage and sentenced to death."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: William Lloyd Imes, national vice president, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"William Lloyd Imes was one of those who signed a statement on December 14, 1939 (the day before the 148th anniversary of the Bills of Rights), 'warning against denying to the Communists, or to any other minority group, the full freedom guaranteed by the Bills of Rights' (letter signed by Dashiell Hammett dated January 1940, attached to the statement).

"A pamphlet entitled 'The People vs. H.C.L.' which was dated December 11–12, 1937, named William Lloyd Imes as one of the sponsors of the Consumers National Federation, publishers of the pamphlet.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155), cited the Consumers National Federation as a Communist-front organization.

"He supported the National Negro Congress (Daily Worker, Feb. 3, 1936, p. 2); spoke at the Second National Negro Congress in October 1937 (program of the congress); and supported a conference of the congress to push passage of the antilynch bill (Daily Worker, Mar. 17, 1938, p. 4).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations redesignated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist front (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes * * *'

"William Lloyd Imes sponsored a dinner-forum called by the Protestant Digest Associates on the subject, Protestantism answers hate, which was held in New York City, February 25, 1941.

"Protestant Digest was cited as 'a magazine which has faithfully propagated the Communist Party line under the guise of being a religious journal' (special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 48).

"He signed a petition of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, as shown on a mimeographed sheet attached to a letterhead dated January 17, 1940; and sponsored a citizens rally of the same organization, on April 13, 1940, in New York City (according to a leaflet announcing the rally).

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of June 25, 1944 (p. 13), cited the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom as a Communist front which defended Communist teachers.

"William Lloyd Imes sponsored the Fourth Annual Conference of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born, as shown on a letterhead of the conference which was held in Washington, D.C., March 2 to 3, 1940.

"The Attorney General cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as subversives and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155), cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as 'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States.'

"Dr. Imes contributed to Fight magazine, official organ of the American League Against War and Fascism (Fight for August 1935, p. 4); he was chairman of a rally of the American League which was held in Harlem (Fight for September 1935, p. 14); he spoke at the National People's Committee Against Hearst of the American League (Daily Worker, Oct. 21, 1936, p. 4); he supported a statement of the League, addressed to the United States Congress (Daily Worker, Feb. 27, 1937, p. 2); he was a member of the National People's Committee Against Hearst (letterhead of Mar. 16, 1937); he spoke in New York City at a joint meeting of the American League and American Friends of the Chinese People (Daily Worker, Sept. 23, 1937, p. 2); and was one of the sponsors of the China Aid Council of the American League, as shown on a letterhead of the council dated May 18, 1938. As shown by the Daily Worker of April 6, 1937 (p. 5), Rev. William Lloyd Imes, pastor, St. James Presbyterian Church, was guest of honor at a dinner of the American League Against War and Fascism, April 6, 1937, New York City.

"The Attorney General cited the American League Against War and Fascism as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a 'Communist-front organization' in (re Harry Bridges, May 28, 1942, p. 10); and 'established in the United States in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7683). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 53), cited the American League Against War and Fascism as 'completely under the control of Communists.'

"A letterhead dated November 3, 1937, lists William Lloyd Imes as a member of the national executive committee, People's Congress for Democracy and Peace; he sponsored the Boycott Japanese Goods Conference of the American League for Peace and Democracy, February 5, 1938 (Daily Worker, Jan. 11, 1938, p. 2); he signed a letter of the American League, as was shown in the Daily Worker of February 23, 1938 (p. 2); he signed a statement of the league concerning the international situation (New Masses, Mar. 15, 1938, p. 19); a letterhead of the New York City Division of the American League named him as a member of the advisory board as of that date (Sept. 22, 1938); a letterhead of the City Executive Committee, New York City Division, American League for Peace and Democracy, dated September 26, 1938, contained the name of the Reverend William Lloyd Imes in the list of members of the advisory board; he endorsed the American Congress for Peace and Democracy, January 6–8, 1939, in New York City, as shown on a letterhead dated December 7, 1938. A letterhead of the New York City Division, American League for Peace and Democracy, dated March 21, 1939, listed him as a member of the advisory board of the league. A letterhead of the Baltimore Division, American League for Peace and Democracy, dated May 18, 1939, contained the name of Dr. Imes in the list of members of the national committee; a letterhead of the league, dated July 12, 1939, furnished the same information, and also a pamphlet entitled '7½ Million * * *,' which was published by the league.

"The Attorney General cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Attorney General cited the organization previously as established in the United States in 1937 as successor to the American League Against War and Fascism 'in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (pp. 69–71), cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as 'the largest of the Communist front movements in the United States.'

"The Daily Worker of August 13, 1940 (p. 5), named Dr. Imes as one who endorsed the Emergency Peace Mobilization; he was one of the sponsors of the Greater New York Committee of the Emergency Peace Mobilization, as shown on an undated letterhead.

"The Attorney General cited the Emergency Peace Mobilization as follows: 'The American Peace Mobilization was formally founded at a meeting in Chicago at the end of August 1940, known as the Emergency Peace Mobilization' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7684). The special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 29, 1944, cited the Emergency Peace Mobilization as a Communist front which came forth, after Stalin signed his pact with Hitler, to oppose the national defense program, lend-lease, conscription, and other American warmongering efforts. It immediately preceded the American Peace Mobilization in 1940.

"Dr. Imes sponsored the Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America, as shown on the call to the conference, June 7, 1940; he signed a letter of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, addressed to Attorney General Jackson, in defense of ballot rights of minority parties (Daily Worker, Sept. 24, 1940, p. 1); he signed a statement of the federation, opposing use of injunctions in labor disputes, according to an advertisement which appeared in the New York Times of April 1, 1946, in which source he was identified as president of Knoxville College.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America as 'an important part of the solar system of the Communist Party's front organizations' (Report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 102). The Attorney General cited the conference as one as a result of which was established the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687).

"The Attorney General cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesigned April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Attorney General cited the organization previously as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program * * *' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party.'

"Dr. Imes signed an open letter of the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights (Daily Worker, May 13, 1940, pp. 1 and 5); he was one of the sponsors of the Conference on Pan-American Democracy, as shown on a letterhead of that group dated November 16, 1938.

"The National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights was cited as a Communist front organization by the special committee in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 48 and 102). The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 12), cited the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights as follows: 'It will be remembered that during the days of the infamous Soviet-Nazi pact, the Communists built protective organizations known as the National Emergency Conference, the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, which culminated in the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.'

"The Conference on Pan-American Democracy (known also as Council for Pan-American Democracy) was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 161 and 164), cited the Conference on Pan-American Democracy as a Communist front which defended Carlos Luiz Prestes, a Brazilian Communist leader and former member of the executive committee of the Communist International.

"Dr. Imes was one of the sponsors of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights, as shown on the program of the conference, February 12, 1940. He spoke before the American Youth Congress (Daily Worker, Jan. 29, 1938, p. 3); and endorsed the American Youth Act, as shown on a press release of the American Youth Congress.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its March 29, 1944, report (pp. 96 and 120), cited the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights as a Communist front which was succeeded by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. The organization was cited by the Committee on Un-American Activities (report, Sept. 2, 1947, p. 3), as among a 'maize of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"The American Youth Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The group was cited previously by the Attorney General as 'originated in 1934 and * * * has been controlled by Communists and manipulated by them to influence the thought of American youth' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7685). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of June 25, 1942 (p. 16), cited the American Youth Congress as 'one of the principal fronts of the Communist Party' and 'prominently identified with the White House picket line * * *.'

"According to the proceedings and report, and to 'Equal Justice' for July 1939, he sent greetings to the National Conference of the International Labor Defense. He signed a letter to President Roosevelt, defending the publication, New Masses (issue of April 2, 1940, p. 21).

"The Attorney General cited the International Labor Defense as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The group was cited previously by the Attorney General as the 'legal arm of the Communist Party' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7686). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (pp. 75–78), cited the International Labor Defense as 'the legal defense arm of the Communist Party of the United States.'

"New Masses was cited as a 'Communist periodical' by the Attorney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7688). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 48 and 75), cited New Masses as a 'nationally circulated weekly journal of the Communist Party * * *.'"

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. W. Montague Cobb, chairman of the national health committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"According to the Bookshopper for July 1948 (p. 2), Montague Cobb, professor, Howard University, lectured at a membership meeting in January 1948 of the Washington Cooperative Bookshop, 916 17th Street NW., Washington, D.C.

"The Attorney General of the United States found that 'evidence of Communist penetration or control [of the Washington Cooperative Bookshop] is reflected in the following: Among its stock the establishment has offered prominently for sale books and literature identified with the Communist Party and certain of its affiliates and front organizations * * * certain of the officers and employees of the bookshop, including its manager and executive secretary, have been in close contact with local officials of the Communist Party of the District of Columbia' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7688); subsequently, it was cited by the Attorney General as subversive and Communist (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list of April 1, 1954). The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as a Communist front (report 1311 of March 29, 1944).

"Dr. W. Montague Cobb, identified as professor of anatomy, Howard University, spoke at the 1947 convention of the Association of Internes and Medical Students, according to their official organ, the Interne (January 1948, p. 61); the same publication (February 1950, p. 27) reported that he had spoken at a convention of the organization; the printed program of the 16th Convention of the Association of Internes and Medical Students which was held in December 1950, revealed that he had spoken at the convention.

"The Association of Interns and Medical Students was cited as an organization which 'has long been a faithful follower of the Communist Party line,' and which supported the International Union of Students' Second World Student Congress in Prague in August 1950 (report of the Committee on Un-American Activities on the Communist Peace Offensive, dated April 1, 1951).

"An advertisement which appeared in the Washington Post of May 18, 1948 (p. 15), disclosed the name of Dr. W. Montague Cobb as having signed a statement against the Mundt (anti-Communist) bill."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Westley W. Law, Savannah, Ga., national board of directors, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"An undated press release, General Youth Statement (p. 3), listed W. W. Law, Savannah, Ga., as an endorser of the Youth Statement of the Mid-Century Conference for Peace (May 29–30, 1950).

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Communist Peace Offensive, April 1, 1951 (p. 58), cited the Mid-Century Conference for Peace at a meeting held in Chicago, May 29 and 30, 1950, by the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact and as having been 'aimed at assembling as many gullible persons as possible under Communist direction and turning them into a vast sounding board for Communist propaganda.'

"The Daily Worker of June 23, 1949 (p. 2), reported that W. W. Law, past national chairman, National Association for Advancement of Colored People, youth division, Savannah, Ga., signed a statement against the North Atlantic Pact."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. J. M. Tinsley, national board of directors, national health committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"As shown by the official proceedings of the National Negro Congress, 1936 (pp. 5, 41), Dr. J. M. Tinsley, Virginia, was a member of the presiding committee and a member of the national executive council of the organization. J. M. Tinsley, Richmond, was treasurer of the National Negro Congress (Daily Worker, Apr. 7, 1936, p. 3).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations designated previously pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist-front group (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes * * *.'

"J. M. Tinsley endorsed the Southern Negro Youth Congress (Daily Worker, Feb. 25, 1938, p. 3).

"The Southern Negro Youth Congress was cited by the Attorney General as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, U.S.A., which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means (letter released Dec. 4, 1947; redesignated Apr. 27, 1953, and included on Apr. 1, 1954, consolidated list). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1940 (p. 9), cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of April 17, 1947 (p. 14), cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as 'a surreptitiously controlled' by the Young Communist League."

"FEBRUARY 14, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. Harry J. Greene, Philadelphia, Pa., national board of directors, national health committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"On the call to a Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America at Washington, D.C., June 7–9, 1940, the name of Dr. Harry J. Greene of Philadelphia, Pa., appears in a list of the sponsors; he was one of the sponsors of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, as shown on their letterheads dated September 10 and November 6, 1940, in which sources he is shown as being from Philadelphia.

"The printed program of a National Action Conference for Civil Rights which was scheduled to be held in Washington, D.C., April 19–20, 1941, named Dr. Harry J. Greene, Philadelphia, as one of the sponsors of that conference, called by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties (formed as a result of the Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America, June 7–9, 1940), as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations * * * by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their programs'; and as subversive and Communist. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687; and press releases of Dec. 4, 1947, and Sept. 21, 1948, respectively; also included on consolidated list released Apr. 1, 1954.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party' (report of Mar. 29, 1944; also cited in reports of June 25, 1942, and Jan. 2, 1943). The Committee on Un-American Activities also cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties in a report released September 2, 1947.

"Dr. Harry J. Greene was chairman of a discussion group on 'Denial of Citizenship Rights' at the Second National Negro Congress, October 15–17, 1937, in Philadelphia, as shown on the printed program of that congress (p. 19) in which source he is identified as being from Philadelphia, Pa., and president of the Philadelphia branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. A booklet of the National Negro Congress entitled 'We Are Rising' (April 1939, p. 2) named one Harry Green as vice president, Philadelphia council of the congress.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes' (report of Jan. 3, 1939; also cited in reports of Jan. 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and Mar. 29, 1944). The Attorney General cited the Congress as 'an important sector of the democratic front, sponsored and supported by the Communist Party' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688); later, the Attorney General cited the congress as subversive and Communist (press releases of Dec. 4, 1947 and Sept. 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list released Apr. 1, 1954).

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Roscoe Dunjee, national vice-president, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker for April 16, 1947 (p. 2), reported that Roscoe Dunjee, attorney, Oklahoma City, Okla., was one of the signers of a statement defending the Communist Party. He was one of the signers of a statement condemning 'punitive measures directed against the Communist Party' as shown by the April 20, 1947 issue of the Worker (p. 8). The Daily Worker for April 27, 1947 (p. 24), shows Roscoe Dunje as one of the signers of a statement against the ban on the Communist Party. Roscoe C. Dunjee, publisher of the Black Dispatch, Oklahoma City, was a sponsor of a statement attacking the arrest of the Communist Party leaders, according to the Daily Worker, August 23, 1948 (p. 3). He sponsored the 'Statement by Negro Americans' in behalf of the arrested Communist leaders as shown by the August 29, 1948, issue of the Worker (p. 11). The Daily Worker for March 7, 1950 (p. 4), reported that Roscoe Dunjee attacked Judge Medina in the case of the Communist leaders.

"Roscoe Dunjee was a member of the initiating committee, of the Congress on Civil Rights held in Detroit, Mich., April 27 and 28, 1946, as shown by the summons to the congress. The Daily Worker of April 16, 1947 (p. 2), reported that Roscoe Dunjee, of Oklahoma City, Okla., was one of the signers of a statement released by the Civil Rights Congress defending the Communist Party. The Civil Rights Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States (letters to the Loyalty Review Board, 1947 and 1948; included in consolidated list released Apr. 1, 1954). The Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as being 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it' (report No. 115, Sept. 2, 1947, pp. 2 and 19).

"The pamphlet Seeing Is Believing, 1947, and the testimony of Walter S. Steele, public hearings, Committee on Un-American Activities, July 21, 1947 (p. 135), show Roscoe Dunjee as a member of the Council on African Affairs, Inc. The Council on African Affairs was cited as subversive and Communist by the United States Attorney General (letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. He redesignated the organization on April 27, 1953; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954.)

"Roscoe Dunjee was a sponsor of the Win the Peace Conference of the National Committee To Win the Peace, as shown by the Daily Worker March 5, 1946, a letterhead of the organization dated February 28, 1946, and the call to a win-the-peace conference, National Press Building, Washington, D.C., April 5–7, 1946. The National Committee To Win the Peace was cited as subversive and Communist by the United States Attorney General (letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released in 1947 and 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954).

"The Daily Worker for October 19, 1948 (p. 7), reported that Roscoe Dunjee was one of those who signed a statement released by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions. The council was cited as a Communist front by this committee in its review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace (April 26, 1950—original release date April 19, 1949, p. 2).

"Roscoe Dunjee was a signer of the call to the Second Southern Conference for Human Welfare, Chattanooga, Tenn., April 14–16, 1940. A letterhead of the conference, dated June 4, 1947, shows Roscoe Dunjee as vice president and a member of the national committee of that organization. He was also shown as vice president of the organization in an undated leaflet, The South Is Closer Than You Think, and the testimony of Walter S. Steele, public hearings, Committee on Un-American Activities, July 21, 1947, page 139. The Southern Conference for Human Welfare was cited as a Communist front which received money from the Robert Marshall Foundation, one of the principal sources of funds by which many Communist fronts operate. (Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, March 29, 1944, p. 147.) In its report of June 12, 1947, the Committee on Un-American Activities described the conference as a Communist-front organization 'which seeks to attract southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South,' although its 'professed interest in southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States.'

"The New York Times of October 9, 1944 (p. 12), reported that Roscoe Dunjee was one of the signers of an open letter to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey for the pardon of Morris U. Schappes, which was sponsored by the Schappes Defense Committee. The Schappes Defense Committee was cited as a Communist organization by the United States Attorney General (letter to the Loyalty Review Board, released April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953). The special Committee on Un-American Activities described the Schappes Defense Committee as 'a front organization with a strictly Communist objective, namely, the defense of a self-admitted Communist who was convicted of perjury in the courts of New York.' Morris U. Schappes 'was on the teaching staff of the College of the City of New York for a period of 13 years. In 1956 his superior on the college faculty refused to recommend him for reappointment. This action led to prolonged agitation by the Communist Party' (report, March 29, 1944, p. 71).

"Roscoe Dunjee was a member of the advisory board of the Southern Negro Youth Congress according to a letterhead of that organization dated June 12, 1947, the testimony of Walter S. Steele, public hearings, Committee on Un-American Activities, July 21, 1947 (p. 97), a letterhead dated August 11, 1947, and a page from a leaflet published by the organization. The Southern Negro Youth Congress was cited as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, U.S.A., 'which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means' (U.S. Attorney General, letter to Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947; redesignated April 27, 1953; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954). The Committee on Un-American Activities said it was 'surreptitiously controlled' by the Young Communist League (report No. 271, April 17, 1947, p. 14). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities also cited the organization as a Communist front (report, January 3, 1940, p. 9).

"According to the Daily Worker for April 1, 1945 (p. 6m), Roscoe Dunjee was asked what he thought of New York's new anti-discrimination law, and was quoted as replying: 'It shows a trend in the direction which the United States as a nation must take if we rise to the level of Russian morality * * *.'

"Photographs of Roscoe Dunjee are found in the Daily Worker, issues of December 9, 1941 (p. 7), and April 1, 1945 (p. 6m).

"Roscoe Dunjee, editor of the Black Dispatch, Oklahoma City, Okla., was quoted in the March 28, 1944, issue of New Masses (p. 15), as follows:

" 'I attended a Lincoln and Douglas meeting held under the auspices of the Communist Party, February 12 * * * Most assuredly Americans should stop and listen to what Communists have to say. The Russian experiment as expressed today in Soviet life is too effective for anyone to attempt to overlook this. As president of the State conference of branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, I have every year for the past 10 invited the Communist to address our meeting. Alan Shaw, secretary of the Communist Party in Oklahoma, addressed our State conference at Tulsa last November * * * personally I endorse the idea of an international State * * * as espoused by the Communist Party.'

"The following is quoted from the Daily Worker of April 8, 1952 (p. 2):

" 'Roscoe Dunjee, editor of the Oklahoma Black-Dispatch, leading Negro newspaper in the Southwest, has hailed in a long editorial the victory won by William L. Patterson, head of the Civil Rights Congress, in securing acquittal on a contempt of Congress charge.'

"(Note citation of Civil Rights Congress on p. 1 of this rport.)

"Roscoe C. Dunjee, Oklahoma City, was listed as one of four sponsors of a statement which appeared in the Sunday Worker, August 29, 1948 (p. 11), from which the following is quoted:

" 'THE FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE

" '(Statement by Negro Americans to the President and Attorney General of the United States)

" 'We, the undersigned Negro Americans, strongly condemn your hysteria-breeding arrests of national leaders of the Communist Party, and call upon you to take positive action to protect civil rights instead of persecuting political minorities.

" 'We raise here no defenes of the principles of the Communist Party. Our concern is to defend the right of political and other minorities, especially the Negro people, to fight for the kind of society which they consider necessary to give full expression to the principles of American democracy * * *

" 'The obvious purpose of these Gestapo-like arrests of Communist leaders is to frighten people away from the Wallace movement and progressive people's organizations generally, practically all of which have been slandered as Communist or subversive * * *

" 'We call upon our Government to halt its Fascist-like attacks upon opposition minorities, and to act for the protection of minority rights * * *' "

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. S. Ralph Harlow, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The program of the fifth national conference of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born, Atlantic City, N.J., March 29–30, 1941, listed S. Ralph Harlow as a sponsor.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released June 1 and September 21, 1948. The organization was redesignated by the Attorney General April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155), cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as 'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States.'

"S. Ralph Harlow was an endorser of the Committee for Citizenship Rights as shown by a letterhead dated January 10, 1942. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 95), cited the Committee for Citizenship Rights as an organization which defended the 'interests of the Communist Party.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the Committee for Citizenship Rights as among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"Prof. S. Ralph Harlow signed a statement calling for international agreement to ban use of atomic weapons attached to a press release of the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact, December 14, 1949 (p. 9). He was identified in this instance as associated with Smith College, Northampton, Mass.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Communist Peace Offensive, April 1, 1951 (p. 54), cited the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact as an organization which was formed as a result of the Conference for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact, and which was located, according to a letterhead of September 16, 1950, at 30 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.; and to further the cause of Communists in the United States doing their part in the Moscow campaign.

"As shown by Soviet Russia Today of November 1937 (p. 79), S. Ralph Harlow was a signer of the Golden Book of American Friendship With the Soviet Union, cited as a 'Communist enterprise' signed hundreds of well-known Communists and fellow travelers:

" 'January 23–25, 1948, New York City' conference call of the National Conference on American Policy in China and the Far East, listed Dr. S. Ralph Harlow, Smith College, as a sponsor of the conference. The Attorney General cited the National Conference on American Policy in China and the Far East as Communist, and a conference called by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy in a letter released July 25, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"A news release of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties dated December 26, 1941, listed S. Ralph Harlow as a signer. He signed the organization's 1943 message to the House of Representatives (leaflet, attached to undated letterhead); and the group's statement supporting the War Department's order on granting commissions to members of the Armed Forces who have been members of or sympathetic to the views of the Communist Party (undated leaflet, 'the only sound policy for a democracy * * *' and Daily Worker, March 19, 1945, p. 4).

"The Attorney General cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as among a maze of organizations which were spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.

"As shown by the Daily Worker of September 17, 1940 (pp. 1, 5), S. Ralph Harlow signed a telegram of the New York Conference for Inalienable Rights to President Roosevelt and Attorney General Jackson in behalf of the International Fur and Leather Workers Union defendants. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the New York Conference for Inalienable Rights as a Communist-front group.

"S. Ralph Harlow sponsored the call for the Protestantism Answers Hate dinner-forum held under auspices of the Protestant Digest, New York, February 25, 1941, as shown by a leaflet. He was identified in this instance as professor of sociology, Smith College, Northampton, Mass.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 48), cited the Protestant Digest as 'a magazine which has faithfully propagated the Communist Party line under the guise of being a religious journal.'

"According to the New York Times, October 9, 1944 (p. 12), S. Ralph Harlow, chairman, department of religion, Smith College, Northampton, Mass., signed an open letter of the Schappes defense committee to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey asking a pardon for Morris Schappes."

"The Schappes defense committee was cited as Communist by the Attorney General in a letter released April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as 'a front organization with a strictly Communist objective, namely, the defense of a self-admitted Communist who was convicted of perjury in the courts of New York.' (Report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 71).

"Prof. S. Ralph Harlow endorsed the World Peace Appeal as shown by an undated leaflet, Prominent Americans Call for * * * (received Sept. 11, 1950), and the Daily Worker, August 14, 1950 (p. 2).

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Communist peace offensive, April 1, 1951 (p. 34), cited the World Peace Appeal as a petition campaign launched by the Permanent Committee of the World Peace Congress at its meeting in Stockholm, March 16–19, 1950; as having 'received the enthusiastic approval of every section of the international Communist hierarchy'; as having been lauded in the Communist press, putting 'every individual Communist on notice that he "has duty to rise to this appeal" '; and as having 'received the official endorsement of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., which has been echoed by the governing bodies of every Communist satellite country, and by all Communist parties throughout the world.' "

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Robert C. Weaver, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Robert C. Weaver, identified from Washington, D.C., as an economic adviser to the Secretary of Interior, was discussion leader of a panel on 'The Federal Housing Program and the Negro' at the Second National Negro Congress as shown by the program of that congress which was held in Philadelphia, October 15–17, 1937.

"The National Negro Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The special committee in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes.' The Attorney General had cited the group previously as follows: 'From the record of its activities and the composition of its governing bodies, there can be little doubt that it has served what James M. Ford, Communist vice presidential candidate elected to the executive committee in 1937, predicted: "An important sector of the democratic front," sponsored and supported by the Communist Party' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688).

"The Daily Worker of February 8, 1939 (p. 2), listed Robert C. Weaver, identified as Assistant Housing Administrator of the Department of Interior, as one of the signers of the Negro People's Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy letter to lift the Spanish embargo. The special committee in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 180), cited the Negro People's Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy as a Communist-front organization.

"Robert C. Weaver, Washington, D.C., contributed financially to Social Work Today as shown by the January 1941 issue of that publication (pp. 16–18). Social Work Today was cited as a Communist magazine by the special committee in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 129).

"R. C. Weaver, 1206 Kenyon Street, Washington, D.C., was listed as a member of the Washington Book Shop on a 1941 membership list of the organization subpenaed by this committee. The Washington Book Shop Association was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The Attorney General cited the organization previously as showing 'evidence of Communist penetration or control' according to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942 (p. 7688). The special committee in report of March 29, 1944 (p. 150), cited the organization as a Communist-front organization.

"Robert C. Weaver was the author of The Negro Ghetto which was reviewed by Herbert Aptheker in the August 1948 issue of Masses and Mainstream (p. 85). The congressional committee, in its report on the Congress of American Women, April 26, 1950 (p. 75), cited Masses and Mainstream as successor to New Masses, a Communist magazine."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Lewis Gannett, national board of directors, NAACP, national vice president, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"On December 18, 1934, the Daily Worker (p. 5) reported the following: 'A reception to mark the 10 anniversary of International Publishers took place * * * December 14, in * * * the new school for social research * * * Scores of prominent writers, artists, and editors were present to pay tribute to International Publishers' decade of achievement * * * Among those present were * * * Lewis Gannett, book-review columnist of New York Herald Tribune * * *'

"The Attorney General of the United States cited International Publishers as 'The (Communist) Party's publishing house,' headed by Alexander Trachtenberg (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7686); and as the 'publishing agency of the Communist Party' (brief for the United States in the case of William Schneiderman, p. 145). The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited International Publishers as an 'official publishing house of the Communist Party in the United States' (Reports of January 3, 1940, and June 25, 1942); the Committee on Un-American Activties cited the organization as the 'Official American Communist Party publishing house' (Report No. 1920 dated May 11, 1948).

"Lewis Gannett, Harvard, was a member of the sponsoring committee of dinner sponsored by the American Student Union for 'alumni of the student movement and present members' as shown in Student Advocate for February 1937 (p. 2). The American Student Union was cited as a Communist front which 'the result of a united front gathering of young Socialists and Communists' in 1935. The Young Communist League took credit for creation of the organization (Report of the special Committee on Un-American Activties dated Jan. 3, 1939; also cited in reports of Jan. 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1949).

"A letterhead of the American League for Peace and Democracy dated April 6, 1939 contains the name of Lewis Gannett in a list of members of the Writers' and Artists' Committee of that organization; the same information is shown in public hearings before this committee July 21, 1953 (p. 3639). The American League was cited by the Attorney General as 'designed to conceal Communist control, in accordance with the new tactics of the Communist International'(CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684); and subsequently, as subversive and Communist (press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list released April 1, 1954). The special committee cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as 'a bold advocation of treason' (reports of January 3, 1939; Jan. 3, 1940; Jan. 3, 1941; June 25, 1942; and Jan. 2, 1943).

"The special committee cited the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom as a Communist front which defended Communist teachers (report of June 25, 1942; also cited in report of March 29, 1944); a letterhead of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, dated May 26, 1940, contains the name of Lewis Gannett in a list of members of the organization's national executive committee.

"A letterhead of the American Russian Institute for Cultural Relations With the Soviet Union, Inc., contains the name of Lewis Gannett in a list of members of its board of directors; the letterhead was dated July 14, 1938. The Attorney General cited the American Russian Institute as Communist (press release of April 27, 1949; also included on consolidated list dated April 1, 1954).

"Lewis S. Gannett was a member of the board of directors of the American Fund for Public Service, as shown on a photostat of their letterhead dated September 8, 1930. The 'American Fund for Public Service was established by Charles Garland, son of the wealthy James A. Garland. Young Garland, conditioned against wealth through radical acquaintances at Harvard, declined to accept his inheritance for his own personal use. Instead, he established, in 1922, the American Fund for Public Service with the sum of $900,000 which consisted largely of conservative securities. During the lush twenties, the fund grew to some $2 million.

" 'A self-perpetuating board of directors was set up for the purpose of handing out this easy money. Sidney Hillman was among them. Associated with Hillman as directors were Roger N. Baldwin, William Z. Foster, Lewis Gannett, * * *.' (From report 1311 of the special committee dated March 29, 1944.)

"An undated booklet of Friends of the Soviet Union contains the name of Lewis S. Gannett in a list of members of the Reception Committee for the Soviet Flyers, under auspices of that organization; he contributed a review of Maxim Gorki's 'A Book of Short Stories to Soviet Russia Today' (September 1939, p. 26). The Attorney General cited Friends of the Soviet Union as Communist (press releases of December 4, 1947, June 1 and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list released April 1, 1954); the special committee cited the organization as 'one of the most open Communist fronts in the United States' (report of January 3, 1939; also cited in reports of January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944). Soviet Russia Today was published by Friends of the Soviet Union.

"Soviet Russia Today for November 1937 (p. 79) published a list of individuals who signed the Golden Book of American Friendship With the Soviet Union under this statement: 'I hereby inscribe my name in greeting to the people of the Soviet Union on the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the Soviet Republic.' The Golden Book of American Friendship With the Soviet Union was cited as a 'Communist enterprise' signed by hundreds of well-known Communists and fellow travelers (Report 1311 of the special committee dated March 29, 1944).

"The Daily Worker of January 18, 1939 (p. 7) reported that Lewis Gannett was a committee sponsor of the League of American Writers, cited as a Communist-front organization by the special committee (reports of January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944). The Attorney General cited it as being under 'Communist control' and as subversive and Communist (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7685 and 7686; and press releases of June 1, and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list of April 1, 1954).

"New Masses for March 16, 1937 (p. 26) named Lewis Gannett as one of the sponsors of a sendoff dinner for the ambulance corps under the auspices of the American Artists and Writers Committee, Medical Bureau, American Friends of Spanish Democracy; an undated letterhead of the Writers' and Artists' Committee for Medical Aid to Spain also contains his name in a list of sponsors; the letterhead also carries the notation 'Affiliated with the Medical Bureau to Aid Spanish Democracy'; he signed a petition of American Friends of Spanish Democracy to lift the arms embargo, as shown in the Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 4).

"During 1937 and 1938, the Communist Party campaigned for support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, 'recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations * * * such as * * * American Friends of Spanish Democracy' (Report 1311 of the special committee dated March 29, 1944).

"Another such organization which was cited by the special committee (see last paragraph above) was the Medical Bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy; their letterhead of July 6, 1938, contained the name of Lewis Gannett in a list of members of the Writers' and Artists' Committee.

"The Liberator for September 1921 (p. 11) contained Lewis Gannett's interview with 'Bill Haywood in Moscow'; he also contributed an article to the July 1922 issue of the same publication (p. 30). The special committee cited the Liberator as a 'Communist magazine' (report of June 25, 1942).

"Lewis Gannett contributed articles to New Masses for February 16, 1937 (p. 21) and August 10, 1943 (p. 20); he signed New Masses' Letter to the President of the United States, as shown in New Masses of April 2, 1940 (p. 21), which source identified him as literary editor, New York Herald Tribune. New Masses has been cited by the Attorney General as a 'Communist periodical' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7688); the special committee cited it as the 'nationally circulated weekly journal of the Communist Party * * * whose ownership was vested in the American Fund for Public Service' (report of March 29, 1944; also cited in reports of January 3, 1939 and June 25, 1942).

"A letterhead of the All-American Anti-Imperialist League, dated April 11, 1928, contains the name of Lewis S. Gannett in a list of members of that organization's national committee. The Attorney General cited the All-American Anti-Imperialist League as a 'Communist-front organization' (in re Harry Bridges, May 28, 1942, p. 10); the special committee cited the group as a Communist front (report of March 29, 1944)."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. Buell G. Gallagher, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"According to the Communist publication, the Daily Worker of April 13, 1936 (p. 3), Buell G. Gallagher, identified as president of Talladega College, endorsed a peace strike of 500,000 students who planned a demonstration for April 22, 1936. The strike was sponsored by the American Student Union which was cited as a Communist-front organization by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in reports dated January 3, 1940, June 25, 1942, and March 29, 1944.

"The Daily People's World, the Communist journal on the west coast, listed Dr. Buell Gallagher as a member of the Draft Cross Committee, in connection with a move to draft Mayor Laurence L. Cross, of Berkeley, Calif., as candidate for Congress from the Seventh District of California. (See Daily People's World of January 28, 1948, p. 3.) In the February 17, 1948, issue of the Daily People's World (p. 3), we find that 'the committee originally formed to draft Mayor Laurence Cross for Congress has resolved to stay together in support of the candidacy of Dr. Buell G. Gallagher in the Seventh District.' According to Judge Louis J. Hardie, committee chairman, 'In Dr. Gallagher, we feel that we have found a congressional candidate who possesses those qualities of intelligence, integrity, and idealism which we admire in Dr. Cross. His deep acquaintance with social and economic problems and his broad experience in community activities insure the voters of the Seventh District a candidate who will honestly and ably serve them in the 81st Congress' (ibid).

"In the March 10, 1948, issue of the Daily People's World, we note that the 'Alameda County CIO Council voted endorsement last night for Dr. Buell Gallagher, pro-Wallace candidate for Congress in the Seventh District. Dr. Gallagher, endorsed previously by the AFL Central Labor Council and Building Trades Council, will run in the Democratic primary in June against Dyke Brown, the Truman candidate. Congressman from the Seventh District now is Republican John J. Allen, who voted for the Taft-Hartley law' (p. 3).

"Under date of February 10, 1951, Dr. Gallagher addressed a letter to the chairman of this committee detailing an analysis of the information reflected in the public files of the committee, and stating, 'at no time have I ever been a member of, or sympathizer with, the Communist Party; nor a member of, or sympathizer with, any organization which I knew or believed to be a front for communism.' The chairman, in a letter to Dr. Gallagher dated March 3, 1951, advised him that his analysis would be made a part of the committee records and quoted in any future releases."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Judge Hubert T. Delany (also spelled Delaney), national board of directors, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Hubert T. Delaney was a member of the Council on African Affairs, as shown in the following sources: Pamphlets entitled 'Africa in the War,' 'Seeing Is Believing' (1947), 'For a New Africa,' (p. 36), '8 Million Demand Freedom' (inside back cover); leaflets headed 'The Job To Be Done' and 'What of Africa's Place in Tomorrow's World' (June 26, 1944). New Africa for December 1943 (p. 4) and a letterhead of the council dated May 17, 1945, contained the same information. Mr. Walter S. Steele testified in public hearings before the Committee on Un-American Activities July 21, 1947 (p. 135), that Judge Delany was a member of the Council on African Affairs. According to the Daily Worker of March 29, 1948 (p. 7), Judge Hubert T. Delaney was a member of the executive board of the council. The Daily Worker of April 26, 1947 (p. 12), named him as having signed a statement issued by the council.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Council on African Affairs as subversive and Communist (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list released April 1, 1954).

"A 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers Guild, which was made available to the special Committee on Un-American Activities, contains the name of one Hobert T. Delany, 30 Broad Street, New York City. The name of Hubert T. Delany appeared on a letterhead of the guild dated May 28, 1940, as director ex officio. The New York Guild Lawyer for September 1950 listed him as vice president of the New York chapter of the guild. A list of officers of the National Lawyers Guild (as of December 1949) contains the name of the Honorable Hubert T. Delaney in a list of members of the organization's executive board; he is so named in a list dated May 1950. Both of these lists were printed in a report on the National Lawyers Guild, prepared and published by the Committee on Un-American Activities September 17, 1950.

"Convention News of May 1941 (pp. 2 and 4), issued by the fifth annual convention of the National Lawyers Guild which was held May 29–June 1, 1941, in Detroit, Mich., named Hubert T. Delany as a member of the convention resolutions committee; he was also named in the same source as a member of the national executive board, National Lawyers Guild. Judge Delaney presided at an annual convention of the guild in Chicago, Ill., in 1951 (Daily People's World, October 18, 1951, p. 2); he also spoke before the guild in 1951, as reported in the Daily Worker of April 10, 1951, page 5. In the latter three sources, he was identified with the domestic relations court of New York City.

"The Daily Worker of October 7, 1952 (p. 3), reported that Judge Delany was to lead a workshop at the national conference on civil rights legislation and discrimination to be held in New York City, October 10–12, under the auspices of the National Lawyers Guild; a letterhead of the New York City chapter of the guild dated October 17, 1952, listed Hubert T. Delany as vice president. The Daily Work of February 20, 1953 (p. 6), announced that he would speak at a panel session on civil rights and liberties, February 22, at the annual convention of the guild, February 20–23, in New York City. According to the Daily Worker of May 27, 1953 (p. 8), Hubert T. Delany was reelected vice president of the New York City chapter of the National Lawyers Guild at the annual membership meeting May 26. He was elected one of the vice presidents of the National Lawyers Guild, New York City chapter, for the years 1954–55, as reported in the Daily Worker of May 26, 1954 (p. 8).

"The National Lawyers Guild was cited as a Communist-front organization by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in report No. 1311 dated March 29, 1944. In a report on the guild, prepared and released September 17, 1950, by the Committee on Un-American Activities, it was shown that the National Lawyers Guild 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"Hubert T. Delany was a member of the Lawyers' Committee of the American League for Peace and Democracy, as shown on their letterhead dated April 6, 1939. The American League for Peace and Democracy was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General (press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948; consolidated list of April 1, 1954); he had previously cited the organization as 'established in the United States * * * in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the American league as 'the largest of the Communist-front movements in the United States' (report of January 3, 1940).

"The catalog of the George Washington Carver School (winter term, 1947) contains the name of Judge Hubert T. Delany as a member of the board of directors of that school, cited by the Attorney General as 'an adjunct in New York City of the Communist Party' (press release of December 4, 1947; included on consolidated list of April 1, 1954).

"Hubert T. Delany was named as a representative individual who advocated lifting the arms embargo against Spain in a booklet entitled 'These Americans Say,' which was prepared and published by the coordinating committee to lift the embargo, cited as one of the number of groups set up during the Spanish Civil War by the Communist Party in the United States and through which the party carried on a great deal of agitation. (From a report of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities dated March 29, 1944.)

"A letterhead of the Lawyers Committee on American Relations with Spain dated March 5, 1938, and a prospectus and review of the organization both name him as a member of that group.

"In a report dated March 29, 1944, the Special Committee on Un-American Activities had the following to say concerning the Lawyers' Committee on American Relations with Spain: 'When it was the policy of the Communist Party to organize much of its main propaganda around the civil war in Spain, the lawyers' committee * * * supported this movement.'

"A letterhead of the medical bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy dated July 6, 1938, contains the name of Judge Delany in a list of members of that group.

"During 1937 and 1938, the Communist Party wholeheartedly campaigned for support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and setting up so-called relief organizations such as the medical bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy. (From report No. 1311 of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities dated March 29, 1944.)

"Hubert T. Delany was one of the sponsors of a testimonial dinner in honor of Ferdinand C. Smith, Communist Party member and national secretary of the National Maritime Union; identified as tax commissioner, New York City, Judge Delany was listed by Labor Defender (issue of October 1935) as one of the individuals who signed a petition for the freedom of Angelo Herndon, a Communist."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Norman Cousins, national vice president, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be constructed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise inciated.

"In an article which appeared in the Daily Worker of January 13, 1948, it was reported that 'Thirty-five well-known authors, editors, clergymen, and other public figures today called on the new Federal Employees Loyalty Review Board to prevent injustices to individuals in the Government loyalty check.' Norman Cousins was one of those who signed the letter, addressed to Seth W. Richardson, board chairman. This article also appeared in the New York Times on the preceding day, January 12, 1948 (p. 10).

"In a report of the Committee on Un-American Activities entitled 'Review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace,' dated April 19, 1949, we find the following statement concerning a speech of Norman Cousins before that conference:

" 'In answer to this totalitarian philosophy of dragooning culture, Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review of Literature, declared amid a great deal of hissing and booing, that "Democracy must mean intellectual freedom, that it must protect the individual against the right of the state to draw political and cultural blueprints for its painters and writers and composers or to castigate them, or to enter into those matters of mind in which the individual is sovereign." ' (See p. 13 of the Review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference.)"

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. Algernon D. Black, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Dr. Algernon D. Black was one of the sponsors of the Cultural and Scientific Conference for World Peace, arranged by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, March 25–27, 1949 (conference program, p. 12, and conference call). The Daily Worker of February 21, 1949 (p. 2), announced that he was a member of the program committee of that conference. Speaking of peace, edited report of the conference, March 25, 26, 27, 1949, listed Algernon Black as a speaker on A Warning Against Sectarian Prejudice, and gave biographical data concerning him (pp. 121, 139).

"In 1948 and 1949, Dr. Black signed statements of the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions (Daily Worker, Dec. 29, 1948, p. 2; letterhead received in January 1949; New York Star of January 4, 1949, p. 9, an advertisement). He spoke before the group in February 1949 (Daily Worker, Feb. 28, 1949, p. 2).

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its Review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace arranged by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions and held in New York City on March 25, 26, and 27, 1949, April 26, 1950, cited the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions as a Communist-front organization. In this same report the Committee on Un-American Activities cited the scientific and cultural conference as actually a supermobilization of the inveterate wheelhorses and supporters of the Communist Party and its auxiliary organizations.

"The call to a national conference on American policy in China and the Far East, held in January 1948, included the name of Dr. Algernon Black in the list of sponsors (Call, January 23–25, 1948, New York City); the conference was called by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy. In the December 1949–January 1950 issue of Far East Spotlight, which is the official organ of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, Dr. Black answered a questionnaire issued by that committee, favoring recognition of the Chinese Communist government.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy as a Communist organization in a letter furnished the Loyalty Review Board and release to the press by the United States Civil Service Commission April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated.

"The Daily Worker of June 21, 1948, reported that Algernon D. Black had signed a statement of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, calling for a conference with the Soviet Union; he signed an appeal of the same organization to the U.S. Government to end the cold war and arrange a conference with the Soviet Union (leaflet entitled 'End the Cold War—Get Together for Peace' which was dated December 1948); he signed a statement in praise of Henry Wallace's open letter to Stalin (May 1948), as shown in the pamphlet How To End the Cold War and Build the Peace (p. 9), prepared and released by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

"The Attorney General cited the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 156), cited the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship as 'in recent months, the Communist Party's principal front for all things Russian.'

"Dr. Black contributed an article to the pamphlet We Hold These Truths (p. 22), which was issued by the League of American Writers. He was named as a member of the executive committee of Film Audiences for Democracy in the June 1939 issue of Film Survey, official organ of Film Audiences, cited as a Communist-front organization by the special Committee on Un-American Activities (report No. 1311 of March 29, 1944, p. 150).

"The Attorney General cited the League of American Writers as subversive and Communist in letters furnished the Loyalty Review Board and released to the press by the U.S. Civil Service Commission June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as 'founded under Communist auspices in 1935 * * * in 1939 * * * began openly to follow the Communist Party line as dictated by the foreign policy of the Soviet Union.' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7685 and 7686.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its reports of January 3, 1940 (p. 9), June 25, 1942 (p. 19), and March 29, 1944 (p. 48), cited the League of American Writers as a Communist-front organization.

"A letterhead of the nonpartisan committee for the reelection of Congressman Vito Marcantonio, dated October 3, 1936, listed the name of Algernon D. Black as a member of that committee. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated March 29, 1944 (p. 122), cited the nonpartisan committee for the reelection of Vito Marcantonio as a Communist-front organization.

"Algernon Black was a member of the advisory board of the American Student Union, as shown in a pamphlet entitled 'Presenting the American Student Union.' The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated January 3, 1939 (p. 80), cited the American Student Union as a Communist-front organization.

"A letterhead of the Veterans Against Discrimination of Civil Rights Congress of New York, dated May 11, 1946, listed the name of Algernon Black as one of the public sponsors of that organization. The Attorney General cited the Veterans Against Discrimination of Civil Rights Congress of New York as subversive in a letter released December 4, 1947; included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"Mr. Black signed an open letter of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, as shown in the booklet '600 Prominent Americans' (p. 16). The Attorney General cited the National Federation as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Attorney General cited the organization previously as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program.' The Special Commitee on Un-American Activities, in its reported dated March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the National Federation as among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"The printed program of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights, February 12, 1940, reveals the name of Algernon D. Black as vice chairman of the group. A letterhead of the American Russian Institute, received July 26, 1949, contains the name of Dr. Black as a member of the interchurch committee of that institute. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated March 29, 1944 (pp. 96 and 129), cited the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights as a Communist front organization. The Attorney General cited the American Russian Institute as a Communist organization in a letter released April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"Dr. Black was a member of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy (letterheads dated March 13, 1931, and February 21, 1938); and described as a representative individual in a booklet entitled "These Americans Say" which was published by the Coordinating Committee to Lift the (Spanish) Embargo. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated March 29, 1944 (p. 82), cited the American Friends of Spanish Democracy as a Communist front organization. The Coordinating Committee to Lift the (Spanish) Embargo was cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report dated March 29, 1944 (pp. 137 and 138), as one of a number of front organizations set up during the Spanish Civil War by the Communist Party in the United States and through which the party carried on a great deal of agitation.

"In a pamphlet entitled 'News You Don't Get' (dated Nov. 15, 1938), Algernon

Black was named as one of those who signed the call to a conference on pan-American democracy; a letterhead of the organization dated November 16, 1938, named him as one of the sponsors of the conference. The Attorney General cited the Conference on Pan-American Democracy as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated March 29, 1944 (pp. 161 and 164), cited the Conference on Pan-American Democracy as a Communist front organization.

"Algernon Black signed a declaration of the Reichstag Fire Trial Anniversary Committee honoring Dimitrov, as shown in the New York Times of December 22, 1943 (p. 40). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 112 and 156), cited the Reichstag Fire Trial Anniversary Committee as a Communist front organization.

"Dr. Black signed an open letter in defense of Harry Bridges. (See Daily Worker of July 19, 1942, p. 4.) Letterheads of the Citizens Victory Committee for Harry Bridges dated June 8, 1943, and January 10, 1944, listed Algernon Black as a committee member or sponsor of that group. The open letter in defense of Harry Bridges was cited as a Communist front organiation by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 87, 112, 129, 166). The Citizens' Committee for Harry Bridges was cited as Communist by the Attorney General in a letter released April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 90 and 94), cited the Citizens' Committee for Harry Bridges as a Communist front organization.

"The Daily Worker of March 29, 1951 (p. 9), reported that Dr. Algernon D. Black signed a letter of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born attacking the McCarran Act. Algernon D. Black was shown as a sponsor of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born in the Daily Worker, April 4, 1951 (p. 8), a leaflet: 'Call—Mass Meeting and Conference,' October 27, 1951, Dearborn, Mich., and a photostatic copy of an undated letterhead of the 20th anniversary national conference * * *, U. E. Hall, Chicago, Ill. (Dec. 8–9, 1951). The Daily Worker of August 10, 1950 (p. 5), reported that Dr. Algernon Black signed a statement of the American Committee Against Denaturalization.

"The Attorney General cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155), cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as 'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States.'

"On June 13, 1949, the Daily Worker reported that Dr. Black was one of the sponsors of an organization formed to oppose the Mundt-Nixon anti-Communist bill; a press release of the National Committee to Defeat the Mundt Bill, dated June 15, 1949, revealed the same information. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Committee to Defeat the Mundt bill dated January 2, 1951, cited that organization as 'a registered lobbying organization which has carried out the objectives of the Communist Party in its fight against antisubversive legislation.'

"A letterhead of the Voice of Freedom Committee dated June 16, 1947, listed Algernon D. Black as a sponsor of that organization. An invitation to a dinner held under the auspices of the group, January 21, 1948, listed him as a member of the dinner committee. He signed a petition of the organization as shown by a leaflet published by the Voice of Freedom Committee. The Attorney General included the Voice of Freedom Committee on his April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated.

"Algernon D. Black, New York Ethical Culture Society, signed an open letter of the Conference on Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact to Senators and Congressmen urging defeat of President Truman's arms program, as shown by a letterhead dated August 21, 1949.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Communist peace offensive, April 1, 1951 (p. 56), cited the Conference for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact as a meeting called by the Daily Worker in July 1949, to be held in Washington, D.C., and as having been instigated by Communists in the United States (who) did their part in the Moscow campaign.

"The Daily Worker of December 10, 1952 (p. 4), listed Dr. Algernon D. Black as a signer of an appeal to President Truman requesting amnesty for leaders of the Communist Party convicted under the Smith Act."

FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. Ralph Bunche, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this commmittee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Dr. Ralph Bunche was a member of the executive board of the Washington committee, Southern Conference for Human Welfare, as shown on their letterhead of June 4, 1947. The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Southern Conference for Human Welfare as a Communist-front organization in its report of March 29, 1944. In 1947 the Committee on Un-American Activities released a report on the conference, in which it was cited as a Communist-front organization which sought to 'attract southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South,' although its 'professed interest in southern welfare' was 'simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States' (Report No. 592 of June 12, 1947).

"Ralph Bunche was a sponsor of the Conference on Civil Rights of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action, April 20–21, 1940, as shown by the conference call, page 4. A letterhead of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action dated April 26, 1940, named Dr. Bunche as one of the sponsors of that group.

"The Washington Committee for Democratic Action was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The organization was redesignated by the Attorney General, April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included in the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The Attorney General had previously cited the group as an affiliate or local chapter of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7688 and 7689). The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the organization as successor in Washington to the American League for Peace and Democracy and an affiliate of the national federation (reports of June 25, 1942, and Mar. 29, 1944).

"Official proceedings of the National Negro Congress for 1936, pages 5 and 40, named Dr. Ralph Bunche, Washington, D.C., as a member of the presiding committee and a member of the national executive council of that organization.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the National Negro Congress as a Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes, and reported that 'the officers of the National Negro Congress are outspoken Communist sympathizers, and a majority of those on the executive board are outright Communists' (report of January 3, 1939). The Attorney General cited the National Negro Congress as a Communist-front organization (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688; press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; consolidated list of cited organizations, dated April 1, 1954).

"The Washington Post and Times Herald, May 29, 1954, p. 6, reported that 'A Federal loyalty board announced today that it has unanimously cleared Dr. Ralph J. Bunche of any and all charges,' the article quoted the official announcement as follows:

" 'The full board had its second meeting with Dr. Bunche yesterday following which it unanimously reached the conclusion that there is no doubt as to the loyalty of Dr. Bunche to the Government of the United States.

" 'This conclusion has been forwarded to the Secretary of State for transmittal to the Secretary General of the U.N. At the same time it has been informally transmitted to Dr. Bunche.'

"Reference to the loyalty board's clearance of Dr. Bunche is found also in the Washington Evening Star, May 28, 1954, p. A–1."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. H. Claude Hudson, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily People's World of May 2, 1947 (p. 8), listed Dr. H. Claude Hudson as a sponsor of the Los Angeles chapter of the Civil Rights Congress.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Civil Rights Congress as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The organization was redesignated by the Attorney General April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (pp. 2 and 19), cited the Civil Rights Congress as an organization formed in April 1946 as a merger of two other Communist-front organizations (International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties); 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it.' "

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Alfred Baker Lewis, national board of directors, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or finding of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"On July 11, 1942, the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties addressed an open letter to the President of the United States urging him to reconsider Attorney General Francis Biddle's order to deport Harry Bridges; the letter also stated that: 'It is equally essential that the Attorney General's ill-advised, arbitrary, and unwarranted findings relative to the Communist Party be rescinded.' Alfred Baker Lewis, executive board, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and executive board member, Union for Democratic Action, New York, N.Y., signed the open letter, as shown in the pamphlet entitled '600 Prominent Americans Ask President To Rescind Biddle Decision,' published September 11, 1942, by the National Federation of Constitutional Liberties and incorporating the open letter in full. The open letter, together with a list of individuals who signed it, appeared in the Daily Worker on July 19, 1942 (p. 4).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as 'Part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program,' and as subversive and Communist. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687; and press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948, respectively; also included in consolidated list released April 1, 1954.) The Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the federation as one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party (report of March 29, 1944; also cited in reports of June 25, 1942, and January 2, 1943). It was also cited by the Committee on Un-American Activities as intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law (Report No. 1115 of September 2, 1947).

"An undated letterhead of the League for Mutual Aid, 104 Fifth Avenue, New York City, contained the name of Alfred Baker Lewis in a list of members of the organization's advisory committee. The league was cited as a Communist enterprise by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in Report No. 1311 of March 29, 1944.

" 'Greetings and best wishes for success to the second national Negro congress' were contained in the printed annual program of that congress, sent by A. Philip Randolph, chairman, and Alfred Baker Lewis, secretary, Negro Work Committee of the Socialist Party. (Printed annual program, second national Negro congress, Philadelphia, Pa., October 15, 16, and 17, 1937, p. 61). The National Negro Congress was cited as an important sector of the democratic front, sponsored and supported by the Communist Party; and later, as subversive and Communist. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688; and press releases of December 4, 1947 and September 21, 1948; also included on consolidated list of April 1, 1954.) The Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Congress as the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes (report of January 3, 1939; also cited in reports of January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944)."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Dr. James J. McClendon, national board of directors, national health committee, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of March 18, 1945 (p. 2), and an undated leaflet, The Only Sound Policy for a Democracy, named Dr. James J. McClendon as one of the signers of a statement, sponsored by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, which supported the War Department's order on granting commissions to members of the Armed Forces who have been members of or sympathetic to the views of the Communist Party. Dr. McClendon was identified as president of the Detroit National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Dr. J. J. McClendon was one of the sponsors of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, as shown by the program, Action Conference for Civil Rights, held in Washington, D.C., April 19–20, 1941; and on letterheads dated September 11, 1940, and November 6, 1940.

"The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties was cited as subversive and Communist by the United States Attorney General in press releases dated December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also included in his consolidated list of April 1, 1954. The Attorney General described the organization as "part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities stated that 'There can be no reasonable doubt about the fact that the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties regardless of its high-sounding name—is one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party' (special committee report, March 29, 1944, p. 50); also cited in reports, June 25, 1942 (p. 20), and January 2, 1943 (pp. 9 and 12).

"Dr. James J. McClendon was named in the Daily Worker of March 16, 1942 (pp. 1 and 4), and on a letterhead dated April 2, 1942, as one of the sponsors of the National Free Browder Congress.

"The National Free Browder Congress was cited as a Communist front which arranged to meet March 28–29, 1942. Earl Browder was general secretary of the Communist Party, United States of America, who had been convicted and sentenced to Atlanta Federal Penitentiary for passport fraud. (Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, March 29, 1944 (pp. 69, 87, and 132.)

"Dr. James McClendon was one of the sponsors of the sesquicentennial bill of rights celebration, held under the auspices of the Michigan Civil Rights Federation, Detroit, Mich., December 1–2, 1939, as shown by the call of conference. Dr. James J. McClendon was one of the sponsors of a statewide conference, held under the auspices of the Michigan federation in Detroit, Mich., September 12, 1943, as shown by call of the conference. He was identified as president of the Detroit chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"The Michigan Civil Rights Federation was cited by the Attorney General of the United States as 'an affiliate of the Communist front, the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties; and as subversive and Communist organization which has been succeeded by and now operates as the Michigan chapter of the Civil Rights Congress' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687; and press releases of December 4, 1947, June 1 and September 21, 1948; also including in his consolidated list of organizations, dated April 1, 1954). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities and the Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Michigan Civil Rights Federation as a Communist-front organization. (From Report No. 1311 of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated March 29, 1944; and Report No. 1115 of the Committee on Un-American Activities, dated September 2, 1947, p. 3.)"

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: James Hinton, national board of directors, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"James M. Hinton, identified as president of the State conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for South Carolina, was one of the sponsors of a Congress on Civil Rights, as shown on the call to the congress which was held in Detroit, Mich., April 27–28, 1946. (See pp. 21 and 22 of Rept. No. 1115 of the Committee on Un-American Activities on the Civil Rights Congress, September 2, 1947.)

"The Civil Rights Congress was founded at a conference in Detroit April 27 and 28, 1946, effectuating the merger of the International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. The Civil Rights Congress was 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it' (pp. 2 and 19 of Rept. No. 1115).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Civil Rights Congress as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Theodore M. Berry, national board of directors, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers Guild which was made available to the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, March 1939, contains the name of Theodore M. Berry, 308 West Fifth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, as a member.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.' "

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Earl B. Dickerson, national board of directors, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"According to the Daily Worker of February 28, 1949 (p. 9), Earl Dickerson, attorney, Illinois, was one of the signers of a statement defending the 12 Communist leaders. He signed a statement in behalf of the attorneys in the Communist cases as shown by the July 31, 1950, issue of the Daily Worker (p. 9). This same information was shown in the February 1, 1950, issue of the Daily Worker (p. 3). As shown by the Daily People's World of May 12, 1950 (p. 12), Earl B. Dickerson was a signer of a statement to the United Nations in behalf of the Communist cases.

"Earl B. Dickerson protested approval of the Smith Act by the Supreme Court as 'having a disastrous impact upon * * * struggle of Negro people' (Daily Worker, October 1, 1951, p. 1). He filed a petition with the clerk of the United States Supreme Court supporting the pending application for a hearing on the constitutionality of the Smith Act as shown by the Daily Worker, October 4, 1951 (p. 15). Mr. Dickerson was identified in this source as a Negro attorney in Illinois. He spoke against the Smith Act according to the February 12, 1952 issue of the Daily People's World (p. 3), and was coauthor of a memorandum to the Supreme Court 'on the menace of the Smith Act to the Negro people' (Daily People's World, July 15, 1952, p. 1). Earl B. Dickerson, president, National Lawyers Guild, Chicago, was a signer of an appeal to President Truman requesting amnesty for leaders of the Communist Party convicted under the Smith Act (Daily Worker, December 10, 1952, p. 4). As shown by the Daily Worker, December 29, 1953 (p. 8) and the Worker, January 3, 1954 (p. 6), Earl B. Dickerson was one of 39 prominent Midwest citizens signing a plea for Christmas amnesty for Communist leaders convicted under the Smith Act, which was wired to President Eisenhower. He was one of the initiators of an appeal for reduced bail for Claude Lightfoot, Illinois Communist leader, indicated under a section of the Smith Act as shown by the September 12, 1954, issue of the Worker (p. 16).

"According to the December 25, 1952 issue of the Daily Worker (p. 8), Earl D. Dickerson was a signer of an open letter to President Truman asking clemency for the Rosenbergs. The Daily People's World of March 13, 1953 (p. 3), reported that Earl B. Dickerson contributed a statement to the pamphlet, The Negro People Speak Out on the Rosenbergs, distributed by volunteers for the East Bay Committee To Save the Rosenbergs, Oakland, California.

"Earl B. Dickerson was a signer of an appeal to the Greek Government protesting the court marital of Greek maritime unionists as shown by the Daily Worker, August 19, 1952 (p. 1).

"Earl B. Dickerson was listed in the spring 1943 (p. 22) and fall session 1943 (p. 27) catalogs of the Abraham Lincoln School as a member of the board of directors. He was named in the same source as a guest lecturer at the school (p. 19).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Abraham Lincoln School as an adjunct of the Communist Party in a letter to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947. The Attorney General redesignated the school April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 82), cited the Abraham Lincoln School as successor of the Workers School as a Communist educational medium in Chicago.

"A pamphlet entitled 'For a New Africa' (containing the proceedings of the conference on Africa, New York, April 14, 1944) names Earl B. Dickerson as a member of the National Negro Congress.

"The National Negro Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist-front group (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes.'

"He was a member of the Council on African Affairs, as shown in a pamphlet entitled 'Eight Million Demand Freedom,' and the pamphlet For a New Africa (p. 36). Earl B. Dickerson is listed as a member of the Council on African Affairs in a leaflet, issued by the organization, The Job To Be Done, a leaflet entitled 'What of Africa's Place in Tomorrow's World?' a pamphlet entitled 'Seeing Is Believing' (1947), and a letterhead of the group, dated May 17, 1945, and a pamphlet, Africa in the War.

"The Attorney General cited the Council on African Affairs as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"The name of Earl Dickerson, of 35 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., appears on a 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers' Guild on file with this committee. In 1949 he was president of the Chicago chapter of the guild and chairman at a meeting on anti-Communist legislation, as shown in the Daily Worker of March 15, 1949 (p. 6); in the same year he attacked the Marshall plan as shown in the Daily Worker of July 19, 1949 (p. 5), in which source he was identified as president of the Chicago chapter of the guild; he participated in a discussion entitled 'Status of Civil Liberties' fifth annual convention, National Lawyers' Guild, Book-Cadillac Hotel, Detroit, Mich., May 29–June 1, 1941, as shown by the convention program printed in Convention News, May 1941 (p. 2), published by the guild. This same Convention News (pp. 3 and 4) listed him as a member of the convention nominations committee of the fifth national convention of the National Lawyers' Guild. He submitted a report of the guild, denouncing lynching and discrimination, as shown in the Daily Worker, November 30, 1942 (p. 1). As shown by the October 15, 1951, issue of the Daily Worker (p. 1), Earl B. Dickerson was president of the Chicago chapter of the National Lawyers' Guild; he spoke at the national convention of the organization in Chicago. The October 18, 1951, issue of the Daily People's World (p. 2), reported that Earl B. Dickerson was elected president of the National Lawyers' Guild. He was shown as president of the National Lawyers' Guild in the Daily Worker, January 25, 1952 (p. 1), and February 20, 1953 (p. 6), and the Daily People's World, January 25, 1952 (p. 8). The January 18, 1952, issue of the Daily People's World (p. 3) reported that Earl B. Dickerson was to speak on the Smith Act, the Constitution, and You, at a gathering of the San Francisco chapter of the National Lawyers' Guild on February 1, 1952. The Daily Worker of February 24, 1953 (p. 6), reported that Earl Dickerson, president of the National Lawyers' Guild, addressed the annual convention of the group held February 20–23, at the Park-Sheraton Hotel, New York City, and stated that 'a new foreign policy is needed if the drive against liberties is to be halted.' The Daily People's World of July 6, 1953 (p. 3), announced that he was to be honored by the Los Angeles-Hollywood chapter of the National Lawyers' Guild at a luncheon. The Daily Worker of August 28, 1953 (p. 2), reported that Earl B. Dickerson, president of the National Lawyers' Guild, issued a statement opposing the American Bar Association's call for disbarment of Communist lawyers. As shown by the September 6, 1953, issue of the Worker (p. 6), Earl Dickerson protested the placing of the National Lawyers' Guild on the list of subversive organizations by the Attorney General.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers' Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Nations Lawyers' Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the group as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"One Earl Dickerson (with no middle initial shown) spoke at the morning session of the Congress on Civil Rights which was held in Detroit, Mich., April 27–28, 1946, as shown in the program, Congress on Civil Rights (p. 1); Earl B. Dickerson signed a statement of the Civil Rights Congress which was in defense of Gerhart Eisler, according to the Daily Worker of February 28, 1947 (p. 2); he was one of the sponsors of the National Emergency Conference for Civil Rights which was held in New York City on July 19, 1948, according to the Daily Worker of July 12, 1948 (p. 4); a photostat of a letterhead of the Civil Right Congress, Illinois, dated December 18, 1948, listed Earl Dickerson as a sponsor. As shown by the Daily Worker of November 1, 1950 (p. 4), Earl B. Dickerson was a sponsor of the Civil Rights Congress. A handbill, 'Dodge Local 3 Supports FEPC Rally,' listed Earl B. Dickerson as one of those who would speak at a rally to be held under partial auspices of the Civil Rights Congress of Michigan on April 16, 1950.

"The Attorney General cited the Civil Rights Congress as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (pp. 2 and 19), cited the Civil Rights Congress as an organization formed in April 1946 as a merger of two other Communist-front organizations (International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties); 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it.'

"According to the printed program of the Cultural and Scientific Conference for World Peace (p. 14), Earl B. Dickerson was one of the sponsors of this conference which was held in New York City, March 27–27, 1949, under the auspices of the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions; he signed a statement of the council which was reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 14, 1949 (p. 9620). Earl B. Dickerson was a signer of a Resolution Against Atomic Weapons as shown by a mimeographed list of signers attached to a letterhead of the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions dated July 28, 1950. Mr. Dickerson signed a statement to the American people, 'We uphold the right of all citizens to speak for peace' released by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, as shown by the handbill, 'Halt the Defamers Who Call Peace Un-American', He spoke at a conference on equal rights for Negroes in the arts held by the New York Council of the National Council of the Arts, New York City, November 10, 1951, according to the November 7, 1951 (p. 3) and November 14, 1951 (p. 7), issues of the Daily Worker. The Daily Worker of June 2, 1952 (p. 3), listed Earl B. Dickerson as one of the endorsers of the national council resolution calling for a hearing on Tunisia's demands in the United Nations. He spoke at a conference for equal rights for Negroes in the Arts, Sciences, and Professions held by the Southern California Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, on June 14, 1952, in Los Angeles (Daily Worker, June 20, 1952, p. 7).

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its Review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace, April 19, 1949 (p. 2), cited the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions as a Communist-front organization. In this same report the committee cited the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace as a Communist front which 'was actually a supermobilization of the inveterate wheelhorses and supporters of the Communist Party and its auxiliary organizations.'

"Earl B. Dickerson was a national sponsor of the Spanish Refugee Appeal of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, as shown by letterheads of the group dated February 26, 1946, February 3, 1948, May 18, 1951, and January 5, 1953. He signed an open letter of the organization to President Truman on Franco Spain as shown by a letterhead and mimeographed letter of April 28, 1949. He signed a petition of the Spanish Refugee Appeal of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee to President Truman 'to bar military aid to or alliance with fascist Spain' as shown by a mimeographed petition, attached to a letterhead of the group dated May 18, 1951.

"The Attorney General cited the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 174), cited the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee as a Communist-front organization.

"Mr. Dickerson was chairman of the Illinois Legislative and Defense Committee of the International Labor Defense, as shown in Equal Justice, September, 1939 (p. 3). He spoke before the International Labor Defense, together with Earl Browder, according to the Daily Worker of October 1, 1942 (p. 5); October 6, 1942 (p. 5); and October 11, 1942 (p. 3). The pamphlet Victory in Oklahoma, October 1943, back cover, listed Earl B. Dickerson as a member of the National Committee of the International Labor Defense.

"The Attorney General cited the International Labor Defense as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as the 'legal arm of the Communist Party,' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687). The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (pp. 1 and 2), cited the International Labor Defense as 'part of an international network of organizations for the defense of Communist lawbreakers.'

"Earl B. Dickerson was a speaker at the Conference on Constitutional Liberties, the founding conference of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, as shown in the printed program, Call to a Conference, page 2, June 7, 1940.

"The Attorney General cited the Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America as a conference as a result of which was established the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 102), cited the conference as 'an important part of the solar system of the Communist Party's front organizations.'

"The program and call to a national conference of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born, held in Cleveland, Ohio, October 25 and 26, 1947, listed Earl B. Dickerson as one of the sponsors of the conference; he was one of the sponsors of the sixth national conference, which was held in Cleveland, May 9 and 10, 1942, as shown in a leaflet of the conference, page 4. In the latter source, Mr. Dickerson was identified as a member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices. Earl Dickerson was a sponsor of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as shown by a 1950 letterhead, an undated letterhead (received for files, July 11, 1950), an undated letterhead (distributing a speech of Abner Green at the conference of the American Committee for Protection of the Foreign Born of December 2–3, 1950), and a letterhead of the Midwest Committee for Protection of Foreign Born (April 30, 1951). Mr. Dickerson, identified as president of the Chicago Urban League, was a sponsor of a dinner given by the Midwest Committee for the Protection of Foreign Born for Pearl Hart (Daily Worker, Apr. 6, 1950, p. 4). A letterhead of the sixth annual conference of the Midwest Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born dated May 16, 1954, Chicago, listed Earl B. Dickerson as a sponsor.

"The Attorney General cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155), cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as 'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States.'

"In 1942 Earl B. Dickerson was a patron of the Congress of American-Soviet Friendship, as shown on a letterhead of the congress, dated October 27, 1942; he was named in Soviet Russia Today (December 1942 issue, p. 42) as one of the sponsors of the Congress of American-Soviet Friendship; the call to the Congress of American-Soviet Friendship, November 6–8, 1943, listed Earl B. Dickerson among the sponsors. He signed a statement of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, praising Wallace's open letter to Stalin, May 1948, as shown in a pamphlet, How To End the Cold War and Build the Peace, page 9. He was identified in the last-named source as an attorney at law, Chicago. A photostatic copy of a letterhead of the Chicago Council of American-Soviet Friendship dated September 17, 1951, listed Earl B. Dickerson as a sponsor of that group. A photostat of a letter of the national council dated March 19, 1952, listed Mr. Dickerson as a sponsor.

"The Attorney General cited the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 156), cited the National Council as 'in recent months, the Communist Party's principal front for all things Russian.'

"The Daily Worker of October 21, 1942 (p. 1), named Earl B. Dickerson among the list of members of the National Emergency Committee To Stop Lynching. He signed an appeal to lift the Spanish embargo, which appeal was made by the Negro People's Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy, according to the Daily Worker of February 8, 1939 (p. 2). He contributed to the June 22, 1943, issue of New Masses (p. 9). He signed a petition of the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder, as shown in an official leaflet of the organization.

"The National Emergency Committee To Stop Lynching was cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Negro Communist-front organization, whose secretary was Ferdinand C. Smith, high in the circles of the Communist Party (report, March 29, 1944, p. 180).

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 180), cited the Negro People's Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy as a Communist-front organization.

"New Masses was cited as a Communist periodical by the Attorney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7688), and the Special Committee on Un-American Activities (report, Mar. 29, 1955, pp. 48 and 75).

"The Citizens' Committee To Free Earl Browder was cited as Communist by the Attorney General in a letter dated April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist organization (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 6 and 55), cited the Citizens' Committee To Free Earl Browder as follows: When Earl Browder (then general secretary, Communist Party) was in Atlanta Penitentiary serving a sentence involving his fraudulent passports, the Communist Party's front which agitated for his release was known as the Citizens' Committee To Free Earl Browder.

"An open letter demanding discharge of Communist Party defendants in Fulton and Livingston Counties contained the name of Earl B. Dickerson in the list of persons who signed according to the Daily Worker of September 24, 1940, page 5. He was attorney for Eugene Dennis, general secretary, Communist Party, as shown in the Daily Worker of November 19, 1947, page 7, being identified in this source as a former member of the city council, Chicago. Reference to Earl Dickerson as attorney for Eugene Dennis appears in the Worker, November 30, 1947, page 4; the Daily Worker of January 15, 1948, page 5; and the Daily Worker of October 27, 1948, page 10, in which source he is identified as a Negro leader, of Chicago.

"Earl B. Dickerson was a sponsor of the American Peace Crusade, Illinois assembly, as shown by a letterhead dated April 12, 1951, the Illinois Peace Crusade, May 1951 (p. 4), and a photostat of a letterhead dated June 21, 1952. He was a sponsor of the American People's Congress and Exposition for Peace, held by the American Peace Crusade in Chicago, Ill., June 29, 30, and July 1, 1951, as shown by a leaflet, An Invitation to American Labor To Participate in a Peace Congress, the Call to the American People's Congress, and the leaflet, American People's Congress * * * Invites You To Participate in a National Peace Competition, June 20, 1951, Chicago, Ill. He was a sponsor of a contest held by the American Peace Crusade for songs, essays, and paintings advancing the theme of world peace as reported in the Daily Worker, May 1, 1951 (p. 11).

"The Attorney General included the American Peace Crusade on his January 22, 1954, list of organizations designated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its statement issued on the March of Treason, February 19, 1951, and report on the Communist Peace Offensive April 1, 1951 (p. 51), cited the American Peace Crusade as an organization which the Communists established as a new instrument for their peace offensive in the United States and which was heralded by the Daily Worker with the usual bold headlines reserved for projects in line with the Communist objectives.

"Masses and Mainstream for February 1952 (pp. 52–56) listed Earl B. Dickerson as coauthor of an amici curiae brief to the Supreme Court supporting an appeal for a rehearing of its decision upholding the Smith Act, dated September 27, 1951.

"According to the April 30, 1950, issue of the Worker (p. 15), Earl B. Dickerson was a sponsor of the Midcentury Conference for Peace, cited by the Committee on Un-American Activities as a meeting held in Chicago, May 29 and 30, 1950, by the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact and as having been 'aimed at assembling as many gullible persons as possible under Communist direction and turning them into a vast sounding board for Communist propaganda' (report on Communist peace offensive, Apr. 1, 1951, p. 58).

"Earl B. Dickerson was a sponsor of the National Committee To Defeat the Mundt Bill as shown by the pamphlet, Hey, Brother, There's a Law Against You (p. 2); a release of June 15, 1949 (p. 2), and a photostat of a letterhead dated May 5, 1950. He signed a statement of the organization according to the Daily Worker of April 3, 1950 (p. 4).

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Committee To Defeat the Mundt Bill, December 7, 1950, cited the organization as 'a registered lobbying organization which has carried out the objectives of the Communist Party in its fight against antisubversive legislation.'

"Earl B. Dickerson signed a letter defending the 12 Communist leaders, as shown on a letterhead, dated January 7, 1949; he later signed a statement asking for the release of the Communist leaders, as shown in the Daily Worker of November 8, 1949 (p. 6). He signed a brief on behalf of the attorneys who represented the Communist leaders, as shown in the Daily Worker of November 2, 1949 (p. 2); he signed a statement on behalf of the attorneys, as shown in the Daily Worker of December 7, 1949 (p. 5); he represented the attorneys who represented the 11 Communist leaders, according to the Daily Worker of January 24, 1950 (p. 3)."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Benjamin E. Mays, national board of directors, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker, March 4, 1948 (p. 2), named Benjamin E. Mays as one of the signers of a letter in behalf of Communist deportation cases, which was sponsored by the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born. A letterhead of the group contained his name as one of the sponsors (letterhead December 11 and 12, 1948).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born as subversive and Communist in letters furnished the Loyalty Review Board and released to the press by the U.S. Civil Service Commission June 1 and September 21, 1948. The group was redesignated by the Attorney General April 29, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 155), cited the committee as 'one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States.'

"Benjamin E. Mays, president, Morehouse College, was a member of the initiating committee for a Congress on Civil Rights which was held in Detroit, April 27 and 28, 1946. (See, Urgent Summons to a Congress on Civil Rights.) He was an honorary national chairman of the Civil Rights Congress, New York, as shown by an undated letterhead concerning a conference held October 11, 1947. He signed a call for a national conference of the Civil Rights Congress to be held in Chicago (Daily Worker, Oct. 21, 1947, p. 5).

"The Civil Rights Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The group was redesignated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (pp. 2 and 19), cited the Civil Rights Congress as an organization formed in April 1946 as a merger of two other Communist-front organizations (International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties); 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it.'

"Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president, Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., signed a statement by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship in praise of Wallace's open letter to Stalin, May 1948 (pamphlet, How To End the Cold War and Build the Peace, p. 9). A leaflet, 'End the Cold War—Get Together for Peace' (December 1948), named Benjamin E. Mays as one of the signers of the National Council's appeal to the U.S. Government to end the cold war and arrange a conference with the Soviet Union. He was a member of the Sponsoring Committee of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Committee on Education, as shown by a bulletin of the group, dated June 1945 (p. 22).

"The National Council of American-Soviet Friendship was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The group was redesignated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 156), cited the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship as 'in recent months, the Communist Party's principal front for all things Russian. * * *'

"Dr. Mays signed an open letter sponsored by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties denouncing U.S. Attorney General Biddle's charges against Harry Bridges (Daily Worker, July 19, 1942, p. 4); booklet, 'Six Hundred Prominent Americans,' p. 25). He also signed a statement sponsored by this organization hailing the War Department's order on commissions for the Communists, as shown by the Daily Worker, March 18, 1945 (p. 2).

"The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The group was redesignated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The group was cited previously by the Attorney General as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687). The special committee, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the federation as one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the federation as among a maze of organizations which were spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.

"Letterheads, dated June 12, 1947, and August 11, 1947, of the Southern Negro Youth Congress, list Dr. Mays as a member of the advisory board. A leaflet of the organization (exhibit 46, public hearings, July 22, 1947, Steele) also contained the name of Dr. Benjamin Mays.

"The Southern Negro Youth Congress was cited as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, U. S. A., which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means by the Attorney General in a letter released December 4, 1947. The group was redesignated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450. The special committee in its report of January 3, 1940 (p. 9), cited the organization as a Communist front. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of April 17, 1947 (p. 14), cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as surreptitiously controlled by the Young Communist League.

"The Daily Worker, April 27, 1947 (p. 24), reported that Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, Georgia, signed a statement against the ban on the Communist Party. He signed a statement against the North Atlantic Pact, according to the Daily Worker of June 28, 1949 (p. 2). He spoke at a conference on 'Jim Crow in the Nation's Capital' (Daily Worker, December 21, 1950, p. 8)."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: A. T. Walden, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of October 7, 1952 (p. 3), reported that A. T. Walden, Georgia, was to lead the National Lawyers Guild workshop discussions at a national conference on civil rights, legislation, and discrimination, New York City, October 10, 11, and 12.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in 'ts report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the group as a Communist front which is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party; its front organizations and controlled unions and which since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.

"A mimeographed letter addressed to the House of Representatives, May 12, 1948, included a list of signers opposing the Mundt anti-Communist bill. Austin T. Walden, Georgia, was one of those signers."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Arthur D. Shores, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"According to letterheads of the Southern Negro Youth Congress, dated June 12 and August 11, 1947, Arthur D. Shores was a member of the advisory board of this organization. A page from an undated leaflet of the organization also listed Mr. Shores as a member of the advisory board. Arthur Shores, Negro attorney, was associated with Nesbitt Elmore in the defense of Senator Glen H. Taylor, of Idaho, who was fined $50 and ordered a 180-day suspended jail sentence for defying Birmingham's segregation laws at a meeting of the Southern Negro Youth Congress in Alabama (Daily Worker, May 6, 1948, p. 4).

"The Southern Negro Youth Congress was cited by the Committee on Un-American Activities as 'surreptitiously controlled' by the Young Communist League (report 271, Apr. 17, 1947, p. 14). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated January 3, 1940, page 9, cited the Congress as a Communist front. The Attorney General of the United States cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, United States of America, which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means (letter furnished the Loyalty Review Board, released to the press by the United States Civil Service Commission, Dec. 4, 1947); the Attorney General redesignated the congress pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450 of April 27, 1953, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated.

"Arthur D. Shores, prominent Negro attorney, told the Daily Worker that 'outlawing the Communist Party would "pave the way for a one-party dictatorship in this country"' (Daily Worker, March 19, 1947, p. 5).

"The Worker for December 14, 1947 (p. 8, southern edition), reported that Arthur Shores, identified as a leading Negro civil-rights lawyer, was assisting in the case of Mrs. Ruby Jackson Gainor, 'outstanding Negro teacher fired by the Jefferson County Board of Education. * * * Mrs. Jackson is the leading petitioner in contempt-of-court proceedings against the board for its refusal to equalize salaries of Negro teachers in accord with a Federal court decree * * *.' The article, which identified Mrs. Gainor as president of the Birmingham teachers' local of the United Public Workers, also reported: 'The outcome of Mrs. Gainor's case has become the keystone of the fight of all the Negro teachers in Jefferson County for equal pay. The United Public Workers nationally is supporting the fight * * *."

It is noted that the United Public Workers of America was formed in 1946 by a merger of the State, County, and Municipal Workers of America and the United Federal Workers of America. Both of these unions were cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 18 and 19), as among the CIO unions in which the committee found Communist leadership strongly entrenched. The Congress of Industrial Organizations, by vote of the executive board, February 15, 1950, expelled the United Public Workers of America, effective March 1, 1950, on charges of Communist domination (press release, 12th CIO convention, November 20–24, 1950)."

OCTOBER 13, 1955.

"Subject: Lloyd Garrison, chairman, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Lloyd K. Garrison was a member of the National Committee of the International Judicial Association according to a letterhead of the organization dated May 18, 1942, and the leaflet, "What is the I. J. A.?" Lloyd K. Garrison, dean, University of Wisconsin Law School, commended the International Juridical Association bulletin in that pamphlet.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report dated March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the International Juridical Association as a 'Communist front and offshoot of the International Labor Defense.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950 (p. 12), cited the International Juridical Association as an organization which 'actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line.'

"The Daily Worker for March 18, 1945 (p. 2), and an undated leaflet, 'The only sound policy for a Democracy,' listed Lloyd K. Garrison, National War Labor Board, as one of the signers of a statement sponsored by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties hailing the War Department order on commissions for the Communists. A photograph of Mr. Garrison is found in the Daily Worker reference.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948. The Attorney General redesignated the organization April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program * * *' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7687). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"Lloyd K. Garrison, Madison, Wis., former Chairman of NLRB, was listed as a member of the Committee on Legal Research and Legal Education of the National Lawyers Guild and his book was reviewed in the newsletter of the National Lawyers Guide, July 1937 (pp. 2–3). Convention News, May 1941 (pp. 3 and 4) published by the National Lawyers Guild for the fifth annual convention, listed Lloyd K. Garrison as a member of the convention nominations committee of the fifth annual convention, Book-Cadillac Hotel, Detroit, Mich., May 29 to June 1, 1941.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.

"The pamphlet of the Second National Negro Congress, October 1937, listed Lloyd Garrison as one of those who sent greetings to the congress.

"'The Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes is known as the National Negro Congress. * * * The officers of the National Negro Congress are outspoken Communist sympathizers, and a majority of those on the executive board are outright Communists' (Special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, January 3, 1939, p. 81; also cited in reports, January 3, 1940, p. 9; June 25, 1942, p. 20; and March 29, 1944, p. 180). The Attorney General cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The Attorney General cited the organization previously as a Communist-front organization as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 24, 1942 (pp. 7687 and 7688).

"The Daily Worker for February 23, 1939 (p. 3) reported that Lloyd Garrison spoke at a conference of the Wisconsin Conference on Social Legislation, Madison, Wis., February 18, 1939. The Attorney General cited the Wisconsin Conference on Social Legislation as subversive and Communist in letters released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Sidney A. Jones, national legal committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Sidney A. Jones, attorney, was an endorser of the National Negro Congress as shown on the call for National Negro Congress, in Chicago, Ill., February 14, 1936.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7687–7688). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'The Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes. * * *'

"It was reported in the Daily People's World of December 2, 1947 (p. 4), that Sidney A. Jones, Jr., was vice president of the Chicago Chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, and was further identified as being associated with the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, Urban League, Chicago. Mr. Jones was shown as an executive board member of the National Lawyers Guild from Chicago as of December 1949 and May 1950 in the Committee on Un-American Activities report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950 (pp. 18–19).

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the group as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"The Daily Worker of April 3, 1950 (p. 4), listed Sidney A. Jones, attorney, Chicago, Ill., as one who signed a statement of the National Committee To Defeat the Mundt Bill. A photostat of a letterhead of the National Committee To Defeat the Mundt Bill (Chicago chapter), dated May 5, 1950, listed Sidney A. Jones as a Chicago sponsor of the organization.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Committee to Defeat the Mundt Bill, December 7, 1950, cited the organization as 'a registered lobbying organization which has carried out the objectives of the Communist Party in its fight against antisubversive legislation.'

"Sidney Jones, vice president of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, sent greetings to Paul Robeson according to the Daily Worker of April 29, 1947 (p. 12). He signed Labor Day greetings to the Daily People's World, which appeared in the August 29, 1947 (p. 4), issue of that paper; signed statement by Negro Americans, in behalf of arrested Communist leaders (the Worker of August 29, 1948, p. 11); and he signed a statement on release of Communist leaders, and was identified as a Negro attorney in Chicago as noted in the Daily Worker of November 8, 1949 (p. 6).

"The Daily Worker of December 25, 1952 (p. 8), listed Sidney Jones, attorney, Chicago, as a signer of an open letter to President Truman asking clemency for the Rosenbergs."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: W. Robert Ming, Jr., national legal committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"An election campaign letter of the National Lawyers Guild, dated May 18, 1940, listed Robert W. Ming, Jr., as the candidate for delegate to the national convention, Washington, D.C., chapter. Robert Ming, Jr., Washington, D.C., was a member of the convention nominations committee, fifth annual convention of the National Lawyers Guild, Book-Cadillac Hotel, Detroit, Mich., May 29 to June 1, 1941.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"A 1941 membership list of the Washington Book Shop listed Robert W. Ming, Jr., Howard University, Washington, D.C., as a member.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Washington Book Shop Association as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously cited. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist-front (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7688). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 150), cited the Washington Book Shop Association as a Communist-front organization."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Arthur J. Mandell, national legal committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The News Letter of the National Lawyers Guild, July 1937 (p. 2), named Arthur Mandell, Houston, Tex., as a member of the Guild's committee on American citizenship, immigration, and naturalization; and a copy of the 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers Guild, made available to the special Committee on Un-American Activities by the organization, contained the name of Arthur Mandel, Shell Building, Houston, Tex.

"The National Lawyers Guild was cited as a Communist front by the special Committee on Un-American Activities (report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 149); and it was the subject of a separate report by the Committee on Un-American Activities (H. Rept. No. 3123, Sept. 21, 1950), wherein it was cited as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"Arthur J. Mandell, attorney, Houston, Tex., was shown in the Call to the First Congress of the Mexican and Spanish American Peoples of the United States, March 24–26, 1939, Albuquerque, N. Mex., as one of the signers of that Call. The Congress of the Mexican and Spanish American Peoples * * * was cited as a Communist front by the special Committee on Un-American Activities (report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 120).

"A leaflet, attached to an undated letterhead of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, named Arthur J. Mandell, attorney, Houston, Tex., as a signer of the organization's January 1943 message to the House of Representatives. The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties has been cited as being subversive and Communist (Attorney General letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also redesignated by the Attorney General pursuant to Executive Order 10450, see consolidated list, April 1, 1954); as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program' (Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687); as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party' (special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 50; also cited in reports, June 25, 1942, and Jan. 2, 1943); and as being among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law' (Committee on Un-American Activities, report, Sept. 2, 1947, p. 3).

"Arthur Mandell was a member of the resolutions committee at the Congress on Civil Rights in Detroit, Mich., April 27–28, 1946, as shown by a mimeographed release issued by the congress; and Arthur J. Madell, Houston, was listed as a sponsor of the National Conference of the Civil Rights Congress in Chicago, November 21–23, 1947, in the printed program, Let Freedom Ring. The Civil Rights Congress has been cited as a subversive and Communist organization by the Attorney General (letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; also redesignated, see consolidated list, April 1, 1954; and, as an organization formed in April 1946 by merger of two other Communist-front organizations (International Labor Defense and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties), 'dedicated not to the broader issues of civil liberties, but specifically to the defense of individual Communists and the Communist Party,' and 'controlled by individuals who are either members of the Communist Party or openly loyal to it" (Committee on Un-American Activities, House Report No. 1115, Sept. 2, 1947, pp. 2 and 19)."

"OCTOBER 26, 1955.

"Subject: Robert W. Kenny, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Reference to Robert W. Kenny is found in the appendix to this committee's public hearings regarding communism in the United States Government, part 2, September 1950 (pp. 2991–2992), as follows:

" 'Robert W. Kenny: Kenny, attorney general of State of California during the years 1943–47 and president of the National Lawyers Guild during the years 1940–48, has been associated with the defense of a number of Communist cases. He was also one of the attorneys for the Hollywood 10. He sent greetings to the Biennial National Conference of the International Labor Defense held April 4–6, 1941; this organization was cited by the former Attorney General Francis Biddle as the 'legal arm of the Communist Party.'

" 'The American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born has specialized in the legal defense of foreign-born Communists such as Gerhard Eisler. Kenny was a sponsor of its national conference held in Ohio on October 25–26, 1947, and again in 1950. He spoke in behalf of Communists held for deportation, according to the Daily People's World, Communist publication, dated March 8, 1948.

" 'On repeated occasions, Mr. Kenny has attacked the trial of the 11 Communist leaders convicted for teaching and advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence, particularly as reported by the Daily People's World of July 22, 1948, and the Worker of October 30, 1949.

" 'He signed a statement in behalf of arrested leaders of the Communist Party of Los Angeles, according to the Daily Worker of October 19, 1949, and the Daily People's World of November 7, 1949. Statements opposing the outlawing or restricting of the Communist Party have been signed by Robert W. Kenny and have appeared frequently in the Communist press. Mr. Kenny has opposed Government loyalty procedures on various occasions.

" 'On the eve of the 1947 May Day celebration, Pravda, the official newspaper of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, hailed Robert W. Kenny as a "friend of the Soviet Union in the United States." Another Communist government, namely that of China, selected Mr. Kenny to defend its legal interests, according to the Daily People's World of April 26, 1950 (p. 4).

" 'Robert W. Kenny has a number of affiliations and associations with Communist-front organizations. These include the American Youth for Democracy (formerly known as the Young Communist League), the National Committee To Win the Peace, of which he was vice chairman, Civil Rights Congress, Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, American Committee for Yugoslav Relief, Hollywood League for Democratic Action, California Labor School, Lawyers Committee on American Relations With Spain, Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, and the American Slav Congress.'

"Subsequent to this committee's release which contained the above reference to Robert W. Kenny, he had served as counsel for 66 witnesses before this committee."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Milton R. Konvitz, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

A membership list of the National Lawyers Guild contains the name of Milton Konvitz, 744 Broad Street, Newark, N. J. (List in committee files.) The National Lawyers Guild was cited as a Communist-front organization by the special Committee on Un-American Activities (report, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 149). The organization was cited as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents' (Committee on Un-American Activities, report on the National Lawyers Guild, Sept. 21, 1950)."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Loren Miller, national vice president and national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"One Loren Miller, 837 East 24th Street, Los Angeles, Calif., was a signer of Communist Party election petition No. 120 in California in 1932.

"An article entitled 'Why I Will Vote "Red"' written by Loren Miller appeared in the Daily Worker of July 11, 1932 (p. 4). In a note which accompanies this article, the following information is given concerning the author: 'Loren Miller, until recently city editor of the California Eagle, Los Angeles, Calif., largest and oldest of western Negro newspapers, is now en route to the Soviet Union.' Excerpts from this article follow:

"I regret very much that I will not be present to take an active part in the struggle that Negroes must wage to pile up a huge vote for William Z. Foster and James W. Ford, Communist candidates for President and Vice President.

* * * * *

"It must be evident to anybody who thinks through the things about which I have been talking that the Communist Party is our party. It is fighting our fights, warring against our enemies, struggling for our welfare. Commonsense dictates that we should support our party with every means at hand."

Loren Miller wrote an article for the Daily Worker while he was traveling in the Soviet Union with a group of Negro writers, workers, etc., observing conditions. This article concerned the equality of races in the Soviet Union and appeared in the Daily Worker of September 24, 1932 (p. 4). Mr. Miller compared racial equality in the Soviet Union and the United States, stated that the Communist Party in the United States was the only political party which promised equality, and concluded as follows:

" 'Only the Communists with their straightforward platform on relief for the por (sic) farmers and workers, their demand for self-determination for Negroes in the Black Belt, and with a Negro, James W. Ford, as nominee for the Vice Presidency deserve the vote of the Negroes of the United States. It is for these reasons that I wish to renew my plea to Negroes everywhere in the United States to vote Communist.'

"The Daily Worker of January 26, 1948 (p. 10), reported that Loren Miller, attorney, Los Angeles, defended Claudia Jones, Communist. He signed a statement opposing the Mundt anti-Communist bill as shown by the Daily People's World of May 12, 1948 (p. 3). According to the Daily People's World of July 22, 1948 (p. 3), Loren Miller, attorney, Los Angeles, attacked the arrest of the Communist Party leaders.

"In the Daily Worker of December 24, 1931 (p. 3), Loren Miller was named as a reporter for the Worker. Reference to Loren Miller as a reporter for the Worker appeared in the Daily Worker of December 21, 1935 (p. 3). Loren Miller has been a contributor to the Daily Worker as shown in the issue of May 4, 1938 (p. 7), as well as the two issues already cited.

"The Worker is the Sunday edition of the Daily Worker, which was cited as 'official Communist Party, U.S.A., organ' by the Committee on Un-American Activities in report 1920, dated May 11, 1948. The publication was cited as 'chief journalistic mouthpiece of the Communist Party' by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in report 1311 of March 29, 1944; it had previously been cited as a Communist publication in reports of the special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated January 3, 1939, January 3, 1940, January 3, 1941, and June 25, 1942.

"Loren Miller was named as editor of New Masses in the issue of August 20, 1935 (p. 5), and as associate editor in the issue of January 14, 1936 (p. 5). He was shown as contributing editor in the following issues of New Masses: June 2, 1936 (p. 5), January 5, 1937 (p. 22), May 11, 1937 (p. 9), September 7, 1937 (p. 9), January 11, 1938 (p. 9), and September 20, 1938 (p. 14). He was a contributor to New Masses, as shown in the issue of August 20, 1935 (p. 26), and was named as a contributor to New Masses in the Daily Worker of April 3, 1963 (p. 3).

"New Masses was cited as a 'Communist periodical' by the Attorney General of the United States (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7688). It was cited as a 'national circulated weekly journal of the Communist Party' by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in report 1311 of March 29, 1944. New Masses had been cited previously as a Communist publication in reports of the special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated January 3, 1939, and June 25, 1942.

"As shown by an undated letterhead of Book Union, Inc., Loren Miller was a member of its advisory council. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in report 1311 of March 29, 1944, cited Book Union as 'distributors of Communist literature.'

"According to a letterhead of August 24, 1939, Loren Miller was a member of the Harry Bridges defense committee, southern division.

"In report 1311 of the special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated March 29, 1944, the Harry Bridges defense committee was cited as one of the Communist fronts formed to oppose deportation of Harry Bridges, Communist Party member and leader of the San Francisco general strike of 1934 which was planned by the Communist Party.

"As shown in the Call for the National Negro Congress held in Chicago, Ill., February 14, 1936, Loren Miller, Los Angeles, Calif., was one of the endorsers of the National Negro Congress.

" 'From the record of its activities and the composition of its (National Negro Congress) governing bodies, there can be little doubt that it has served as what James W. Ford, Communist vice presidential candidate elected to the executive committee in 1937, predicted: "An important sector of the democratic front," sponsored and supported by the Communist Party' (Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7687–7688). The National Negro Congress was cited as a Communist front in reports of the special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated January 3, 1939, January 3, 1940, June 25, 1942, and March 29, 1944. The Attorney General cited the group as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"Loren Miller, author, was a signer of the open letter to American liberals, as shown in Soviet Russia Today, issue of March 1937 (pp. 14–15).

" 'In March 1937 a group of well-known Communists and Communist collaborators published an open leter bearing the title given above. The letter was a defense of the Moscow purge trials' (report of the special Committee on Un-American Activities, June 25, 1942).

"As shown in the proceedings of the Second United States Congress Against War and Fascism, held in Chicago, Ill., September 28, 29, 30, 1934, under auspices of the American League Against War and Fascism, the report of the publications committee was presented by Loren Miller. (See public hearings, appendix, vol. 10, p. 22.)

" 'The American League Against War and Fascism was formally organized at the First United States Congress Against War and Fascism held in New York City, September 29 to October 1, 1933. * * * The program of the first congress called for the end of the Roosevelt policies of imperialism and for the support of the peace policies of the Soviet Union, for opposition to all attempts to weaken the Soviet Union. * * * Subsequent congresses in 1934 and 1936 reflected the same program' (Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7683).

"The American League Against War and Fascism was 'established in the United States in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union' (Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7683). The Attorney General cited the American League Against War and Fascism as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The organization was cited by the special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist front in reports of the special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated January 3, 1939, January 3, 1940, June 25, 1942, and March 29, 1944.

"In connection with the testimony of Harper L. Knowles and Ray E. Nimmo before the special Committee on Un-American Activities on October 25, 1938, a brief releating to activities of the Communist Party among professional groups was presented and incorporated in the record. In this brief Loren Miller is described as 'contributing editor to New Masses and a member of the Communist Party' (public hearings, p. 1997). According to this same source, he was a participant in the Western Writers Congress, cited as a Communist front by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in report 1311 of March 29, 1944.

"A pamphlet, 'Equality, Land and Freedom' published by the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, December 1934 (p. 44), listed Loren Miller as a member of the national council of that organization.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the League of Struggle for Negro Rights as follows: 'The Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes is known as the National Negro Congress. Practically the same group of leaders directing this directed the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, which was, until 2 years ago, the name of the Communist front for Negroes. The name was later changed * * * in 1936 to the National Negro Congress.'

"It was reported in the Daily People's World of September 28, 1950 (p. 5) that Loren Miller was one of a group of Los Angeles lawyers who signed a brief against a Communist registration ordinance. The brief was presented in connection with the case of Henry Steinberg, county legislative director of the Communist Party, who was charged with failing to register with the sheriff's office in accordance with provisions of the ordinance. Reference to Loren Miller as one of the attorneys who signed a brief charging Los Angeles County's Communist registration ordinance with being 'basically unconstitutional' also appeared in the Daily People's World of October 9, 1950 (p. 3). The brief was filed in connection with a hearing on a demurrer against the ordinance filed by attorneys for Gus Brown, Furniture Workers Local 576 business agent.

"The Daily People's World of May 17, 1950 (p. 3), listed Loren Miller as one who signed a statement against the loyalty oath."

"OCTOBER 26, 1955.

"Subject: Morris L. Ernst, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"In testimony of Walter S. Steele before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, August 15, 1938, Morris Ernst was named as a member of the board of the American Fund for Public Service (public hearings, p. 388). The following issues of New Masses named Morris L. Ernst as treasurer of the American Fund for Public Service, November 1930 (p. 19), November 1931 (p. 31), and January 2, 1934 (p. 2). He was named as treasurer and a member of the board of directors of the American Fund for Public Service on a letterhead (photostat dated September 8, 1930).

"The American Fund for Public Service (Garland Fund) was 'established in 1922 * * * it was a major source for the financing of Communist Party enterprise' such as the Daily Worker and New Masses, official Communist publications, Federated Press, Russian Reconstruction Farms, and International Labor Defense. William Z. Foster, present chairman, Communist Party, and Scott Nearing, a leading writer for the party, served on the board of directors of the fund (special Committee on Un-American Activities, report of March 29, 1944, pp. 75 and 76).

"A letterhead of the American League for Peace and Democracy (a photostat dated April 6, 1939) carried the name of Morris L. Ernst as a member of the lawyer's committee of the league. The American League for Peace and Democracy was cited as subversive and Communist by the United States Attorney General in letters furnished the Loyalty Review Board and released to the press by the United States Civil Service Commission, June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. It was established in the United States in 1937 as successor to the American League Against War and Fascism 'in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union.' (Attorney General of the United States, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the league as 'the largest of the Communist front movements in the United States' (report of January 3, 1939).

"The Daily Worker of February 19, 1937 (p. 4), reported that Morris Ernst spoke at a meeting of the American Youth Congress in Washington, D.C. The American Youth Congress was cited as subversive and Communist by the United States Attorney General (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list). The Attorney General cited the organization as 'originated in 1934 and has been controlled by Communists and manipulated by them to influence the thought of American youth' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7685). The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the American Youth Congress as 'one of the principal fronts of the Communist Party' (report of June 25, 1942, p. 16).

"Mr. Ernst spoke at a meeting of the League of American Writers in New York City, as was revealed by the Daily Workers of December 5, 1936 (p. 5). He spoke for the League for Mutual Aid on 'Dethroning the Supreme Court,' February 1, 1937, as shown in New Masses of January 26, 1937 (p. 37).

"The League of American Writers was cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General (press releases of June 1 and September 21, 1948) and was redesignated pursuant to Executive Order 10450, April 27, 1953; and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The League of American Writers previously had been cited as a Communist front by the Attorney General and by the special committee. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7685 and 7686; and reports of January 3, 1940, June 25, 1942 and March 29, 1944, respectively.) The special committee cited the League for Mutual Aid as a Communist enterprise (report of March 29, 1944, p. 76).

"Morris L. Ernst was named on a letterhead of the Medical Bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy, dated July 6, 1938, as a member of the lawyers' committee of that organization. 'In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for the support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations' such as the Medical Bureau and North American Committee To Aid Spanish Democracy (report of the special committee dated March 29, 1944, p. 82).

"Morris L. Ernst, identified as treaturer, American Fund for Public Service, was shown as a stockholder of New Masses on a photostatic copy of the statement of ownership of that publication, dated October 1, 1930. New Masses was cited as a 'Communist periodical' by the Attorney General (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7688) and as the 'nationally circulated weekly journal of the Communist Party' by the special committee (report of March 29, 1944, pp. 48 and 75).

"The Nonpartisan Committee for the Reelection of Vito Marcantonio was cited as a Communist front by the special committee in the report of March 29, 1944 (p. 122). Mr. Ernst was chairman of the Nonpartisan Committee for the Reelection of Vito Marcantonio, as was shown on a letterhead of the organization dated October 3, 1936.

"A newsletter of the National Lawyers Guild, dated July 1937 (p. 2), listed Mr. Ernst, of New York City, as chairman of the guild's committee on the relation of government to business. The Daily Worker of February 10, 1939 (p. 2), reported that he spoke at a meeting of the National Lawyers Guild; a letterhead of the guild, dated May 28, 1940, named Mr. Ernst as director ex-officio of that group; a membership list (1939) of the guild, on file with this committee, contains the name of Morris L. Ernst, 285 Madison Avenue, New York City.

"On September 17, 1950, the Committee on Un-American Activities released a report on the National Lawyers Guild in which it was cited as a Communist front and the 'foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions.' An earlier report of the special committee (report of Mar. 29, 1944, p. 149) cited the guild as a Communist front.

"An editorial in the Daily Worker of December 10, 1947 (p. 9), criticized Morris Ernst for his proposed legislation to register front organizations. Morris L. Ernest, of New York City, testified voluntarily before the Committee on Un-American Activities, February 11, 1948, regarding legislation before the committee which would seek to curb or outlaw the Communist Party. He stated, in part, as follows:

" 'Mr. KERSTEN. Would you say we would have to have the freedom of expression on the parts of teachers in our schools, professors in our universities, the freedom of expression to the extent that the president of this particular institution could, if he wants to, permit his teachers to teach to the students, for example, the tenets of communism?

" 'Mr. ERNST. Well, may I state my position on that? I have got to cut down underneath it a bit.

* * * * *

" 'I think the Communists or the Klan have a right to elect the Government of the United States. Not having elected the Government of the United States, I take it to be the mandate of the people to the officials elected to make sure that neither Klan nor Communist policy is infiltrated or injected into the Government.

" 'Under those circumstances, it seems to me I would say that no klansman should be in the Bureau of Education of the United States Government even though on an open debate an and election with nightshirts off, they may elect the Government, that's what we are gambling on.

" 'Now, I have got faith that they are not going to elect the Government, if they take their shirts off.

" 'Mr. KERSTEN. The question is, however, do you think a university president has the right or teachers have the right in that university, if they wish to exercise it, to teach the student the tenets of communism?

* * * * *

" 'Mr. ERNST. I should say that if it is an avowed Communist or a teacher said this is what communism is, I would like to see that taught in the schools without nightshirts, yes. I would like to see it taught.

" 'Now that doesn't mean that I am at all in favor of a school being sneaked upon, as our schools were in New York by Communists sneaking their perfidious stuff underground. I am not afraid of the thesis of communism aboveboard, not at all. Americans will beat down at every point. We are not afraid of them at all, haven't got the least fear of that crowd, and they are not all crackpots. They are fanatics, maybe, but not crackpots, but I have great fear of any secret group for this reason.

" 'Up to now the problem of America has been the protection of minorities against majorities, oppression by majority or minority. From now on in, I suggest our problem is reversed, because a tightly regimented controlled minority in a labor union, in any place in life with the complexities of modern life can oppress a majority, and that is what the Communists are doing to the decent part of the American labor movement today.' (Public hearings, pp. 291, 292.)

"Reference to Mr. Ernst was made by Maj. Gen. Charles Willoughby, a witness during public hearings before this committee, August 22, 1951, as follows:

" 'Without going into details which are in this file, the International Red Aid, Soviet-Comintern sponsored, becomes the International Labor Defense, and the American Labor Defense becomes the Civil Rights Congress. And, incidentally, again Weiss, as an organizer, develops other agencies, such as the American Committee for the Defense of the Foreign Born, and several other organizations, all of which have been analyzed and commented on adversely by Mr. Morris Ernst, a reputable New York lawyer, who resented, apparently, ever having been mixed up with this group.' (American Aspects of Richard Sorge Spy Case, p. 1188.)"

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Z. Alexander Looby, national board of directors, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers Guild, on file with this committee, contains the name of Alexander Looby, 419 Fourth Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 23, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions,' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"The Daily People's World of April 25, 1948 (p. 11), reported that Alexander Looby, attorney, Nashville, Tenn., had spoken before the Southern Negro Youth Congress. The Worker of May 16, 1948 (p. 2), disclosed that Z. Alexander Looby, attorney, Nashville, Tenn., had spoken before the same organization.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as subversive and among the affiliates and committees of the Communist Party, U.S.A., which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means (letter to Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947). The Attorney General redesignated the group April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1940 (p. 9), cited the Southern Negro Youth Congress as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of April 17, 1947 (p. 14), cited the organization as 'surreptitiously controlled' by the Young Communist League."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Karl N. Llewellyn, national legal committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Prof. K. N. Llewellyn, Columbia Law School, spoke at a conference of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights as shown by the program, February 12, 1940.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (pp. 96 and 129), cited the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights as a Communist front which was succeeded by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights as among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'

"A letterhead of the Non-Partisan Committee for the Re-election of Vito Marcantonio dated October 3, 1936 listed Karl N. Llewellyn as vice chairman of the organization.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 122), cited the Non-Partisan Committee for the reelection of Vito Marcantonio as a Communist-front organization.

"An undated letterhead of the International Juridical Association listed Prof. Karl Llewellyn, New York, as a member of the national committee.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the International Juridical Association as 'a Communist front and an offshoot of the International Labor Defense.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950 (p. 12), cited the International Juridical Association, as an organization which 'actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line.' "

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Shad Polier (Isador Polier), national legal committee, NAACP, 1961

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow-traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Who's Who in America (vol. 25, 1948–49, p. 1971) shows that Justine Wise Polier married Shad Polier in 1937. Who's Who in American Jewry (vol. 3, 1938–39, p. 818) shows that Justine Wise Polier is the daughter of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and that she married Isadore Polier, March 26, 1937, New York City. It is noted further that Max Lownethal, a witness during public hearings before this committee, September 15, 1950, when asked if he were acquainted with Shad Polier, stated: 'Yes, he was Rabbi Wise's son-in-law.' (Communism in the U.S. Government, pt. 2, p. 2984.) Therefore, this report includes references from the public records, files and publications of this committee which appear under the name, Shad Polier, and references which appear under the name, Isadore Polier.

"Shad Polier was named in the election campaign letter of the Washington, D.C. chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, dated May 18, 1940, as a candidate for delegate to the national convention of the Guild. Convention News for May 1941 (p. 3) listed Shad Polier, New York City, as a member of the nominations committee of the National Lawyers Guild Fifth Annual Convention at the Book-Cadillac Hotel, Detroit, Mich., May 29–June 1, 1941. Shad Polier is shown as the writer of an article in the Lawyers Guild Review, vol. VI, pp. 490–491.

"The National Lawyers Guild was cited as a Communist-front organization by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities (Rept. 1311, Mar. 29, 1944, p. 149), and was the subject of a separate report by the Committee on Un-American Activities, September 17, 1950, in which it was cited as a Communist front that 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"A letterhead of the International Juridical Association, dated May 18, 1942, carries the name of Shad Polier, New York, as a member of the organization's national committee. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the International Juridical Association as 'a Communist front and an offshoot of the International Labor Defense' (report of Mar. 29, 1944, p. 149); the Committee on Un-American Activities cited the International Juridical Association as an organization which 'actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line' (Rept. 3123, Sept. 21, 1950, p. 12).

"A 1941 membership list of the Washington Book Shop, on file with this committee, contains the name of Shad Polier, 3610 Idaho Avenue NW., Washington, D.C. 'The Washington Cooperative Book Shop, under the name "The Book Shop Association," was incorporated in the District of Columbia in 1938. * * * It maintains a bookshop and art gallery at 916 Seventeenth Street NW., Washington, D.C., where literature is sold and meetings and lectures held. Evidence of Communist penetration or control is reflected in the following: Among its stock the establishment has offered prominently for sale books and literature identified with the Communist Party and certain of its affiliates and front organizations.' (United States Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, p. 7688). The Attorney General also included the Book Shop on lists of subversive and Communist organizations furnished the Loyalty Review Board (press releases of December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948) and redesignated it pursuant to Executive Order 10450 (memorandum of April 29, 1953, released by the Department of Justice); and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities also cited the Washington Bookshop as a Communist front (report of March 29, 1944, p. 150).

"The newsletter of the National Lawyers Guild for July 1937 (p. 2) named Isadore Polier, New York City, as chairman of the guild's committee on constitutional and judicial review. A leaflet, What Is the IJA?, contains the name of Isadore Polier as a member of the National Committee of the International Juridical Association. An undated letterhead of the group listed him as executive director, and this committee's report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950 (p. 13), reported that Isadore Polier was executive director of the International Juridical Association at 'the time of its inception.' See citation on page 1.

The Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 4), reported that Isadore Polier signed a petition, sponsored by the American Friends of Spanish Democracy, to lift the arms embargo. 'In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for the support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations * * * such as * * * American Friends of Spanish Democracy' (report of the special committee dated March 29, 1944, p. 82).

"The booklet, These Americans Say (p. 8), compiled and published by the Coordinating Committee To Lift the Embargo, named Isadore Polier among the representative individuals who advocated lifting the Spanish embargo. The Coordinating Committee To Lift the (Spanish) Embargo was cited by the Special Committee as one of a number of front organizations, set up during the Spanish Civil War by the Communist Party in the United States and through which the party carried on a great deal of agitation (report of March 29, 1944, pp. 137 and 138)."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Jawn Sandifer, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of April 10, 1951 (p. 5), reported that Jawn A. Sandifer was a speaker for the National Lawyers Guild. The October 7, 1952, issue of the Daily Worker (p. 3), reported that Jawn L. Sandifer, New York, was to lead workshop discussions at the national conference of the National Lawyers Guild on civil rights, legislation, and discrimination to be held at the Park Sheraton Hotel, New York City on October 10, 11, and 12, 1952.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front, which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'"

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Sidney R. Redmond, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"S. R. Redmond signed the open letter of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties denouncing the Attorney General's attack on the Communist Party and decision in the Harry Bridges case as shown by the Daily Worker of July 19, 1942 (p. 4), and the booklet, '600 Prominent Americans' (p. 27). Sidney R. Redmond, editor, National Bar Journal, St. Louis, Mo., signed a statement of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties supporting the War Department's order on granting commissions 'to members of the Armed Forces who have been members of or sympathetic to the views of the Communist Party' according to an undated leaflet, 'the only sound policy for a democracy' and the Daily Worker, March 19, 1945 (p. 4).

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The Attorney General cited the organization previously as 'part of what Lenin called the solar system of organizations, ostensibly having no connection with the Communist Party, by which Communists attempt to create sympathizers and supporters of their program' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 50), cited the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties as 'one of the viciously subversive organizations of the Communist Party.' The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 3), cited the National Federation * * * among a 'maze of organizations' which were 'spawned for the alleged purpose of defending civil liberties in general but actually intended to protect Communist subversion from any penalties under the law.'"

"Subject: George M. Johnson, national legal committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow-traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"George M. Johnson, Washington, D.C., was a member of the executive board of the National Lawyers Guild as of 1949. (See the committee's report on the National Lawyers Guild, p. 18.)

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers' Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers' Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist-front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'"

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Edward P. Lovett, National legal committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers Guild listed Edward P. Lovett, 615 F Street NW., Washington, D.C., as a member of that organization.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers' Guild as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers' Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'"

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Louis L. Redding, national legal committee, NAACP, 1954, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A 1939 membership list of the National Lawyers' Guild listed Louis Redding, 1002 Franch St., Wilmington, Del., as a member of the organization. Louis L. Redding, a member of the Delaware bar, was among the speakers at a panel session on Civil Rights and Liberties as part of the National Lawyers' Guild annual convention, February 20–23, 1953, New York City, according to the Daily Workers, February 20, 1953 (p. 6).

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149), cited the National Lawyers' Guild as a Communist front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the National Lawyers' Guild, September 17, 1950, cited the organization as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"The official proceedings of the National Negro Congress, 1936 (pp. 5, 6, 41), listed Louis L. Redding, Delaware, as a member of the National Executive Council and a member of the presiding committee and general resolutions committee.

"The Attorney General cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953 and included on the April 1, 1954 consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as a Communist front (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688). The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes.'"

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Joseph B. Robinson, national health committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"One Joseph B. Robinson signed the call for the National Emergency Conference, Washington, D.C., May 13 and 14, 1939.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 49), cited the National Emergency Conference as a Communist-front organization. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of September 2, 1947 (p. 12), cited the National Emergency Conference as follows: 'It will be remembered that during the days of the infamous Soviet-Nazi pact, the Communists built protective organizations known as the National Emergency Conference, the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, which culminated in the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.' "

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Dr. Edward L. Young, national health committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Dr. Edward L. Young was an initial sponsor of the American Peace Crusade as shown by letterheads dated February 1951 and February 1953. He signed a petition of the American Peace Crusade calling on President Truman and Congress to seek a big-power act as reported by the Daily Worker of February 1, 1952 (p. 1), in which source he was identified with the Harvard University Medical School. The Daily Worker of February 1, 1951 (p. 2), listed Dr. Edward L. Young, Committee on Physicians for Improvement of Medical Care, Brookline, Mass., as a sponsor of the American Peace Crusade.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its statement issued on the March of Treason, February 19, 1951, and report on the Communist peace offensive, April 1, 1951 (p. 51), cited the American Peace Crusade as an orangization which 'the Communists established' as 'a new instrument for their peace offensive in the United States' and which was heralded by the Daily Worker 'with the usual bold headlines reserved for projects in line with the Communist objectives.' The Attorney General of the United States designated the American Peace Crusade January 22, 1954 pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated.

"Dr. Young was a United States sponsor of the American Continental Congress for Peace as shown by an official leaflet published by the Congress.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Communist peace offensive, April 1, 1951 (p. 21), cited the American Continental Congress for Peace as 'another phase' in the Communist 'peace' campaign, aimed at consolidating anti-American forces throughout the Western Hemisphere."

"According to a statement attached to a press release of the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact, dated December 14, 1949 (p. 10), Dr. Edward L. Young, Committee of physicians for Improvement of Medical Care, Brookline, Mass., signed a statement calling for international agreement to ban use of atomic weapons.

"The Committee for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact was cited by the Committee on Un-American Activities as an organization which was formed as a result of the Conference for Peaceful Alternatives to the Atlantic Pact and which was located, according to a letterhead of September 16, 1950, at 30 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.; and to further the cause of 'Communists in the United States' doing 'their part in the Moscow campaign.'

"A mimeographed petition, attached to a letterhead of the Spanish Refugee Appeal of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee dated May 18, 1951, listed Dr. Edward L. Young, Brookline, Mass., as one who signed a petition to President Truman 'to bar military aid to or alliance with Fascist Spain.'

"The Attorney General cited the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 174), cited the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee as a Communist-front organization.

"Dr. Edward L. Young was shown as a member of the board of directors of the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions on a leaflet, Policy and Program Adopted by the National Convention, 1950, a letterhead dated July 28, 1950, and a letterhead dated December 7, 1952 (photostat). He was a sponsor of the Cultural and Scientific Conference for World Peace, New York City, March 25–27, 1949, as shown by the conference program (p. 13), the conference call, and the Daily Worker, February 21, 1949 (p. 9). As shown by the conference program (p. 10), he spoke at the conference, and according to Speaking of Peace, edited report of the conference (p. 49), Dr. Young introduced the discussion on psychiatric aspects of today's international crisis. He signed a statement supporting a rehearing of the case of the Communist leaders before the Supreme Court and protesting the Smith Act as shown by We Join Black's Dissent, a reprint of an article from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, June 20, 1951, by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions. The Daily Worker of February 28, 1949 (p. 2) reported that Dr. Young was a speaker for the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions. He signed a statement of the organization as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 14, 1949 (p. 9620). He signed a resolution against atomic weapons released by the National Council as shown by a mimeographed list of signers attached to a letterhead of July 28, 1950. He signed a peace appeal in a drive of the National and New York Councils of the Arts, * * *, as reported in the Daily Worker of May 16, 1952 (p. 2).

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of April 19, 1949 (p. 2), cited the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions as a Communist-front organization. In this report, Review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace, the committee cited the conference as a Communist front which 'was actually a supermobilization of the inveterate wheelhorses and supporters of the Communist Party and its auxiliary organizations.'

"As shown by an undated leaflet, 'Prominent Americans Call for * * *' (received by this committee September 11, 1950), and the Daily Worker of August 10, 1950 (p. 1), Dr. Edward L. Young signed the World Peace Appeal.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report on the Communist peace offensive, April 1, 1954 (p. 34), cited the World Peace Appeal as a petition campaign launched by the permanent committee of the World Peace Congress at its meeting in Stockholm, March 16–19, 1950; as having 'received the enthusiastic approval of every section of the international Communist hierarchy'; as having been lauded in the Communist press, putting 'every individual Communist on notice that he "has the duty to rise to this appeal"; and as having received the official endorsement of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., which has been echoed by the governing bodies of every Communist satellite country, and by all Communist Parties throughout the world.'

"The following is quoted from a 'Statemen of Principles for the Defense of Democracy Against McCarthyism,' as reported by the Daily Worker of March 31, 1954 (p. 8):

" 'Minority opinion is being suppressed by such devices as blacklisting, dismissal from employment, and even jailing.

" 'Teachers, lawyers, doctors, writers, artists, actors, and other professionals should be free to practice their professions without discrimination because of their political beliefs or associations, whether they be Republican, Democrat, Socialist, or Communist.'

"The Daily Worker article reported that 'the signers of the statement urge support for an eight-point program, including abolition of the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations, reinstatement of teachers dismissed in recent inquiries, and amnesty for those in jail on charges of "conspiracy to teach and advocate" their political views.' Dr. Edward L. Young, Brookline, Mass., was named as a signer.

"The call to a bill of rights conference New York City, July 16 and 17, 1949, named Dr. Edward L. Young, Massachusetts General Hospital, as a sponsor. Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, a member of the national committee of the Communist Party, in writing about the conference for her column in the Daily Worker (July 25, 1949, p. 8), stated that one of the highlights of the conference was the fight for the 12 defendants in the current Communist cases. She reported that seven of the defendants were present and participated actively. The New York Times (July 18, 1949, p. 13) reported that 'the 20 resolutions adopted unanimously by the 2-day conference registered opposition to the conspiracy trial of the 11 Communist leaders, the Presidential loyalty order * * * deportation for political belief * * * among others. The conference also called for an end to the investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation into political, rather than criminal, activities.' "

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Viola Bernard, national health committee, NAACP, 1954.

"The public records, files and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 4), listed Viola Bernard as one who signed a petition of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy to lift the arms embago.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 82), cited the American Friends of Spanish Democracy as follows: 'In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for the support of the Spanish loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations * * * such as * * * American Friends of Spanish Democracy.' "

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Dr. Russell L. Cecil, national health committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow-traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A pamphlet, 'Relighting the Lamps of China,' listed Russell L. Cecil as a medical sponsor of the China Aid Council.

"The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of June 25, 1942 (p. 16), cited the China Aid Council as a 'subsidiary' of the American League for Peace and Democracy, cited as subversive and Communist by the Attorney General of the United States in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released June 1 and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as established in the United States in 1937 as successor to the American League Against War and Fascism 'in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union * * *' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (pp. 69–71), cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as ' the largest of the Communist 'front' movements in the United States * * *.' "

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, national health committee, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A membership list of the American League for Peace and Democracy which was compiled by the special Committee on Un-American Activities from original records of the organiation, subpenaed in 1939 by the committee, contains the name of one C. Herbert Marshall, of 2712 P Street NW., Washington, D.C.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the American League for Peace and Democracy as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released June 1 and September 21, 1948. The Attorney General redesignated the organization April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included it on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as established in the United States in 1937 as successor to the American League Against War and Fascism 'in an effort to create public sentiment on behalf of a foreign policy adapted to the interests of the Soviet Union' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7683 and 7684). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (pp. 69–71), cited the American League for Peace and Democrary as 'the largest of the Communist front movements in the United States. * * *'

"C. Herbert Marshall was shown as a sponsor of the Washington Citizens Committee to Free Earl Browder in an advertisement of the organization which appeared in the Washington Post of May 1942 (p. 9). 'When Earl Browder (then general secretary, Communist Party) was in Atlanta Penitentiary serving a sentence involving his fraudulent passports, the Communist Party's front which agitated for his release was known as the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder * * * Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, one of the few outstanding women leaders of the Communist Party in this country, headed it' (special Committee on Un-American Activities, report, March 29, 1944, pp. 6 and 55). The Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder was cited as Communist by the Attorney General in a letter released April 27, 1949; redesignated Apirl 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"The call to a conference on civil rights, April 20–21, 1940 (p. 4), lists C. Herbert Marshall, M.D., as a sponsor of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action, under whose auspices the conference was held. A letterhead of the organization, dated April 26, 1940, also shows C. Herbert Marshall as a sponsor. In 1941, Dr. C. Herbert Marshall was a member of the executive committee of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action, according to a letterhead dated May 23, 1941.

"The Attorney General cited the Washington Committee for Democratic Action as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. The organization was cited previously by the Attorney General as an 'affiliate' or 'local chapter' of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. 'The program of the Washington committee followed that of the national federation. National Communist leaders have addressed its meetings, and conferences sponsored by it have been attended by representatives of prominent Communist front organizations' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7688 and 7689). The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of June 25, 1942 (p. 22), cited the Washington Committee for Democratic Action as follows: 'When the American League for Peace and Democracy was dissolved in February 1940 its successor in Washington was called the Washington Committee for Democratic Action.'

"As shown by an advertisement in the Washington Post, May 18, 1948 (p. 15), Dr. C. Herbert Marshall signed a statement against the Mundt anti-Communist bill."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Gloster Current, director of branch department, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Gloster Current and his orchestra were scheduled to play at the Independence Day picnic to be held July 3–4, 1938, under the auspices of the Communist Party of Michigan, according to a leaflet entitled 'Where's Everybody Going?' which announced the picnic.

"The Civil Rights Federation (affiliated with the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties) issued a call to a statewide conference, September 12, 1943, in Detroit, Mich.; the name of Gloster Current appeared on the call in a list of sponsors and he was identified as secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Detroit chapter.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Michigan Civil Rights Federation as an affiliate of the Communist front, the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties; and as a subversive and Communist organization which has been succeeded by and now operates as the Michigan chapter of the Civil Rights Congress. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, p. 7687; and press releases of Dec. 4, 1947, June 1 and Sept. 21, 1948; also included on his consolidated list of organizations.) The Special Committee on Un-American Activities and the Committee on Un-American Activities cited the Michigan Civil Rights Federation as a Communist-front organization. (From Report No. 1311 of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, dated Mar. 29, 1944; and Report No. 1115 of the Committee on Un-American Activities dated Sept. 2, 1947.)

"In July 1947 Mr. Walter S. Steele testified in public hearings before this committee, at which time he named Gloster Current of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as a council member from the United States to the World Federation of Democratic Youth (from Steele testimony, p. 81).

"The World Federation of Democratic Youth was founded in London in November 1945 by delegates from over 50 nations. From the outset, the World Federation of Democratic Youth demonstrated that it was far more interested in serving as a pressure group in behalf of Soviet foreign policy than it was in the specific problems of international youth. (From Report No. 271 of the Committee on Un-American Activities dated Apr. 17, 1947.)"

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Ruby Hurley, southeast regional secretary, Birmingham, Ala., NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Ruby Hurley was a sponsor of the World Youth Festival, Prague, July–August 1947, as shown by the World Youth Festival, page 7, and the booklet, "The Bright Face of Peace," published by the U.S. Committee for the World Youth Festival. As shown by the call to World Youth Festival (p. 3), the festival, held in Prague from July 20 to August 17, 1947, was sponsored by the World Federation of Democratic Youth and the International Union of Students.

"The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of April 17, 1947 (pp. 12 and 13), cited the World Federation of Democratic Youth as follows: 'The AYD (American Youth for Democracy) is affiliated with the World Federation of Democratic Youth, which was founded in London in November 1945 by delegates from over 50 nations. * * * From the outset the World Federation of Democratic Youth demonstrated that it was far more interested in serving as a pressure group in behalf of Soviet foreign policy than it was in the specific problems of international youth.'

"The International Union of Students was cited as follows by the Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of April 17, 1947 (p. 13): 'The World Federation of Democratic Youth brought into being the International Union of Students, which held a meeting in Prague on August 17–31, 1946. The administration and direction of this project was entrusted to a 17-man executive committee of whom 12 were known Communists.' "

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Thurgood Marshall, director counsel, NAACP Legal Defense Fund and Educational Fund, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Thurgood Marshall was a member of the national committee of the International Juridical Association, as shown in the pamphlet, What Is the I.J.A.? The special Committee on Un-American Activities cited the International Juridical Association as 'a Communist front and an offshoot of the International Labor Defense' (Rept. No. 1311, dated March 29, 1944). In a report on the National Lawyers Guild, prepared and published September 17, 1950, by the Committee on Un-American Activities, the International Juridical Association was cited as an organization which 'actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line.'

"A list of officers of the National Lawyers Guild, as of December 1949 (printed in the committee's report on the National Lawyers Guild, p. 18) contains the name of Thurgood Marshall, New York City, among the members of the executive board. He was shown to be an associate editor of the Lawyers Guild Review in the issue of May–June 1948 (p. 422). It was reported in the Daily Worker of November 30, 1942 (p. 1), that Mr. Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was one of those who submitted a report denouncing lynching and discrimination which was adopted by the national executive board of the National Lawyers Guild. It was also reported in the Washington Evening Star (February 8, 1948, p. A–22 and February 12, 1948, p. A–82), that Mr. Marshall, identified as special counsel, NAACP, criticized the loyalty program in a public forum held under the auspices of the National Lawyers Guild in Washington, D.C.

"The National Lawyers Guild was cited by the special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist front in Report No. 1311 of March 29, 1944 (p. 149). In the committee's report on the organization, released in 1950, the guild was cited as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.'

"The Daily Worker of November 24, 1947 (p. 4) reported that Thurgood Marshall was among a group of attorneys who sent a telegram to New York Congressmen asking them to oppose the contempt citations in the case of the so-called Hollywood 10."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Clarence M. Mitchell, director, Washington Bureau, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individaul. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or finding of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Clarence Mitchell, a representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, appeared before the Committee on Un-American Activities, May 3, 1950, in opposition to H.R. 7595, at which time he stated that he was not then and had never been a member of the Communist Party. He stated that the question as to whether or not he was a member of the Communist Party 'is an unfair question, because it immediately precludes from appearing before this committee many of the people who would be on trial under a bill of this kind (H.R. 7595). Presumably there are people who may, for sincere and personal reasons, wish to be members of the Communist Party, but they may want to come here and object to this bill, but I suppose if they had to answer that question they very likely would not come.' (Public hearings, pp. 2296–2302.)

"It is noted by the Daily People's World of February 12, 1952 (p. 2) that Clarence Mitchell, director of Washington bureau of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, 'blasts civil rights record of presidential hopeful.' The Daily Worker of February 15, 1952 (p. 1) reported that Clarence Mitchell, director of Washington bureau, NAACP, appeared before the Senate Armed Forces Committee in protest of universal military training."

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"'Subject: Henry Lee Moon, director, public relations department, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"A membership list of the Washington Book Shop which was subpened by the special Committee on Un-American Activities in 1941 contains the name of Henry Lee Moon with address shown as 1206 Kenyon Street NW., Washington, D.C.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the Washington Book Shop Association as subversive and Communist in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list or organizations previously designated. The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 150), cited the Washington Book Shop Association as a Communist-front organization.

"Henry Lee Moon, New York, was a member of the national executive council of the National Negro Congress, as shown on the official proceedings of the congress for 1936 (p. 40).

"The Attorney General cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. A. Phillip Randolph, president of the congress since its inception in 1936, refused to run again in April 1940 'on the ground that it was "deliberately packed with Communists and Congress of Industrial Organization members who were either Communists or sympathizers with Communists." Commencing with its formation in 1936, Communist Party functionaries and fellow travelers have figured prominently in the leadership and affairs of the Congress, * * * according to A. Phillip Randolph. John P. Davis, secretary of the congress, has admitted that the Communist Party contributed $100 a month to its support.' (Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 24, 1942, pp. 7687, 7688.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes.'

"A review by Abner W. Berry of Henry Lee Moon's book, Balance of Power: The Negro Vote, was published in the Daily Worker of May 28, 1948 (p. 12). The review reads, in part:

"'As a newspaperman who spent the war years in Washington and later was associated with the CIO Political Action Committee, Henry Lee Moon has written, in balance of power a helpful survey of Negro suffrage in America. He defends the Negro voter against the charge of venality and corruptibility with the materials of history, and traces the long fight for the franchise.

* * * * *

"'It is the only volume brought to our attention which gives a detailed national picture of the Negro vote. It is too bad the author felt impelled to defend the two-party system and the Negro. And it is worse that he chose this otherwise useful contribution as the bearer of his offering of fuel for the cold war.'

"A photograph of Henry Lee Moon was published in the June 16, 1932, issue of the Daily Worker (p. 2).

"The Daily Worker of June 17, 1946 (p. 2), reported that one Henry Moon (no other identification shown) was one of the signers of a statement of the Action Committee To Free Spain Now which protested the delay in breaking diplomatic relations with Franco Spain.

"The Attorney General cited the Action Committee To Free Spain Now as Communist in a letter released April 27, 1949; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list.

"The Daily Worker of February 16, 1949 (p. 13), reported that Henry Moon was nominated as commentator of the Voice of Freedom Committee.

"The Attorney General included the Voice of Freedom Committee on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list of organizations previously designated pursuant to Executive Order No. 10450."

"OCTOBER 25, 1955.

"Subject: Clarence A. Laws, regional director, New Orleans, La., NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"An undated letterhead (1947) of the Committee for Louisiana, affiliated with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, listed Clarence A. Laws as a member of the executive committee of the organization.

"The Special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 147), cited the Southern Conference for Human Welfare as a Communist front which received money from the Robert Marshall Foundation, one of the principal sources of funds by which many Communist fronts operate. The Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of June 12, 1947, cited the Southern Conference * * * as a Communist-front organization 'which seeks to attract southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South' although its 'professed interest in southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States.'

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Robert L. Carter, assistant special counsel, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"Robert L. Carter wrote an article which was published in the Lawyers Guild Review (vol. VI, pp. 553–54, and 599–601). The Lawyers Guild Review was cited as 'an official organ of the National Lawyers Guild' by the Committee on Un-American Activities, report on the National Lawyers Guild, September 21, 1950 (p. 13).

"The National Lawyers Guild was cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist front organization in its report of March 29, 1944 (p. 149). It was cited as a Communist front which 'is the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations, and controlled unions' and which 'since its inception has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents.' (Committee's review on the National Lawyers Guild, September 21, 1950.)

"It was reported in the Times Herald of April 28, 1948 (pp. 1 and 4) that Robert L. Carter, of the American Veterans' Committee, was a sponsor of a conference against anti-Communist legislation.

"FEBRUARY 13, 1956.

"Subject: Torea Hall Pittman, assistant field secretary, NAACP, 1961.

"The public records, files, and publications of this committee contain the following information concerning the subject individual. This report should not be construed as representing the results of an investigation by or findings of this committee. It should be noted that the individual is not necessarily a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler unless otherwise indicated.

"The official proceedings of the National Negro Congress for 1936 (p. 6) listed Mrs. Torea Pittman, of California, as a member of the general resolutions committee of the National Negro Congress.

"The Attorney General of the United States cited the National Negro Congress as subversive and Communist in letters released December 4, 1947, and September 21, 1948; redesignated April 27, 1953, and included on the April 1, 1954, consolidated list. A. Phillip Randolph, president of the congress since its inception in 1936, refused to run again in April 1940 'on the ground that it was "deliberately packed with Communists and Congress of Industrial Organizations members who were either Communists or sympathizers with Communists." Commencing with its formation in 1936, Communist Party functionaries and fellow travelers have figured prominently in the leadership and affairs of the congress * * * according to A. Phillip Randolph, John P. Davis, secretary of the congress, has admitted that the Communist Party contributed $100 a month to its support.' (Attorney General, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, September 24, 1942, pp. 7687 and 7688.) The special Committee on Un-American Activities, in its report of January 3, 1939 (p. 81), cited the National Negro Congress as 'the Communist-front movement in the United States among Negroes.' "

The American Theater

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JACOB K. JAVITS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, July 29, 1963

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, because of rising costs, declining sponsorship and other grave problems, the visual and performing arts in the United States are tending to concentrate more and more in the largest cities, leaving the rest of the country with limited opportunity to enjoy and participate in them on the professional level. The shrinkage of the legitimate theater in particular is threatening to curtail sharply the expression and influence of the dramatic arts. Support from private sources alone has proved inadequate, and I deeply believe that some form of government cooperation is essential. Many countries are already providing some governmental help with considerable success in encouraging cultural development, and I believe that it is becoming increasingly evident that some government help is essential in the United States. Legislation for a U.S. Arts Foundation, which I have sponsored for years now, would encourage live performances of theater and exhibits of art in cities and towns which could not otherwise receive and support them.

One of the great impresarios of our times, S. Hurok, recalls what he considers the heyday of the American theater and contrasts it with its present decline in a recent feature article. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the article by S. Hurok entitled, "The Glory That Was New York," which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune, July 14.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GLORY THAT WAS NEW YORK

(By S. Hurok)

Do you remember when 42d Street was lined with legitimate theaters, when the Manhattan, Lexington, and Century opera houses, the Hippodrome, and nearly 90 theaters catered to a public that ranged through every strata of society? You may not, but I do.

Granted, the subject matter on these many stages differed somewhat from today's. Surely, some goodhearted—and a few not so goodhearted—prostitutes were to be seen from time to time; there were occasional hints of incest and what were politely termed "social diseases." Every second serious play, however, wasn't about homosexuality, and I don't seem to recall any cannibalism or some of the odder perversions we have been subjected to lately. People's private lives may have been just as unpleasant as today's theater and literature tell us they are, but on the stage things were a good deal more pleasant.

FUN AND GIRLS

There was lots of galety and boisterous fun and pretty girls, not just in one show, but all over the place. There were the adventures with the new playwrights, Eugene O'Neill, Maxwell Anderson, Robert Sherwood, Elmer Rice. There were the great producers, Charles Frohman, Florenz Ziegfeld, Charles Dillingham, David Belasco, George White, Arthur Hopkins. New York was a place where Max Reinhardt could stage "The Miracle" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Let us say that all this was prior to the thirties prior, perhaps, to the depression, prior, certainly, to television. Anyway, it was only some 30 years ago, and New York was a theater town beyond compare.

Is 30 years a long time for you? Well, then. The other day I was walking past the new apartment building at Seventh Avenue and 59th Street, and paused to remember with nostalgia how only a few short seasons ago I used to spend fascinated hours backstage at the now vanished Century Theater watching the skilled wardrobe people of the Kabuki endlessly folding and unfolding with infinite care their elaborate and fanciful costumes.

Where are all the theaters? They are movie houses, parking lots, television studios, office and apartment buildings. And where is the New York theater? It has dwindled into something resembling a trickle and not a very distinguished trickle at that.

Why, in these few short years, has this happened? Television, wildly rising costs, the move of the middle class to the suburbs—I've heard and thought about all the answers that one can find for this question. We all know the many contributing factors.

I also know, as I've said for 50 years, that when the public is offered the best, it is a pretty fair bet to say that it will come. Witness the Royal Ballet, opening at the Met in the late spring and taking in $700,000 in less than 5 weeks.

It seems to me that recently I have spent a goodly number of my waking hours addressing groups from university students to Rotarians, talking to newspapermen and local managers and always finding myself alternately extolling the extraordinary talent to be found everywhere in this country, the eager audiences for the best, and then, the other side of the coin, decrying the disappearance of theaters all across the country.

It isn't only New York. The Boston Opera House is now a parking lot. There is no place to present ballet or other spectacular productions in our Nation's Capital. This spring we couldn't take the Royal Ballet to one of the country's most cultivated cities, San Francisco, because the only possible place to present it, the War Memorial Opera House, was completely involved with musical comedy.

In Washington there were only 8 or 10 theaters, now there is only 1. In Boston there were some 10, now 2. In San Francisco there were some 12, now 2.

I say, give us more theaters, many, many more. Certainly I praise the splendid new buildings in Chicago, Toronto, Montreal, the rising Opera House in Los Angeles; Lincoln Center is fine, too; but these are not enough.

Can a man with a family of five take them out to the theater in New York unless he can afford a whopping sum? He used to be able to do so. Will Lincoln Center solve that problem? Of course not.

What the theater needs, and the ballet and the opera, is subsidy from city, State, and Federal sources. And the performing arts need many theaters, everywhere.

I am weary of hearing our Representatives in the Congress and the State legislature talking about "culture" as if it were a seven-letter dirty word.

I'm also weary of hearing how subsidy would hamper the arts. One need only point to Britain, where the Arts Council began to function at the end of World War II, to find an answer.

SOME RESULTS

In London, then provincial as far as ballet and opera were concerned, there are now two ballet companies and a major opera company and partially subsidized theaters flourishing with the classics and with experimental plays. A Benjamin Britten, a William Walton has been encouraged to write for the lyric theater, for the ballet. Major painters have contributed sets. Major poets and playwrights have turned librettists.

I've often said that if I had a 4,000-seat theater I could keep it running 52 weeks a year to capacity business and be able to sell seats at prices the average man could afford. I shouldn't fill it with foreign attractions alone, although these would certainly figure, but with the best that American writers, composers, choreographers, and directors could achieve. I might even show a profit. I always like a profit. Maybe it's not too late to try.

Swiss National Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN F. SHELLEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 1963

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Swiss people are known throughout the world for their individualistic love of freedom and their readiness to defend their nation; for their careful attention to the obligations of citizenship, and for their success in maintaining a harmonious and stable country. We all know neutral Switzerland as a country where Latin and Teuton, Catholic and Protestant, worker and banker can live together in peace and harmony. Not so many of us realize that this remarkable combination of diversity and harmony has a history which dates back almost seven centuries. Today we have an opportunity to salute the gallant people of Switzerland, because August 1, 1963, is the 672d anniversary of the Swiss Confederation.

On August 1, 1291, the citizens of three cantons within what is now Switzerland—Uri, Schwyz, and Lower Unterwalden—banded together into a defensive league. During the next several centuries more cantons were added to this league, and in 1798, after considerably more territory had been acquired, a unified Helvetic Republic was formed. In 1803 Napoleon Boneparte gave the Swiss a new constitution and the number of cantons—the confederate parts of Switzerland—increased to 19. Switzerland acquired two further constitutions during the 19th century, of which the second survives to the present day. Despite domestic crises and foreign interventions, the Swiss Confederation has remained intact through almost seven centuries. Today, as we note the anniversary of the founding of the Swiss Confederation, we greet all friends of Switzerland everywhere.

Americans have long enjoyed a special bond of friendship with the Swiss people. One reason may be that our countries respect many of the same principles of government. The Swiss people, who have been called the most democratic in the world, exercise a direct voice in their government, and have been able to reconcile the interests and ideas of diverse groups.

Some have suggested that the remarkable success with which the Swiss have preserved their national independence through the centuries is a reflection of the physical characteristics of the country. Formerly the traditional isolation of the Swiss mountain folk was only partly tempered by the mountains and rivers that link Switzerland with the outside world. But in the 20th century, when rapid means of transportation and communication have reduced the importance of natural barriers between peoples, the Swiss continue to defend their national independence and neutrality, despite the cataclysms of war that have taken place around them. One suspects that mountains have been less important in preserving Swiss independence than the steadfast determination of the Swiss people. I am happy to salute Switzerland and her friends around the world on the anniversary of the founding of the Swiss Confederation.

Commonwealth Day—11 Years of Fulfillment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN F. SHELLEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 25, 1963

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, on July 25, 1952, a concept unique in all the America's—indeed in all of man's history—became a reality. On that day the Governor of Puerto Rico, with the blessing of the U.S. Government, proclaimed the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Slightly less than a State in stature, but more autonomous than all other Territories, Puerto Rico was accorded all but the last full measure of political maturity while retaining the economic concessions so vital to an experiment that promised to dismay the collectivists and inspire the free.

Politically, a precise definition of the island's status has yet to be coined. Neither an independent entity, a State, nor an incorporated Territory, Puerto Rico reflects the dignity of a free people; its citizens, who are citizens of the United States, enjoy practically all the privileges of statehood, save that of national suffrage, while being free of Federal taxation; and, in local affairs self-rule is complete. In Puerto Rico the Governor is popularly elected; this privilege was never enjoyed by the people of either Alaska or Hawaii until these incorporated Territories became States. What, then, is the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico? Actually, it is an inspired design for living adapted to the needs of a people not yet fully prepared to meet the economic demands of statehood, but who merit the right to rule themselves. They cannot vote for President, and they have a nonvoting Resident Commissioner to represent them in the Congress; but for all local offices, as well as problems, they are the final arbiters. It might well be that the Puerto Rican definition of status captures the essence of this political and social phenomenon: Associated Free State.

Mr. Speaker, the men of Puerto Rico have the same military obligations as their fellow citizens on the mainland. They have followed the Stars and Stripes in battle since World War I, long before the attainment of Commonwealth status. More than 91 percent of the Puerto Ricans engaged in the Korean conflict were volunteers. In terms both of patriotism and valor their record has been a distinguished one.

The standard of living on the island has risen spectacularly; the millenium, however, will be some time in arriving. Although per capita income is four times larger than it was 20 years ago. Net Commonwealth income continues to rise at a phenomenal rate; in fiscal 1962 it attained a level 11 percent higher than that recorded the previous year.

Measured in terms of mainland figures, Puerto Rican progress is less than overwhelming; when contrasted with pre-World War II conditions the advance is staggering. In 1940 family income totaled only $660; in 1961 it climbed to $3,003. Net income from manufacturing rose from $26 million in 1940 to $384 million in 1962.

Progress in other areas has been even more remarkable. Life expectancy at birth in 1940 was only 46 years; in 1960 it was 70 years—precisely the same as it was in the continental United States. The death rate in Puerto Rico from tuberculosis in 1940 per 100,000 persons was 260.2; in 1961 it was approximately 26.0. The death rate from all causes in the island in 1961 was 6.8 per 1,000 population; in the States it was 9.3.

Mr. Speaker, these magnificent achievements are attributable in very large measure to the vision, talents, and industry of one of America's greatest statesmen, Luis Muñoz-Marín. In the middle 1940's he and a coterie of dedicated associates instituted "Operation Bootstrap," a daring program of economic reform by which the island was to be

VJ✓ SB✓ Intergroup Org. NAACP

THREATS: NEGROES' LATEST WEAPON IN RIGHTS DRIVE

A mass march on Washington . . . a sit-in at the Capitol . . . a nationwide campaign of civil disobedience . . . demonstrations in one city after another . . . a reign of terror and violence . . .

These are what Negroes threaten if they don't get what they are demanding.

To President Kennedy's appeal for a truce, Negro leaders reply, "Demonstrations will go on."

Threats have become a major weapon for Negroes in their campaign against racial discrimination.

It was under pressure of spreading violence—and warnings of still more violence to come—that President John Kennedy on June 19 asked Congress for broad new legislation on civil rights.

Congress is being threatened with a mass march on Washington, a "sit-in" by Negroes in the nation's Capitol, and a nationwide campaign of civil disobedience if a filibuster against the President's proposals is attempted.

"We will tie up public transportation by laying our bodies prostrate on the runways of airports, across railroad tracks and in bus depots," said the Rev. George Lawrence, regional director in New York of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC).

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., national head of the SCLC, warned that there will be a nationwide reign of "violence and terror" unless civil-rights legislation is passed by Congress.

In State after State and city after city—North and South—officials are threatened with mass demonstrations unless Negro demands are met.

President Kennedy appealed to Negroes for a curtailment of demonstrations while Congress is considering his civil-rights program. He warned:

"Unruly tactics or pressures will not help and may hinder the effective consideration of these measures."

"No" to President. Numerous Negro leaders immediately rejected the President's appeal.

James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), declared:

"We do not intend to call off demonstrations and we would not if we could. We do not agree that demonstrations for freedom will damage the chances of the passage of civil-rights legislation. On the contrary, such peaceful demonstrations should help persuade the legislators of the urgency of the situation."

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, described demonstrations as part of America's tradition of freedom to protest, and said:

"I am certain Negro Americans will be guided by their reactions to conditions existing in their own communities."

In New York City, only a few hours after the President's appeal, there came a new threat from Herbert Hill, national labor secretary of the NAACP. He said there would be "mass protest demonstrations" in New York if the city administration does not respond to demands for an end to job discrimination.

Other NAACP representatives demanding more classroom integration in New York City served this notice:

"Unless our demands for greater integration are met, at least in part, we will institute a program of civil disobedience next fall."

In Gadsden, Ala., where Negroes have been demonstrating for weeks, this defiance of the President's appeal came from Marvin Robinson, of CORE:

"The President's plea is symbolic of his entire attitude toward the civil-rights problem. What he doesn't understand is that we want to be free—and now. If the President wants us to stop demonstrating in Gadsden, let him do something about the problem here."

Julian Bond, administrative assistant of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in Atlanta, Ga., said:

"We cannot in good conscience ask

(continued on next page)

—UPI Photo

IN THE NORTH—A riotous clash between Negroes and police followed a Negro rally in New York City's Harlem.

—Wide World Photo

IN THE SOUTH—Negroes lay down on sidewalks of Gadsden, Ala. Hundreds were arrested, but demonstrations continued.

[continued from preceding page]

THREATS: NEGROES' LATEST WEAPON

American citizens who have been denied their rights for 300 years to refrain from voicing their demands in any way they choose."

The Rev. G. R. Haughton, a leader in the Negro protest movement in Jackson, Miss., said, "We are trying to go along with the President," but warned, "We cannot guarantee there will be no demonstrations at all."

Negro leaders in Charleston, S. C., served notice that they intended to continue their demonstrations.

Negro demonstrations did continue in many cities.

On the night of June 19, in Savannah, Ga., Negroes staged a massive demonstration that was broken up by police using tear gas. Police called it a near riot. State patrolmen went to the aid of police. Hundreds of Negroes were arrested.

On the same day—the day of the President's appeal for peace—Negroes broke a three-day truce in Danville, Va. They paraded, singing and shouting, through the downtown area in defiance of a new city ordinance and a court injunction. Twenty-nine were arrested.

Negroes also renewed their demonstrations in Gadsden, Ala. To break up a protest there, police were aided by 100 riot-trained State troopers using electrified prods of the type normally used on cattle.

Preview for Washington? Two State capitals have been given small-scale samples of the type of protest threatened for Washington, D. C.

In Sacramento, Calif., Negroes sat down in the State capitol, demanding passage of a "fair housing" bill.

In Columbus, Ohio, demonstrators for civil-rights legislation chained themselves to seats in the House gallery of the State capitol, then lay on the floor of the Governor's outer office. On June 19, a House committee killed the housing bill that the demonstrators were supporting.

In a few areas, Negroes calmed down as the Kennedy Administration and local or State authorities moved toward granting their demands.

Attorney General Robert Kennedy personally intervened in Cambridge, Md. Hundreds of Maryland National Guardsmen had been called out to patrol the streets of that city when weeks of demonstrations threatened to precipitate a showdown battle between whites and Negroes.

After a conference at the Justice Department in Washington, the Negro leaders in Cambridge called off a scheduled mass demonstration and interracial negotiations were resumed.

Attorney General Kennedy also tried —with less immediate success—to work out a peaceful settlement of the disturbances in Danville, Va.

President Kennedy himself joined his brother Robert in telephone efforts to quiet the situation in Jackson, Miss. There the mayor and Negro leaders began working out a tentative agreement for ending months of racial tension.

In North Carolina, Governor Terry Sanford stepped in to head off the threat of a racial crisis. He invited Negro leaders to a conference, and NAACP officials then called for a cessation of demonstrations.

In most places over the country the racial situation threatened to get worse, instead of better.

Negro demonstrations were staged or planned in such widely scattered cities as St. Louis, Mo.; Detroit, Mich.; Wichita, Kans.; Fayetteville, Ark.; Clarksdale, Miss.; San Antonio, Tex.; Cairo, Ill.; St. Augustine, Fla.; Seattle, Wash.; and Fresno, Calif.

On June 20, CORE announced plans for "intensified" programs of "direct action" would be developed at its annual convention in Dayton, Ohio, June 27-30.

Roy Wilkins
NAACP

A SPLIT IN THE RANKS OF THE ORGANIZATIONS PUSHING INTEGRATION

James Farmer
CORE

Martin Luther King
SCLC

A long-smoldering feud between Negro organizations now has broken out into the open.

Their leaders are disputing: Which organization is really leading the Negro movement against racial discrimination? Which deserves the credit for the victories won? And which should get the money donated to the Negro cause?

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—NAACP —made the feud public on June 16. In a speech at an NAACP rally in Alexandria, Va., Mr. Wilkins said:

"The other organizations furnish the noise and get the publicity while the NAACP furnishes the manpower and pays the bills."

The "other organizations" singled out by Mr. Wilkins are:

- The Congress of Racial Equality—CORE—headed by James Farmer.
- The Southern Christian Leadership Conference, headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr.
- The Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, headed by James Forman.

These organizations have played highly publicized roles in "freedom rides," mass demonstrations and "sit in" campaigns. Their leaders privately have criticized the NAACP for some time as being too "conservative."

Mr. Wilkins took public notice of such criticism by complaining that Negroes are being "brainwashed" into believing that the NAACP is fighting for civil rights for Negroes only in court, while other groups risk arrest or violence in public demonstrations of protest.

Describing other organizations as Johnny-come-latelies, Mr. Wilkins declared: "There is only one organization that can handle a long, sustained fight—the NAACP. All the rest start a little, and then rush off somewhere else. They are here today, gone tomorrow."

Mr. Wilkins complained that the other organizations are siphoning financial support away from the NAACP. He told his NAACP audience: "Don't go giving them your money when it should be given to us. . . . To give them your money is like a Baptist giving money to the Presbyterian Church."

Integroup org.
NAACP

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

COUNTY OF COAHOMA

NO. 13,622 CHANCERY COURT

TO THE SHERIFF OF COAHOMA----COUNTY------GREETING:

You are hereby commanded to summons

Aaron Henry
R. L. Drew
Vera Pigee
John Melchor
H. Y. Hackett
J. D. Rayford
Tom Gaither
Lafayette Surney
Charles Evers
Martin Luther King, Jr.
Rev. James Bevel
Rev. A. Dudley Ward
Rev. Grover Bagby
Rev. Eugene Smith
Rev. Walmsley
Dale A. Fiers
Bishop Golden
Coahoma County, Mississippi, Branch of National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

Congress of Racial Equality

Coahoma County Council of Federated Organizations, comprised of National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee and Congress of Racial Equality if to be found in your County, to be and personally appear before the Chancery Court of Coahoma County, at the Court House of said County, in the City of Clarksdale, Mississippi, on the Third Monday in November, 1963, then and there to plead, answer or demur to the original bill of complaint this day filed against them by the City of Clarksdale, Mississippi.

Herein fail not, and have you then and there this writ.

(Attached hereto a copy of temporary injunction).

Issued under my hand and seal of said Court, at my office in Clarksdale, Mississippi, this the 8th day of July, 1963.

(Signed) T. F. Logan Jr.
Chancery Clerk

(Seal)

IN THE CHANCERY COURT OF COAHOMA COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI

CITY OF CLARKSDALE, A Municipal Corporation of the State of Mississippi, — COMPLAINANT

No. 13622

VS.

AARON HENRY, ET AL.

WRIT OF TEMPORARY INJUNCTION

TO AARON HENRY, R. L. DREW, VERA PIGEE, JOHN MELCHOR, H. Y. HACKETT, J. D. TAYFORD, TOM GAITHER, LAFAYETTE SURNEY, CHARLES EVERS, MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., REV. JAMES BEVEL, REV. A. DUDLEY WARD, REV. GROVER BAGBY, REV. EUGENE SMITH, REV. WALMSLEY, DALE A. FIERS, BISHOP GOLDEN, THE COAHOMA COUNTY MISSISSIPPI BRANCH OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE, A CORPORATION, CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY, A CORPORATION, COAHOMA COUNTY COUNCIL OF FEDERATED ORGANIZATIONS COMPRISING DEFENDANTS, THE COAHOMA COUNTY MISSISSIPPI BRANCH OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE and CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY, and SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE, STUDENT NON-VIOLENT COORDINATING COMMITTEE, THEIR AGENTS, MEMBERS, EMPLOYEES, ATTORNEYS, SUCCESSORS, AND ALL OTHER PERSONS IN ACTIVE CONCERT WITH THEM:

WHEREAS, the City of Clarksdale, a municipal corporation of the State of Mississippi, has filed its Bill in the above Court against you and others, praying for an injunction in the matters hereinafter set out; and

WHEREAS, The Chancery Court of Coahoma County, Mississippi, has directed a temporary injunction to issue as therein prayed, its fiat therefor being endorsed on said Bill, directing the temporary injunction to issue upon the execution by the City of Clarksdale of a bond conditioned according to law in the sum of Two Thousand Five Hundred ($2,500.00) Dollars; and

WHEREAS, said bond has been given and approved;

NOW, THEREFORE, you are hereby commanded and temporarily enjoined, until further order of this court, from engaging in, sponsoring, inciting or encouraging mass street parades or mass processions, or like demonstrations without a permit, unlawful blocking of the public streets or sidewalks, trespassing on private property after being warned to leave the premises by the owners or person in possession of said private property, congregating on the streets or public places as mobs, and unlawfully picketing business establishments or public buildings in the City of Clarksdale, Coahoma County, Mississippi, and from performing acts calculated to cause breaches of the peace in the City of Clarksdale, Coahoma County, Mississippi, and from conspiring to engage in unlawful street parades, unlawful processions, unlawful demonstrations, unlawful boycotts, unlawful trespasses, and unlawful picketing, and from doing any acts designed to consummate conspiracies to engage in said unlawful acts of parading, demonstrating, boycotting, trespassing and picketing or other unlawful acts and from engaging in acts and conduct customarily known as "kneel-in's" in churches in violation of the wishes and desires of said churches.

You will refrain from doing any of the foregoing acts until the further order of this Court, upon penalty of contempt.

WITNESS THE SIGNATURE AND SEAL of the undersigned, this 8th day of July, 1963.

(signed) T. F. Logan Jr.
T. F. LOGAN, JR., CHANCERY CLERK

TO THE SHERIFF OR ANY LAWFUL OFFICER OF COAHOMA COUNTY,
MISSISSIPPI:

You will execute the above writ of temporary injunction and make return to the next term of this Court.

(signed) T.F.Logan,Jr
T. F. LOGAN, JR., CHANCERY CLERK

Leadership Conference on Civil Rights
July 24, 1963

SUGGESTED POSITION CONCERNING
"COMMERCE-CLAUSE-FOURTEENTH-AMENDMENT-CONTROVERSY"
AS PREFERABLE BASIS FOR PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS BILL

1. A controversy has arisen over the best constitutional predicate for the public accommodations part of the President's civil rights package (Title II). While there are hopeful signs that the controversy is already on the road toward settlement by a combination of the Commerce Clause and the Fourteenth Amendment, this memorandum concerning that controversy is submitted at the request of organizations attending the Leadership Conference meeting last week.

2. The Commerce-Clause-Fourteenth-Amendment controversy has deep political and substantive roots. The Republicans quite naturally feel a proprietary interest in the Fourteenth Amendment; they took the lead in its enactment after the Civil War. The Democrats have a somewhat similar feeling towards the Commerce Clause; President Roosevelt and the New Deal gave this clause real meaning as the basis for social and economic legislation in the 1930s. Both parties also have important substantive arguments in favor of their constitutional approach. It would seem best for those whose only interest is the enactment of effective public accommodations legislation to accept both parties' predilections and arguments in respect to those constitutional issues and work toward a combination solution which permits both parties to act in accordance with their own best interest and judgment.

3. Commerce Clause: Article I, Section 8, of the Constitution gives the Congress power "to regulate commerce...among the several states..." It is certainly a regulation of "commerce among the several states" to regulate the service at places of public accommodations which utilize supplies or personnel from outside the state. Can anyone seriously argue that Congress has power to regulate the color of the margarine that goes on the restaurant table but may not protect a citizen of color who seeks to sit at that table?

4. The recent cases under the Fair Labor Standards Act and other laws predicated upon the Commerce Clause make clear that minimal crossing of state lines is sufficient to bring the Commerce Clause into play. Furthermore the Supreme Court's decisions on "affecting commerce"--highlighted by its 1942 decision that Congress can regulate the growing of wheat fro consumption right on the farm (Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111) --support regulation of public accommodations without any crossing of state lines; discriminatory public facilities, which might otherwise be deemed local, adversely affect other establishments clearly in interstate commerce. There can thus be little doubt that the Commerce Clause is one very certain and broad basis of Congressional power in the area of public accommodations.

5. The Fourteenth Amendment: Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides that "Congress shall power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." Section 1 of the Amendment provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Thus, Congress clearly has power to enforce the equal protection clause.

6. The argument against the power of Congress to act under the Fourteenth Amendment in the area of public accommodations is that discrimination by a restaurant, hotel or movie is the action of the private owner and not of the state and the equal protection clause applies only to state denials of equal protection. But this argument would no longer appear valid in the face of continuing Supreme Court decisions like the restrictive covenant cases (Shelley v. Kraemer, 333 U. S. 1) and the Delaware restaurant case (Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U. S. 715) where a limited degree of state involvement was deemed adequate to bring the Fourteenth Amendment into the picture. These and similar cases point the way toward invoking the Fourteenth Amendment wherever the state authorizes, licenses, protects or regulates private facilities open to the public.

7. Nor need the 1883 Civil Rights Cases (holding unconstitutional the 1875 public accommodations law) frighten one off from this position. That case was decided at a time when the concept of state action was narrow and property rights were deemed practically inviolable. The underpinnings of that case have been swept away be the ever broadening concept of state action and by the ascendency of the public interest over property rights (as, e.g., in the 1934 milk regulation case, Nebbia v. N.Y., 291 U. S. 502). The probabilities favor a distinguishing or overruling of the 1883 case, quite likely with the same unanimity that the Supreme Court overruled another product of this same era, Plessy v. Ferguson.

8. Some concern has been expressed that the Fourteenth Amendment approach might be rendered nugatory by a state repealing all its laws dealing with authorizations, licenses, protection or regulation of private facilities open to the public. It is not believed that such a total abnegation of state responsibility is a very real possibility. At any rate, the inclusion of the Commerce Clause as an equal predicate for the bill would remove any incentive for such state repeal of laws in this area.

9. If any matter of constitutional law can be stated with certainty, it is that the Supreme Court will find the public accommodations bill constitutional on one or both of the above bases. The Court will attach great weight to findings by Congress under the Commerce Clause and equally so to a finding by Congress that there is adequate state involvement under the Fourteenth Amendment wherever the state authorizes, licenses, protects or regulates private facilities open to the public. It becomes almost ludicrous to suggest that the Supreme Court, which has so long protected the rights of Negroes while Congress stood idly by, should now, when Congress at long last does begin to move, find constitutional deficiencies in its action.

10. The Administration bill, as initially drafted, was predicated on the Commerce Clause alone. Because of pressure from those who relied in whole or in part upon the Fourteenth Amendment, findings were inserted in the bill concerning the Fourteenth Amendment (Section 201(h)(i). But the operating sections of the Administration's public accommodations bill are drafted solely in terms of the Commerce Clause. The operating sections use such terms as "traveling in interstate commerce", goods and services "provided to a substantial degree to interstate travelers", and activities which "substantially affect interstate travel or the interstate movement of goods." These varying commerce concepts have caused some confusion at the hearings to date. Both to avoid this confusion and to make full utilization of the Fourteenth Amendment underpinning of the bill, it would appear preferable that the bill rely equally upon the Commerce Clause and the Fourteenth Amendment in its findings and that the operating section of the bill (Section 202) be rewritten to eliminate Commerce Clause limitations. Section 202 should simply forbid discrimination in all facilities open to the public except those which Congress deems it necessary to exempt. Reliance would be placed upon both constitutional bases, but neither would serve as a limitation on public facilities covered by the bill.

11. There is very direct precedent for combining the Commerce Clause and the Fourteenth Amendment as the constitutional underpinning for the President's civil rights program. The Tennessee Valley Authority was based on three constitutional powers--the war power, the navigation power, and the right to dispose of property. The Holding Company Act and the Securities Exchange Act were both based on the commerce and postal powers of the Constitution.

12. As we favor the broad coverage spelled out above, so we question the need for exceptions. There is no possible warrant for an across-the-board dollar limitation on what is covered by the bill. It is just as immoral for a little place to discriminate as it is for a big one; a person seeking service at a small lunch counter may be just as hungry as one seeking service at Howard Johnson's.

13. The question of Mrs. Murphy's guest house has created something of a political problem. It should be noted, however, that the reason for excluding Mrs. Murphy's guest house, if there is one, is not the small size of her place, but rather her right to privacy. If Congress deems it necessary to exempt an owner-operated home in which there are few guests, that should be done on the basis of the right of privacy of one's home. In this way, Mrs. Murphy does not become a precedent for exempting a small restaurant, motel or place of amusement. Incidentially, owner-operated rooming houses with a few guests have been exempted from fair housing laws on this same principle of the right of privacy.

14. Suggested Position: At this stage of the legislative battle, it would seem best for the organizations to urge that:

(i) the public accommodations bill be predicated upon both the Commerce Clause and the Fourteenth Amendment,

(ii) that the operating section not be written in terms of the Commerce Clause as at present but instead be written in terms of covering everything that is open to the public.

(iii) that, if any exceptions must be made, they be predicated on the right of privacy and not on size.

(iv) that there is no basis for a dollar limitation on the public accommodations covered by the bill.

*****

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

SUIT AGAINST TENNESSEE MOTEL
CRACKS URBAN RENEWAL BIGOTRY

July 31, 1963

NEW YORK -- The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. today announced victory in a suit that establishes the legal path for challenging discrimination taking place in any urban renewal program.

The decision, handed down against a Tennessee motel chain, goes further than President Kennedy's executive housing order of November 20 1962, and used the Constitution as its legal foundation.

Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the Legal Defense Fund, said that the U. S. Federal District Court ruling "denies the right of Holiday-Inns of America to decline accommodations to Negro citizens since it is situated on a federally underwritten urban renewal site.

"The implications of the decision are vast," Mr. Greenberg continued, "for all the urban renewal projects constructed before President Kennedy's housing order and not expressly covered by it.

"This decision also makes specific judicial relief available in instances of discrimination by urban renewal projects built since the Presidential order.

"This will affect rental housing, homes for sale, commercial property and every other facility which has been built with urban renewal aid," the Legal Defense Fund's chief counsel said.

The complaint was filed in the U. S. Federal District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee in February by Avon N. Williams and Z. Alexander Looby, NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys in Nashville; A. W. Willis, Memphis; Mr. Greenberg, Constance Baker Motley and Frank Heffron, of New York City.

They represented Dr. Vasco A. Smith, Jr., a Negro dentist from Memphis, who was denied accommodations at the Holiday Inn-Capitol Hill motel on December 4, 1962.

The motel was built on land acquired from the Nashville Housing Authority in 1958 and 1959. The Nashville Housing Authority had condemned the redevelopment project area in 1952, of which 90% of the land was owned or occupied by Negroes.

The area is being redeveloped through a 1952 contract between the Nashville Housing Authority and the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Under this, the Federal Government agreed to pay two-thirds of the net cost of the project. The City of Nashville paid the remaining one-third.

Legal Defense attorneys pointed out that "defendants serve the public purpose of providing lodging, dining and recreational facilities to motorists visiting the capital of the State of Tennessee, while at the same time enjoying the opportunity to pursue private gain."

They added that "there are no adequate, first-class motel facilities open to Negroes in the central commercial district of Nashville."

--30--

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

FOR RELEASE: Monday A.M., August 5, 1963

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE FUND WINS VITAL ALBANY, GEORGIA VICTORY

ALBANY, GA.--The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund today announced the first major breakthrough in the long-stymied racial crisis here.

The U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, has ordered a lower court to issue an injunction against city officials here that will allow Negro citizens to enjoy many of the goals sought during months of peaceful demonstrations.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, Legal Defense Fund Associate Counsel, who was chief counsel during the long proceedings, pointed out that Albany officials have been busily selling the city's swimming pool facilities to private individuals.

"We shall have to go back to court to test the validity of these sales. But the decision is clear that all public facilities sought to be desegregated by this suit must be open to Albany's Negro citizens," she said.

Albany flared into the nation's headlines during the summer of 1962. The Albany Movement was under the leadership of Dr. W. G. Anderson. Dr. Martin Luther King and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference also participated in the demonstrations.

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys stressed that Albany's Negro citizens sought:

* the end of state enforced racial segregation in all public parks, libraries and city auditorium;
* the end of city laws requiring segregation in taxicabs, theatres and on buses;
* the end of arrests for attempting to use public recreation, transportation, and library facilities on an integrated basis.

Mrs. Motley, flanked by C. B. King of Albany and Donald L. Hollowell of Atlanta, pointed out that Dr. Anderson and other leaders of the Albany Movement had met with the Mayor and suggested appointment of a biracial committee to improve the situation before the demonstrations began.

The Mayor never responded.

Arguments of NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys were turned down after three hearings in the District Court on ground that the individual Negro plaintiffs were not segregated against personally while seeking use of public facilities.

The District Court also reasoned that the named Negro plaintiffs were not representative of Albany Negroes in general.

The U. S. Appeals Court disagreed and ordered the lower court to issue the injunction sought by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund.

--30--

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE

LEGISLATIVE STRATEGY CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS
AUGUST 6-8
WASHINGTON STATLER-HILTON HOTEL

* * * * * * * * * *

Tuesday, August 6, 1963

9:00 a.m.	REGISTRATION	FOYER 2
10:00 a.m.-12:00 p.m.	BRIEFING (Congressional Room) (Presiding-Clarence Mitchell (Director, Washington Bureau, NAACP)	Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary, NAACP Joseph L. Rauh, Jr. Washington Attorney-Vice Chairman for Civil Rights-Civil liberties, ADA Herman Edelsberg, Director, Anti-Defamatio League B'nai B'rith
12:00 a.m.-1:00 p.m.	ORGANIZATIONS SESSIONS	State Delegations in Congressional Room Republican and Democrati Leadership Groups in California Room
1:00 p.m.-2:00 p.m.	LUNCHEON BREAK
2:00 p.m. -	Room 457-Old Senate Office Building	Meeting with Democratic Senators
3:15 p.m. -	East Front Conference Room of Capitol (S-207)	Meeting with Republican Senators
8:00 p.m.-10:00 p.m.	Congressional Room (STATLER HOTEL)	Meeting of all delegates SPEAKER-Walter P. Reuthe President, UAW-CIO and National Board Member of NAACP PANEL-Building Grass Roots Action
	MODERATOR	Gloster Current-Director of Branches, NAACP
	PARTICIPANTS	Mr. James Hamilton National Council of Churches

PARTICIPANTS (Cont.)

Dr. H. B. Sissal, United Presbyterian Church, USA

Mr. Floyd Agostinelli, Office of Urban Renewal, Catholic Archdiocese of Washington

Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7

9:00 a.m. Visits to Congressmen and Senators by Delegates

* SPECIAL STATE MEETINGS

1. Maryland-Caucus Room-Old Senate Office Building
2. Massachusetts-(Place to be designated by Speaker McCormack)
3. Pennsylvania **
4. New York **
5. Michigan **

2:30 p.m. PRESIDING — Dr. John Morsell, Assistant to the Executive Secretary

Delegates Assemble in President Room of Statler for Reporting

8:00 p.m. Meeting in Presidential Room

CONGRESSIONAL SPEAKERS

Chairman Emanuel Celler, House Judiciary Committee
The Honorable Charles Diggs
Senators Douglas, Javits, Hart, Keating, Scott, Clark

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8

9:00 a.m. Continued Congressional Visits

10:00 a.m. Reports in Congressional Room

11:00 a.m.-3:00 p.m. Follow-up Strategy Meeting-California Room (Statler)

*BECAUSE OF THE SIZE OF THESE DELEGATIONS IT WAS NECESSARY TO HOLD MEETINGS OUTSIDE OF OFFICES OF SENATORS AND CONGRESSMEN.

TO BE ANNOUNCED

LWD, VJ, PA, WB, BP Intergroup org. NAACP

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE --August 16, 1963

Mass Demonstrations: The New Legal Challenge

by

Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel

NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.

Since most street demonstrations invariably end in a courtroom and since hundreds of school and public accommodations cases remain to be filed and won, The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. has been expanding its activities to continue to serve, as in the past, the legal arm of the civil rights movement.

We now represent more than 7,500 demonstrators involved in 125 civil rights actions across the country. These comprise members of all the major civil rights organizations.

The current crisis has caused a vast increase in civil rights litigation. Two factors are primarily responsible:

a) the wave of peaceful protest demonstrations that began with the sit-ins in 1960, and capped off by Birmingham and its aftermath.

b) sharpened opposition to court orders requiring desegregation, characterized by increasing complex legal activity, on part of the southern white community, to counter our legal efforts.

For obvious reasons, almost no southern white lawyers will handle race relations cases. In many places, there are no Negro attorneys with training adequate to cooperate with the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

Tallahassee, for example, the capital city of Florida, does not have one practicing Negro lawyer. C. B. King of Albany, Ga. is the lone civil rights attorney in southwestern Georgia. There are only three Negro civil rights lawyers in the entire State of Mississippi.

There are virtually no Negro lawyers anywhere in the most crucial parts of the rural South.

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, through long and short-range planning, is moving to cope with the present crisis in four ways:

I. Julius LeVonne Chambers, brilliant graduate of the University of North Carolina's law school, where he became the first of his race to be editor-in-chief of the North Carolina Law Review, will join our staff in September.

He will be our first legal intern.

Mr. Chambers, and other participants in our legal intern program were and will be chosen with the understanding that they eventually practice law in southern communities where there is an acute shortage of attorneys qualified to handle civil rights cases.

The interns will work in the Legal Defense Fund's New York office, under supervision of our legal staff. They will assist in research, litigation, and preparation of briefs.

Internship will be completed in one year. They will then go to a community in the South where a civil rights lawyer is needed, and where reasonable prospects exist for an eventual private practice. For the first three years of their practice we will assist them in getting started.

Another young attorney will join Mr. Chambers during the first phase of our program, which is being underwritten by an initial $25,000 grant from the Field Foundation. We expect this program to expand to six lawyer-interns by next year.

II. In keeping with our pledge to defend all civil rights demonstrators seeking our assistance, the staff of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund has doubled during the past year.

We had five attorneys working in this office in October 1961. In October 1962, we had nine. We plan to have 17 by the end of this year, and we are bringing them in just as fast as we can absorb them.

In addition, we now have 100 cooperating attorneys throughout the South, an increase of 25 per cent during the past three years.

Expansion of our staff legal talent is essential since most of the research and brief writing is done in our New York office. There are some 70 school integration cases on our current docket. However, this number would be more than doubled if we had four or five additional lawyers on our staff at this time.

III. Our physical facilities were doubled by our move to new offices three weeks ago. This was made possible by our expanding budget. We projected a $650,000 budget in 1962 and secured it. We projected a $750,000 budget for this year, but if the current trend of contributions continue, we will budget $1,100,000 for 1963.

IV. We will hold practicing law institutes, to share the latest legal knowledge with our cooperating counsel, in three southern cities -- Washington, D. C., Atlanta, and Dallas -- this fall. They will be conducted by professors from Columbia, Yale, Howard and other Law Schools.

These seminar-like sessions will cover crucial legal areas such as: constitutional law, including freedom of speech; school and public facility desegregation; federal procedure; criminal law; evidence.

We will then publish manuals which will serve as a continuing guide to civil rights attorneys.

Through these steps, plus the continued devotion of Legal Defense Fund attorneys, legalism will continue to be a potent weapon in the Negro's march for dignity.

New Republic
8/17/63

LWD, VJ, PA, HC, BEP, BP

The Angels Are White

Who Pays the Bills for Civil Rights?

Intergroup org. N.AACP

by Reese Cleghorn

"Our Boston millionaires give money when it is solicited (properly), and they all include in their wills some bequests to Harvard and to Massachusetts General Hospital. That is all."
– Review of Reviews, 1893.

Marcus Garvey is said to have collected $10 million within two years half a century ago by creating Dukedoms of the Nile and the Niger, operating a black nationalist industrial and military empire and disclosing that both God and the angels are black. In those times a new and smaller power called the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was gleaning in the fields of Manhattan for enough money to stay alive; most of its angels were white.

Since then, more and more angels have been on the side of reform. In June some of these banded together to finance a new Council for United Civil Rights Leadership, and endowed it with $800,000. Another $700,000 is expected by the end of the summer, and those sums can probably be duplicated in the future.

We apparently have become so accustomed to announcements of million-dollar funds that this one did not seem very newsworthy. But $1.5 million is more than the NAACP budgeted nationally for 1963, and four times as much as Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference will spend.

The leading angel behind these silver linings is Stephen Currier, who was briefly mentioned in one news story as "a young and hitherto little-publicized man of wealth." That was only a whisper of the full truth; Stephen Currier has been as dedicated to anonymity as some men are to mammon. He now has emerged only to the extent of serving as co-chairman (with the Urban League's Whitney Young) of the new Council.

Even the mention of Currier's name was a little startling to those who had known of his civil rights interests. His modesty is suggested by the fact that his office tells reporters with blunt finality: "Mr. Currier does not speak with newspaper people." When he does speak it is usually softly, though he can be tart and he has a highly developed critical faculty. He is a young man out of Harvard, in his early 30's, of medium height and pleasant disposition. He wears spectacles and careful clothing. His business identification is Currier and Co., an ownership firm, and he is president of the Taconic Foundation, which has quietly engaged in various philanthropies but most recently in a widely-noted study of unemployment among young workers. The foundation has not participated primarily in civil rights work, though it has helped finance the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project.

Wealthy in his own right, Currier is married to an heiress of the Mellon fortune. In the world of philanthropy, that is all that need be said. Having concluded that competition for funds was at the root of the discord apparent in recent months among rights groups, he began to produce the solution: money. For three months now, rounding up cash has been his calling. "He is at it at 5 or 6 in the morning, and sometimes when I poop out around 10 that night he is still going," says his designated spokesman. (He, too, insists upon being anonymous.) Undoubtedly a substantial sum of his own money is involved, but the first $800,000 was raised among 96 corporation and foundation leaders who ate breakfast at Currier's expense on June 19 at the Carlyle Hotel in New York.

Since then Currier has moved resolutely about the city calling upon people of wealth. Besides these excursions, his path these days is principally that between his mid-Manhattan apartment, where he does some of his work, and his foundation's office on the 35th floor of the Tishman Building. Lately there has been little time to spend on his estates in Vermont and Virginia, and little to devote to his art interests. "He is dedicated," his anonymous spokesman says. "He is spending all his time at this now. And this is the first time he has ever asked anyone for money. Usually, it has been the other way around."

Perhaps because of his youth and a gentler bearing often associated with men who have inherited money instead of seizing it, one long-time acquaintance has said of him: "He is not exactly the type who would bowl over the board of Inland Steel." But he has been obviously effective, and the leaders of the civil rights organizations regard him as no dilettante. Two of these recently chose the same words: "Currier really understands what is going on."

---

REESE CLEGHORN is an editorial associate with the Atlanta Journal.

It seems significant that most of the donors he has aroused are, though wealthy men, not members of the old wealthy families whose names would be widely recognized. Some have never given to such a cause before. Why this time? "Many people he talks to are just ashamed of some of the things happening in the South, and in the North," says the Fund's spokesman. "We go to people who have money, say this is what the civil rights groups are doing, and they need money." Then he adds what may be the best explanation of all: "I really think the photographs of Bull Connor and the police dogs did it."

Whatever the immediate inspiration, those interested in civil rights often have been moved less by the Emancipation Proclamation than by the Revenue Act of 1935. This seldom-memorized and scarcely-grandiloquent document began a change in American society that one day may rank it with Disraeli's Reform Act: it firmly established the enduring principle that private charities are of such social value that donations to them may be deducted from taxable income. The effect was so salubrious that corporations multiplied their charitable gifts by nine times between 1939 and 1945, and individuals five times. Besides giving life to the great foundations, the effect was to persuade such "non-deductible" organizations as the NAACP to assign their "deductible" functions, in this case legal defense and education, to separate organizations which might secure those blessings to which the Internal Revenue Service might entitle them.

One of the most impressive results of Currier's footwork is that of the first $800,000, donors of $300,000 agreed to give it to "action" groups which the Internal Revenue Service has not made deductible. The NAACP will get $125,000; the Congress of Racial Equality, $100,000; King's SCLC, $50,000; the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC – an independent offshoot of King's group), $15,000 with a promise of more later. Among the "deductibles," the Urban League will get $125,000; the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, $100,000; the National Council of Negro Women, $50,000. That left $235,000 unassigned, with more coming in every day.

It was a case of "to each according to his need," the Fund's spokesman said. There apparently was a determination not to leave out any of the seven chosen organizations if each would make any effo t at all to meet the basic requirements for financial statements and explanation of program. The fact that Dr. King received only $50,000 – and that his recently-established Gandhi Society is not included at all – may or may not be indicative. The Gandhi Society is SCLC's version of the NAACP's Legal Defense Fund, and some regard it as an unnecessary competitor for funds. As to why SCLC did not receive a bigger share, King is said to have told the other participants that his own fund-raising efforts this year have gone especially well (perhaps thanks, again, to Bull Connor's dogs) and other organizations might be in greater need.

The Council for United Civil Rights Leadership thus seems to be under way with a certain generosity of spirit and a minimum of discord. For non-deductible gifts, the council has opened an office at 10 East 44th Street, New York. For deductible gifts, it has established an allied Committee for Welfare, Education and Legal Defense (WELD, in the spirit of the times) at 10 Columbus Circle. Possibly attesting further to the orthodoxy of this revolution, WELD is being incorporated in Delaware. If there be any Marxists in the streets, that should send them back to their looms.

The suspicion will grow that this new council of unity is actually the seed of a great new community chest of the future. Its sponsors repeatedly emphasize its role as a fund raiser; yet it is obvious that all the participants were professionals at this already. It is known that at the Carlyle there was some discussion of working toward a United Fund approach for civil rights organizations.

Wilkins, King and others have talked of this before, contemplating the effectiveness of the United Jewish Appeal. Surely it has crossed their minds that such a mass organization as the NAACP, with 400,000 members in 1,500 units, and such an orator as King, with moral imperatives to support the efficacy of equality, would be a great combination with the collection plates. All that the sponsors of the unity council will say about this now, however, is that such talk is premature.

Each of the participants in the council now has a different base of support. In the NAACP's budget of $1.2 million (expected now to rise by at least $100,000 before the year is over), the members themselves bear the burden in systematic fashion, through dues, life membership fees, subscriptions and the like. This is the

SUMMER SCHEDULE

During the summer months,
The New Republic will not appear on:

August 24 September 7

Weekly publication will be resumed with the issue dated September 14 only one of the "action" groups so supported.

Dr. King's SCLC, with a current budget of $375,000 to $400,000, is only fractionally supported by its affiliate organizations. Its true base of support is King himself, whose personal appeal brings in most of the money through the mail and at benefits. (Professional fund raisers have said they know of no one who has better results in mail appeals.) CORE also relies heavily upon benefits, for a budget of $789,000. While the NAACP budget has remained stable in recent times, King's has burgeoned from $60,000 in 1960, and CORE's also has had great growth, both reflecting the restlessness of the times.

For rapid expansion, however, no one can better the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. Founded under King's auspices during the 1960 college sit-ins, the Atlanta-headquartered committee went its own way and now has far more full-time staff workers in the South than any other organization. A late count shows 193 workers. Except for about 35 summer helpers from various colleges, they are full-time regulars. SNCC spreads amoeba-like; when one of its numerous field secretaries finds a likely prospect, he forthwith employs him by sharing his own pay until the main office can provide approval and finish the paper work. The "Snicks'" austerity is legend. Most of the paid field workers receive $10 to $20 a week, and some turn in expense accounts with notations such as "15 cents for bread." For these dwellers in the cotton fields, and for other purposes, SNCC has a current budget of $267,000. It is expected to receive much more of the unity council's fund: its initial $15,000 allocation was based upon a 1962 budget of only $72,000.

More Workers, Less Violence

While SNCC's parsimonius young students may be multiplied by the new fund, the NAACP expects to increase the number of older professionals less spectacularly. Its new staff members, rather than working out of farmers' unpainted houses as SNCC workers do, probably will operate from the main office in Freedom House on West 40th Street. "This all developed too fast for us to be certain how it will be worked out," said Dr. John A. Morsell, assistant to Wilkins. But he expects an increase in "task force" operations, such as sending out professionals quickly to assist local units when something comes up. The NAACP and other organizations have been flooded by requests for help, sometimes from groups that know they want to protest but have not even decided how or against what.

In encouraging funds for the "action" organizations, especially, Currier is said to have had his eye upon the demonstrations taking place, often without firm direction. Much of this money will be used to add to the professional staffs of the participants. It is not truly a case of infiltrating the revolution with money, the sponsors insist; it is just that money, as President Kennedy might say, is "a part of the great American tradition." If you are going to have a revolution, it might as well be solvent, and imbued with American know-how.

Soon after the new fund was announced, someone said for the press that this money would provide more professional leadership to prevent violence. Roy Wilkins snapped a little at this idea, as if to say this was no attempt to slow anything down. (The NAACP spares no effort these days to prove that it never lagged behind Martin Luther King in its belief in demonstrations. One NAACP field secretary was heard telling a young sign-bearing staff worker during a recent march: "If you see a photographer, you just make sure that sign is up front.")

Yet it seems obvious that prevention of mayhem is one idea involved here. Another is that additional professional staff will enable those leading these protests to define and achieve their goals more intelligently.

The need for money in another realm, legal defense, is perhaps of even greater urgency. The Legal Defense Fund now has nine lawyers and suddenly there are 6,000 civil rights cases in Southern courts. The unity fund is expected to finance the addition of six more lawyers very soon. Wilkins was complaining not long ago that other organizations rush people out to get arrested and the NAACP has to get them out of jail; that has been the pattern. For each lawyer, some $25,000 is required for salary, secretary and logistical support.

So far no one has complained about receiving the new money. Though such gifts often were denounced in the 1930's as bones thrown down from the Olympian heights of capitalist treachery, no one this time seems to fear the boodle. Heywood Broun said of Andrew Mellon's offer to give the federal government his Old Masters, as well as a museum in which to house them: "It is a thumping gift, but it is not enough to justify the existence of swollen fortunes." The civil rights organizations seem ready to accept even the strings attached to these latest spoils, which consist almost entirely of a stuffy demand for programming and orthodox audits. The capitalists are not trying to inject Adam Smith into the revolt, just Price Waterhouse.

There is another aspect. One close to the bullion observed: "Obviously this makes for more rapport between whites and Negroes. It is an answer to the increasing go-it-alone feeling on the part of the Negroes down in the ranks. It will have a tendency to diminish the prospect of racial polarization."

Then he had another thought that suggests genuinely enthusiastic rapport. "I have an idea," he said, "that there is a lot more money where this came from."

Intergroup org. NAACP

An N.A.A.C.P. Lawyer Answers Some Questions

Mr. Greenberg, director of the Legal Defense and Educational Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People travels constantly, arguing court cases, making speeches and discussing integration with community groups. In the informal cross-examinations that he encounters, certain questions invariably recur. The following are the nine questions most often asked by whites, together with his answers.

By JACK GREENBERG

Q. Shouldn't the sit-ins, pickets and marchers obey the law like anyone else?

A. Yes, they should, and with few exceptions, they do. None of the responsible organizations has advocated or defended breaking the law.

But violation of state segregation laws or rules that stifle free speech are not violations of the law as determined by the United States Constitution. Dr. Martin Luther King's advocacy of "civil disobedience" has as a practical matter amounted to no more than that. In the "Letter From Birmingham City Jail," his most recent and perhaps fullest discussion of the question, he describes only two types of American laws he believes should be disobeyed: "segregation laws" and laws that "deny citizens the First Amendment privilege of peaceful assembly and peaceful protest."

He calls these laws "unjust". A lawyer would call them unconstitutional. (But last year, for example, Dr. King obeyed a Federal court injunction in Albany, Ga., until it was vacated by the Court of Appeals.)

His philosophical position means disobedience of unjust laws such as Hitler's Nuremberg Laws, even though they were perfectly legal within the Nazi system. Most Americans ought to agree with him. In Germany, there was no redress within the law. Here the contrary is true.

The N. A. A. C. P. Legal Defense Fund represents more than 7,500 demonstration defendants. While many cases, of course, are still pending, every one that has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States has been reversed. Judgments against sit-ins in half a dozen cities already have been struck down; others have been returned to state courts for reconsideration; Freedom Riders have been freed; the convictions of hundreds of protest marchers have been set aside. Legal Defense lawyers are arguing more cases before the Supreme Court this fall. Fundamentally, if a protestor is acting nonviolently to oppose racial discrimination, he is acting in the main stream of American constitutional freedom and should expect favorable hearing by the courts.

Violence is something else again. It has usually broken out when hostile whites attacked demonstrators; the ensuing disorder has given the demonstrations an aura of lawlessness. However, the courts have often held that the right to free speech can't be taken away because of mob violence. The man who starts the violence should be arrested—no matter which side he is on.

"The Negro protest, if it causes the country to come to grips with its fundamental problems — which must be solved to integrate successfully — will benefit the nation as a whole and not merely its underprivileged colored citizens."

"Mother and Child," a painting by John Wilson.

Q. Don't protest marches and demonstrations create unrest and race hatred? Aren't they delaying integration by stiffening the opposition?

A. Few real civil rights gains, especially in the South, have come without lawsuits or protest demonstrations. The white majority has rarely given up privilege without a vigorous showing by the minority that it wants equality. White leaders who want discrimination ended are often strengthened when they can show opponents that a court order or the need for community peace requires that something be done. Some racial unrest is stirred up by demonstrations, of course. But this rarely slows integration. It merely brings to the surface attitudes that need recognition and exposure, and this is the first step toward changing them.

The white community is sometimes annoyed by interorganizational friction that may accompany demonstrations—though one wonders why similar disfavor had not been voiced at the underlying injustices that gave rise to the protests. But the course of a demonstration does not always run smoothly. It may start without the knowledge of national officers. Personalities become deeply engaged and mistrust sometimes flourishes. A recurrent irritation often arises when a member of a group accuses its leaders of softness and threatens to call in another "tougher" outfit. White community intransigence promotes escalation of this sort.

Q. Is there antipathy to all white people in the civil rights drive? Will this lead to an upsurge of violence?

A. It would be strange if racial resentment did not play a part in the demonstrations, but it is not dominant. The overwhelming factor is a desire to belong on an equal basis to the community at large. The spirit of nonviolence, which the direct action groups avow, is characterized by Christian love to an extent not present in any other nationally organized activity. Despite some who decry it, the civil rights movement is well integrated; indeed, more so than ever before. This shows that hostility is directed more (Continued on Page 85)

"WE SHALL OVERCOME"—A church-sponsored rally, chorusing the integration anthem, demands more construction jobs for Negroes and protests jailing of pickets at a nearby Queens housing project.

An N. A. A. C. P. Lawyer Answers Some Questions

(Continued from Page 16)

against prejudice and apathy than against members of the other race.

Louis Harris's recent poll shows that most Negroes want to live an integrated life — hardly an expression of racial animosity. If prompt progress is made to correct injustices there will be no violence, barring unpredictable, isolated instances that may occur despite all the efforts of civil rights leadership. But if progress is not made, the irritation of recurrent clashes presents a real danger.

In Birmingham, for example, protest marches began generally in a cheerful, adventurous atmosphere. Many Negro onlookers laughed and applauded as they might at a parade. But when the police brought out dogs and fire hoses the mood turned grim and angry almost instantly. Later, the bombing of Gaston's Motel provoked retaliation that was contained only after great effort by leaders of the movement.

Q. Shouldn't the civil rights effort aim at getting out the Negro vote? Once you have the vote, won't everything else follow easily?

A. The vote is extremely important. But it is not easy to get it out over the obstacles put up in many Southern communities. The Civil Rights Commission reports, "In some 100 counties in eight Southern states there is reason to believe that Negro citizens are prevented — by outright discrimination or by fear of physical violence or economic reprisal — from exercising the right to vote."

Full exercise of the franchise will, even with total effort, be a long time in coming. In any event, the franchise can't be exercised effectively without education. School desegregation must go on at the same time. Further, the right to vote is not fully effective without economic strength. Political organization and campaigning are ineffective unless backed by money. Therefore, full and nondiscriminatory employment are crucial to meaningful exercise of the ballot.

Poor housing (as well as unemployment) and the family demoralization that accompanies it are hardly a solid base from which children can be educated effectively and go on to successful careers. Greater electoral strength will help schooling, jobs and housing, but each advance feeds others.

Q. Are Negroes ready for integration? Shouldn't they first concentrate on their education?

A. No single approach is the magic key to the entire problem. A generation of fighting in the courts for equal education demonstrates that it cannot be achieved without integration across the board. Proper education cannot occur without nondiscriminatory employment. Higher schooling is expensive and elementary and high school achievement reflect a family's economic and social situation. Housing and voting are linked, too.

There is an interesting correlation between "readiness" and the demand for equality. Generally speaking, Negroes don't, because they can't, push hard for equality until they are "ready," in an educational, organizational and financial sense. When education has reached a level that permits full perception of the harmfulness of segregation, when there is a sufficient number of lawyers, and other leaders, when there is a good political base and sufficient resources to mount a legal or demonstration campaign, the Negro community is "ready" and acts. Revolutions prosper on hope and success, not on apathy and defeat.

Q. Don't storekeepers have property rights too? Shouldn't they be allowed to serve whom they want and make others get out?

A. The legal, social and moral issues can't be solved by using a catchword like "property." Instead, we must look at the whole picture. The Fourteenth Amendment makes individuals equal before the law without regard to race. The Government has a variety of different controls of business, such as licensing. The social damage done by excluding Negroes from all eating facilities in a downtown business section is clearly recognized. There are other fundamental interests, such as the right of privacy, that must be considered. A department store that serves everyone at all counters, but bars Negroes from its lunch counter is different, legally and morally, from someone's livingroom.

Storekeepers can't segregate in the more than 30 states that now have civil rights laws. Yet, few would suggest that in New York or in any of these other states — now including some border ones — the owner's "property" has been taken away. Business must keep certain hours, pay certain wages, not sell certain products; zoning, inheritance, usury and other laws limit what a man can do with what he owns. Southern states have required segregation on private property. Weighing all these factors, it seems reasonable to forbid the storekeeper a choice of customers on a racial basis; this does not deprive him of "property."

And there is the further question: can prejudiced storekeepers call on the police and the courts to arrest and jail those who peacefully persist in demanding service? Over recent years the uninterrupted trend of court decisions has is underway at International. Our semi-annual clearance of the finest Scandinavian furniture for every room in the house. Designs carefully executed in Bangkok teak or walnut. Dining tables and chairs, desks, occasional tables, lamps, rugs and accessories... at wonderful savings. ■ Sale items reduced 10% to 50%

(Continued on Following Page)

SALE

INTERNATIONAL HOME FURNISHINGS

NEW YORK • LOS ANGELES

220 E 23 St • 8th fl ■ Daily & Sat 10-6 Mon & Thur to 8:30 • MU 9-2920 when I sew on a

dublife

replacement collar!

AT NOTION COUNTERS
Department Stores, Variety Stores and Notion Stores

Fine Original

OIL PAINTINGS

DIRECT FROM THE ARTISTS

From $5.00 to $100.00

ALL STYLES • ALL SUBJECTS

ASK FOR FREE ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

The ARTISTS SHOWROOM

167 E. 33d St. (Bet. Lex. & 3d Av.) New York 16, N. Y. • Dept. T.

The Truth About Contact Lenses

Vent-Air Lenses Are Different. They're uniquely designed with four vents . . . permitting the flow of tear and air necessary to eye respiration better than any other contact lens. Exclusively at our offices.

Simple Fitting Procedure. Two or three visits are all that are usually needed and sometimes one-day service is available.

Completely Invisible. No matter how poor your eyesight, no matter how thick your glasses, if you're suitable for contact lenses no one will know you're wearing them unless you tell them so! You can't even see them in your own mirror!

How Can You Find Out More About New Vent-Air Lenses And Their Cost? Simple. Call MU 7-3880 and ask for your free copy of "FACTS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SEEING WITHOUT GLASSES." Or you may secure it by coming in or writing to Contact Lens Specialists, Sixth Floor, 7 W. 44th St. near Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

Also available: Brooklyn UL 8-8007 • Queens AX 1-5020
Bronx WE 3-5995 • White Plains WH 9-0697
Hempstead IV 9-1621 • Huntington HA 1-4460

MADEMOISELLE WRITES ABOUT VENT-AIR COSMETIC LENSES ON PAGE 243 AUGUST ISSUE

"Old Age Doesn't Worry Me —thanks to my SALVATION ARMY ANNUITY"

"Since I invested in a Salvation Army Annuity, I've stopped worrying about the ups and downs of stocks and bonds.

"I receive my annuity check regularly without fail as long as I live. The income never varies. I also get liberal tax savings on estate and inheritance taxes.

"It's a great joy also to know that after my lifetime, the money will make possible the carrying on the ministry of this well known religious and charitable organization."

For complete details, fill out and mail coupon today.

THE SALVATION ARMY
120 West 14th Street,
New York 11, N. Y.

Gentlemen:
Kindly send me without obligation your Annuity booklet T806

Name.....
Date of birth
Address.....
City.....Zone.....State.....

(Continued from Preceding Page)

been to forbid enforcement of private racial bias. While it is risky to predict the outcome of particular cases, it seems safe to say the trend will continue.

Q. Won't school desegregation lower the quality of education?

A. The United States Commission on Civil Rights has reported that, based on the experience of Washington, D.C., Oklahoma City, Baltimore, Louisville and the state of West Virginia, these fears are not justified. "Standards . . . need not be lowered as a result of desegregation, but it may be necessary to find some way of coping with the wider spread between individual achievement when white and Negro children are brought together."

The disparity rests on the fact that lower-income families (a large proportion of them Negroes) have, as indicated in a recent book by Dr. Patricia Sexton, "Education and Income Inequalities in Our Public Schools," inferior facilities, teachers and few opportunities to advance economically and socially.

Nevertheless, the commission points out that there are various techniques to deal with the problem of low achievers. Ability grouping by schools, programs or classes is one, and supervised home study another. In St. Louis, the Banneker group of schools, attended largely by Negroes, raised the number of its students in Track I (the highest group) from 7 per cent to 20.7 per cent over a period of three years at very little expense.

This was done, the commission reports, by admonishing teachers "to stop 'teaching by supposed IQ'; parents were told of the poor performance of their children, urged to cooperate with the school on homework assignments, and instructed how to do so. Children were spurred by assembly programs, field trips, pep talks, honor assemblies and posters."

NEW YORK has its Higher Horizons program and other cities have devised other techniques. Unless school boards act, there may be a temporary drop in quality for white children who are given a taste of the inferior schooling once reserved for Negroes. But schools can handle the problem, they should, and they do. Indeed, one bonus of integration is that many whites will not permit their children to get the kind of education Negroes had been compelled to take. In this sense, integration raises the quality of education. Apart from eliminating segregation, it is a pro-educational achievement in itself.

There is a fear that white families will move to the suburbs to escape desegregation. But the move to the suburbs started well before the integration issue faced the country and it continues for independent reasons. To the extent that suburban schools are an attraction because they may be better — without regard to race — Negroes with comparable incomes will move there, too, though it is obvious that more whites than Negroes can afford to move.

But school segregation either in law or as a matter of fact cannot be maintained in the suburbs either. When white families realize that integration needn't affect the quality of city schools and that suburban schools are integrated, too, they won't move merely for racial reasons.

Q. Won't some whites lose their jobs if employers are forced to hire Negroes?

A. No one in responsible leadership advocates firing whites to hire Negroes. Whitney Young of the Urban League, whose primary concern is discrimination in employment, points out that his group does not demand the firing of any white persons, or the use of racial quotas. But he asks that Negroes be hired without regard to their race if they are qualified. Given the discriminatory job market of years past and the fact that Negroes have lacked opportunity and incentive to train for jobs from which they were excluded, there is a need for affirmative action to involve them in currently all-white employment.

Where a white man and a Negro are equally qualified, given the need to compensate for past discrimination, the Negro ought to get the job. Though some would extend the principle of compensatory employment to unqualified workers, such a solution would boomerang in a brief time. Negroes would not have the same incentive to train properly as whites; white workers would not respect less competent fellow employes who were hired solely because of race; society would suffer from a job not well done.

Wherever possible, Negroes should be trained for jobs from which they have been barred. It should not be hard to produce fully qualified Negro countermen for hamburger stands if the employer wants to hire without regard to race. A rough rule of thumb in terms of numbers or percentages can help determine when the affirmative approach no longer will be needed.

To the extent that Negroes move into once all-white jobs, whites will not have those jobs. But there is no reason why in a time of unemployment whites should control the job market. The solution is not to discriminate but to provide full employment. Eliminating discrimination should contribute to this goal by increasing Negro purchasing power and equipping Negroes to participate on a skilled basis in the economy as a whole.

Q. Can successful integration be forced by law? Doesn't there have to be a change in the hearts and minds of men first?

A. From the beginning of time law has regulated conduct quite apart from attitudes. Actually, more than any thing else, law has been changing the hearts and minds of men.

People's feelings have had nothing to do with the fact that hundreds of thousands of Negroes have voted for the first time as a result of the white-primary cases. The armed forces were rapidly desegregated by Presidential order. Transportation has been desegregated with almost complete success by I.C.C. orders and lawsuits.

Litigation has brought about some, often substantial, desegregation of every Southern state university system. Court-ordered school desegregation is now under way in some of the deepest Southern areas and has been more extensive in border states. State F.E.P.C.'s and the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity have provided job integration.

Private and parochial schools have followed, rather than taken the lead, in these events. Those who, as a result of law, have rubbed shoulders for the first time on a basis of equality have learned they can get along well with their peers, no matter what their race.

Moreover, had it not been for the enlightened climate created by the 1954 school cases, we would not be witnessing the protest demonstrations of today. Law works, too, so that people who want to do the right thing have been able to fend off criticism by saying the law requires them to act. Some mayors and school superintendents have privately asked to be sued so that they can desegregate with impunity.

BUT where there is a housing or job shortage, or where education is deficient, law requiring integration can't make up that difference. And in such cases law requiring integration is less likely to be successful. You can't integrate housing very well if it is in short supply, and there is no room for anyone to move about. It is not easy to integrate jobs in an era of substantial unemployment.

The Negro protest, therefore, if it pushes the country to grips with its economic, housing, educational and other fundamental problems, which must be solved to integrate successfully, may well save the nation as a whole — not merely its underprivileged colored citizens.

N. A. A. C. P. LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND, INC.

10 Columbus Circle, New York 19, N. Y.

JUdson 6-8397

U J
P A
S B

Integroup org. N.AACP

TO: Editors

FROM: Jesse DeVore, Jr.
Director of Public Information

The attached release covers what should be an historic case in the whole area of public accommodations. It is filed on the eve of the March on Washington.

There are several unique factors in this brief:

(1) The pin pointing of state responsibility in the maze of arguments on private property rights, etc.

(2) Assistance of four noted legal scholars in preparing the brief, including Richard R. Powell, leading authority on property.

(3) Citing of attitudes of 14 other nations.

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. is now defending 7,500 demonstrators in 124 separate actions.

This is the third year that the Legal Defense Fund, a separate corporation, has taken sit-in cases to the Supreme Court.

- 30 -

 Editors note: For further information during non office hours:

James Nabrit, III - RE 2-7129 (N.Y.C.)

Jesse DeVore, Jr. - SC 4-0697 (N.Y.C.)

Contributions are deductible for U. S. Income Tax Purposes

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS, President
JACK GREENBERG, Director-Counsel
CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY, Associate Counsel

FOR: RELEASE TUESDAY, August 27, 1963

PER: Jesse DeVore, Jr.
Director of Public Information
Office - JUdson 6-8397
Home - SC 4-0697

NEW APPROACH CONTAINED IN SIT-IN BRIEF FILED IN U.S.SUPREME COURT

Noted Scholar on Property Rights Backs Sit-Inners

WASHINGTON---Attorneys of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund today filed a public accommodations brief in the U.S. Supreme Court which, if successful, would vindicate thousands of sit-in demonstrators.

In a unique legal move, a battery of 18 attorneys seeks to make southern states take an affirmative obligation to protect Negroes protesting laws and customs brought about by state action.

The brief points out the improbability of punishment for sit-in type conduct in any of the Western European democracies or in England or any of the British Commonwealth nations.

This brief is a combination of three cases involving student sit-in demonstrations, two in South Carolina, the other in Maryland.

Legal Defense Fund attorneys further point out that the states have affirmative responsibility to protect equal rights of citizens and argue that the southern states have not met this responsibility when they allow lunch counter segregation.

The brief also urges that constitutional prohibitions against racial discrimination must be applied to the public life of the community, but need not apply to the private and personal lives of citizens.

Three patterns, by which southern states (South Carolina and Maryland in this instance) deny Negroes equal justice, are summarized:

* State courts and public officials "are employed to enforce a scheme of racial discrimination originating in a nominally 'private' choice."

* "Where a nominally 'private' act or scheme of racial discrimination is performed...because of the influence of custom, and where such custom has been, in turn, in significant part, created or maintained by formal law."

* Where laws are maintained that place "a higher value on a narrow property claim" than it does on the claim of Negroes "to move about free from inconvenience and humiliation of racial discrimination."

The latter is one of the new points of law that hopefully will be decided by the court.

The Legal Defense Fund is urging that southern states have improperly decided to back store owners who cite local custom and state laws calling for jim crow treatment of Negroes.

The attorneys said "maintaining a 'narrow' property right, which consists of nothing but the exclusion of Negroes" should not be allowed "to justify a state in knowing support of public discrimination."

The brief further stated that "it is scandalous that states impose the burdens of state citizenship on Negroes, and benefiting from the imposition on them of the duties of federal citizenship, not only should fail to protect them in their right to be treated equally in fully public places, but should instead place the weight of law behind their humiliation."

It was stressed in the brief that "the records in these cases affirmatively establish that no private or personal associational interest is at stake."

"This is obvious on the face of it: the relation involved is that of a restaurant-keeper to a casual customer."

The attorneys continued saying that "the events and the issues in these cases are in the fully public rather than in private life.

"A restaurant is a public place, contrasting totally with the home and other traditional citadels of privacy."

Moving to the charge that the sit-ins students provoked breach of the peace, the brief said "there was no showing of any act of violence and there was no showing of any act 'likely to produce violence."

The Legal Defense Fund lawyers took exception to the theory that the "possibility that the mere presence of Negroes in a place customarily frequented only by white persons is punishable as a threat to peace."

They quickly added that such could not be so, due to the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

Joining the NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys were four internationally noted legal scholars: Professor-Emeritus Richard R. Powell, Columbia University Law School, and author of the widely acclaimed and used treatise "Real Property".

He was also reported on property for the American Law Institute's "Restatement of Property." Long recognized as a leading expert in this legal speciality, Dr. Powell now teaches at Hastings College of Law, San Francisco, California.

Also assisting was Professor Hans Smit of Columbia University, a Member of the Bar, Supreme Court of the Netherlands; Professor Charles L. Black, the Henry R. Luce Professor of Jurisprudence, Yale University; and Louis L. Pollak, Professor of Law, Yale University.

NAACP Legal Defense lawyers included Jack Greenberg, Constance Baker Motley, James M. Nabrit, III, Derrick A. Bell, Leroy D. Clark Michael Meltsner and Inez V. Smith, all of New York.

Also Juanita Jackson Mitchell, and Tucker R. Dearing, Maryland; Joseph L. Rauh and John Silard, Washington, D.C; William T. Coleman, Jr., Pennsylvania; Matthew J. Perry and Lincoln C. Jenkins, South Carolina.

Intergroup org. NAACP

From MORNING until NIGHT...

"humiliation stalks them"

The text of the testimony of Roy Wilkins, NAACP Executive Secretary, July 22, 1963, in supporting the public accommodations section (Title II, S.1731) of the proposed civil rights bill being considered by the Senate Commerce Committee

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE

20 West 40th Street New York 18, N. Y.

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND LAWYERS
ADVANCE AMERICUS, GA. CASES

October 18, 1963

ATLANTA, GA.--Two new moves were made here yesterday to secure release of a group of student civil rights workers jailed in Americus, Ga. since August 8th.

Donald Hollowell, attorney for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, filed two actions in the Georgia State Supreme Court on October 16th:

* an appeal of a petition for writ of habeas corpus against Americus's Sheriff Chappell, which was denied in Sumter County Superior Court.

* a motion for immediate admission to "reasonable bail".

Mr. Hollowell, of Atlanta, and C.B. King of Albany are working with the NAACP Legal Defense Fund in defense of four of the five students.

These are Donald Harris, John Perdew, Ralph Allen and Thomas McDaniel. Messrs. Harris, Perdew and Allen, all 21 years old, are field workers for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

Another student, Zev Aelony, a representative of the Congress of Racial Equality, is being represented by Mr. King and other attorneys.

They are among more than 250 persons arrested and jailed on numerous "charges" growing out of antidiscrimination demonstrations in that part of the state since July.

The four youths being defended by NAACP Legal Defense attorneys were in the midst of a voter registration drive to increase Negro voters in Sumter county. They were also seeking to expand the use of jim crow public facilities.

Negroes outnumber whites 12,980 to 11,672 in Sumter county.

NAACP Legal Defense attorneys also filed a suit in Federal District Court on October 11 asking that white leaders in Americus be stopped from "intimidating, discouraging...and preventing" Negroes from "exercising their rights...guaranteed by the Constitution...."

This complaint was signed by Mr. King, Jack Greenberg, Constance Baker Motley and Michael Meltsner, of the Legal Defense Fund.

If this action is successful, legal precedent will be established to block misuse of the law by local communities to thwart civil rights efforts.

Defendants named in the Legal Defense Fund federal court suit include the Solicitor General of the state of Georgia for the Southwestern Judicial District, State Director of Police, the Mayor of Americus, the Vice Mayor, the City Council, Chief of Police and Sheriff Chappell.

--30--

Intergroup org. NAACP

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND CARRIES CASE OF INTERRACIAL PAIR TO SUPREME COURT

October 30, 1963

Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, today released the following statement:

The NAACP Legal Defense Fund has taken the case of Dewey McLaughlin, Negro and Connie Hoffman, white, charged with living together in Miami Beach, Florida to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The Legal Defense Fund, which was asked to take the case while the appellants were still in jail, seeks to strike down three Florida statutes.

Our jurisdictional statement, filed October 28th, asserts that use of these laws provokes three questions. Is the Fourteenth Amendment violated where:

(1) The State has created a crime expressly defined in terms of race which punishes Negroes and whites who engage in certain conduct together, but does not forbid such conduct engaged in by Negroes only or whites only?

(2) Common law marriage is a defense for a couple charged under Florida law, but was unavailable to appellants because Florida prohibits marriage between Negroes and whites?

(3) Florida's purported definition of "Negro" and "white" persons - an essential element of the crime - is so vague and indefinite as applied as to afford no fair warning to appellants or standard of criminality for the court or the jury?

The NAACP Legal Defense Fund brief further argues that, "stripped of emotional overtones, the case is simple indeed.

"Who would doubt that the equal protection clause would invalidate a scheme of laws providing that it was a crime for automobiles occupied by Negroes and whites to exceed 25 M.P.H. but providing no speed limit for any other automobiles.

Such a legal scheme - and innumerable hypothetical parallels - would probably be laughed out of court with dispatch. But our hypothesized speeding law shares the same infirmity - it punishes an activity only if and because it is interracial.

It must also be stressed that we do not challenge "the state's power to regulate sexual immorality. But this law does not require any proof of sexual or other misconduct; it merely regulates who occupies a room.

There is some reason to doubt whether, aside from the racial dimensions of the law, Florida can justify punishing this conduct."

Intergroup NAACP

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

FOR RELEASE: Wednesday, October 30 at 12:00 Noon

AMERICUS, GA. CASES TAKEN TO U. S. SUPREME COURT BY NAACP
LEGAL DEFENSE FUND ATTORNEYS

WASH., D.C.--The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund today took the cases of four youthful civil rights workers, jailed in Americus, Ga. since August 8th, to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the Legal Defense Fund, announced that a motion for bail was filed with the high Court.

Three of the student leaders are being held on a charge of insurrection against the State of Georgia for which they face the death penalty.

The fourth, Thomas McDaniel, is being held on charges including unlawful assembly, rioting, attacking an officer with intent to kill and aiding and assisting another in an attempt to escape.

His bail is $12,000.

The other students are Donald Harris, John Perdew and Ralph Allen, all field secretaries for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. These three face insurrection charges, punishable by death.

Another student, Zev Aelony of the Congress of Racial Equality, is being defended by other counsel.

The motion for release on bail states that it is being filed because it can be acted upon immediately, while a petition for writ of certiorari normally must wait 30 days for the state to answer.

The motion for release on bail points out to the court that there is also pending an action in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia.

more.

In this action Legal Defense Fund attorneys are seeking an injunction against the state court proceedings and a writ of habeas corpus.

The Supreme Court motion suggests that if the high court deems it inappropriate to grant the release itself, it may find it desirable to ask the District Court, which now has jurisdiction over the parties, to grant the release.

Chronology of Events in and Around Americus, Georgia

January 1963

Field workers for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee moved into Americus, Ga. to assist the Sumter County Movement in its drive to register voters and to encourage Negroes to utilize public accommodations.

March 18, 1963

Two Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) workers arrested and held incommunicado for two hours and threatened with charges for vagrancy.

April 25, 1963

Ralph Allen, a SNCC field worker, was beaten on the street after he had taken a Negro woman to register to vote at the Sumter County Courthouse.

July 1963

More than 100 Negroes arrested for attempting to gain admittance, through the front door, to the movie theater in Americus.

July 13, 1963

Ordinance enacted restricting picketing to certain hours of the day and limiting the number and spacing of participants.

July 19, 1963

Nineteen persons arrested for their participation in peaceful demonstrations.

August 9, 1963

Plaintiffs Harris, Perdew, Allen and McDaniel and Sallie Mae Durham a minor, arrested during peaceful demonstration called to protest the

more.

denial of civil rights of Negro citizens, including the right to vote.

August 9, 1963

* Negroes demonstrated peacefully before Americus police station to protest reported police brutality and intimidation during arrests the day before. Thomas McDaniel and Miss Durham, both local citizens, were jailed with bonds of $20,000 each. However, the judge refused to set bond for SNCC workers. In addition, 8 peace bonds totaling $120,000 were lodged.

* Police officers and state troopers are reported to have stopped demonstrators and bludgeoned them with 2-foot clubs and electric cattle prods.

August 11, 1963

* Approximately 25 persons, kneeling in prayer before Americus police station, were arrested. Further incidents of alleged police brutality were reported. Demonstrators were still protesting denial of the right to vote.

* Archie B. Porter, 18, was shot while walking home. Seventeen police officers had stopped him, then beat and arrested him. When his mother went to police headquarters to inquire about his condition she was also arrested.

* Police are reported to have visited the local drive-in theater that evening to harass Negroes by shooting into the crowd. No one was reported hurt.

August 12, 1963

Police arrested Sammy Joe Haynes, 13, while walking down the street. He was kicked and severely beaten reportedly because of his participation in demonstrations.

August 13, 1963

U. S. Justice Department reported that FBI investigation in Americus, Ga. had failed to uncover any evidence of police brutality.

August 17, 1963

* Mayor T. Griffin Walker and City Engineer Charles Wheatley announced that no white person would be interested in negotiations.

more.

Sumter County Movement had hoped for a biracial commission.

* A group of 35 people arrested who had peacefully demonstrated in protest against reported police brutality and general denial of the exercise of their civil rights, including the right to vote.

* Zev Aelony arrested and imprisoned solely because of his activities participating in and assisting at meetings called to instruct Negro citizens in securing their civil rights, including the right to vote. He was arrested and is held without bail.

August 20, 1963

* James Brown, 30, Korean War veteran, was shot through the back of the neck and killed by a local policeman.

* Walter Rugaber, reporter for Atlanta Journal, forced out of hearing room despite law saying that such hearings are open to the public.

September 3, 1963

* Driver's seat of the car of Legal Defense Fund attorney C. B. King burned with acid while he talked with Judge James W. Smith.

* John L. Barnum, Jr., treasurer of the Sumter County Movement, said the public school boycott had gotten almost 100% backing from 2,000 students in Americus. This was a protest against jailing and brutal treatment of other school children who were being held, or had been held in Leesburg, Dawson and Americus. More than 250 persons were arrested during the summer.

October 1, 1963

Hearing on petition for writ of habeas corpus against Sumter Count Police Chief Fred Chappell held in Superior Court, Sumter County, Ga. Relief was denied.

October 11, 1963

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys filed a complaint in Federal Court against city officials of Americus, Ga. asking that they be stopped from using the law to inhibit advocacy of civil rights.

October 16, 1963

Appeal of the denial of the petition for habeas corpus was filed in the Supreme Court of Georgia.

more.

October 21, 1963

Appeal was docketed in the Supreme Court of Georgia.

October 22, 1963

Application for admission to bail and for reduction of bail pending disposition of the appeal of the denial of habeas corpus and the motion to advance hearing on the writ of error were filed.

October 23, 1963

Application for admission to bail pending disposition of the writ of error was denied.

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND CRACKS
DIXIE HOSPITAL SEGREGATION

November 2, 1963

RICHMOND, Va.---Racial discrimination against Negro patients and doctors in federally assisted hospitals, a common practice in eleven deep south states, was struck down here this week by the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Jack Greenberg, director counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, Inc., which won the victory, said that this is the first major attack on the separate-but-equal provisions of the Hill-Burton Act.

This act was passed by Congress in 1946 and authorized federal financial assistance to help construct more than 2,000 medical care facilities in the South.

Racially segregated hospital facilities built with Hill-Burton money are located in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

All told, these states have received over 500 million dollars of the more than 1.5 billion dollars spent or obligated by the federal government, according to the Public Health Service.

The hospitals involved in this case, and many others in the South, have defended their racial policies on the ground that they were "private" and not subject to the Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourth Circuit decision rejected that argument.

In essence, Mr. Greenberg explained, "the court held that North Carolina elected not to build new public hospitals on its own but provided for hospital care through aiding so-called 'private' hospitals under the Hill-Burton Act.

"This meant that North Carolina secured federal money to continue its state policy of jim crow hospitals.

more.

"Our request for injunction asked that the Moses Cone and Wesley Long hospitals in Greensboro be prohibited from:

> 'Continuing to enforce the policy, practice, custom and usage of denying admission to patients on the basis of race and in any way conditioning or abridging the admission to and use, the said facilities...on the basis of race,'" he pointed out.

"The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals this week declared a principle as far reaching in the medical field as the 1954 school desegregation principle was in its field, "Mr. Greenberg said.

Dr. G. C. Simpkins, Jr., one of the plaintiffs, wrote to officials of both the Moses H. Cone Memorial hospital and the Wesley Long Hospital in March of 1960.

He pointed out that neither would admit Negro physicians and dentists. As a result, Negro patients desiring admission would have to discharge their Negro doctors or dentists.

Negro physicians, dentists and patients applied for positions and admission to the two hospital staffs and wards but were not accepted.

The Negro plaintiffs included A. V. Blount, Jr., Walter J. Hughes, Norman N. Jones, Girardeau Alexander, E. C. Noel, III, and F. E. Davis, all qualified medical doctors practicing in Greensboro.

Also, Dr. Simpkins, Milton H. Barnes, and W. L. T. Miller, all qualified dentists, practicing in Greensboro.

The patient-plaintiff was A. J. Taylor, who has a confirmed gastric ulcer of 35 years duration. It requires constant medical supervision, dietary restrictions, and administration of anti-cholinergic drugs.

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys, responsible for the victory in addition to Mr. Greenberg, include Conrad O. Pearson, Durham, N. C.; James M. Nabrit, III and Michael Meltsner, of New York City.

Intergroup org.
NAACP

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N.Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE GAINS
FREEDOM FOR AMERICUS FOUR

November 2, 1963

AMERICUS, Ga.--NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys won release here this week of four youths jailed since August 8th. Three of them faced the charge of insurrection, a capital offense in this state.

The youths had been active in the drive to win voting rights and use of public accommodations for Negro citizens in this tension filled city.

Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the Legal Defense Fund, which was representing the youths in four simultaneous court actions at the time of their release here November 1st, made the announcement.

He said that a three-judge Federal District Court, sitting in Americus, enjoined prosecution of the charges of unlawful assembly and insurrection, ruling them unconstitutional.

Mr. Greenberg also authorized dispatch of $12,000.00 bail bond money to Constance Baker Motley, Legal Defense Associate Counsel, who was on the scene.

The students, Donald Harris, John Perdew, Ralph Allen and Thomas McDaniel went free.

Legal Defense Fund attorneys C. B. King of Albany, Donald Hollowell of Atlanta, Mrs. Motley and Michael Meltsner of New York City, escorted the youths from jail.

--30--

Editor's Note:
Full story was released October 30, including comprehensive background chronology

Research

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE FUND
SCORES FOUR DECISIVE WINS

November 13, 1963

NEW YORK--Four major courtroom victories were won by NAACP Legal Defense attorneys in six brief days across the country last week.

Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the Legal Defense Fund, stressed release of Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee field workers, jailed in Americus, Ga. since August 8.

"If Americus officials are permanently enjoined, civil rights attorneys will have a new technique of reigning in the city, county and state officials who use the law as a means of making life difficult for civil rights demonstrators," Mr. Greenberg said.

Legal Defense Fund lawyers secured the Americus victory on November 1.

Meanwhile, in Richmond, Va., the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals struck down racial discrimination against Negro doctors and patients in 11 deep south states.

Some 2,000 jim crow medical facilities are affected in these states which have received more than 500 million federal dollars. This victory also came on November 1.

Thirdly, admission of Harold Franklin to the graduate school of Auburn University, Auburn, Alabama. The University argued that Mr. Franklin had not graduated from an accredited college.

However, Legal Defense Fund attorneys pointed out that no Negro college in the state was accredited, and that the Negro students had not been allowed to attend the white colleges which are accredited.

November 5 was the date of this win.

The fourth victory took place in Arlington, Virginia on October 31 where attorneys are mopping up the remains of that state's massive resistance program. In this case, Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed the right of Negro children to attend a completely integrated school system in that county.

(more)

In another development, Legal Defense Fund attorneys asked the Florida Supreme Court to release four teenage youths, jailed in St. Augustine since July 23rd.

This is their punishment for participating in a sit-in demonstration against lily white restuarants.

The attorneys are challenging the constitutionality of holding juveniles in jail without bail. Three of the youths are 16, the fourth is 14 years old. The hearing is slated for November 18th.

These are but a few of the 8,000 persons currently being defended by the Defense Fund in 130 separate actions, Mr. Greenberg said.

The 12 New York based attorneys of the Fund, plus the 100 cooperating lawyers throughout the south, defend members of all the major civil rights groups.

The Americus case, which is not finished, represented one of the most massive legal pushes in civil rights history. Eleven Legal Defense Fund lawyers worked a total of 81 man days, at long hours, during this drive.

The case was being argued in three different courts at the time the youths were finally freed. These courts included a U.S. District Court, the Supreme Court of Ga., and the U.S. Supreme Court.

Cooperating Attorney C.B. King of Albany, Ga. and Legal Defense Fund staff Attorney Michael Meltsner of New York City, worked one solid month each.

- 30 -

NEWS FROM Southern Conference Educational Fund
822 Perdido Street, New Orleans, La. 70112

November 14, 1963

NEW ORLEANS, La.---The Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. and its executive director, James A. Dombrowski, filed a suit in Federal District Court on November 12th, attacking the constitutionality of the Louisiana Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law. The plaintiffs are asking that a three-judge Federal District Court issue a Declaratory Judgement that the law violates the constitution of the United States.

Dr. Dombrowski and New Orleans attorneys Benjamin E. Smith and Bruce C. Waltzer were arrested and SCEF records seized on October 4th, under this law, and charged with managing a "subversive organization." Arrests and seizures were made by New Orleans and State police, at the instigation of the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities.

The complaint maintains that "the sole purpose, intention and effect of threatening to enforce" the Louisiana law "is to deter, intimidate, hinder and prevent the plaintiffs and the members, friends and supporters of plaintiff corporation from exercising their fundamental constitutional rights guaranteed under the First and Fourteenth Amendments in their efforts to enforce the equality under the law guaranteed by the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments."

An interlocutory injunction was also requested restraining State authorities from utilizing photostatic copies of the seized SCEF documents now in their possession. A hearing pertaining to this injunction, before Federal Judge Robert A. Ainsworth, has been set for November 20th in the Old County building, Royal Street, New Orleans.

Defendants in the suit are State Representative James H. Pfister, chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities; Colonel Thomas D. Burbank and Major Russell R. Willie of the Louisiana State Police; Jimmie H. Davis, Governor of Louisiana; Jack P. F. Gremillion, State Attorney General; and Jim Garrison, District Attorney for Orleans Parish.

The October 4th conspiracy charges against Dombrowski, Smith and Waltzer were dismissed at an October 25th hearing before State Judge Bernard J. Cocke, for lack of evidence. But the confiscated documents have not been returned to SCEF, an organization dedicated to furthering racial intergration in the South.

On October 5th, SCEF's records were subpenaed by U. S. Senator James O. Eastland's Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and a number of them transferred to Washington, D. C. after Louisiana authorities had made copies for their own use.

On November 8th, the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities held a hearing on SCEF in Baton Rouge. At the three hour session, open to the press but closed to the public "to keep out agitators", copies of SCEF documents were used as "evidence" in an attempt to label the organization subversive.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund and executive director Dombrowski have also filed damage suits in New Orleans and Washington, D. C. against Louisiana officials and U. S. Senator Eastland.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs are Kunstler, Kunstler & Kinoy of New York; Milton E. Brener and, of counsel, A. P. Tureaud, both of New Orleans.

#

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND LAWYERS
BEAT DEATH DEADLINE IN GA.

November 15, 1963

ATLANTA, Ga.--A team of six NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys feverishly worked against a 33-hour-deadline here this week in a race to save a condemned Negro from the Georgia electric chair.

They were successful.

Isaac Sims, Jr., 27, of Folkston, Ga., was granted a stay of execution by Judge R.L. Carr of Glenville, Ga. at 4 pm on Tuesday, November 12th.

Young Sims was to have died the next day, Wednesday morning, at 9:00.

The lawyers made it with 17 hours to spare.

It all began at midnight, Monday, November 11, when a total stranger walked into the Jacksonville, Fla. office of Earl Johnson, one of the Fund's cooperating counsel. Jacksonville is just across the Georgia state line.

The stranger, who identified himself as a cousin of the condemned, asked Leroy Clark, if legal help could be secured. Attorney Clark phoned Legal Defense Fund Director-Counsel Jack Greenberg long distance in New York.

Greenberg immediately called Donald Hollowell, the Fund's noted attorney, in Atlanta and asked him to take charge of the case from that end.

Hollowell and William H. Alexander, youngest member of the Atlanta firm of Hollowell, Ward, Moore and Alexander, arrived at their offices early Tuesday morning, November 12.

(more)

Meanwhile in New York City, Greenberg was joined by Attorneys Constance Baker Motley and Michael Meltsner of the Legal Defense Fund staff.

Mrs. Motley and Meltsner drafted a motion which was relayed to the Atlanta attorneys via long distance telephone, for their on-the-scene consideration.

The lawyers had to:

* determine the basic facts of the crime...

* conduct a quick, but accurate, investigation of the previous trial proceedings---there was no time to secure the official courtroom record....

* determine what defenses had been raised (or not raised)...

* determine what legal steps to take, including what state court to file in, since there was no time for miscalculation....

They learned that Sims, sitting in death row in Reidsville Prison in Tatnall county, had been indicted by an all white grand jury in Charlton county.

They also learned that his white court appointed attorney had not appealed or attempted in any way to argue blatant constitutional abuses, such as the systematic exclusion of Negroes from Sims' jury.

Attorneys Horace Ward and Alexander spent the balance of Tuesday morning drawing up papers for a stay of execution and a petition for writ of habeas corpus.

They boarded a 1:55 plane for Savannah, rented a car and drove to Reidsville Prison, where they had their first talk with Sims.

Alexander then sped to Glenville, Ga. where Judge Carr signed the stay of execution. The youthful attorney then drove back to the prison where he served the warden with the life-saving papers.

The hearing, on charge of rape, is set down for November 19th in Reidsville. NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys will be there.

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

ADDITIONAL $75,000 GIVEN TO TRAIN RIGHTS LAWYERS

November 30, 1963

NEW YORK---The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund this week received a commitment for $75,000.00 from the Field Foundation in continued support of its Legal Intern Program.

Announcement was made by Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the Legal Defense Fund following communication with Maxwell Hahn, vice president of the Field Foundation, long time supporter of the civil rights struggle.

Mr. Greenberg announced the unprecedented Legal Intern Program in August of this year. The Field Foundation granted the initial $25,000.00 with which the Intern Program was started.

Julius LeVonne Chambers, honor graduate of the University of North Carolina Law School was the first intern.

He has been joined by others who are and will be working under supervision of the Legal Defense Fund staff in carrying out the full responsibilities of a civil rights attorney.

Mr. Greenberg pointed out that there is a dire need for civil rights attorneys in deep south states. The Legal Interns, after apprenticeship in the Fund's New York City headquarters, will set up practice in the south and assist in civil rights cases.

The Legal Defense Fund has expanded from staff of five New York based lawyers in 1961 to nine in 1962 to twelve at present. Plans call for 17 by the beginning of 1964.

These lawyers work with the Fund's 100 cooperating attorneys across the south, all under direction of Mr. Greenberg, and Constance Baker Motley, associate counsel.

This legal battery is presently representing close to 8,000 persons in more than 130 civil rights actions --- nearly 95 per cent of the South's civil rights litigation.

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

JFK GREATEST RIGHTS PRESIDENT OF CENTURY: CONSTANCE B. MOTLEY

November 30, 1963

NEW YORK---The loss of John Fitzgerald Kennedy has "deprived American Negroes of the greatest presidential advocate of equal rights this century has yet heard."

So spoke Constance Baker Motley, history making civil rights attorney and associate counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

Mrs. Motley's statement was the highpoint of a two day Women of Conscience Civil Rights Conference sponsored by the National Council of Women of the United States, here this week.

The attractive attorney added that the nation's loss, "has not deprived us of the vision which he, (President Kennedy) encouraged, of a truly desegregated society...."

The NCW was founded in 1888 by Susan B. Anthony, Clara Barton, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and others. Since then it has grown to include 56 Councils throughout the free world. It serves as a clearing house for women organizational activities.

Mrs. Motley said that "official resistance" to ending segregation has led to widespread disrespect for law and order. Moreover, "it has stimulated white citizen resistance in form of economic retaliation against Negroes," seeking freedom, she continued.

In conclusion, Mrs. Motley told NCW members and their President, Sophia Yarnall Jacobs, that the Negro vote is the key to lowering racial injustices.

"That is why current voter education and registration campaigns are a must. These efforts need sheer physical manpower.

"If every race relations conference would end with the dispatch of a corp of volunteers to a southern community for two or more weeks to help register Negroes, the picture would change," she said.

The NCW's first Women of Conscience Civil Rights Conference was planned and coordinated by Research and Action Associates, a team of social scientists.

- 30 -

-Leadership Conference on Civil Rights-

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING THE ADMINISTRATION'S 1963 CIVIL RIGHTS BILLS

This memorandum is intended to be of assistance to the groups considering what techniques to utilize and how best to work together to bring about the passage of the Administration's civil rights bill. The memorandum outlines the significant provisions of the bill and makes clear that what the President is asking from Congress is as moderate and restrained as it is necessary to the future of our country; it also sets forth some of the legislative problems in both the House of Representatives and the Senate and some of the immediate target areas for mobilization of opinion.

-A-

WHAT THE PRESIDENT'S CIVIL RIGHTS BILL CONTAINS

The President's civil rights program has been introduced in the House by Congressman Celler as H.R. 7152 and in the Senate by Senator Mansfield and 45 others as S. 1731. It is the most comprehensive civil rights bill ever to receive serious consideration from the Congress of the United States.

The "Civil Rights Act of 1963" contains eight titles relating to voting rights, public accommodations, school desegregation, Community Relations Service, Civil Rights Commission, non-discrimination in Federal programs, Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, and miscellaneous provisions.

TITLE I -- Voting Rights

The first title relates to voting rights. It repeats, without substantial change, the Administration's voting bill sent to Congress in February of this year. It would:

(1) Prohibit the application of any standard, practice or procedure in determining qualifications to vote in any Federal election different from those applied to individuals similarly situated who have been found qualified to vote by State officials.

(2) Prohibit denial of the right to vote in Federal elections because of immaterial errors or omissions in registration applications or other acts requisite to voting.

(3) Require literacy tests given in connection with registration to vote in Federal elections to be in writing or transcribed.

(4) Establish sixth-grade education as a presumption of literacy in connection with any test given to qualify to vote in a Federal election.

(5) Amend the 1960 Civil Rights Act to provide that, when less than 15 per cent of potential colored voters are registered in the area, the court shall issue orders entitling qualified Negro applicants to vote and may appoint temporary referees to take applications for registration pursuant to its order.

(6) Provide for expeditious handling of voting cases in which the United States is plaintiff.

These voting provisions constitute improvements in the operations of the 1957 and 1960 Civil Rights Acts. But it is readily apparent that they are both moderate and limited and wholly within the spirit of the 1957 and 1960 Acts. Indeed, the first four provisions noted above apply only to Federal elections, although there would appear to be constitutional authority to apply them to state elections as well.

The first two provisions, although primarily declaratory of existing constitutional and statutory requirements, will help persuade some reluctant judges by making the constitutional requirements clear.

The requirement that literacy tests be in writing or transcribed would make proof of discrimination simpler in many instances.

The provisions relating to a presumption of literacy based on a sixth grade education would make arbitrary denials by state officials more difficult and, when any arbitrary denials are challenged in court, this provision would take effect and create a presumption of literacy in favor of the person applying to register.

The provision for court orders entitling qualified Negro applicants to vote when the complaint alleges that fewer than 15 per cent of the Negroes of voting age in the area involved are registered to vote, makes possible meaningful interim relief during the customary lengthy litigation period. And the provision for temporary voting referees, despite the failure to date of the referee provisions of existing law, may nevertheless help persuade some judges to move ahead on this front.

The provision for expediting voting cases brought by the United States cannot make hostile judges act quickly, but it can be useful in some situations and will expose those judges who deliberately slow down judicial proceedings in voting cases.

There are stronger proposals in the voting field than those contained in the Administration bill. One of these, for example, is the Federal registrar system proposed by the Civil Rights Commission in 1959 and rejected by the Congress in the 1960 legislative battle. Administrative action of this character can provide mass enfranchisement which the court-centered programs never can accomplish. Yet every legislative advance cannot be obtained at once and the Administration proposals outlined herein will reenforce the 1957 and 1960 laws and give the Department of Justice additional tools in this important area.

TITLE II -- Public Accommodations

This is the most important title in the Administration bill. It would establish the right to service free from discrimination in places of public accommodation and business establishments. Included would be (i) any hotel, motel, or other public place furnishing lodging to transient guests from other states or traveling in interstate commerce, (ii) any motion picture house, theater, sports arena, stadium, exhibition hall or other public place of amusement customarily presenting entertainment which moves in interstate commerce, (iii) any retail shop, department store, market, drugstore, gasoline station, restaurant, lunchroom, lunch counter, soda fountain, or other public eating places, if goods and services are provided substantially to interstate travelers, or goods held out to the public have moved in interstate commerce, or the activities or operations substantially affect interstate commerce.

Those refused service would have the right to sue for preventive relief. In addition, the Attorney General could enter suit on receipt of a written complaint, if the complainant is unable to bring suit because of financial reasons or fear of reprisals. If successful, a complainant would be entitled to reasonable attorney's fees.

Before filing suit, the Attorney General would be required to refer the complaint to the Community Relations Service provided under Title IV of the Bill and to any appropriate state agency with authority to prohibit the discriminatory practice.

The bill relies on both the Fourteenth Amendment and the interstate commerce clause for its constitutional base, although the Attorney General in his June 26th testimony before the House Judiciary Committee relied almost exclusively on the interstate commerce power. Some Republicans prefer the Fourteenth Amendment route and it would probably be well to urge that the bill continue to be predicated on both constitutional bases. Added emphasis on the Fourteenth Amendment would also obviate the necessity of drawing lines between interstate and local facilities as does the Administration bill.

The President has acted decisively in meeting the problem of discrimination in places of public accommodation and this provision is certainly the most significant provision of the Administration's civil rights package. By the same token, it will inevitably engender the most opposition in Congress and the most efforts to compromise it.

One such compromise proposal is already being discussed -- namely, a limitation on the size of the establishment covered by the provision. It is true that a small rooming house in which the owner resides, the so-called "Mrs. Murphy rooming-house," retains many of the characteristics of a home and there may there be some reason for protecting the right of privacy of the home-owner. But there is no privacy in a store or restaurant or entertainment facility open to the public and, all such facilities, large or small, should be covered by the bill.

Even more dangerous - far more dangerous - is the compromise being suggested in some quarters to take the enforcement provisions out of the bill and leave it as entirely voluntary through conciliation. But conciliation is only valuable if there is ultimate enforcement behind it and anything that deprives the Administration package of an enforceable public accommodations title would be a tragic defeat for civil rights. What happens on the effort to take the enforcement provisions out of the public accommodations title will be a measure of success or failure for the Administration's bill.

TITLE III -- School Desegregation

Under this title, technical assistance, grants and loans would be made available to school boards to meet problems arising out of school desegregation or the adjustment of racial imbalance in schools.

The more important part of this title authorizes the Attorney General to institute civil actions for school desegregation upon receipt of complaints and a determination that the complainants are unable to institute legal proceedings.

As the Attorney General made clear in his testimony on June 26th, this title "would thus combine a program of aid to segregated school systems, which are attempting in good faith to meet the demands of the Constitution, with a program of effective legal action by the federal government . . . . these programs would smooth the path upon which the Nation was set by the Brown decision. The school desegregation title is second only to the public accommodations title in furthering civil rights in America.

As in connection with the voting provisions of Title I, the moderate and limited nature of the President's proposals on school desegregation should be noted. The school desegregation provisions contain no requirement that school districts begin compliance with the Supreme Court's decision in 1963 as was promised by the Democratic Platform and as is contained in S. 772 and H.R. 1766, the so-called Clark-Celler bills. Furthermore, the Attorney General is limited in the Administration's bill to bringing suits only where complainants are unable to institute legal proceedings, a restriction on his freedom in school desegregation cases which was not included in the 1957 grant of authority to act in voting cases. Finally, it should be noted that there is no provision in this title or elsewhere in the bill for an across-the-board Part III authorizing the Attorney General to bring suit, not only in school cases, but in all situations where persons are denied their constitutional rights because of race, color, religion, or national origin. Such a provision (which could be offered as an amendment to the President's bill) would not only reach hospitals, libraries, parks and other recreational facilities, public buildings, etc., not covered by the Administration's bill, but would also give the Attorney General power to enjoin state interference with peaceful protests as in Birmingham and elsewhere. But moderate and limited as Title III is, it is a major step in the direction of integrated schooling and a vital and necessary part of any civil rights package.

TITLE IV -- Community Relations Service

A new agency, Community Relations Service, would be established under this title of the bill. Its purpose would be to help resolve problems arising from discriminatory practices by bringing together the people of influence in both races.

Such an agency would serve a useful function if the bill is finally enacted provides strong protection for the constitutional rights of minority group citizens. It could in no way be considered as a substitute for enforcement authority. As a complement to enforcement authority, it should have real value.

TITLE V -- Civil Rights Commission

Title V would extend the life of the Commission on Civil Rights for four years and authorize it to serve as a national clearing house to provide information, advice, and technical assistance to private and public agencies.

Because of its fine record, the Commission is deserving of support for extension and additional grant of authority. It could be hoped, however, that the agency could be made permanent in order to free it of the necessity of constantly revising its plans and to give it the stability it needs to conduct a continuing operation.

TITLE VI -- Withholding of Federal Funds

This title would authorize withholding of Federal funds from any program or activity that receives Federal assistance, directly or indirectly, by way of grant, contract, loan, insurance, guaranty, or otherwise, when discrimination is found in such a program or activity.

Again the moderate nature of the President's civil rights bill is evidenced by this provision. Many persons believe that the President already has the authority to withhold federal funds from any program or activity in which unconstitutional discrimination is found. Nevertheless, the President has asked for this authority from Congress, apparently to buttress with Congressional approval what he desires to do in this area. While the President would probably be in a position to act on his own initiative, this provision would add Congresional support for his action and should have the full support of all the groups. Federal funds contributed by all the people should never be utilized in a way that discriminates against some of the people who contribute those funds.

TITLE VII -- Equal Employment Opportunity

Under this title, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity would be reestablished as a Commission and given statutory authority under which to operate.

The authority proposed should be granted. The present Committee is handicapped by limited funds and manpower. It is also apparent that it is reluctant to exercise its full authority because of fear of Congressional reprisals. A Congressional grant of authority with subsequent financial support could considerably strengthen the agency in fulfilling its mission.

The enactment of this provision is not, however, a substitute for national FEPC. Such a law with strong enforcement procedures, as promised in the 1960 Democratic platform, is one of the most necessary legislative requirements. Several bills establishing an FEPC are pending in Congress. The adoption of one of these as an amendment to the Administration's civil rights bill should be strongly supported and the President's message to Congress gives his stamp of approval to this effort.

TITLE VIII -- Miscellaneous

The last title authorizes necessary appropriations and provides a separability clause in the event any provision of the bill is held invalid.

* * * * *

As we have seen, the President's bill is wholly necessary if freedom and equality are to win out in America. It is a strong and a good bill. Yet, as we have also seen, it is far from an extreme or all-encompassing measure. There is no room for compromise or weakening. The task of the groups who are meeting and mobilizing is to see that neither the House of Representatives nor the Senate weaken this vital measure.

-B-

OBTAINING PASSAGE BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE ADMINISTRATION BILL, H.R. 7152

The object of the pro-civil-rights organizations should be to obtain the passage through the House of Representatives of a bill at least as strong as H.R. 7152, and, if at all possible, a stronger bill. The stronger the bill that comes out of the House, the less the damage from any dilution by the Senate. Certainly every effort must be made to safe-guard against any weakening of the Administration's bill in the House.

This will not be easy. Most of the public attention has been focused on the Senate because of the drama involved in a filibuster in that body. But there are many pitfalls in the House as well.

H.R. 7152 is presently before the House Judiciary Committee. The Attorney General testified in support of the Administration bill on June 26th and hearings will likely go on through July. Consideration should be given to having the strongest possible testimony presented to the House Judiciary Committee without unduly delaying the Committee's action reporting out the bill. Possibly some of the organizations will want to combine their testimony. Thus, for example, if the three religious faiths were to present joint testimony (for the administration's bill and possibly for strengthening amendments) this would have a real impact upon the Committee.

The first focal point of pressure must be upon the members of the House Judiciary Committee:

Democrats	Republicans
Emanuel Celler, New York	William M. McCulloch, Ohio
Michael A. Feighan, Ohio	William E. Miller, New York
Frank Chelf, Kentucky	Richard H. Poff, Virginia
Edwin E. Willis, Louisiana	William C. Cramer, Florida
Peter W. Rodino, Jr., New Jersey	Arch A. Moore, Jr., West Virginia
E. L. Forrester, Georgia	George Meader, Michigan
Byron G. Rogers, Colorado	John V. Lindsay, New York
Harold D. Donohue, Massachusetts	William T. Cahill, New Jersey
Jack Brooks, Texas	Garner E. Shriver, Kansas
William M. Tuck, Virginia	Clark MacGregor, Minnesota
Robert T. Ashmore, South Carolina	Charles McC. Mathias, Jr., Maryland
John Dowdy, Texas	James E. Bromwell, Iowa
Basil L. Whitener, North Carolina	Carleton J. King, New York
Roland V. Libonati, Illinois	Pat Minor Martin, California
Herman Toll, Pennsylvania
Robert W. Kastenmeier, Wisconsin
Jacob H. Gilbert, New York
James C. Corman, California
William L. St. Onge, Connecticut
George F. Senner, Jr., Arizona

Concentration should be had on the Republicans (other than Lindsay who is extremely pro-civil-rights), as most of the non-Southern-Democrats will probably support the Administration's bill. All should be urged to support H.R. 7152 in full and to substitute an across-the-board Part III for the limited school-desegregation Part III in the bill.

Assuming that the Administration bill, as is or as strengthened, comes out of the House Judiciary Committee, the next major problem will be the Rules Committee. It is likely that Chairman Howard Smith will try to avoid Committee meetings and thereby stall a rule on the bill. There is, however, a procedure for forcing a Committee meeting which requires the support of 8 members of the 15 member Rules Committee. There are only 5 certain supporters for such action (Madden, Delaney, Bolling, O'Neill and Sisk, all Northern Democrats). The other 5 Democrats are Southerners and it will therefore be necessary to get the support of 3 of the 5 Republicans on the Rules Committee for this maneuver. The 5 Republicans on the Rules Committee are Brown of Ohio, St. George of New York, Smith of California, Hoffman of Illinois and Avery of Kansas. Although this matter will not be before the Rules Committee until August, efforts to build support for H.R. 7152 and for a rule to bring it to the floor in the Districts of those five Congressmen should be undertaken immediately. Obtaining the support of the Republicans on the Rules Committee will not only make it impossible for Chairman Smith to stall interminably by avoiding meetings, but will also assure the necessary votes for the rule once the meeting is held.

Of course, there are alternative ways around the Rules Committee. One is a discharge petition of 218 signatures. The other is what is known as calendar Wednesday. But both of these procedures are difficult and time-consuming and a real mobilization of sentiment upon the 5 Republican members of the Rules Committee can render them unnecessary.

Sometime in late August, or more likely in September, the bill should reach the floor of the House. If the bill at that time is as strong as we hope it will be, the job will be one of defeating weakening amendments. If the bill is weaker than the present Administration bill, the job will be one of strengthening it. Unfortunately, strengthening amendments are subject to a strict germaneness rule, but this is a bridge which need not be crossed at this time.

The job of the organizations when the bill reaches the floor of the House will be to bring maximum pressure on 50 or 60 possible but not certain votes. There are about 150 Democratic votes from outside the South that can be counted on for the Administration's bill. There are some 10 to 20 Republican votes that can be counted on. The winning votes will have to come from approximately 10 questionable non-Southern Democrats and 40 to 50 Republican moderates. At an early date, these possible but uncertain votes must be identified and mobilization of opinion pinpointed upon their Congressional districts.

-C-

OBTAINING PASSAGE BY THE SENATE OF THE ADMINISTRATION BILL, S. 1731

It can be estimated that the House bill will most likely come to the Senate in September. But that by no means indicates that there is nothing that should be done in relation to the Senate at this time.

Only 46 Senators (37 Democrats and 9 Republicans) have signed the Administration bill, S. 1731. An immediate task is to get non-Southern Democrats and moderate Republicans to sign the bill, so that there is a very clear and definite majority committed to the President's package. The non-Southern Democrats (and liberal Southerners) who have not signed are Anderson, Bartlett, Bible, Cannon, Edmondson, Gore, Hayden, Kefauver, Lausche, Monroney and Yarborough. The moderate Republicans who have not signed are Aiken, Allott, Boggs, Carlson, Miller, Morton, Prouty, Saltonstall and Smith. By immediate concentration on these Senators, it should be possible to get a majority of the total Senate in support of the bill at once. (On the technical question of how a Senator puts his name on a bill which has already been introduced, it is suggested that he ask Senator Mansfield to request unanimous consent that such Senator's name appear as a sponsor on the next printing of the bill).

The hearing situation in the Senate is more complicated than in the House where the Administration bill will undoubtedly be reported out in some form or other by the House Judiciary Committee. In the Senate, the normal Committee to handle this bill is also the Judiciary Committee, but because of its Chairman and its composition, the Senate Judiciary Committee is unlikely to report out a bill. Despite the unlikelihood of reporting out a bill, it is probable that the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee will hold hearings on the Administration bill. A strong record should be built by the organizations in support of the Administration's bill and strengthening amendments, as Senator Ervin, Chairman of the Sub-committee, will be using his remarkable talents to build a negative record.

Since the Senate Judiciary Committee has always been a roadblock to civil rights legislation, the Senate Commerce Committee, which has the public accommodations provisions of the Administration package before it, is holding hearings on those provisions (S. 1732). Certainly the pro-civil rights groups will want to testify and build a strong record in support of the public accommodations bill. It is important that as strong and favorable a report on this bill be made to the Senate as early as possible. The Senate Commerce Committee consists of the following:

Democrats	Republicans
Warren G. Magnuson, Washington	Norris Cotton, New Hampshire
John O. Pastore, Rhode Island	Thruston B. Morton, Kentucky
A. S. Mike Monroney, Oklahoma	Hugh Scott, Pennsylvania
Strom Thurmond, South Carolina	Winston L. Prouty, Vermont
Frank J. Lausche, Ohio	J. Glenn Beall, Maryland
Ralph W. Yarborough, Texas
Clair Engle, California
E. L. Bartlett, Alaska
Vance Hartke, Indiana
Gale W. McGee, Wyoming
Philip A. Hart, Michigan
Howard W. Cannon, Nevada

Of these, Magnuson, Pastore, Engle, Hartke, McGee, Hart, Scott and Beall have already supported public accommodations by sponsoring S. 1731 and S. 1732 their full support.

Senate hearings will also be held on FEPC legislation (S. 773) by Senator Clark, a subcommittee of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. The groups will want to support this legislation with testimony and demonstrate strong support for strengthening the Administration's package with an FEPC amendment.

It is not clear yet what the strategy will be when the Administration bill comes over from the House to the Senate. The normal procedure would be for the House bill to go to the Senate Judiciary Committee, but this would likely be sending it to almost certain death. One possible alternative would be to stop the bill at the desk, as was done in 1957, and not refer it to the Senate Judiciary Committee at all. Another alternative would be to refer the House bill to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report it to the Senate within a week or two weeks. Still another possible alternative would be for the Senate to take up the bill on public accommodations from the Senate Commerce Committee (S. 1732) and amend it with the additional provisions of the House bill; by changing the number of the House bill, it could then go to conference with the House bill. There are undoubtedly other possibilities as well, but this bridge need not be crossed at this time.

What should be understood at this time is that in one form or another the Southerners will try to water down the bill. They can filibuster against taking up the bill and they can filibuster against the bill itself. The filibuster against taking up the bill will be more difficult for the Southerners because they can only speak twice on a bill or motion and their time will run out. The filibuster against the bill is easier because they can speak twice not only on the bill but on all amendments. The answer to this, of course, is to table the amendments as fast as they come up. It is, therefore, important that at some stage we obtain the pledge of 51 Senators to round-the-clock sessions of the Senate and to the tabling of all amendments.

This discussion of the Senate situation is based on the assumption that cloture (2/3rds of those present and voting) will not be obtained. It is hoped that this assumption is incorrect and that cloture may be obtained. Sometime in September or October, it will be the role of the organizations to seek to obtain the 10 to 15 doubtful votes needed for cloture. If this can be done, round-the-clock sessions will not be necessary. If it cannot, however, round-the-clock sessions will be necessary and 51 determined Senators can break the filibuster.

The Administration wants no compromise; it is in this fight for its own bill for all it is worth. If the groups do their job of mobilization, there can be a total victory for the Administration bill. This is the year it can be done -- and must be done.

EQUAL JUSTICE UNDER LAW

Rec'd 1963

Interpp

THE NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

ABERNATHY, ET AL. vs. ALABAMA • ADAMS vs. CITY OF NEW ORLEANS • ALABAMA vs. HAMILTON • ALABAMA vs. ROBERT SWAIN • ALABAMA EX REL. RICHMOND FLOWERS vs. MARVIN ROBINSON, ET AL. • ANDERSON AND BELTON vs. MARTIN • ANDERSON, ET AL. vs. ALABAMA • ANDERSON, ET AL. vs. CITY OF ALBANY (GA.) • ARKANSAS EX REL. BENNETT vs. NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE FUND • ARMSTRONG vs. BIRMINGHAM BOARD OF EDUCATION • AUGUSTUS vs. ESCAMBIA CTY. (FLA.) BOARD OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION • AVENT vs. N. C. • BAILEY vs. PATTERSON, ET AL. • C. M. BAKER vs. BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY & STEAMSHIP CLERKS • BARR vs. CITY OF COLUMBIA (S. C.) • BATES vs. SHERATON CORP. OF AMERICA • BECTON, ET AL. vs. GREEN CTY. (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • BELL vs. FULTON DE KALB HOSPITAL AUTHORITY • BELL vs. MARYLAND • BELO vs. RANDOLPH CTY. (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • BIRMINGHAM DEMONSTRATION CASES • BLACKWELL vs. FAIRFAX CTY. (VA.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • BOHLER vs. CITY OF TAMPA (FLA.) • BOSON vs. RIPPY • BOUIE vs. CITY OF COLUMBIA (S. C.), ET AL. • BOYCE vs. HUMPHREYS CTY. (TENN.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • BRADLEY, ET AL. vs. CITY OF RICHMOND (VA.) SCHOOL BOARD • BRAXTON vs. DUVAL CTY. (FLA.) BOARD OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION • BROOKS vs. ARLINGTON CTY. (VA.) SCHOOL BOARD • BROWN vs. CHARLESTON (S. C
BOARD • BROWN vs SOUTH CAROLIN
CLARENDON CTY. (S. C.) SCHOOL DISTRIC
SHELBY (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION •
• COLEMAN vs. ALABAMA • COLORADO
CONLEY vs. TRANSYLVANIA CTY. (N. C.)
CTY. (ALA.) BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS
LOUISIANA • DILLARD vs. CHARLOTTES
SCHOOL BOARD • DU BISSETTE, ET AL. vs.
EDWARDS vs. ABERCROMBIE ENTERPRISES
• FARMER vs. GREENE CTY. (N. C.) BOA
FIELDS vs. CITY OF FAIRFIELD (ALA.) • FIE
CTY. (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • FO vs. DOUGHERTY CTY. (GA.) BOARD OF GHIOTO vs. HAMPTON • GIBSON vs. GLY
BOARD OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION • GILI
POINT (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION •
BOARD OF EDUCATION • GREEN vs. RO
vs. YANCEY CTY. (N. C.) BOARD OF EDU
BOARD OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION • HALL
• HAMM vs. CITY OF ROCK HILL (S. C.)
HARRIS vs. PACE • HAWKINS vs. N. C.
PARISH (LA.) SCHOOL BOARD • HENRY
EDUCATION • HENRY vs. VIRGINIA • H
HUDSON vs. LAKE CTY. (MISS.) SCHOOL
BY COMMITTEE ON OFFENSES AGAINS
SCHOOL BOARD • JAMES vs. CARNEGIE
ET AL. • KENNARD vs. BREAZEALE • K
KNIGHT • LAMPKIN vs. HODGES • LAW
(ALA.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • LONG
WILLIAMS • LUPPER vs. STATE OF ARKA
MATE • MANNINGS vs. HILLSBOROUGH
(TENN.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • MASO
CTY. (KY.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • M
SARASOTA CTY. (FLA.) BOARD OF PUBL
BOARD OF EDUCATION • MEREDITH vs. F
CTY. (FLA.) BOARD OF PUBLIC INSTRUCT
JACKSON (TENN.) BOARD OF EDUCATION
• NORTHCROSS vs. MEMPHIS (TENN.)
HOSPITALS BOARD OF CONTROL • PO
(S. C.) HOSPITAL • RANDALL ET AL. vs.
OF VA. • REED vs. C.O.R.E., ET AL. • RO
• SAVANNAH (GA.) TRESSPASS CASE •
vs. DAVIS • SELMA (ALA.) DEMONSTRATI vs. MOSES H. CONE MEMORIAL HOSPITA vs. DAVIS AND WALTERS • SMITH vs. H
DISTRICT • STEELE, ET AL. vs. LEON CTY
CTY. (GA.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • TH
• THOMPSON vs. COMMONWEALTH OF
TION • TURNER, ET AL. vs. WARREN CTY
WOODALL AND ROBERT W. COLBERT •
B. WELLS AND ROBERT THOMAS • VICK
BAR vs. NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE FUND •
WALKER, ET AL. vs. CITY OF BIRMINGHAM • WALTON, ET AL. vs. AMERICAN SYNTHETIC RUBBER CORP. • WATSON vs. MEMPHIS (TENN.) • WEAVER vs. BREVARD CTY. (FLA.) BOARD OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION • WHEELER vs. DURHAM (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION • WHITE AND CROMWELL vs. MARYLAND • WHITTENBERG vs. GREENVILLE CTY. (S. C.) SCHOOL DISTRICT • WILCOX vs. JACKSONVILLE (FLA.) TERMINAL CO., ET AL. • WOODS vs. KANSAS • WOODS, LINDA CAL vs. THEO WRIGHT • WRIGHT, ET AL. vs. STATE OF GEORGIA • ZELLNER, ET AL. vs. LINGO, ET AL. • ZIGLAR vs. REIDSVILLE (N. C.) BOARD OF EDUCATION •

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE and EDUCATIONAL FUND

1963 Annual Report

PRESS RELEASE

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JUdson 6-8397

DR. ALLAN KNIGHT CHALMERS
President

JACK GREENBERG
Director-Counsel

CONSTANCE BAKER MOTLEY
Associate Counsel

FOR RELEASE: Wednesday, November 20th * OR Thursday, November 21st *

SUPREME COURT HEARS LOUISIANA VOTE CASE

WASHINGTON, D.C.---The U.S. Supreme Court was asked today to strike down a Louisiana law requiring publication of the race, on nomination papers or the ballot, of each candidate for public office.

Jack Greenberg, Director-Counsel of the Legal Defense Fund, pointed out in the brief that "the statute unconstitutionally makes racial discrimination possible and encourages the practice."

(The high court will hear a half hour of argument from each side Wednesday, November 20th or Thursday, November 21st, depending on the pace of previous proceedings.) *

Louisiana is "requiring disclosure of information with no bona fide public purpose, much less a compelling interest," the Legal Defense Fund brief states.

James M. Nabrit, III was of counsel to Mr. Greenberg during the argument. He too is an attorney for the Fund.

Taking the point a step further, the brief states that Louisiana's constitution limits Negro participation in community life just as much as the more obvious forms of discrimination and physical segregation.

The evil of the practice is spelled out by the fact that "designation as a Negro (in Louisiana) identifies the candidate with a group that is...by state policy, unfit for office."

Louisiana, the Legal Defense Fund brief shows:

"has selected a single, highly prejudicial factor for universal publication. This denies the individual the liberty to seek office and campaign according to his own estimate of effective campaign tactics."

The case is being argued on behalf of Dupuy H. Anderson and Acie J. Belton, Negro citizens of East Baton Rouge parish.

Both were candidates for nomination to the school board in their home parish in the Democratic party primary election held June 8, 1962.

Wade O. Martin, secretary of state, who is charged with enforcement of the law in question, is named as defendant in the Legal Defense Fund complaint.

Joining Greenberg and Nabrit, in preparation of the case, were:

Attorneys Johnnie A. Jones, Baton Rouge; Murphy W. Bell, Bruce A. Bell, Leonard P. Avery, Samuel Dickens and Wilmon L. Richardson, all of Baton Rouge.

Michael Meltsner, Norman C. Amaker and Frank H. Heffron, of the Fund's New York City headquarters, were of counsel.

THE PRESIDENT'S CIVIL RIGHTS PROGRAM:

What it provides,

What more it needs, and

How you can help.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

20 West 40th Street New York 18, N. Y.

THE PRESIDENT'S CIVIL RIGHTS PROGRAM

President Kennedy's civil rights proposals submitted to the Congress have justly and widely been acclaimed the most comprehensive such program ever submitted by a President of the United States. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other organizations -- civil rights, labor, religious, fraternal, business and professional -- are supporting Mr. Kennedy's program.

However, the NAACP and other groups, while hailing the significance and worthiness of the President's program recognize that it is a moderate approach to the country's most pressing domestic issue. Because of the President's limited approach it is essential that civil rights supporters resist any effort to weaken or compromise the proposals. Not only must a fight be made against weakening amendments, but affirmative action must be made to strengthen the President's bill.

This program has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Emanuel Celler (D., N.Y.) as H.R. 7152 and in the Senate by Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) as S. 1713. The bill contains eight titles covering voting rights, public accommodations, school desegregation, Community Relations Service, Commission on Civil Rights, non-discrimination in Federal programs, Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, and miscellaneous provisions.

An analysis of the bill, title by title, prepared by J. Francis Pohlhaus, Counsel, NAACP Washington Bureau, follows:

TITLE I

This first title relates to voting rights. It repeats, without substantial change, the Administration's voting bill previously introduced in Congress in February. It would:

1.) prohibit the application of any standard, practice or procedure different from those applied to individuals similarly situated who have been found qualified to vote in Federal elections,

2.) prohibit denial of the right to vote in Federal elections because of immaterial errors or omissions in registration applications,

3.) require literacy tests given in connection with registration to vote in Federal elections to be in writing or transcribed,

4.) establish 6th grade education as a presumption of literacy in connection with any test given to qualify to vote in a Federal election,

5.) amend the 1960 Civil Rights Act to permit courts to appoint temporary voting referees in areas where less than 15 per cent of potential colored voters are registered, and

6.) provide for expeditious handling of voting cases in which the United States is plaintiff.

Although the President's bill would expedite the handling of problems in the courts, it does not supply the full solution to the problems of mass denial of the right to vote.

The first four provisions noted apply only to Federal elections, even though there is constitutional authority to apply them also to state elections.

The requirement that literacy tests be in writing or transcribed could make proof of discrimination simpler in some instances.

The provision relating to a presumption of literacy based on a sixth grade education marks a retreat by the Administration on this issue. The presumption now proposed would be a rebuttable one. In the 87th Congress, the Administration offered a bill creating a conclusive presumption of literacy based on a sixth grade education.

If the present literacy test provision is enacted into law, registrars will still be in a position to deny registration to applicants regardless of their educational qualifications. Only after such registrars are challenged in court, does the provision take effect and create a presumption of literacy in favor of the applicant.

As the President recognized in his February civil rights message, denial of voting rights does not result solely from the discriminatory practices of local officials. It is also rooted in economic and social pressures, harassment by law officers, threats of bodily harm and use of physical violence. These factors are likely to be most widespread in those counties where less than 15 per cent of the colored population is registered to vote.

The expedited handling of VOTING CASES may be of some help in breaking the logjam of voting cases in the court.

THE BILL'S VOTING SECTION NEEDS STRENGTHENING TO MAKE IT MOST EFFECTIVE IN MEETING THE PROBLEM OF MASS DENIAL OF VOTING RIGHTS. THE ADOPTION OF BILLS SUCH AS S.1214, WHICH WOULD REMOVE ALL ARBITRARY RESTRICTIONS ON THE RIGHT TO VOTE, AND S. 1281, WHICH WOULD AUTHORIZE THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO CONDUCT AND SUPERVISE ALL FEDERAL ELECTIONS, WOULD MEET THIS NEED AND MAKE IT POSSIBLE FOR LARGE NUMBERS OF SOUTHERN NEGRO CITIZENS TO VOTE.

TITLE II

This title would establish the right to service free from discrimination in places of public accommodation and business establishments. Included would be any hotel, motel, or other public places furnishing lodging to guests from other states or traveling in interstate commerce; any motion picture house, theater, sports arena, stadium, exhibition hall or other public place of amusement customarily presenting pictures, groups, teams, exhibitions or other sources of entertainment which move in interstate commerce; any retail shop, department store, market, drugstore, gasoline station, or other public selling place; any restaurant, lunchroom, lunch counter, soda fountain, or other public place engaged in selling food for consumption on the premises; and any other establishment servicing the public where:

1.) goods and services are provided substantially to interstate travelers, or

2.) goods held out to the public have moved in interstate commerce, or

3.) the activities or operations of which substantially affect interstate commerce, or 4.) which is an integral part of an establishment otherwise covered under the bill.

Those refused service would have the right to sue for preventive relief. In addition, the Attorney General could enter suit on receipt of a written complaint, if the complainant is unable to bring suit because of financial reasons or fear of reprisals.

Before filing suit, the Attorney General would be required to refer the complaint to the Community Relations Service (See Title IV) provided under the bill and to any appropriate state agency with authority to prohibit the discriminatory practice.

Courts would have jurisdiction of actions brought under this provision without the necessity of exhausting administrative remedies.

The bill relies on both the 14th Amendment and the interstate commerce clause for the constitutional authority to act.

The President, in asserting the full constitutional authority of the Federal Government and in attempting to use that authority for extensive coverage has acted decisively in meeting the problem of discrimination in places of public accommodations.

THE MOST APPARENT WEAKNESS OF THIS SECTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S BILL IS THE LIMITATION PLACED UPON THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S RIGHT TO ACT. HE SHOULD BE AUTHORIZED TO ACT INDEPENDENTLY OF INDIVIDUAL COMPLAINTS AND OF THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF THE COMPLAINANTS.

This title appears to be the most significant provision of the President's program. It will undoubtedly encounter the most Congressional opposition. Accordingly, there will be efforts to compromise it. The nature of the effort to weaken the public accommodations provisions is already evident - a limitation on the size of the establishment covered by the bill. The mythical "Mrs. Murphy's boarding house" has become the symbol of opposition to elimination of discrimination.

Such a compromise is neither morally nor legally tenable. There is no more reason for a small store or restaurant to discriminate against Negroes than a large one. While one could agree to exemption from coverage of a small owner-occupied residence used for lodging, the reasons for such exemption do not carry over to stores, restaurants, or other business establishments open to the general public.

TITLE III

Under this title, technical assistance, grants and loans would be made available to school boards to meet problems arising out of school desegregation or the adjustment of racial imbalance in schools. This could be helpful to communities confronted with changing patterns in their schools.

The more important part of this title authorizes the Attorney General to institute civil actions for school desegregation upon receipt of a complaint and a determination that the complainants are unable to institute legal proceedings.

This provision is a revised version of the proposed Part III of the Civil Rights Bill of 1957. It gives the Attorney General authority to act to accelerate school desegregation.

In view of the fact that only 7.9 per cent of students in border and southern states now attend desegregated classes, this grant of authority is sorely needed.

The question has arisen whether this provision and Title II relating to public accommodations do not remove the need for an across-the-board Part III, reaching hospitals, libraries, parks, and other recreational facilities, public buildings, and all other aspects of publicly enforced discrimination. Recent developments have shown the need for protection of the rights to protest and picket peacefully in opposition to discrimination.

ANY GRANT OF AUTHORITY TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL SHOULD AUTHORIZE HIM TO PROTECT ALL CIVIL RIGHTS, INCLUDING THE RIGHT TO SUPPORT AND ADVOCATE 14TH AMENDMENT RIGHTS IN THE FIELD OF RACE RELATIONS.

TITLE IV

A new agency, Community Relations Service, would be established under this title of the bill. Its purpose would be to help resolve, by voluntary action, problems arising from discriminatory practices.

Such an agency could serve a useful function provided the bill as enacted provides strong protection for the constitutional rights of minority group citizens. However, it could in no way be considered as a substitute for enforcement authority. Backed up with legislation including enforcement provisions, this agency would be able to negotiate for community changes favorable to civil rights.

TITLE V

The life of the Commission on Civil Rights would be extended for four years, under this title which would also authorize the Commission to serve as a national clearing house for civil rights information and to provide advice and technical assistance to governmental and private persons and organizations.

Because of its record, the Commission deserves longer life and the additional grant of authority. The agency should be made permanent in order to free it of the necessity of constantly revising its plans and to give it the stability it needs to conduct a continuing operation.

TITLE VI

This title would authorize withholding of Federal funds from any program or activity that receives Federal assistance, directly or indirectly, by way of grant, contract, loan, insurance, guaranty, or otherwise.

The NAACP supports the withholding of funds under the circumstances covered by this provision, but contends that the President already has ample authority to act under his Constitutional powers. Apparently he feels the use of this authority would be easier to justify if supported by a Congressional mandate.

IN OFFERING SUCH A PROPOSAL, THE PRESIDENT SHOULD MAKE IT CLEAR THAT HE WOULD NOT CONSIDER ITS REJECTION IN ANY WAY A LIMITATION ON HIS CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY TO ACT.

In offering such a proposal, the President should make it clear that he would not consider its rejection in any way a limitation on his Constitutional authority to act.

TITLE VII

Under Title VII, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity would be re-established as a Commission and given statutory authority to operate.

Such authority should be granted. The present Committee is handicapped by limited funds and manpower. It is also apparent that it is reluctant to exercise its full authority because of fear of Congressional reprisals. A Congressional grant of authority with subsequent financial support could considerably strengthen the agency in fulfilling its mission.

THE ENACTMENT OF THIS PROVISION, HOWEVER, WOULD NOT ADEQUATELY MEET THE PROBLEMS OF EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION. A NATIONAL FEPC LAW WITH STRONG ENFORCEMENT PROCEDURES, AS PROMISED IN THE 1960 DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, IS ONE OF THE MOST NECESSARY REQUIREMENTS. SEVERAL BILLS ESTABLISHING AN FEPC ARE PENDING IN CONGRESS. THE ADOPTION OF ONE OF THESE AS AN AMENDMENT TO THE PROPOSED CIVIL RIGHTS IS IMPERATIVE.

TITLE VIII

The last title authorizes necessary appropriations and provides a separability clause in the event any provision of the bill is held invalid.

SUMMARY

The President's bill is generally good so far as it goes. To meet more adequately the pressing problems of racial discrimination as presently practiced, it should be strengthened. Specifically the following actions should be taken to amend it.

Title I. The provisions of S. 1214, removing all arbitrary voting restrictions, and of S. 1281, providing Federal Supervision of Federal elections, should be substituted for, or added to, the existing provisions.

Title II. The limitations on the Attorney General's right to act should be removed. He should be empowered to initiate suits on his own and regardless of the ability of complainants to pay.

Title III. The authority of the Attorney General to act in civil rights cases should be extended to include all denials of rights based on race, creed, color, or national origin and to protect those advocating and supporting freedom from racial discrimination.

The school desegregation plan embodied in S. 772 and H. R. 1766 should be added. These bills would speed up school desegregation by requiring school districts to begin compliance with the Supreme Court's decision in 1963.

Title V. The Commission on Civil Rights should be established as a permanent agency.

Title VI. This title should be changed to make it clear the President has constitutional authority to act in withholding Federal funds regardless of Congressional action.

Title VII. This should be amended by the addition of a Federal FEPC law with adequate enforcement provisions.

HOW TO HELP

The NAACP and other civil rights organizations are supporting the President's bill and call upon their local units, members and friends to get fully behind this bill. There are many ways in which the branches and individual citizens can effectively support the big legislative push for civil rights. Among these are the following:

* Organize letter writing compaigns to the Representative from Congressional district and the Senators from your states. Letters and telegrams carry weight with legislators. The bigger the volume of such letters from organizations and individuals, the more attention they receive.

* Enlist the support of your local newspapers wherever possible. Have a small representative delegation visit the editors urging them to come out in support of the President's civil rights program.

* Get as many organizations and persons as possible to write letters to the editor in support of civil rights.

* Stimulate discussion of the bill on your local radio and television stations. Offer to supply informed speakers for panel discussions, interviews and public statements for the stations. Ask them to cover your rallies and other civil rights activities.

* Seek the support of political leaders of both parties for the civil rights bill.

* Try to get your City Council or other local legislative body to pass a resolution in support of the entire civil rights packet.

* Circulate petitions among your friends and associates to be sent to your representatives in Congress.

* Get church, labor, professional, fraternal and business organizations to which you belong to pass resolutions in support of civil rights and to engage in other activities to back up the bill.

* Participate in the March on Washington for Freedom and Jobs, August 28, 1963.

* Follow carefully how members of Congress from your district and state vote on each step in the legislative process and what they have to say. Let them know that you have your eyes on them.

ENACTMENT OF MEANINGFUL CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION THIS YEAR IS AN ATTAINABLE GOAL. BUT IT REQUIRES SUSTAINED WORK AND VIGILANCE ON THE PART OF ORGANIZATIONS AND INDIVIDUAL CITIZENS. A NEW LAW WILL NOT BE HANDED TO YOU AS A GIFT. YOU WILL HAVE TO WORK FOR IT.

This is the least that you can do for yourself, your children and your country.

Do not fail to do it.

Legal Defense
Intergroup Org. NAACP

LEGAL INTERN---Julius LeVonne Chambers, center, this week became the first legal intern of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. He is interviewed by New York City newsman, left, as Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the Fund, looks on. Mr. Greenberg said program will train selected young attorneys in civil rights law. In turn, they will eventually set up practices in parts of the South where civil rights lawyers are needed. The NAACP Legal Defense Fund, which is currently defending 7,500 demonstrators in 125 civil rights actions, will have 17 full time attorneys by fall. These will continue to work with the Fund's network of 100 cooperating attorneys throughout the South. (Bagwell Photo)

- 30 -

FOR: IMMEDIATE RELEASE

FROM: NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.
Suite 2030
10 Columbus Circle
New York 19, N.Y.
JUdson 6-8397

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE DECRIES 'SNIPING' ATTACKS ON NATIONAL HOUSING EDICT; ASSERTS OPPONENTS SWAYED BY 'SHEER EMOTION AND FEAR' p. O.

NEW YORK -- The National Urban League this week took sharp issue with predictions of construction cutbacks, as a result of the President's anti-bias housing order, voiced by some of the country's home builders in an article published in the December 28 issue of The Wall Street Journal.

The article is based on an interview with 54 builders from all parts of the nation. The majority of the cities mentioned in the article were in the South. Of those queried, one-third contended they are preparing to curtail their 1963 plans as a direct result of the order. Six of the remaining 36 said they have not decided whether to revise their plans. Ten reported they were unaffected because they use conventional financing, and 20 declared they have no plans to cut back.

In a letter to Warren Phillips, managing editor of the Journal, Whitney M. Young, Jr., NUL executive director, deplored the resistance expressed by the builders as a "business-as-usual emotional response to sheer race prejudice and fears of the housing industry." He challenged the purported symposium as an "incomplete and obviously sniping" expression by a few stemming largely from a "survey" made by the National Association of Home Builders last summer.

more .....

22222 ON HOUSING EDICT

"For the past ten years," said Mr. Young, "we have heard the 'business loss' story which presumably would result from state and city fair employment and housing legislation. None of those dire predictions has come true."

Mr. Young said that some builders and others in the housing business, "who have experienced a set-back for whatever the reason, will blame the Presidential order for their situation." Further, he declared, they will not attribute any of this "to inept business judgement, but wholly to the Executive Order."

"This order is too important to encourage mere emotional response to its effects," the NUL executive cautioned.

"Actually, housing is a product which should respond to supply and demand. A black and white market presents a free flow of that commodity. All that the order really does is to create a single market, more responsible to supply and demand."

Mr. Young took note of a presentation of research findings, made by the NUL to the White House in 1962 in answer to NAHB representations that the then long-awaited ban on racial discrimination in federally-aided housing would "wreck" the industry.

"There is no question that a substantial number of the responses that formed the current Journal article were influenced by the incomplete NAHB 'survey', rather than by good judgement backed up with sound economics," Mr. Young declared.

more .....

333333 ON HOUSING EDICT

In an interview arising from his letter to the Journal, Mr. Young made this observation on what he characterized as "ill-advised and insupportable skirmish tactics" with reference to the Presidential action:

"Every law, every Executive Order designed to secure equal rights for Negro citizens, has been met with strong opposition from entrenched groups and the ill-informed. The first law in the nation -- enacted in New York State in 1945 -- barring discrimination in employment, was sharply criticized. Yet, over the years, the record shows definite progress in the elimination of discrimination and segregation in job opportunity. Today, twenty states have adopted law assuring fair employment practices.

"In banning discrimination in housing as 'inconsistent with the public policy of the United States', Presidential Order 11063 heralds the beginning of a national drive toward open occupancy of adequate family shelter."

# #

1/4/63

63-101 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

GB

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE CAUTIONS CHURCHMEN TO WEIGH
THREE-FOLD CHOICE IN ATTITUDE TOWARD INTEGRATION

CHICAGO, Jan. 14 -- A three-fold alternative to what he termed shortcomings of the church in facing up to "closing the gap" of racial injustice was spelled out here today by Whitney M. Young, Jr., of New York, executive director of the National Urban League.

Speaking as a panelist at the opening session of the National Conference on Religion and Race in the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Mr. Young cautioned that:

"It is not enough now to say our doors are open, or even to say our hearts are open. There must now be the same conscious and aggressive effort at inclusion (of Negro citizens in the main stream of national life) that so characterized our institutions, including the church, all of these years in their fanatic efforts at exclusion."

The NUL leader declared that:

"In our communities we have a choice between helping citizers become constructive, productive consumers, proud of their community and country - or through indifference and injustice we can make them chronic dependents, frustrated, bitter about their society and our American way of life;

"We have a choice between spending millions of dollars for programs of prevention, special programs and other compensatory activities - or spending billions for crime, welfare, dependency, and buying the loyalties of uncommited nations whose minds we cannot win through example.

more . . . . .

"We have a choice between greater support of responsible and intelligent planning and action agencies like the Urban League to enable them to provide greater leadership; or we will inevitably invite another kind of leadership which might well be irresponsible, emotional and nationalistic."

In addressing his remarks to a paper presented to the panel by Rabbi Abraham J. Henschel, also of New York, professor of Jewish Ethics and Mysticism at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Mr. Young voiced both hearty endorsement and these additional observations:

"The compelling church and spiritual state in race relations which most truly religious people frequently reflect upon but rarely articulate is a feeling of disillusionment that the church and organized religion is an effective and useful instrument in achievement of social reform."

He decried the fact that it is no longer the atheist, the church as "eleven o'clock on Sunday morning as the most segregated hour in America."

"The fact that it is easier to integrate a chorus line at a burlesque than it is a choir line at many fashionable churches has become real and disillusioning to scholars, professional practitioners and ordinary citizens who have dedicated themselves to removal of racial injustices in our society," said Mr. Young.

"There is nothing noble in being superior to someone else. The only nobility that really matters is being superior to one's former self."

Mr. Young pointed out that the National Urban League's Religious Resources Committee under the leadership of Mrs. O. Clay Maxwell, chairman, and Mrs. Edith Macy, consultant, is constantly striving toward the goal of integration as a spiritual as well as economic cultural and social opportunity.

more . . . . .

33333

"Exclusiveness is stagnating, self-defeating and required only by the dreadfully and tragically insecure," he said.

"We in the Urban League see in inclusiveness of all citizens a great opportunity for people to grow, to learn and to prepare their children for the kind of world in which they will be called upon to live."

# #

1/14/63
63-102 GL

LWD
SB

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE URGES MASSIVE CRASH PROGRAM FOR U.S. SCHOOLS; PROPOSAL STIRS FAVORABLE WASHINGTON RESPONSE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24 -- A six-point recommendation for a crash program which, in the opinion of the National Urban League, would massively upgrade quality, scope and effectiveness of public education was submitted by the nationwide organization here today to the U.S. Office of Education.

The proposed action would also, the League asserted, go far to assure all youth, regardless of race, more equal opportunity for adequate education and help close the economic and cultural gap that blocks Negro citizens from full participation in the flow of American progress.

The recommendation drew favorable reaction from USOE Commissioner Francis Keppel, who scheduled another conference next week with NUL officials.

At today's meeting with Commissioner Keppel, Whitney M. Young, Jr., NUL executive director, and Otis E. Finley, Jr., associate director for education and youth incentives, presented a statement on behalf of the League that stressed these suggestions for immediate federal action:

1) That USOE establish a Department of Intergroup Relations in Education to assist and advise public school systems seeking help in democratizing their facilities.

2) That it develop a model for conducting community workshops for school board members, designed to point up the why-and-how of providing equal educational opportunity.

3) That it step up its interpretation of education problems and needs, to enable the public to make more intelligent decisions on what needs to be done in their communities. Some of the means suggested by the League for this step up were mass issuance by USOE of simple fact booklets, films and other graphic aids to help stimulate local community forces, including parents, toward greater support to efforts of professional educators.

4) That it promote and support educational research directed toward developing teaching approaches sensitive to the special needs of a largely segregated and alienated population.

5) That it encourage establishment of counselor training institutes, under the National Defense Education Act, to train prospective counselors, to be drawn from schools in large urban centers with a high proportion of socially, racially and economically disadvantaged young people. These institutes should be geared to the special needs of such children, involving practical labor force economics and information on manpower trends, the UL suggested.

6) That it convene as soon as practicable a national conference of textbook publishers and educational specialists to explore the frequently-voiced criticism that most text materials and vocational and counseling aids now used in public schools are written and produced from the perspective of an all white society. Thus, the NUL statement declared, they neither present an objective reflection of American life nor provide an incentive for all school children.

Mr. Young assured Commissioner Keppel that the Urban League stands ready to give federal officials, should they request, all the assistance it can supply through its network of Leagues in 64 key industrial urban centers of the nation.

33333

Commissioner Keppel welcomed the support and offer of assistance by the League and exhibited keen sensitivity to the educational needs and problems of Negro and other disadvantaged youth in the big cities.

He also expressed deep interest in the UL's previously announced position calling for establishment of a Presidential Commission on Education, pointing out that legislative framework for such a commission was enacted nearly a decade ago.

Commissioner Keppel scheduled a meeting for January 31 with Mr. Finley and Mrs. Cernoria D. Johnson, director of the NUL Washington Bureau, to discuss further the initial League recommendations.

The presentation today stemmed from a resolution adopted by the NUL Delegate Assembly at the agency's National Conference last fall in Grand Rapids, Mich. In it, the UL urged immediate Presidential action toward establishment of the proposed National Commission on Education.

The resolution emphasized the fact that, of all major nations of the Free World, the United States is alone in lacking a national policy and standards in public education.

#

63 - 105
1/24/63 GL

LWD
SB

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE ENDORSES NATIONAL SERVICE PROGRAM; STRESSES 'NO BIAS' PROTECTION

COLUMBUS -- A resolution endorsing in principle the establishment of a National Service program was adopted by the National Urban League Board of Trustees at its recent winter meeting here.

"We believe that this program could enhance immeasurably the efforts of the Urban League in obtaining adequate services for the nation's non-white population," the resolution stated.

It pointed up that "as the gap in services to the nonwhite population closes, the American community is vastly strengthened."

The Trustees also heartily acclaimed the National Social Welfare Assembly recommendation that participation in the service program be available to all who are qualified, regardless of race or creed, and that service program projects "should be available to all people who need service and to all communities without discrimination or segregation."

The Trustees expressed belief that a National Service program, properly established and administered, "will extend health, welfare and educational services" throughout the nation.

#

63 - 109
2/19/63 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE STATEMENT ON JFK CIVIL RIGHTS MESSAGE

NEW YORK, March 1 -- The following statement relating to President Kennedy's Special Message on Civil Rights, as presented to the Congress, was issued in behalf of the National Urban League by Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director:

"The President's message reflects a conviction that the time is urgent for taking massive action to dissolve remaining barriers which prevent Negro citizens from enjoying the fruits and discharging the full responsibilities of first class citizenship.

"It is the most comprehensive statement on this complex and sensitive subject ever presented in our time by a Chief Executive.

"However commendable as are many of the statements in his message, we view with some concern that there is no legislation recommended in the area of racial discrimination in employment to strengthen the program of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

"In outlining his Administration's program for securing equal opportunity for Negro citizens, the President asked legislative backing in some areas which are of special concern to the Urban League.

"We hail the President's recommendations to extend and expand the scope of the Civil Rights Commission and to eliminate the 'separate but equal' clause from the 100-year-old Morrill Land Grant College Act.

more . . . .

22222 President's Message

"We concur too, with the President's call for erasing outmoded restrictions on the right to vote, and his declaration that 'the right to vote in a free American election is the most powerful and precious right in the world'.

"We strongly endorse his request for establishing a program of technical assistance by the Office of Education to local communities in preparing and carrying out desegregation plans, including provision of information on ways and means that have proved successful in desegregating other schools.

"The program set forth by the President merits serious consideration as an important step to remedying a very harmful deficiency in our great country.

"It would seem clear that he means business. The Urban League now strongly urges the President to follow through with the full moral force of his Office and to provide the bold leadership by the White House that will be required to get the job done."

# #

3/1/63
63-112GL

PAV LWD SBV

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE TO PROPOSE 6 TRAINING PROJECTS
UNDER U.S. MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT ACT

NEW YORK -- Proposals by Urban Leagues in six cities for establishment of federally-sponsored training and re-training "demonstration" programs in their communities, under provisions of the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1961, are nearing completion for submission later this month to U.S. Labor Department officials.

The presentations, recommending programs the League believes most urgently needed in the various communities, are an outgrowth of Washington consultations held in February among UL officials (national and local) and Labor Department representatives.

Under provisions of the Act, the Federal Government is empowered to select, approve and finance a number of demonstration projects, basing its approval on proposals offered by local community leadership across the country.

The six cities involved in the initial UL presentations are Akron, O.; Atlanta; Marion, Ind.; Milwaukee; Philadelphia, and Providence, R.I. Local League executives and staff from each city, along with Adolph Holmes, NUL assistant director for job development and employment, attended the February sessions with Labor Department officials.

more . . .

222222 UL Training Projects

The UL is among the first voluntary community organizations to propose setting up these specific demonstration projects. They would be federally financed, but conducted under the supervision of local ULs, working in concert with other civic organizations, public and voluntary.

Mr. Holmes is in charge of coordinating the overall League participation.

Mr. Holmes, previously in the office of the Newark UL's industrial relations department, recently joined the national staff in New York. He holds a BBA degree from Hofstra College, Hempstead, Long Island, and is presently taking graduate work at Rutgers University.

A veteran of 21 years' military service, Mr. Holmes is a retired Army major. He served four years in Germany as a personnel management officer for the Army and, from 1948 to 1950, conducted a German youth activities program at Nuremburg, in which 6,000 young persons participated.

He and his family presently live in Teaneck, N. J.

# #

3/8/63

63-113 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUER GETS KEY POST
IN ARMY'S MATERIEL COMMAND

SPRINGFIELD, Mass -- A testimonial banquet here, honoring Alexander B. Mapp for 16 years' service as local executive director of the Urban League was highlighted by presentation of a life membership in the Massachusetts State Parent-Teacher Association to Mr. Mapp.

The honor, conferred for "outstanding services and contribution to youth through the medium of PTA," was presented by Mrs. Elliott Anderson, president of the Massachusetts State Congress of PTA. Mr. Mapp had served as chairman of the statewide PTA Committee on Intergroup Relations.

He resigned his UL post to become chief of the Equal Employment Office, New York Procurement District, U. S. Army Materiel Command. The assignment covers responsibility for work with firms holding army contracts in New York, New Jersey and New England.

In his years with the League, Mr. Mapp was a leading exponent of the UL new program emphases on job development and employment; education and youth incentives; housing, and health and welfare.

# #

3/20/63

63-114 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR RELEASE SUNDAY, MARCH 31

NEW YORK, March 30 -- The tempo of the National Urban League's annual report, published today, reflects the new upsurge of dramatic and professional attention the League launched in 1962 to keep pace with the rapid rate of change in race relations in the nation, Henry Steeger, NUL president, said in announcing the publication.

Titled "1962: National Urban League's Most Successful Year," the 12-page illustrated report tells "the story of people helping people."

In an introductory statement to the report, Mr. Steeger and Whitney M. Young, Jr., NUL executive director, jointly declared:

"While progress can be measured in many ways, in the final analysis perhaps one of the best ways to measure it is in terms of a burden lifted, a new door opened, or an injustice removed in the life of a fellow being . . ."

They further stated:

"It (the document) is a story of literally scores of 'break-throughs' and significant accomplishment in every major area of Negro rights. All over the nation -- in the 65 cities where local Urban Leagues are located -- Negroes were placed in industries and unions which were never before opened to them. More and better housing, beyond the confines of the ghetto, was made available on a scale never before achieved.

"And in the nation's secondary schools, thousands of Negro youths were induced to remain in school and thus increase their chances of becoming responsible, productive citizens. Nor did the list of accomplishments stop there."

(more . . .

That the Urban League was able to accomplish these and many other gains, the UL leaders emphasized, was due in large measure to the sharp increase in financial support it received -- more than twice the budgetary wherewithal provided for any previous year.

The report focuses on the complex needs and problems upon which the Urban League concentrated its attention in 1962 and continues to pursue similarly this year. These are the diverse problems stemming from service to:

An urban Negro population of 7 million or 78 percent of all American Negroes who reside in cities of 100,000 or more in which there are Urban Leagues.

A Negro school-age population of 1,426,000, or 76 percent of the Negro school-age population living in American urban areas.

A Negro labor force of 2½ million, or 83 percent of the entire labor force in cities of 100,000 or more population.

Negro family units totaling 1,700,000, or 77 percent of all Negro families in communities in that population bracket.

In combatting these problems, the report cites some 15 city-by-city examples through which local Leagues made notable gains in projecting the UL's five major program areas -- job development and employment; education and youth incentives; housing; health and welfare, and religious resources.

The report is being distributed throughout the 65 major urban centers served by the League across the nation, as well as in other areas where more than 8,925,000 Negro citizens live.

# #

3/20/63

63-115 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE EFFORT GAINS ANTI-BIAS EDICT
ON HOUSING LIST AT AIR FORCE BASE

OMAHA -- The most significant breakthrough to date in the long and multi-fronted fight against racial discrimination in military installation housing has been accomplished here as a direct result of an effort initiated three months ago by the National Urban League on behalf of its Omaha affiliate.

The Defense Department, as a result of the President's Executive Order on housing, has banned the practice by some military base commanders of maintaining separate listings of private off-base dwelling facilities available to Negro and white armed forces personnel

The practice, specifically pinpointing Offutt Air Force Base here, was brought to the attention of federal authorities last Jan 8, in a letter from Nelson H. Nichols, Jr., Omaha UL executive director, to Gov. David L. Lawrence, chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing.

In his letter, Mr. Nichols had called attention to information developed by the Omaha UL, jointly with the League's national office, that Negro personnel were being discriminated against in listings of private housing maintained by Offutt housing officers and thus were not securing equal treatment.

On March 13, Mr. Nichols was advised in a letter, signed by John J. Reed, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, that maintenance of such dual listings was to be abolished, not only at Offutt AFB but at any other installation where the practice was in effect. The letter states in part:

more . . . . .

"The Secretary of Defense, by issuance of an order on March 8, 1963, has precluded further listings of this type. The Secretary's order specifies that effective immediately, listings maintained by base housing offices of available private housing shall include only those units which are available without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

Queried on March 17 by Mr. Nichols concerning the letter, an information spokesman at Offutt said the base had not received the order, but added: "It will, of course, be implemented if we receive it."

Offutt spokesmen have previously advised Mr. Nichols that the base files on privately-owned dwelling units available contained "very few" apartments or houses "open to Negro occupancy."

Reginald A. Johnson of New York, NUL associate director for housing, in Omaha on a field trip when the letter to Mr. Nichols arrived, was pressed by reporters for comment. He told them he saw no reason to blame Offutt officers.

"The higher brass evidently didn't tell its other officers what to do," said Mr. Johnson. "The result, the Urban League is confident, will be that Negro personnel at all military installations will be assured of a better place to live."

# #

3/21/63
63-116 GL

SBV

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York
Guichard Parris - Plaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE OFFICIAL CITES 'JOBLESS WASTE'
AS 'EMPTY HARVEST OF DISCRIMINATION'

TRENTON, N. J. -- Neither a local community nor the nation as a whole can afford the economic and social waste that stems from "the joblessness and marginal living that are the empty harvest of discrimination."

This was the note sounded by Alexander J. Allen of New York, associate executive director of the National Urban League, in an address to 300 members and guests of the Trenton Council on Human Relations at a meeting, March 14, themed to "Problems Confronting Northern Cities."

Accenting the economic aspects of the topic, and pointing up in particular the alarming increase of joblessness of Negro workers throughout the country in direct relation to the nationwide uptrend in high school dropouts, Mr. Allen challenged Negro and other civic leadership to face the issue squarely. He urged also that they meet the problem by taking full advantage of new retraining opportunities for the displaced Negro worker under provisions of the Federal Manpower Development and Training Act and related governmental programs."

The Negro worker, he said, is concentrated today "in the very occupations hardest hit by automation -- personal services, unskilled and semi-skilled occupations."

(more . . .

222222 JOBLESS WASTE

"Here in Trenton, and elsewhere in every other major community of the nation," Mr. Allen said, "urban society moves forward in direct relation to the weekly paycheck."

"When that stops, progress stops. Then, from that dismal wake, all manner of social and economic problems arise and begin to multiply."

Speakers sharing the Trenton discussions with the NUL official were Dr. Dan Dodson, director of the Center for Human Relations Studies of New York University; Dr. Richard T. Beck, superintendent of Trenton Public Schools, and the Rev. S. H. Woodson, president of the New Jersey State Conference of the NAACP.

# # # #

3/21/63

63-117 GL

PA ✓ LWD ✓
WB ✓ SB ✓

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

NEW YORK, March 22 -- Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, decried as unfortunate the criticism voiced in Washington last night by Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, directed at the Urban League and other organizations working to secure equal opportunity for Negro citizens.

"At a time when the whole world is crying for and working toward unity," he said, "it comes as a terrible shock to hear the voice of a person of Congressman Powell's national stature, sowing the seeds of racial discord.

"For more than half a century the Urban League, with white and Negro citizens working together throughout the nation, has steadfastly directed its total effort toward securing equal opportunities and full civil rights for Negro citizens. The record over the years clearly demonstrates the wisdom and soundness of this interracial program and approach.

# #

3/22/63

63-118 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

UNTIL RACE GHETTO IS ERASED, 'FULL PROMISE' OF EMANCIPATION
STILL NOT REALIZED, URBAN LEAGUE WARNS

ALBANY -- The full promise of the Emancipation Proclamation will not be realized "until the Negro family is freed from the stifling confines of the racial ghetto."

That uneasy note of warning was struck by Alexander J. Allen of New York City, associate executive director of the National Urban League, in an address here March 26 at a ceremony marking the Proclamation Centennial.

Mr. Allen spoke at a citywide observance that culminated a week-long series of commemorative events sponsored by civic and other organizations. Sharing the speakers' platform with Mr. Allen was Ivan A. Nestingen, Undersecretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

The NUL official cautioned that the Emancipation Centennial "is no more than the half-way house to freedom" and added:

"We have a long way to go and certainly far less than another hundred years to complete the journey."

He cited some depressing statistics that show, a century after the Proclamation, that "only 8 per cent of nonwhite males, compared with more than 27 per cent of white males were employed (in 1962) in professional and managerial occupations outside agriculture."

Mr. Allen also noted the trend in high school dropout rates across the nation revealing a mounting preponderance of Negro youth over white quitting school, and a decline in Negro high school graduates entering college.

more . . . .

222222 EMANCIPATION STILL NOT REALIZED

Dropouts 3-1 Over Graduates

"Negro youth, who constitute something less than 11 per cent of the total population, are supplying 21 per cent of the school dropouts, but only 7 per cent of the high school graduates," he said.

In the problems incident to housing, he declared, the only force involved "is the internal compulsion arising from attitudes held by white residents" of urban dwelling developments.

"There is no validity to the so-called 'tip-point' theory of dwelling occupancy," Mr. Allen asserted. "There is no magic percentage figure at which a development must begin and ultimately change to all-Negro occupancy."

He referred to an analysis in this regard, published recently by the NUL, which has created widespread discussion in the housing field.

He stressed that these and related racial problems have created a "caste status" which has resulted in denial to Negro citizens of job opportunities and fostered Jim Crow education, ghetto housing and inadequate health and welfare services."

Urban League's Vital Role

Mr. Allen referred to the Urban League's contribution over the past 52 years in combatting these problems through programs that have gone far in creation of new jobs for Negro workers, greater purchasing power, better homes, guidance and counseling of youth and strengthening family life.

more . . . .

333333 EMANCIPATION STILL NOT REALIZED

"The Urban League has been effective primarily because it is an interracial agency," said Mr. Allen.

"It is dedicated to the well-being of the total community and bases its program on the knowledge and conviction that the total community is in danger as long as any segment is disenfranchised, exploited or depressed."

Thus, he added, it is "necessary to take issue with Congressman Adam Clayton Powell in his recent insistence that the UL and the NAACP should become all-Negro."

The NUL official declared:

"There is a place for all-Negro organizations, just as there is for all-Jewish and all-Catholic, and such organizations need to be improved and strengthened. But the need continues for an interracial approach to problems which are not going to be solved within the Negro ghetto alone, any more than they can be solved by City Hall or the Chamber of Commerce alone."

More than 300 attended the Centennial dinner, held in the Schine-Ten Eyck Hotel.

# #

3/27/63

63-119 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE WARNS OF 'SQUANDERING' CHILD POTENTIALS;
CITES NEGRO SPACE SELECTEE AS EXAMPLE OF OPPORTUNITY

HAMPTON, VA., April 5 -- The people of the United States cannot afford any longer to "squander the tomorrow" of 3¼ million of its children, merely because they happen to be Negroes...

That is the number of Negro youngsters presently enrolled in segregated schools of the South alone, to say nothing of elsewhere in the nation...

It is perfectly logical to presume that in this neglected reservoir of today's childhood are potentials of this country's tomorrow as great, for example, as those personified by Capt. Edward J. Dwight, Jr., selected only a week ago as the nation's first Negro astronaut candidate. Without equality of opportunity in education these potentials would be lost because they were never discovered...

These were among points stressed by Otis E. Finley, Jr., of New York, National Urban League associate director for education and youth incentives, in an address to Virginia educators here today.

Speaking at Hampton Institute at the annual meeting of the Second District, Virginia Teachers Association, Mr. Finley said:

"The drive for equality of opportunity in the public schools must be accelerated, but at the same time we must all work and pay for a new standard of excellence in our schools if education is to fulfill its role as a true national resource.

more . . .

222222 UL WARNS OF 'SQUANDERING' CHILD POTENTIALS

"We must not squander the tomorrow of 3,250,000-odd Negro school children, principally in the South, who need better facilities, better libraries, and better incentives."

The Urban League, Mr. Finley said, is prepared to bend its fullest effort and facilities toward helping the nation provide services giving each citizen, regardless of race, the opportunity to contribute in equal partnership to betterment of all.

Earlier, in an address at an Emancipation Centennial observance held by Yeshiva University in New York City, Mr. Finley declared:

"It is apparent that progress in school desegregation is not really progress unless it is broad and fast enough to meet the need of the times.

"If desegregation of our school systems is a major continuing first step in the educational emancipation of the American Negro-- and for that matter, whites also-- then the integration of our school systems is another necessary next step in the right direction.

"There is a major difference between the two in terms of their present application. Evidence suggests that many of the northern schools have been long desegregated in terms of physical proximity between Negro and white children, but never really integrated."

He took note of "mono-racial images presented in teaching a multi-racial school population" as another serious barrier to equal educational opportunity.

more . . .

333333 UL WARNS OF 'SQUANDERING' CHILD POTENTIALS

"Most text materials and vocational counseling aids, including films, used in our public schools today were written or produced from the vantage point of an all-white society," said Mr. Finley.

"The position of Negroes and other minorities in contemporary American living is largely overlooked. Again there is sufficient research to suggest the value of self identification in the motivation of youth."

If, he asserted, publishers of text and counseling materials are reluctant to include these important factors in their publications because, as some have stated, "they would not sell in certain areas, and after all, we are in business," then it should be the responsibility of educators and such organizations as the Urban League to point up a great need and to encourage their inclusion. On the other hand, he added, publishers should not be unduly castigated because they only print what is written -- mostly by educators."

The Urban League official emphasized that it is vital to all Americans to note that "no matter how distasteful it may sound to the local tax payer, we no longer caneducate for the provincial needs of a specific community, but to meet the needs of a nationwide and highly mobile society."

# #

4/3/63

63-121 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE AIDE SIGNALLY HONORED FOR YOUTH INCENTIVES WORK
AT NATIONAL VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE PARLEY IN BOSTON

BOSTON, April 10 -- Ann Tanneyhill of the National Urban League's Department of Public Relations in New York, today became one of the five recipients of the National Vocational Guidance Association's coveted award for outstanding contribution to vocational guidance and career development of youth.

THE NVGA is the national professional organization representing thousands of guidance counselors throughout the United States. It is currently marking the 50th anniversary conference of the NVGA in session here, where it was launched in 1913.

The honor -- a scroll presented to Miss Tanneyhill by Harold F. Cottingham, NVGA president and professor of education at the University of Florida -- was conferred at a luncheon attended by more than 1,000 in the Statler Hilton Hotel.

The citation to Miss Tanneyhill, who has a long and varied background with the Urban League dating back to 1928, read in part: "...for outstanding contribution to vocational guidance and to the futherance of the techniques, theory, methods and literature in career development."

The other recipients included: Professors C. Winfield Scott, Rutgers University; Donald Super, Columbia University and C. Gilbert Rand, University of Minnesota.

# # # # # #

Note to Editor: Bio of Miss Tanneyhill attached.

4/10/63
63-122 GL

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

ANN TANNEYHILL: A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Ann Tanneyhill of the National Urban League's Department of Public Relations, is in charge of the League's Publications Bureau. She brings to her present job a background of long and varied experience.

She has held a number of important posts in the Urban League, including Secretary, Bureau of Guidance and Placement; Executive Assistant in the Administration Department; and Director of Vocational Guidance. She has been in the Public Relations Department since October 1, 1961.

During her years of service as a vocational guidance expert, and educational consultant, Miss Tanneyhill planned and directed the League's Vocational Opportunity Campaign from 1931 to 1955; supervised during the 1940's the League's network radio programs; organized and directed Career Conferences on the campuses of Negro colleges in the South from 1950 to 1954; and from 1958 to 1960 directed The Tomorrow's Scientists and Technicians project, (popularly known as TST) a nationwide youth incentives program to search for, discover, and encourage capable and talented Negro youth to broaden their vocational horizons.

Miss Tanneyhill is the author of guidance publications, including: Guiding Negro Youth Toward Jobs; Program Aids for the Vocational Opportunity Campaign; radio scripts; guidance bibliographies and program aids; leaflets and magazine articles for young people and adults. She is also the author of From School to Job: Guidance for Minority Youth (Public Affairs Pamphlet No. 200)

She has been a member of the Advisory Committee on Young Workers of the Bureau of Labor Standards, U.S. Department of Labor. A professional member of the National Vocational Guidance Association, she was a Trustee from 1953 to 1955. She is a member of the New York Personnel and Guidance Association, and served as a Trustee from 1958 to 1960.

The May 1957 issue of CHARM magazine featured Miss Tanneyhill in the "How Did She Get There?" series of stories on career women.

She is a charter member of the Urban League's Quarter Century Club of persons who have served the League movement for twenty-five years or more.

Miss Tanneyhill started with the Urban League movement in 1928 as a secretary-stenographer with the Springfield (Mass.) affiliate of the organization. In December 1930 she came to the National Headquarters as secretary to the Director of Industrial Relations.

Born in Norwood, Massachusetts, she is a graduate of Simmons College in Boston, holding a Bachelor of Science degree. She received a Master of Arts from Teachers College, Columbia University, in Vocational Guidance and Personnel Administration. She holds a certificate from the Radio Workshop of New York University.

# #

April, 1963
Department of Public Relations

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - Plaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

TWO URBAN LEAGUE LEADERS CITE AGENCY'S 'NEW IMAGE' TO UNPRECEDENTED TURN-OUT IN LOUISIANA

NEW ORLEANS -- An overflow interracial audience of more than 400 consisting of representatives from the civic, fraternal, business, labor and government life of the city, jammed the auditorium of Xavier University April 18 to celebrate the 25th Annual Meeting of the Urban League of Greater New Orleans. Featured speakers at this meeting were two leaders of the National Urban League, Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director, and Henry Steeger, president, both of New York.

Jointly in their addresses, they brought a message to the South of an exhilerating new image of the Urban League in which they stressed the new role that the League is playing in dealing with the troubling problems of today. They emphasized the kind of statesmanship that is required to deal with these problems. The Urban League's teamwork was cited as a working example of a professionally staffed and nationwide community service agency that is fulfilling its purpose to secure equal opportunity for the Negro population and create better understanding among all men.

Mr. Steeger emphasized the unique position that the League has reached today as an organization which is being increasingly called upon by government, industry and labor to help solve problems of race. In his remarks, Mr. Young pointed up the need for inspiring statesmanship in resolving the complexities of racial problems that confront not only the 19 million Negro citizens, but also the progress of the entire nation.

more . . .

222222 LOUISIANA

Never before in this part of the country, within the memory of those present, have two nationally known spokesmen of the stature of Mr. Young and Mr. Steeger been presented together to express the urgency of the situation which confronts both white and Negro leadership working toward making real our democratic ideals.

A number of other UL officials outside of New Orleans were present. They included League Trustees Winthrop Rockefeller of Little Rock; Ivan C. McLeod of New York; and John G. Lewis, Jr. of Baton Rouge. Also League officials H. R. Schwab of Chicago and Clarence D. Coleman of Atlanta. Lester B. Granger, retired NUL executive director, was present. Mrs. Charles Keller, Jr., a member of the local and National League Trustees also attended.

A high point of the event was an award presented to Mr. and Mrs. Elvy Albert Turner of New Orleans as the "Urban League Family of the Year."

Married 40 years, the Turners are proud parents of twelve children and an adopted child. Nine of their children have gone through college. Two others are currently in college, and the two youngest are preparing for college.

Mr. Granger presented the League citation to the Turner family as exemplifying not only the greatest in American tradition of family solidarity and progress, but also the goal of the Urban League's program which is directed toward the strengthening of family life.

Congratulatory telegrams were received from Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson; HHFA Administrator Robert C. Weaver, and from a host of other officials.

# #

4/19/63

63-123 GP

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE OFFICIAL DEPLORES 'PANIC BUTTON' TACTIC
AS DISTORTING FACTOR IN WELFARE IMAGE

ATLANTIC CITY, April 27 -- The impersonal nature of constantly expanding urbanization throughout the United States is generating apathetic public attitudes toward welfare problems that have intensified in recent years, instead of subsiding in reasonable proportion to progress attained in this field.

This was the declaration voiced today by Nelson C. Jackson of New York, associate executive director of the National Urban League, in addressing the Eastern Regional Conference of the Child Welfare League of America, in session here at the Hotel Ambassador.

"Consequently," said Mr. Jackson, "public welfare departments have become virtually a dumping ground for social problems which communities would like to sweep under the rug and forget."

He cited in particular the effects of this apathy toward problems of child dependency, adding:

"Too often, likewise, voluntary agencies are unable or unwilling to come to grips with these crucial community issues because they are often faced with the same apathy, through board leadership, which controls the overall community."

more . . .

The net result, he declared, is that social agencies, including public welfare departments, "have little choice other than to adopt approaches which are diffuse, fragmentized, symptomatic and, at best, inadequate."

"Any calculated panic button, manipulated by the thumb of alarmists who desire to use it solely to political advantage, is probably the greatest danger that exists to the balance of social work today," Mr. Jackson said.

"This scare tactic has been touched off repeatedly in recent years in many sections of the country and accomplishes little beyond distorting the public image of welfare."

The NUL official, who was the only Negro member among eleven serving in the New York State Moreland Commission that recently completed a 21-month study of public welfare in that state, pointed to statistics showing the proportion of nonwhite citizens now living in cities is 72 per cent of the national total in that category.

This trend is likely to continue, Mr. Jackson said, "unless there is opportunity for Negro citizens to have freer access to having jobs and other necessities of life whereby their dollar will purchase more in the suburban market."

He emphasized a need for "stringent measures" to change some of the racial patterns in American communities, and admonished that:

"Certainly, the public should not have to pay for the inequities often caused by segregation and discrimination."

He noted that racial violence frequently occurs when a Negro family attempts to move out of the ghetto, and that "the image of violence undoubtedly makes an impression and causes bitterness not readily erased."

more . . .

333333 'PANIC BUTTON'

Mr. Jackson stressed urgency that actions be taken swiftly, with leadership coming from the federal government, "to loosen the housing noose from the neck of Negro citizens," as one of the primary necessities of a wholesome childhood.

The Urban League, he pointed out, long has been in the forefront of the struggle to secure such action -- a struggle that has achieved some important gains in recent years.

Similarly, Mr. Jackson urged equally swift and drastic action toward opening doors for Negro workers in a labor market beset by increasing automation, along with programs to provide adequate and equal opportunity in education, if Negro youth of today are to share equitably in the changing economy of tomorrow. This, too, he stressed as a vital foundation stone of national unity.

He deplored growing tendencies in many areas of the nation to penalize individual and ethnic groups as a result of "incongruities directly traceable to a faulty public image of social welfare" rather than "to take a good hard look at the problems stemming from urbanization" and devise realistic means to eliminate them and the abuses that sometimes arise from them.

# # #

4/23/63

63-126 GL

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - Plaza 1-0300

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

THE FOLLOWINGG STATEMENT WAS ISSUED BY WHITNEY M. YOUNG, JR., EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, ON BEHALF OF THE NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE

NEW YORK -- "Pope John's Encyclical, Peace on Earth, will be judged by future historians as perhaps the most important document of our time. It is a stirring plea and challenge to men of good will everywhere of whatever race, creed, clime or political persuasion to learn to live together in harmony and peace; for the only alternative is suicide and disaster.

"The strong and impassioned personality of this great religious leader, as well as in his exciting words, give universal inspiration to every human being to work swiftly toward making truth, justice and charity the goals of all earthly endeavors.

"This historic papal document is especially welcomed by those of us in the National Urban League who are working every hour of every day to secure equal opportunity for all Americans and eliminate all vestiges of discrimination and segregation.

"Pope John focuses his great wisdom and unparalleled insight on the sufferings and wrongs of mankind, and proposes the kind of activity and world order that are required to create understanding and peace of all men."

4/26/63

63-125 GP

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - Plaza 1-0300

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE SPEAKER DECLARES 'OUTPUT FOR TOMORROW'
RESTS ON YOUTH MOTIVATION 'INPUT' BY COMMUNITIES NOW

NEW ORLEANS, April 26 -- The future output of today's youth in contribution to the millrace of tomorrow's adult responsibilities and national progress will be only in direct proportion to the degree of motivational input, or lack of it, provided by their community environment and opportunities right now.

To that note of challenge, Otis E. Finley, Jr., of New York, National Urban League associate director for education and youth incentives, keyed an address to a visiting Teachers Workshop of the Louisiana Education Association, in session here at Xavier University.

Mr. Finley, gearing his remarks particularly to the nationwide problem of school dropout and the necessity for establishing new horizons in education, termed dropout "a malady of contemporary childhood that exacts an ultimate toll greater than heart disease and cancer combined."

He warned that unless a thorough review of causes and ultimate implications of the dropout problem is undertaken swiftly and in nationwide dimensions, in terms of corrective motivational counter-measures, the results "could be a social and economic holocaust of unpreparedness" which no nation could survive.

more . . .

222222 UL SPEAKER DECLARES 'OUTPUT FOR TOMORROW'

"For the Negro boy or girl trapped in the quicksand of school dropout, certain special and unique considerations, in addition to all others, must be brought into effective play if we are to resolve this challenge," Mr. Finley said.

The Urban League spokesman urged that, among special considerations toward closing the gap between living patterns of Negro and white children, traditional labels such as "culturally deprived" be stricken from our popular terminology.

"While the term 'culturally deprived' may be correctly interpreted by many practitioners groping among approaches to these youngsters toward higher achievement, the inherent danger in this label is that it can create impressions of cultural inferiority among the children themselves, as well as nourish tendencies by the total community to ignore the influences that depress the aspirations of the dropout child," he declared.

Mr. Finley cited the approaches shaped, tested and then intensified by the Urban Leagues across the country over many years in providing the governmental and community leadership required to meet these challenges in education, stressing that in programs of this nature "lie most of the answers."

"There is no specific panacea for solution of this awesome childhood affliction of school dropout," said Mr. Finley. "There are no pat answers short of better teachers, better teaching and better counselling. There is no motivation that can supplant that of family solidarity, understanding and secure dignity."

The National Urban League is a professional community service agency established in 1910 to secure equal opportunity for Negro citizens in employment, education, housing and in health and welfare.

4/26/63
63-124 GL

LWDV
VJL
PA
SB
BP

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - Plaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

NEW YORK, June 12 -- The following statement was issued today by Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, in reference to the murder of Medgar W. Evans, NAACP field secretary, in Jackson, Mississippi:

"The assassination of this dedicated fighter for the rights of his fellow Negro citizens is a tragic example of the lengths to which unbridled hatred and the brutalities of bigotry can go unless drastic measures are taken to avert the conditions that have spawned them.

"All of us who have battled throughout the years for the concepts for which Mr. Evers has given his life, share the blame for allowing the conditions that resulted in his death to have reached that stage of brutish lawlessness. This sort of tragedy must never happen again.

"If the perpetrators of this senseless killing believe that in the murder of Medgar Evers they have struck a blow in behalf of racism, they are in grievous error. However, they have indeed made it crystal clear that the time is short for bringing into nationwide action the constructive programs called for by the President only a few hours before this disgraceful crime occurred.

"The National Urban League, through personal contributions made by its Trustees, offers a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the murder of Medgar W. Evers."

# #

63 133

GL 6/12/63

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - Plaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

NEW YORK, June 12 -- The National Urban League today called upon the Congress to rally in support of the civil rights pledges made Tuesday night by President Kennedy in his message to the people of the United States.

Following is a statement issued by Henry Steeger, NUL president:

"The National Urban League hails the President's blueprint for immediate action to erase from our way of life the blots of discrimination and prejudice against Negro citizens.

"The National Urban League now calls upon the Congress to rally swiftly in support of his civil rights plea. We urge also that state legislatures, governors and mayors join without delay in a supreme effort to develop the legislation required to assure action programs that will put an end for all time to segregation and second-class citizenship for this nation's Negro population.

"The President stated unequivocally the moral imperatives -- 'as old as the Scriptures, as clear as the American Constitution' -- which lie at the heart of the massive means to solution he spelled out. In so doing, he sounded the challenge of urgency and provided the sort of leadership that Negro citizens have sought throughout the century that has elapsed since Lincoln.

(more . . .

222222

"President Kennedy's reference to the 'fires of frustration and discord', now all too aflame in many sections of our land, gave further spur to the need for swift and positive action in the form of specific federal legislation. This, he made clear, must be coupled with a nationwide moral crusade untrammeled by regional or sectional differences. Without both, the scourge of bias under which Negro citizens have struggled for generations cannot be destroyed.

"The incisive leadership and decision the President expressed in his appeal for concerted effort and responsibility on the part of all Americans to stamp out these residues of evil once and for all give replenished encouragement to those in the forefront of the fight.

"It is unfortunate, the League feels, that at a time when our country is seething in a cauldron as potentially explosive as today's racial strife, plans are in motion for the President to go abroad. We recommend that this trip be deferred. The need for and weight of his continued personal leadership here at home, at this moment, is imperative."

# #

63 134

6/12/63 GL

Intergroup NUL

LWD
VJ
PA
ML
SB
BP

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE CITES URGENT NEED FOR RACIAL BALANCE IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS

NEW YORK, June 24 -- Private schools throughout the country, particularly at elementary and secondary level, need to reappraise their racial policies in enrollment if they are to fulfill realistically their contribution to the non-discriminatory national leadership the future will require.

This was the opinion expressed today by Otis E. Finley, Jr., associate director for education and youth incentives of the National Urban League, at a meeting of private school officials here.

Attending the meeting, held at 139 East 35th Street, were representatives of private secondary schools in various localities of the Eastern Seaboard.

"The private schools share with the public schools a two-fold responsibility (1) for shaping new images and new concepts about the role and worth of individuals, especially those who are non-white, and (2) for developing in all students a new appraisal of man's relationship to man," Mr. Finley declared.

He urged that, in voluntarily re-examining, and reassesing their educational approaches, the private schools weigh carefully the values of "living experiences in intergroup relations through more racially representative student bodies."

The NUL official pointed out that increasing numbers of schools are adopting a position that the best academic preparation is inadequate if students are not equipped, through positive experiences in an educational setting, to make intelligent decisions and provide construvtive leadership toward solution of racial problems.

more . . . . .

22222 UL CITES URGENT NEED

"Today, too many private schools have antiquated and arbitrary racial restrictions which automatically preclude the entry of some students," Mr. Finley said.

"Some of these restrictions are charter provided, others are by common consent. It must be recognized that development of private school consciousness on the part of many Negro families and their children is a long range process depending on many factors -- not the least of which is a genuine sincerity and effort on the part of private schools to effect change."

He assured the school representatives that the Urban League, with its network of 65 affiliates serving a majority of the nation's urban Negro population, is equipped through long experience to assist private schools in making these transitions and stands ready to do so when called upon.

###

6/24/63
63-139 GL

Text of a statement with respect to EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY IN PRIVATE EDUCATION, presented by Otis E. Finley, Jr., associate director for education and youth incentives, NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE, at a meeting, June 24, 1963, with representatives of private secondary schools on the Eastern Seaboard, at 139 East 35th Street, New York, New York.

Private schools, especially at the elementary and secondary level, face a great challenge in helping to determine the course of the social revolution now sweeping the nation and the world.

These schools share with the public schools a responsibility to shape new images and concepts about the role and worth of individuals, especially those who are non-white, and to develop in all students a new appraisal of man's relationship to man.

Since the ultimate extent and degree of change may be unknown at this time, the method of change and the leadership provided by private institutions can result in either better understanding among men or more frustration and bitterness.

Thus, it is urgent that private schools carefully re-examine on a voluntary basis the role of their institutions to insure that the education of all students will include living experiences in intergroup understanding through a more racially representative student body.

One rationale for this re-examination is the realization that a good percentage of graduates from these schools become the leaders and influence molders in business, industry, and government, as well as in foreign affairs. Regardless of their career aspirations, these graduates and leaders inevitably must make, at some point in their lives, important decisions which have racial implications.

More schools are now adopting the position that the best of academic preparation is inadequate if the students are not equipped through positive experiences in an educational setting to make intelligent decisions and to provide constructive leadership toward the solution of this crucial problem. These in-school experiences thus provide another avenue to more effective understanding across racial lines, which in some instances would not otherwise be possible.

Another rationale for this re-examination assumes a moral responsibility on the part of private institutions to prepare a greater percentage of non-white children - as Americans - for constructive leadership in society. It is often the case that private school education is a major stepping stone toward high attainment in life.

Today, too many private schools have antiquated and arbitrary racial restrictions which automatically preclude the entry of some students. Some of these restrictions are charter provided, others are by common agreement.

The high cost of private education has been, and is still, a major deterrent to the families of some children who are otherwise potentially equipped to benefit from this experience. This in itself tends to perpetuate a vicious circle, in that limited family incomes prevent these children from achieving the type and quality of education - and the cultural experience - so important for upward mobility.

To help break this circle, it is vital that these private institutions review their scholarship procedures, including the provision of more full tuition grants, as their contribution toward developing the minds of these children. There is no question but that this effort will pay off in great dividends to the nation.

The present approach of many schools to the recruitment and selection of candidates is also a deterrent. Many schools depend heavily upon their alumni for recommendations. Unfortunately some of these alumni - since most are white - do not, and have not, developed effective communications across racial lines in their respective communities which would enable them to spot and recommend a talented Negro candidate. In addition, public school principals, counselors, and teachers, generally, have not been encouraged to motivate or to refer likely prospects to private institutions.

It must be recognized by these institutions that the development of a private school consciousness on the part of many Negro families and their children is a long range process depending on many factors - not the least of which is a genuine sincerity and effort on the part of private schools to effect change.

The National Urban League, with its network of 65 affiliates serving a majority of the nation's urban Negro population, is equipped through experience to assist private schools in making this transition.

# #

Intergroup Org. LWDV VI SB

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York, New York 10017

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE LEADER SEES 'DOOM' FOR UNSKILLED WORKER;
SPELLS OUT ROLES THAT LABOR, MANAGEMENT, GOVERNMENT MUST PLAY

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO, Dec. 6 -- The unskilled worker is economically doomed in today's automated scheme of things and in the foreseeable future, Whitney M. Young, Jr., of New York, executive director of the National Urban League, declared in an address here.

Mr. Young spoke at a conference on automation, education and collective bargaining, held under auspices of the American Federation on Automation and Employment, in the Ponce de Leon Hotel today.

"Equal opportunity will not give the unskilled man the skill he lacks," said Mr. Young.

"To expect him to compete for better jobs without training is like expecting me to speak Spanish without having learned it. Without training, the unskilled man is doomed in our society."

The Urban League's national spokesman warned that "it takes more than good will" to equip an unskilled individual with what he must have to compete successfully in today's swiftly automating job market. It will require, he declared, long-range planning and combined efforts by management, organized labor, government, Negro organizations and cooperation of the worker himself to provide him with a skill requisite to present manpower demands.

"It will take a massive, crash program to get the Negro moving up into skilled jobs," Mr. Young said. "This must involve both a training program for youth and a re-training program for adults."

. . . more

He noted in particular the responsibilities that must be assumed by management, labor and government in implementing the program. He cited the Urban League's "National Skills Bank," designed to attract qualified Negro workers for job orders made available to the League by scores of major industrial and commercial firms. In brief, the League, through the Skills Bank, will serve as a "job broker." The Bank is in operation in 65 strategic industrial centers across the country.

Mr. Young set forth the following recommendations on how best the major sources for employment can help resolve the present job situation:

"Organized labor can help by actively recruiting Negroes into the union. By opening up apprenticeships to young Negroes in all the trades. By protecting the Negro from discrimination and seeing to it that he gets promotions when he deserves them.

"Management can help by actively recruiting Negroes to fill jobs in every job category. By grooming outstanding prospects for top jobs. By initiating a training program to help new employees acquire new skills that will help them to move up the ladder.

"The government can help by expanding its training program which is presently concerned only with re-training of the 'hard-core' unemployed. And to underwrite some of the expense for industry on-the-job training programs. We suggest a special effort, a massive program. All along the lines of the G. I. Bill of Rights for Veterans after World War II."

The NUL leader made clear none of these measures should be thought of in terms of a "hand-out" to the Negro citizen.

"Rather," he said, "they should be regarded as a 'hand-up' - a helping hand to save the Negro from disaster and to give him a foundation for a normal middle-class American life."

# #

63 176 GL
12/5/63

Intergroup Org. - LWDV
NUL
SBV

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York, New York 10017

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

URBAN LEAGUE OFFICIAL CITES 'PANIC BUTTON' DISTORTION
OF WELFARE AS GRAVE DANGER TO SOCIAL WORK 'BALANCE'

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6 -- The "scare tactics" sometimes utilized by alarmists seeking political advantage from social welfare controversy were decried by an Urban League official here today as achieving virtually nothing beyond "dangerous distortion" of the public's image of welfare needs.

Nelson C. Jackson, associate executive director of the National Urban League, pointed up what he characterized as "the panic button technique" for political expediency as a serious deterrent to effective social work.

Speaking before the American Welfare Association Conference, in session at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, Mr. Jackson declared:

"Pressure of the calculated panic button by politically motivated alarmists who seek to use isolated instances of welfare abuses to advantage is probably the greatest danger to the balance of social work today.

"It has been touched off repeatedly in recent years in many sectors of the nation and almost invariably has generated little beyond distorting the entire image of welfare in the public mind."

The NUL official, who was one of the eleven members of a special Moreland Act Commission appointed by Governor Rockefeller in 1961 to make an in-depth examination of public welfare facilities, practices and regulations in New York State, cited the accompanying flurries of "scare efforts" by which some forces "sought to cloud the inquiry."

. . . more

These efforts, said Mr. Jackson, tended to confuse the public understanding of some of the vital issues toward remedy of which the Commission was charged to make legislative recommendations.

"Fortunately," he added, "it now appears that certain legislation will be introduced to implement the meaningful recommendations of the Moreland Commission.

"The individual social worker as a citizen should not be afraid to exercise his perogatives in dealing with the political facts of life. Herein lies a field of operation which needs to be more thoroughly explored and utilized for the true fulfillment of the democratic process."

Mr. Jackson emphasized that the Urban League has long been among the nation's principal organizations in the field pressing for development of greatly expanded and informed voluntary leadership. This is the community leadership required, he said, to assist public welfare facilities in reaching those, particularly in the Negro community, who most desperately need the entire range of those services.

He stressed as an example the Urban League's unremitting effort across the nation toward greater utilization of Negro leadership on policy-making welfare boards and commissions. He cited also the League's recruitment program to develop Negro leadership for these policy-making bodies.

"It is vital to make sure that those sought out for membership on boards and similar bodies have not long since lost touch with the problems of those he is supposed to represent," Mr. Jackson warned.

"High-sounding phrases are of little value unless a training program is carried out to make those recruited ready for service."

# #

63 175 GL
12/5/63

LWD
SB

NEWS BUREAU

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York, New York 10017

Guichard Parris - PLaza 1-0302

FOR RELEASE SATURDAY
DECEMBER 21

---

35 ARE GRADUATED FROM SPECIAL NYU SECRETARIAL PROJECT
SPONSORED BY URBAN LEAGUE AND FINANCED BY INDUSTRY

NEW YORK, Dec. 20 -- Thirty-five women, ranging in age from 17 to 53, were graduated today from a special 11-week intensive course in office training, conducted at New York University under sponsorship of the National Urban League.

Certificates for completion of the course, which included typing, shorthand, transcription, English, office procedures, grooming and personal development, were presented to the graduates by Mrs. Edith Krag, director of Office Training Services, representing Paul A. McGhee, dean of the NYU Division of General Education, at informal exercises held in the Loeb Student Center, Washington Square South.

The project, which got under way October 7 under leadership of Mrs. Helen R. Williams of the NUL staff, was launched as an "experimental adventure" designed primarily to prepare and find job openings for qualified but inadequately trained Negro women in the business world, as an important phase of the Urban League's "Domestic Marshall Plan."

A special curriculum for the tuition-free program, which will be repeated three times more during the coming year, was developed under direction of Mrs. Edith Krag, NYU's director of Office Training Services.

The trainees in the just-completed project came from a wide variety of backgrounds throughout New York City.

more . . .

One, an 18-year-old night club dancer from Jamaica, Queens, joined the project because she felt the entertainment field presented "dead-end" possibilities for her future. Now, in addition to an engaging personality and proved aptitude for assuming responsibility, she can take dictation at 100 words a minute and perform other office duties with skill.

Another of the trainees, a housewife and mother, 34, from Manhattan who has been active in PTA affairs, had been employed as a clerical aide in the public school system. She resigned to join the training project to improve her skills and emerged its top-honor graduate and one of the outstanding examples of its effectiveness, according to Mrs. Krag. She has been interviewed for job placement by all the corporations that underwrote financing of the free course.

Funds for the project were provided by Bankers Trust Company; General Electric Company; International Business Machines Corporation; Radio Corporation of America; Socony Mobil Oil Company; Time, Inc.; and Western Electric Company.

Speakers at the ceremony included Whitney M. Young, Jr., NUL executive director; Mahlon T. Puryear, NUL associate director; and Malcolm Andresen, Socony Mobil attorney and NUL senior vice president. It was he who initiated the plan for the training project.

Also present at the event were Mrs. Helen R. Williams, who had worked closely with Mr. Andresen throughout the project; members of the project's advisory committee; recruiters from the contributing companies; secretaries from industry who had been guest lecturers; Mrs. Krag and her staff and other faculty members.

more . . .

333333 GRADS

All the trainees had previously received some preliminary secretarial training but their skills were inadequate through insufficient training or long disuse to meet present commerce and industry demands. They were selected for the project on a basis of test scores and interview findings. Although the group was interracial, 30 of the women were Negroes.

A list of the graduates and the boroughs in which they live follows:

BRONX: Mattie Lee Bonner; Shirley De Sane; Miriam Morales; Eunice Remembrance; Jeanne Uzouich; and Carmen Verdejo.

BROOKLYN: Alneatha Bonds; Anora Duncan; Beatrice Finley; Catherine Galloway; Bernice Gary; Mae Green; Barbara Griffith; Audrey Law; Zeleta Lee; Eva Schuster; Judith Stone; and Salaria Williams.

MANHATTAN: Grace Lucille Bell; Lenora Cotay; Carmen Forbes; Lila Mae Lee; Mildred Pleasants; Ella Randolph; Ruth Rubin; and Dorothy Woodby.

QUEENS: Patricia Clifton; Dolores Crosby; Edith Guitano; Elsie Hall; Shirley Morris; Dolores Porter; Juanita Pride; and Cynthia Shehee.

NASSAU COUNTY: Vera L. Gary

# #

63 179 GL

12/18/63

Symposium
winter 1963
Negro (ace)

Token integration has come to public universities . . .

Wide World

MODERATION

ATLANTA, A CITY of about a half million inhabitants, prides itself before the nation as a Southern city "too busy to hate." This oft quoted plaudit is attributed to former Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who for more than 20 years was the principal architect of Atlanta's positive approach to race relations. Both Negroes and whites agree that Atlanta could have chosen a less commendable approach to the solution of its racial ills. Jackson, Miss.; Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.; New Orleans, La.; and, of course, Little Rock, Ark., are recent enough reminders that hate still carries the day as the prevailing sentiment governing Negro-white relations in many parts of the Deep South.

But is the simple absence of hate in Atlanta sufficient to assure racial progress fast enough to satisfy the demands of the most impatient Negroes, yet slow enough to hold back the latent violence of the most resistive whites? An objective, realistic answer to this question may well determine how long Atlanta will continue to deserve the region's and nation's praise for its handling of racial matters. The answer to this question may also suggest the pattern of changes to come in other major cities of Georgia as well as in other states of the Deep South.

As an on-the-spot observer of racial changes in Atlanta for almost a year, I would like to draw upon some of what I believe to be valid generalizations for my analysis of the current racial scene in Atlanta. Although much of what is said can be broadened to describe changes taking place all over the South, emphasis in this article is restricted solely to the city of Atlanta. The question to which I address myself is: "How free is the Negro in present-day Atlanta?"

Over the last ten years, a larger percentage of whites (58.5 percent) than Negroes (31.3 percent) has moved into the outlying sections of Atlanta. Negroes, however, lag only 8 percent behind whites in population growth in the central city. The steady growth in numbers of Negroes in Atlanta has so affected the political life of the city that one Negro leader observed recently, "the mayoralty candidate that the league [Negro Voters] backs is the candidate who gets to be mayor." The present mayor, Ivan Allen, Jr., was elected to his office with more Negro than white votes. A Negro, Leroy Johnson, was elected this past fall to the State Senate from Fulton (Atlanta) County, the first of his race to be so chosen since the days of Reconstruction. And this voting trend is likely to continue, particularly if this year's registration is any indication of things to come. Registration over the last 16 months increased among Negroes by 16,000 persons, a 54 percent increase, compared with an increase of 37 percent for whites. It is yet to be seen, however, whether voting power can effectively extend or accelerate racial progress in the city. In the past two years at least, it has not.

Pressures exerted by religious, student, and race relations organizations upon segregated facilities have been the major vehicle of change in recent years. A year-long series of sit-in demonstrations and boycotts led to an agreement in September, 1961, to desegregate lunch counters and restaurants connected with department, drug and notion stores. The agreement covered approximately 70 lunch counters and restaurants. Only one eating facility was voluntarily desegregated prior to the sit-ins, the YWCA in 1959. Franklin Simon (a large chain of stores specializing in women's apparel) opened its eating facilities to Negroes voluntarily one month before the desegregation date set by the co-signers

Symposium
Winter 1963
Negro (Atl)

Token integration has come to public universities . . .

Wide World

MODERATION

ATLANTA, A CITY of about a half million inhabitants, prides itself before the nation as a Southern city "too busy to hate." This oft quoted plaudit is attributed to former Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who for more than 20 years was the principal architect of Atlanta's positive approach to race relations. Both Negroes and whites agree that Atlanta could have chosen a less commendable approach to the solution of its racial ills. Jackson, Miss.; Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.; New Orleans, La.; and, of course, Little Rock, Ark., are recent enough reminders that hate still carries the day as the prevailing sentiment governing Negro-white relations in many parts of the Deep South.

But is the simple absence of hate in Atlanta sufficient to assure racial progress fast enough to satisfy the demands of the most impatient Negroes, yet slow enough to hold back the latent violence of the most resistive whites? An objective, realistic answer to this question may well determine how long Atlanta will continue to deserve the region's and nation's praise for its handling of racial matters. The answer to this question may also suggest the pattern of changes to come in other major cities of Georgia as well as in other states of the Deep South.

As an on-the-spot observer of racial changes in Atlanta for almost a year, I would like to draw upon some of what I believe to be valid generalizations for my analysis of the current racial scene in Atlanta. Although much of what is said can be broadened to describe changes taking place all over the South, emphasis in this article is restricted solely to the city of Atlanta. The question to which I address myself is: "How free is the Negro in present-day Atlanta?"

Over the last ten years, a larger percentage of whites (58.5 percent) than Negroes (31.3 percent) has moved into the outlying sections of Atlanta. Negroes, however, lag only 8 percent behind whites in population growth in the central city. The steady growth in numbers of Negroes in Atlanta has so affected the political life of the city that one Negro leader observed recently, "the mayoralty candidate that the league [Negro Voters] backs is the candidate who gets to be mayor." The present mayor, Ivan Allen, Jr., was elected to his office with more Negro than white votes. A Negro, Leroy Johnson, was elected this past fall to the State Senate from Fulton (Atlanta) County, the first of his race to be so chosen since the days of Reconstruction. And this voting trend is likely to continue, particularly if this year's registration is any indication of things to come. Registration over the last 16 months increased among Negroes by 16,000 persons, a 54 percent increase, compared with an increase of 37 percent for whites. It is yet to be seen, however, whether voting power can effectively extend or accelerate racial progress in the city. In the past two years at least, it has not.

Pressures exerted by religious, student, and race relations organizations upon segregated facilities have been the major vehicle of change in recent years. A year-long series of sit-in demonstrations and boycotts led to an agreement in September, 1961, to desegregate lunch counters and restaurants connected with department, drug and notion stores. The agreement covered approximately 70 lunch counters and restaurants. Only one eating facility was voluntarily desegregated prior to the sit-ins, the YWCA in 1959. Franklin Simon (a large chain of stores specializing in women's apparel) opened its eating facilities to Negroes voluntarily one month before the desegregation date set by the co-signers

by James A. Moss

IN ATLANTA

Wide World

. . . public high schools . . .

of the agreement. Stouffer's and the Coach and Six, both branches of a Northern chain, are the only two of 150 restaurants open to Negro patrons. The chain cafeterias, such as Davis and Dobbs House (with the exception of its airport eating facility) still maintain rigid segregation policies.

Desegregation of bus transportation resulted from a test suit brought by six Negro ministers arrested for riding in the front of the bus. On January 21, 1959, almost two years to the day after the test suit was filed, all buses in Atlanta were officially integrated. Negroes, aware that the highest income-producing lines for the Atlanta Transit Company were those used most by Negroes, pressed for the employment of Negroes as bus drivers in 1960. Currently, approximately 650 of the drivers are white and two are Negro. Efforts within the last year to increase the number of Negro drivers have been unavailing.

The two railroad stations and two bus terminals in Atlanta were desegregated in compliance with the Interstate Commerce Commission ruling of November 9, 1961. The restaurant connected with the Trailways Bus Terminal, however, is currently involved in a court action brought by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee to force compliance with the ICC ruling.

Public recreation facilities reflect an uneven pattern of desegregation. The city's six golf courses were desegregated by court order in 1955 but the desegregation of other park facilities has moved slowly. The efforts of some Negro students to use tennis courts in parks designated for whites, in the summer of 1961, led to a closing of the tennis courts by park authorities. One previously all-white court was effectively integrated this past summer. In a recent law suit the recreation facilities available to the Negro population (40 percent) and to the whites (60 percent) were described:

42 major parks for white Atlantans; three for Negroes
92 small parkways for whites; none for Negroes
20 football fields for whites; none for Negroes
16 recreation centers for whites; three for Negroes
12 swimming pools for whites; three for Negroes
22 baseball diamonds for whites; three for Negroes
119 tennis courts for whites; eight for Negroes.

In a recent conference between the mayor and race relations leaders (both Negro and white) the mayor is reported to have declared all park facilities, except swimming pools, open to Negroes and urged that any case of racial discrimination be reported to his office. No public announcement of this policy has yet been made, however, and as far as the Negro community is concerned only the golf courses, the zoo, and the Cyclorama (an historical exhibit of the Battle of Atlanta) are fully open to Negroes. A park amphitheater and the municipal auditorium now have non-segregated seating. In August, 1962, a U. S. District Court struck down segregation in parks and public assemblies. This order applies also to swimming pools. Asked to comment upon the court order affecting the pools, Mayor Ivan Allen replied, "I am sure a satisfactory solution can be found."

Prior to June 1, 1962, Negroes could attend only one of the 25 better movie houses in the city, and that one only on a segregated basis. Negotiations initiated by the students early last fall culminated in an agreement to admit two Negroes a day to each of four downtown theaters for a control period extending from May 5 to June 1. Since that date all four theaters have been fully open to Negroes. The remaining art theaters, neighborhood movie houses, and drive-ins still await further negotiations as to the date of desegregation.

Desegregation of legitimate theaters began in 1960, with The Academy Theatre, a local drama group. The drama groups of Emory and Oglethorpe universities and Agnes Scott College were officially desegregated in December, 1961, and Georgia Tech followed with a similar announcement in the spring of 1962. The Metropolitan Opera played for the first time to a desegregated audience in May, 1962, following an announcement by its manager, Rudolph Bing, that the company would no longer appear before a segregated audience. A similar announcement has been made by Actors Equity. None of their traveling shows will appear before segregated audiences after this year.

A breakthrough in hotel desegregation has occurred. Negro ball players were housed recently in a previously all-white hotel, and Harry Belafonte's inter-racial troupe in an exclusive motel. But of the 125 hotels and motels in Atlanta, only the two Negro hotels will accept an individual Negro as an overnight guest. Negroes are accepted in private parties and at special banquets in three of the downtown hotels, but no American Negroes have knowingly been accepted as overnight guests. The same condition applies to the city's motels. Some Negro and white leaders made unsuccessful efforts to desegregate the motels and hotels during the NAACP convention which met in Atlanta in July.

Hospitals in Atlanta remain for the most part totally segregated. Grady Hospital, the largest public hospital in Atlanta, has been a persistent target for attack because of its discriminatory practices, first by Dr. R. H. Bell, and later by supporting organizations of students and other adult groups in the city. In response to these pressures the hospital has, within the last six months, added three Negro doctors to its visiting staff—but its facilities are still totally segregated.

More than half of Atlanta's school-age children are Negroes, yet:

Only 40 of its 113 elementary schools are for Negro children

Only 11 of its 22 senior high schools are available to Negro children, and these only on a token basis

The Negro Carver Vocational School compares poorly in course offerings with the all-white Smith-Hughes Vocational School.

School desegregation, beginning with the 12th grade, became effective through court order on August 30, 1961. Using criteria established by a court-approved pupil placement law, only 11 of 134 Negroes who applied for transfers in that year received approvals. One decided at the last moment to accept early entrance at a local Negro college and the remaining ten students were distributed among four previously all-white high schools. This past fall, four remaining Negro seniors were joined by 41 additional Negro students speard over seven more high schools. These 41 comprise about one-sixth of those 266 who applied for transfer from all-Negro to predominantly-white schools. Almost twice as many Negro students requested transfers for the present school year and the Board of Education has stated that the requirements would be less stringent and that many more Negro students would be permitted to attend desegregated schools. Nevertheless, the NAACP has already filed suit to eliminate pupil placement criteria applied solely to Negro students, and to integrate fully both schools and faculties in the Atlanta school system.

The social isolation of these students in their respective schools, the open hostility shown toward Negro students in at least two of the high schools last year, and the indifference of some teachers and principals to the taunts and barbs hurled at Negro students in the classroom, reportedly led one top administrator of the school system to observe, "They ought to have known what to expect." At least one gauge of the intensity of pressures placed upon the Negro transfer students is suggested in the voluntary request of the ablest Negro student to return to her former all-Negro school.

A tragic consequence of the continued segregation (or token desegregation — take your choice) of public schools in Atlanta is the extremely overcrowded conditions of the white schools. A survey of all high schools in Atlanta revealed that 12 of the 22 white schools could easily absorb the excess of 4,133 students in Negro schools if the high schools were fully desegregated across the board. Despite this obvious economic waste, Atlanta proposed a bond

---

JAMES A. MOSS, Assistant Professor of Sociology at Union from 1958 to 1962, spent the academic year '61-'62 in Atlanta, serving as research director for the Southern Regional Council, the first Negro to hold that post.

. . . and the lunch counters.

Wide World

issue of approximately $24,000,000 this fall to build 300 new classrooms where, at best, only 17 would be required if Atlanta's schools seriously desegregated. For a variety of reasons, of which the race issue was only one, the bond issue failed to pass when brought before the voters in August.

At the university level, Georgia State, ordered in January, 1959, to desegregate, in September quietly enrolled its first Negro student. Georgia Institute of Technology admitted three Negro students in 1961 and admitted three more in September, 1962.

Among the private colleges, Oglethorpe University and Agnes Scott College both indicated their intention to accept applications from Negro students. Emory University asked the courts for a ruling on whether it would jeopardize its tax exemption if it admits a Negro to its dental school in the fall of 1962. The Court ruled that Emory would not lose its tax exempt status if it desegregated, and the University has since enrolled two Negro nurses in its graduate school. The fact remains, however, that with the exception of Columbia Seminary (Presbyterian) none of the private colleges or universities in Atlanta has enrolled a single Negro as an undergraduate.

Communication between the faculty members of both white and Negro colleges is almost non-existent. A recent Southern Regional Council report on Atlanta states that "the faculties of the Atlanta University Center include individuals who have earned degrees and honors at some of the principal universities of the United States and Europe. Yet most of them seldom see their counterparts at Emory, Georgia State, Georgia Tech, Oglethorpe, and Agnes Scott – except at meetings of learned societies generally convening outside the South. Such exchange as there is, is likely to be one-sided. For example, a distinguished scholar, artist, or public figure who appears in the Atlanta University Center [a Negro institution] can be heard or seen relatively easily by faculty members and students from the white institutions of higher education in the area. Only on rare occasions do faculty members and students from the Center find themselves welcome at the white campuses."

The Atlanta Public Library, under pressure from Spelman College and the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations, desegregated its facilities in May, 1959. Its staff, however, is not yet integrated.

"On the classified ad page of a Sunday newspaper, jobs listed for whites cover more than five columns and include openings for engineers, salesmen, accountants, machinists, bookkeepers, and technical writers. In the same paper there is a total of six listings for Negro men, all as handy men, car washers, and porters." Thus a recent Southern Regional Council study on Negro employment in Atlanta succinctly sums up the position of the Negro in the Atlanta labor market. Whether one focuses on federal, city, county, or private employment, the picture is the same – a token number of Negroes employed in other than menial positions. Despite the presence of the largest university complex for Negroes in the world, these are some recent figures of Negro employment:

In private employment:

> There is a trend toward the employment of Negroes in stores which, while located in predominantly Negro areas, are owned by whites. At least five Negroes have been hired as clerks in stores serving both white and Negro patrons.
>
> At least five Negroes are working as cashiers in stores previously employing only whites in such capacities.
>
> A Negro has been promoted to manager of the meat department in a large supermarket.
>
> A large dairy has employed two Negroes as drivers and one as a route representative.
>
> An automobile assembly plant has upgraded two Negroes from sweepers to the assembly line.

In smaller numbers Negroes are moving into white collar jobs with federal agencies:

> A Negro woman was recently upgraded in the Federal Reserve Bank from maid to machine clerk.
>
> At least two Negro analysts, a secretary, and a mail clerk have been hired for the first time in the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Negro technicians have been added to the staff of the Federal Internal Revenue Service.

Eight Negroes are employed on the staff of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

But the salient conclusion which emerges from the Southern Regional Council report is that "there is a sizeable, underused, and untapped labor reserve within [Atlanta's] Negro population."

Almost uniformly, white churches in Atlanta have not welcomed Negroes into their congregations. Only the Unitarian Church and the Society of Friends have accepted Negroes into their memberships. Individual ministers have, for a long time, spoken out courageously in support of desegregation, most noticeably in the community preparation for public school desegregation.

What then is the sum total of Atlanta's desegregation? Not more than a handful of Negroes are exposed to the benefits of a desegregated society in Atlanta. This statement applies equally to travel, eating, play, cultural outlets, education, work, and worship.

Twin failures

If "tokenism" describes the number of Negroes accepted into previously all-white facilities and services, then it is equally true that tokenism also represents the efforts of individuals and groups to push aggressively for democratic gains. Only two all-white groups in Atlanta, the Anti-Defamation League and the American Jewish Committee, have been consistently concerned about and involved in social action programs in the field of race relations. Similarly, only two inter-racial groups, the Quakers and the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations, have a tradition of activity in this area. In the main, there is little face-to-face communication between the Negro and white groups in the city above the employer-employee level of relationship. Yet there is evidence that Negroes are becoming less and less "invisible men" to whites, and that whites are beginning to look into and at the faces of their Negro fellow citizens. This is a hopeful sign, for it is far more difficult to hate people we know than to hate an imaginary conception far removed from any concrete basis in reality. For many Southern whites, this total absence of knowledge about Negroes in the past may make the transitional period easier to handle. Whites want to endure the pain of change as slowly as possible, for their ego strength, such as it is, has been achieved at the expense of the damaged personalities of millions of Negroes upon whom their souls have fed; for many decent whites, better understanding of the Negro's situation could and probably would produce a crisis of conscience.

On the other hand, Negroes, so long the victims of humiliation and exploitation, bear the scars of these experiences and often inflict these same pressures upon more vulnerable members of their own group. The Negro elite has applied within the Negro community to a considerable extent the racial psychology of whites, that the struggle ought to be fought by and for the talented and materially wealthy segment of the colored population. A fragmented Negro group, frustrated in its effort to reach agreement on timing and strategy, leaves the selection of areas for pressure, and the methods for achieving change, to the chance of the moment. Negro leadership in Atlanta is almost totally devoid of vigor, imagination, and a sense of strategy equal to the opportunities that exist.

The alienation of Negro workers from Negro leaders is reflected in the areas of life selected for desegregation emphasis – the Metropolitan Opera, legitimate theater, golf courses, and the universities. Publicly-aided low-income housing, public schools, and employment—all areas affecting the Negro community regardless of class – have been the areas in which the status of the Negroes has been the least improved.

Thus, the timidity and fear on the part of whites, and class and color provincialism on the part of Negro leadership, serve as effective dampers upon the most successful and rapid changes in Atlanta race relations.

It seems clear that in the absence of legal, social, political or economic pressure, not even a city as racially enlightened as Atlanta is likely to assure constitutional rights and guarantees to her Negro citizens. Some form of pressure served as the lever which opened up every major facility I have discussed. But while some theaters, some restaurants and some churches are open to Negroes, Negroes are not welcomed in the majority of theaters, restaurants and churches in Atlanta. It appears that only in response to continuing pressure will these activities be fully open to all citizens.

A mayor of Atlanta has described the city as "too busy to hate." A related consideration serves as a conclusion to my year's stay in Atlanta. Is this city human enough, secure enough, bold enough to move from a mere absence of hate to an appreciation of the worth of the person and, indeed, to love? For desegregation involves a personal and human dimension. I was very moved by a television program I saw some months ago. The story revolved around an Indian chief, Standing Bear, and his struggle to obtain the privileges of protection under the 14th Amendment. During the course of the trial, Standing Bear is informed that if he succeeds in winning his claim to be considered as a person by the court, then he may no longer claim the full protection and privileges accorded to him as a tribal member on a reservation. For on the reservation only the tribe is viewed as a legal person, not the individual. He is confronted with this choice: To accept, and become a person with all the rights, responsibilities, and privileges associated with his status; or to return to the stability and security of the "status quo." After much deliberation, Standing Bear elects to give up the comfort and protection of the "old order" and takes on the full stature of a man.

The Negro male, so graphically portrayed by Lorraine Hansberry in her play, A Raisin in the Sun, was once a full-blown grape, but under the intense pressures of a dehumanizing society and culture, shrinks into a raisin. Negroes are now slowly regaining substance and form and I am sure for all of us there is no going back. Desegregation is inevitable and insistent. We can rewrite the old spiritual:

Desegregation is so high, you can't get over it
So deep, you can't get under it
So wide, you can't get around it
We've got to come through the open door.

INTERPOSITION AND NULLIFICATION

Muse, Virginia's Massive Resistance, Chapter 5, pgs. 19-25

Greenberg, Race Relations & American Law

Journal of Negro Education

Vol. XXV, No. 2, Spring, 1956--"Desegregation--the South's Newest Dilemma," John Hope Franklin
"Some Basic Issues in Desegregation," Robert C. Weaver
*"The Supreme Court Decision and Interposition," Herbert O. Reid

*Vol. XXV, No. 3, Summer, 1956--has chapter on each of the states involved in desegregation controversy; each state's reaction and methods of resistance.

Vol. XXVII, No. 2, Spring, 1959--"Virginia's 'Massive Resistance' Laws Declared Unconstitutional"

Vol. XXVIII, No. 4, Fall, 1959--"Integration's Delay and Frustration Tolerance," William H. Robinson

New South: June, 1956, "The Interposition Gambit," Arthur S. Miller
Feb., 1957, "Segregation Legislation in the South," Florence B. Irving
May, 1957, "The Attack on the Segregation Cases," Charles Fairman
Oct., 1957, ""South's Alternatives,"
Dec., 1957, "The Race Dilemma," Harry S. Ashmore
Nov., 1958, "Resistance Growing to School Closings"
"Virginia Parochial Schools"
Jan., 1959, "North Carolina at Crossroad," Malcolm Seawell
"Alabama Placement Law," Arthur E. Sutherland
March, 1959, "Desegregation or No Public Schools"
"Massive Resistance Reaches Dead End"
May, 1959, "South Increases Propaganda"

Fitzpatrick's pamphlet - Pol #36 Pamphlet File

Supreme Court's opinion second L R case
School Decay: the first 6 years
Lower Court's opinion in
New Orleans' case 1960
Orleans Parish School Bd. etc v. Bush
Race Relations Law Reporter Vol. 5, 1960

Clip file SSN - Sept 1961

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA 35401

File

Number 11 February 27, 1967

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Belt Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman. Four groups act as national sponsors. They are:

The Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of Churches of Christ.
The National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice.
The Synagogue Council of America.
The Unitarian-Universalist Association.

FR. BRICE JOYCE HAS LEFT ALABAMA as reported last month in the S.I.P. Newsletter. "Newsweek" magazine, Feb 20, 1967, devoted a page to this. Some readers did write letters of protest, I was notified of 12 that were sent. One member of the Freedom Quilting Bee who lives in Selma wrote to explain why she would not write a protest to Bishop Toolen. This good lady worked in the Movement with Fr. Oulette, the Selma priest who was removed because of his actions during the Selma crisis. "What can we do in a situation like this to help? I know we sent thousands of letters in behalf of Fr. Oulette, we never got an answer. Even so I pray for God to quide us and teach us to love one another as God has loved us."

* * * *

LEE KRASNER POLLOCK, wife of the late Jackson Pollock, came to the University of Alabama last week for the opening of the new art gallery which featured a one man showing of her work. Miss Krasner met with art students, visited classes, and was entertained by both town and gown. During all this she saw some color slides of the Freedom Quilting Bee quilts.

To our great pleasure and surprise Miss Krasner postponed her return to New York to spend a day visiting officers and members of the co-op in Gees Bend. Mrs. Witherspoon, president of the co-op, engineered our own show for Miss Krasner — around a hundrend quilts. Miss Krasner had some very generous comments to make on the work she saw. And she bought four quilts.

It was rewarding to my many prejudices about these skilled women to hear Miss Krasner and the co-op members talking the same language, seeing the same beauty and excitement, in those wonderful quilts.

* * * *

AS MOST OF YOU KNOW, I am an Episcopal priest under the canonical jurisdiction of the diocese of Newark, New Jersey. My job as the director of S.I.P. does not alter my relationship to the Episcopal Church as an ordained clergyman. I have a happy announcement to make: on January 26 I received a license to officiate as a priest in the Diocese of Alabama. Up until then Bishop Carpenter of Alabama had not issued me a license.

This meant that I was unable to celebrate the Eucharist, preach, or in any way function as a priest in Alabama. Why this was — well, that's water under the dam. The licensing was the result of a long and informative conference with Bishop Carpenter.

My first use of the license was to celebrate the Holy Eucharist Jan. 31st in the chapel of the University of Alabama. All of you associated with the Project were in my thoughts and prayers.

* * * *

THE FREEDOM QUILTING BEE will send two representatives plus myself to a conference of deep South low-income co-ops called by the Southern Regional Council. We have a southwide organization on our mind, and some foundation money.

The co-op is doing a new and we, we hope, profitable work. We are working on three orders for an interior decorator, who is certainly a good friend to the co-op. Approximately 115 square yards of quilted fabric is involved. For non-quilters we will say, That's a lot of threads! For the socially conscious we are happy to announce that the fabric will be sold in part to Mrs. William Paley and to Amanda Burden. The co-op is employing 19 people to do these jobs.

* * * *

ADULT EDUCATION PROGRAMS funded by OEO in Lowndes and Wilcox counties are in full operation. In churches and social halls groups of adults are learning reading and writing skills.

A couple of bare 100 watt bulbs hang over 30 or so folks; they sit in split oak chairs or on church benches around a wood stove. A teacher and her aides move quietly around the stove giving encouragement and instruction.

The night time classes run some places from 4 until 10 P.M. The land is being broken up now, the plowman leaves his plow at 4 to put in another five hours with his reader.

I haven't been able to attend all the board meetings of the two Anti-Poverty groups but I have made myself available to do what work I could.

* * * *

THE ANTI-POVERTY CO-ORDINATING COMMITTEE of Wilcox County took me up on that. Would I help arrange a meeting between a Washington OEO offical and local Wilcox folk black and white? I would. She wanted to explain that Wilcox can apply to be one of 30 counties sharing in a pilot public health program. The delicate part was that the local funded group was asked by Washington to set up a meeting with doctors and public health officials, county political leaders, and Negro leaders. At first it seemed as hard as getting Ho Chi Minh and Senator Russell together. The Probate Judge was suspicious: Maybe we could meet in the Court House but then what color was the OEO representative? Well, your honor I have never met the young lady — when they come from Washington you can't specify the color, we just take what we are sent. Says the Judge, You better ask the Federal Building if they can set up the meeting. (You see, whites won't meet with Negroes in Wilcox save in the Court House or Federal Building.)

But the story ends well — so far. After some initial hostility everyone settled down to contemplate the health services we could apply for. The County Medical Association (3 doctors) agreed to do a preliminary study and went a long way to show good faith. It was understood that "medical consumers" would have to be included on the board of the sponsoring organization.

We were all Southerners at the meeting — all polite. "Medical consumer" was a compromise phrase meaning "Negroes."

* * * *

ONE OF THE MEN I ADMIRE IN ALABAMA is the Rev'd Frank Smith of Lower Peach Tree. Rev'd Smith makes me want to laugh with joy at being alive and in the Kingdom of God whenever we meet. And usually we do laugh though Rev'd Smith has no job since he lost his teaching position for being in the Movement, his life has been threatened and his house shot at.

So what does this fool for Christ's sake do — my good friend. He tells me he has looked up the addresses of the denominational centers of the white churches represented in his county — even the Southern Baptists. He says he has written these church headquarters begging, as a brother in Christ, that they do something, anything, to encourage white Christians to join black Christians in the county in some slight communication or fellowship. My friend Rev'd Smith, either a fool or a saint, thinks that Christians working together could do something to eradicate the hatred that strangles the land like tangled vines. So far he has not received any replies. The thing preys on his mind, he mentions this inconceivable (to him) fracture often. The other day he sent me the following. It's an open letter.

"The Election is over now, and it is time for someone to speak out, against the evils of this day.

As I look from here, I see the image of the Negro, and the image of the White, need to be improved greatly. Most of the White persons that the Negroes come in contact with are salesmen, the others their bosses or landlords. The good morals of these white men may never be seen by Negroes. Many of them uses profanity to the extreme to tell filthy jokes. Most Negroes that the Whites come in contact with are the immoral, illiterate, or criminal. Therefore, the better class of these people, the Christians, seldom if ever have any communication. As a result, a wall of distrust, fear, injustice, suspicion, and hate has developed. To be sure, you will agree with me now, that it is time for some one to speak out against the evils of this day.

We have marched, black and white together, in many counties and large cities of this great Nation of ours. City, county, state, and national governments have passed laws. The sheriffs, marshals, and policemen have arrested men, women, girls, and boys have gone to jail, paid fines, and some have gone to their graves. The lawyers have written briefs and argued cases. The courts have ruled and handed down decisions from Justice of the Peace to the Supreme Courts of the States and Nation. The governors, local authorities and the President have used their police and executive powers, yet these conditions are still before us as an unpleasant pest.

It takes the Gospel of Christ to move these evils. I wonder where are the Christians? Why can't they speak out? Where are the Ministers? What do they tell their congregations? What do they tell the public? Can't some of these Christians, and Christian Ministers trust their God enough to speak out against these evils, or work against this evil situation in which we find ourselves?

The Rev'd Frank Smith
Route 1 Box 171
Lower Peach Tree, Ala.

The letter could be misunderstood unless its readers realize that he is describing things accurately in his own local situation.

In the land where Jim Crow was born the races do "normally" only touch in commerical, immoral, or violent acts.

* * * *

THE MOST IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENT THIS YEAR in the Black Belt is the formation of the Southwest Alabama Farmers' Cooperative Association. The Co-op will service ten counties.

One of the hard things for the white man in Alabama to grasp is that black people are now defining their own style of life: verbally politically, socially and morally.

The people have decided that they will no longer solve problems by flight. They'll stay on the land. The people have decided to press the power structure (e.g. the Dep't of Agriculture) to gain those benefits to which they are entilted. They will no longer beg or take scraps. They will press, demand — politely. Since the people will not flee they have produced fresh leaders. These leaders are interpreting the peoples' resolve to stay in the counties to mean that the people have got to make a living in the Black Belt by farming and other new means.

The most important thing is that the people are now beginning to live on the land on their own terms, not the white man's.

Mr. Charlie of the Black Belt defined life for Negroes for the last 50 years. His version was a sort of next-to-the-final solution approach: a final solution seasoned with southern-fried charm and christian charity.

He says, "Let 'em go North. The Yankees say they love 'em, so let the Yankees take care of 'em. Uh uhn, are you crazy? no more welfare, no federal housing, and God knows don't teach 'em how to grow truck crops. These things encourage 'em to stay. Believe me, our way is best.

It's the kindest solution. Wherever the Nigra is a majority you got disease and immorality. The solution is spread 'em over the country."

So we had the kick off meeting for this farming co-op in Selma. It represented the end of a great deal of labor and documention by many people; especially Shirley Mesher, one time S.C.L.C. worker now in Selma at her own expense; Albert Turner of S.C.L.C.; and Lewis Black with the Alabama Council of Human Relations. Farmers were there. The alphabet battalions were present in full dress. On the Federal side F.H.A., O.E.O. E.D.A., Extension Services, State Dep't of Ag. people. In the private sector C.C.A.P., S.R.C., A.C.H.R., S.I.P., S.C.L.C. and the Cooperative League of the U.S.A.

The problem was detailed, the facts showed a state of emergency for the little farmer this spring if he can not receive services that will help him grow and market vegetables.

Now I must say it. Perhaps I am too rash but I do believe the U.S. Dep't of Agriculture is knowingly part and parcel of this 50 year old white solution. Its Alabama agents are white men unable and unwilling to shed the mannerisms, rites, and effects of having always been able to define life for black folk.

Oh, to see those guys' faces during that meeting. They have to come, Washington is looking. They have to shake hands. They have to say "Mister". "But by God", you feel them thinking, "things aren't so bad yet in Washington that we have to do what these people want us to do."

For to do that would be to accept that Negroes in the Black Belt define life for themselves. That would mean a revolution, an overthrow of a successful agri-business operating on one of this nation's richest soils.

"Co-ops are for white people. Why it would overthrow a century of planning (and maybe cost us our jobs) for us to help niggers push the price of their peas up to $90.00 a ton."

This cultural shock shows in little things. Mr. Black presides. He is saying the farmers this, the people that. The State people get a little redder behind the ears. Because in the world they live in the words "farmer" and "people" have been reserved for the white man. "The colored", "darkies", at best "Negro farmers" have always identified black farmers. For them this is changing an immutable order of the universe. They are not reflective men. They just sense something is out of whack. It comes hard to use the new humiliating terms. They fidget and get a red neck. Poor federal officials.

The new co-op is not getting any real help from the Dep't of Agriculture. It got no encouragement at this meeting from the Federal group. It struggles along. It has no money, but farmers need loans to begin a new season. No farmer joinging the co-op stands much chance of keeping his credit with whites. Yet the co-op has no money to lend. Poor co-op. Its mistake, vis a vis foundations and gov't agencies, is that it is not studying something, it is doing some thing. The study was conducted months ago by poor people slogging around the wintry scene with scraps of mimeo paper, borrowing two bits for gas here and there. Vegetables were test grown last year in Dallas County on the peoples own time.

You know how it is: Millions for research, not one penny to change a way of life.

* * * *

YOU KNOW HOW IT FEELS when suddenly you are reading words written by someone else, somewhere else, that perfectly express what you're been saying or doing — a thing you just hadn't quite been able to put into words. Then bang! there it is. "By damn, some other folks feel the same way."

I just couldn't resist including an excerpt from a symposum of four eminent Roman Catholic women. The article is from Commonweal, volume 85, Number 16, Jan. 27, 1967

"The Woman Intellectual and the Church."

Aloysius: Institutions, I suppose, are not inclined to acknowledge, much less encourage, the disorderly and ambiguous... We live in a world of ambiguity, doubt and upheaval; our religious institutions seem centuries away... Congregations find themselves in a fix; we fear that we won't hold together under the stress of rapid and radical change, the sort that's needed; yet, as long as we maintain patterns high in detail and fixity, we encourage people to join us who need a haven (underlining mine), the very people who won't be able to function in the sort of world taking place under our eyes...

Ranbusch: Won't we see experimental communities emerging out of this?

Ruether: There is a kind of gathered church... idea emerging among Catholics. They want to break out of the parish and create some kind of gathered community. I know of one such group in Washington... They travel here and there for Mass. They are creating a covenant church...

Editor: Do you think there is a possibility... that somehow reform of the Church will solve the problem of unbelief?..

Rambusch: This presupposes that there are people willing to live in a state of suspended animation while this reformation occurs; this is precisely what many young people seem unwilling to do. They are not going to sit around to see whether reform in the Church will solve their problems about God.

Editor: Couldn't one say that part of the conflict between generations, or between those who have radical problems and those who don't, involves their respective willingness to play politics with problems. The radicals say "we are no longer going to play any institutional games," i.e., taking a careful, wary approach, with much thought given to tactics. The radicals seem to be saying that we have to lay all our cards on the table now.

Daly: The problem with the "institutional games" is that we are reaching the stage at which they are self-defeating. They exist partly because of the assumption that the Church always had all of the "immutable truth" and couldn't make a mistake, and they are played in order to save face when changes occur. But young people today couldn't care less about claims for immutable truth. They see value on the side of change and growth, and they admire a person who has the intellectual integrity to admit that he has made a mistake. Inevitably, they are beinning to see through the institutional games, and this means that the theologians are seen as lacking in intellectual honesty and integrity. The games may serve as a sort of emergency glue which gives an appearance of continuity with the past, but anyone can see the cracks.

Ruether: I think that is where the style of the radical Catholic and the Negroe radical are very similar. They are both fighting an entrenched institutional problem; and they've come to the end of their rope with politics. At the same time, they've become almost eschatological and apocalyptic...

Alpysius: a radicalism that won't play at all begins to look petulant, childish.

And yet the radical has a problem. What he wants to put inquestion is the system itself; to consent to play within the system is, in appearance anyway, to accept it and its rules. Now, I think it's true that a refusal to play the institutional game can have the effect of giving visibility to a radically different and better order of things — as, for example, in certain cases of non-violent resistance. So refusal is clearly not all of a piece. We need to distinguish a refusal which, though radical, is nonetheless affirmative from a refusal that is simple and only refusal. This latter is perhaps mere bad temper or, if "serious" enough, despair.

Rambusch: I think we will see more and more young people uninterested in intramural, institutional Church disputes. They will simply get out. More and more young women seem ready to opt out on the "role" problem. They will affirm themselves outside the old categories as best they can. In the process, they will fashion new categories, systematically rejecting the possibility of refashioning the abandoned ones.

Ruether: The only hope I see is for a real free church style that operates out beyond denominational categories and which tends to gather around areas of concern, and in that context to do various things. For example, some of us in Washington had a peace vigil at an Episcopal Church. There was tremendously good music and speeches, culminating in an agape concelebrated by Protesant, Episcopal and Catholic priests. This was a kind of free Eucharist in a community celebrating around a concern completely beyond interest in the traditional structures which supposedly divided them from living with each other. There is developing a church style which celebrates around a community of concern.

file

NEWSLETTER
~~SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT~~
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA 35401

Number 12 April 12, 1967

* * * * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Belt Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman. Four groups act as national sponsors. They are:

The Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of Churches of Christ.
The National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice.
The Synagogue Council of America.
The Unitarian-Universalist Association.

IT WAS EMBARRASSING TO ME LAST YEAR to beg for money when the Project was flat broke. That was in July and August 1966. How easily one becomes hardened to the realities of life; this year I have no shame at all in asking for money. The Project's bare budget is $15,750.00. Three of our major denominational members have contributed nothing as yet. Their support last year amounted to $8500.00. If it had not been for some wonderful unexpected contributions we'd already be broke. Our year runs from October '66 - September, '67.

Why is our member support seemingly so undependable? It's not really. Most "Race" divisions in denominations and in the National Council of Churches are financially independent of general budget. This keeps the reactionaries happy. But today support for these departments is extremely slim.

They have to beg and await gifts just as the Selma Inter-religious Project does. If S.I.P. receives a fairly generous response to this (now annual) appeal we may have money for some extra programs this summer. So please consider a contribution. Even a couple of bucks for the newsletter would help. Note the stamped addressed envelope and the form at the end of this Newsletter. Send it back whether you are able to give or not. Let us know whether or not you want to get the Newsletter this year. Mail costs are high.

THE U.S. CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION has appointed me a member of its Alabama Advisory Committee. Such Advisory Committees can investigate charges of civil rights violations and hold hearings. The Committee can also hold meetings in the state to explain or help implement civil rights legislation. It is one of Alabamas' constructive forces. I am honored to be a member.

THIS NEWSLETTER IS LATE because things have been jumping in Alabama. Three churches were burned in Lowndes County. One was the headquarters of the Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights anti-poverty organization. It was in the heart of Hayneville, belonged to a white man named Coleman (who denies any relationship to the killer of Jonathan Daniels). He received threats for allowing the use of his property. The Probate Judge of Lowndes has helped the OEO funded organization find the site; some of his cattle were poisoned.

The next church burned was a Negro church, then a white church in Benton. Why the white one? One possibility is that a Dr. Staggers who had been exploring the idea of a county health program, to be funded by OEO, was a prominent member of that church.

Our last Newsletter told of the offer of these programs to Lowndes and Wilcox by OEO. It could have brought up to a million and a half dollars of health services to Lowndes. It would have been the largest single "industry" in the county. Wilcox doctors and public health officials refused it. Two weeks ago the young white doctors in Lowndes who had been so enthusiastic about the program, who had spent many hours working on the application, informed Washington that Lowndes would not apply. He then told the Negroes on the committee that he had done this. We don't know what happened. But at this point we don't put all the blame on the white medical officals in Lowndes. Washington OEO did not seem to carry through with the vigor it has shown before. When things like this happen so tragically, quietly and suddenly one can only suspect some power way up the line made a move.

The director and board of the Lowndes anti-poverty program resolved immediately to relocate on the burned site. A trailer is there now. The white owner feels as strongly about this as we do. So we are there.

* * *

THE SOUTH-WEST ALABMA FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION was mentioned last month. It comprises 800 farmers in a ten county area trying to finance, raise and sell okra, cucumbers and peas. In January it applied to OEO for a $500,000.00 demonstration grant to finance a project it called the "Rural Readjustment Project." Basically this would educate folk to grow these crops efficiently. Things rocked along. The Dep't of Agriculture in Alabama was cool but it didn't deny the feasibility of the project. The Auburn and Tuskegee Extension staff approved it. Atlanta OEO recommended it. The dep't in Washington OEO that received the application is for it. The economic feasibility has been approved by the dep't of OEO that handles that research. It was about to be funded we thought. Then all hell broke loose.

Did you know that this co-op — S WAFCA - was under the direction of the French Communist Party? Ex-sheriff Jim Clarke, as reported in the Selma Times Journal, informed the Exchange Club of Selma that his diligent investigation had shown a direct connection between SWAFCA and the co-op program of the French Communist Party. Voila! He added that this same research had shown naturally that the long established co-ops for rich white farmers were as pure D American as one could want.

A delegation of about 10 mayors, probate judges and other Black Belt politicians headed by Mayor Joe Smitherman of Selma headed to Washington. This group and the entire Alabama congressional delegation including Senators Sparkman and Hill met with the Deputy Director of OEO, Bertrand Hardin. To be fair they didn't quote Sheriff Clarke, but they did claim the group was subversive, racist, and a cover for "Black Power" machinations. They claimed there was no need for the co-op. The Negroes in the ten counties were prosperous and had all the assistance they needed.

Yes Lord, the childrens' bellies are stuck out from being hungry. Yes Lord, one family made $22.84 off four acres of cotton. Yes Lord, one SWAFCA member killed rabbits last winter with a stick to give his eleven children a little meat, didn't have money for shells. Yes Lord, we're communists, don't you hear us speaking french? Yes Lord, we're subversive, vegetables are subversive Lord. Okra is a threat. Yes Lord, Whitfield Pickle Company done admitted it had to raise its cucumber price from 5 to 6 cents a pound 'cause of us. They signed with us Lord, then Mr. Whitfield took off with Mayor Smitherman to Washington to bust us up. My God in Heaven, Father, how blind can these folks be, why they want to starve us? Give us strength, Lord, we are co-oping now and ain't nobody gonna turn us round.

Why indeed this most powerful opposition? I quess three things. (1) It would be hard for the Alabama U.S. Dep't of Agriculture to see half a million being granted by OEO to provide services it has said are already available. There is feeling between the two groups whenever OEO steps into agriculture. (2) Mayor Smitherman and Judge Reynolds of Dallas County have a nice little CAP program in Selma. It has a few nice Negroes on it. It has a nice little program funded - ditch-digging. A direct grant to SWAFCA would not be under this CAP program. Alabama whites have automatically opposed any OEO program with a Negro majority controlling. This is a replay of the Lowndes and Wilcox opposition. (3) The Black Bolt has been for years moving away from cotton which once used many hands, into cattle and pine trees which use very, very few hands. Alabama has made no effort to retrain the vast numbers of Negro cotton farmers. All but 2 or 3 of the ten counties have Negro majorities. Many now vote. There is nothing for them to do. The traditional answer of the power structure is for them to leave for Detroit, Atlanta, New York and Chicago. A cucumber field looks harmless enough, but it is a very good cash crop and must be picked every day, Only many hands, cheap labor, can do it. If Negroes can command a market for truck vegetables they have the skill and the hands to make money and hold their families together on the farm. This is a treat to the likes of Smitherman. I think he wants a land rolling in pasture, forested with pulp wood, empty of Negroes.

Maybe he thinks like this. They did not work as slaves or sharecroppers or tenants, damn them. They wouldn't consent to our god-given right to dominate them. So now they must go. We love 'em but they must go because they have dared to adopt the one thing they can't expect to have if they want to stay around the Black Bolt — freedom.

I went to Washington last week with a delegation of eleven SWAFCA farmers to attempt to counteract this formidable opposition.

I also burned up a bit of S.I.P. money on the phone getting support from religious groups. They came through well. One man remarked that the structure was left over from the CDGM struggle in Mississippi to bring pressure again. We used it. A lady had just sent S.I.P. a most generous gift of $200.00. I turned it over to SWAFCA to finance our trip.

That delegation, especially the head of SWAFCA, Mr. Joe Johnson, deserves tremendous praise for a most skillful, diplomatic, and reasoned piece of defense. We met with the Deputy Director in a full scale conference. The farmers argued beautifully. We met with the OEO economists, they had no questions. Our third day in Washington we set out for Capitol Hill. We had no appointments. Mr. Johnson instructed us as to our tactics as we apporached each office. By the day's end we had had conferences with Senators Sparkman, Hill, Javits and Harrison Williams of New Jersey. This last being especially helpful. Sparkman and Hill were all innocence. Shucks, they had just sort of gone along with the Black Belt delegation over to O.E.O. But they listened to us. We also had conferences with aides of the Senators Kennedy and Senator Joseph Clark. Robert Kennedy got right on it and had a letter off to Shriver by that afternoon. All but Sparkman and Hill promised definite forms of support.

One OEO official told us SWAFCA's grant if approved would be the first major financial aid to low-income farmers since the 1930's. It has now become a major controversy in the ranks of OEO and the USDA. If it succeeds other low-income farmers in the South would clamor for help. This would upset the easing out of the poor from control of programs that has so skillfully been effected by the Southern and Republican congressional bloc.

I beg you, if you have not heard that this issue is settled, please wire Shriver immediately to fund SWAFCA. You have no idea the power telegrams have. We got that drummed into us in Washington. Especially telegrams from Alabama.

We left Monday for D.C., we got back Friday. Our friends said we produced one of the best defenses for a program they had seen. But no one would bet what Shriver would do.

* * *

THE FREEDOM QUILTING BEE held its first annual meeting of the full membership at the Pine Grove Church in Alberta April 15, 1967. About 60 persons attended. The officers were re-elected by a unanimous vote. The co-op reported a gross income of $10,158.00, direct payment to members of $8200.00. Two members made over $300.00 last year. The co-op has applied to the New York Foundation of New York City for a $10,000.00 grant to hire a manager for one year and build a small sewing center. We will know by the end of April if the grant will be given.

* * *

THE PENNSYLVANIS FEDERATION OF TEMPLE YOUTH adopted the Selma Inter-religious Project as its project last winter. When PAFTY does something it goes whole hog. They picked my brains clean, wrote every civil rights group they could find and produced a really amazing study guide for each of their Temple Chapters. April 8 the president, Steven Wodka, called me to report that PAFTY had raised $2500.00 for S.I.P. We need it. All the members of SIP join me in heart-felt thanks to a wonderful group. Would it be too much to say that the average Jewish young person in Pa. knows more about the Black Belt than Mayor Joe Smitherman?

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

NUMBER 14 July 14, 1967

* * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Belt Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman. Four groups act as national sponsors. They are:

The Department of Social Justice of the National Council of Churches of Christ.
The National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice.
The Synagogue Council of America.
The Unitarian-Universalist Association.

THIS IS A COPY OF THE "SOUTHERN COURIER" Alabama's race-relations newspaper. The Courier reports news of interest to Negroes, poor people and politicians. It also has a small following among Alabama whites who for obscure reasons have an interest in reality. The paper's address is:

The Southern Courier
Room 1012 Frank Leu Bldg.
79 Commerce Street
Montgomery, Alabama 36104

Yearly subscriptions are $3.50 in the South, $10.00 in the North.

* * *

THE PICTURE SECTION OF THE PAPER carries an account of our second Rural Life Workshop. The subject was "Negro Initiated Self Help Programs in Alabama." It went well; over 200 people attended the three day workshop.

I try so hard to keep this newsletter on a very impersonal objective level but I will unbend enough to say that in one of the pictures the dog is Rattler, pride of Mr. Eugene Witherspoon whose wife, also his pride and joy, is President of the Freedom Quilting Bee. The good looking lady in the same picture is Betty, pride of the fellow in the collar, which is me.

The House is the Witherspoon's. Mr. Witherspoon, his daughter Louise, and Mrs. Witherspoon's mother, Mrs. Abrahms can be seen on the porch in another picture.

* * *

AS HOPED AND EXPECTED Sargent Shriver over-ruled Gov. Lurleen Wallace's veto of the $400,000 demonstration grant to the Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative. The co-op will soon be funded. Never admitted by state newspapers, the co-op, legally chartered, has been operating for months. It has been grading and marketing cucumbers under almost insurmountable problems. No money, no trucks, no grading equipment. At this writing we are only allowed to say that the co-op is facing an organized drive to destroy it coming from the power structure. Pressure is being put on the few out of state buyers the co-op has been able to sign contracts with.

* * *

THE FREEDOM QUILTING BEE HAS A MANAGER. She is Miss Mary Brooks of Athens, Georgia. Miss Brooks is a graduate student in art at the University of Georgia. She begins work in August. The officers of the co-op were able to meet Miss Brooks a few weeks ago when she visited Wilcox County to be interviewed for the position. Very well satisfied with her background and abilities they asked her to be manager. After only 16 months in operation the co-op has a manager and looks forward to rapid growth and exciting new opportunities. We can only thank our supporters once again for their loyalty.

The Smithsonian Institution's "Folklife Festival" July 1-4 on the Capitol Mall in Washington was a swinging affair. I drove up four members of the Freedom Quilting Bee, 25 quilts, and a quilting frame. We became part of the festival joined by Eskimoes, Indians, hill people from Kentucky, North Carolina, and New York. We shared exhibit tents with potters, weavers, spinners, toy makers, wood carvers, basket makers, and blacksmiths.

* * *

SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION GUY KELLY OF WILCOX COUNTY has been on television. Mostly he is saying "No" and "that's untrue" and "I'm not sure". He doesn't look like he's enjoying it. What's it all about? Education in Wilcox County has been examined by a research team from the National Educational Association. The publicized report describes conditions so inadequate, so unjust, so neglected, so racist, so absolutely indefensible that even the "Birmingham News" has criticized Mr. Kelly. Apparently it would be hard to find another county in the good old U.S. any worse.

We understand that copies of this report may be obtained from

National Educational Association
1201-16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

According to the report Wilcox spent $286 per pupil in 1966-67. The state average is $390.00, the national average $564. The county provided .04 per cent of its total budget for education.

* * *

Do you want to understand the extent and seriousness of racism? Would you like to read of a blueprint to eradicate racism? A brilliant statement that has deeply influenced the leaders of the Negro revolution. Read

Black Faces - White Masks, by Frantz Fanon, Grove Press 1967, $5.00

The Wretched of the Earth, Frantz Fanon Grove Press, 1966, $5.00.

The latter is availabe in paperback. Fanon, a psychoanalyst, a Negro, raised in French Martinique joined the Algerian revolution on the rebel side. He died of cancer in 1961. His writings search out the springs of racism and urge a radical, violent solution to its curse.

* * *

"HUNGRY CHILDREN" A SPECIAL REPORT
by The Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
is also now available. It is a report on malnutrition and starvation among children in rural Mississippi. It was compiled by six distinquished physicians.

SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810 - 29th AVENUE
TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA 35401
(205) 758-2301

file

July 17, 1967

ES

TO: Members and Friends

FROM: Francis Walter

RE: May 24, 1967 meeting of the Selma Inter-religious Project's Steering Committee.

1. Present were: Rabbi Balfour Brickner, Miss Peggy Billings, Mr. James Clark, The Rev'd Charles Cobb and his associate, Mr. Mel Dubin, the Rev'd Quinland Gordon, The Rev'd Bruce Hanson, The Rev'd Homer Jack, Rabbi Henry Seigman, The Rev'd Francis Walter and Mrs. Walter.

2. One of the most important actions taken was to set aside September 23-24 1967 for representatives of groups supporting S.I.P. to meet in Alabama for an inspection tour. I hope many of you can make plans to attend. You will receive more information about this in a few days.

3. It was decided to change the structure of the Selma Inter-religious Project somewhat.
   The Steering Committee was made up of sponsors who represented four faiths: Jewish, Protestant, Unitarian and Roman Catholic. Other religious organizations that belonged were called members.
   The change was this: all groups that belong are members, all members belong to the Steering Committee.
   Perhaps it should be said again SIP is an informal committee with no legal status.
   Since members of S.I.P. and just friendly people attended Steering Committee meetingswith the sponsors anyway the change only regularizes the norm.
   Those of you who represent religious instilutions or commissions and have supported S.I.P. in the past will soon be receiving a letter from S.I.P.'s secretary and convener, the Rev'd Bruce Hanson of the Dep't of Social Justice of the N.C.C.C. You will be invited to become a member of the S.I.P. board.

4. A budget of $20,000.00 was adopted for the October 1967 - September 1968 year.
   Expenses for 1965-66 totaled $15,900.00. Expenses for this year (66-67) should be about $17,000.

The increase for 67-68 represents a salary increase for the Director of $2,000.00 beginning May, 1967 and a contigency fund to meet those emergencies and lobbying needs that have taken up so much of the S.I.P. work. A projected budget is enclosed.

5. By going around the table to receive promises of support for 1967 - 68 a total of $10,500.00 was pledged. The remaining $9,500.00 must be raised.

6. The Director is to explore the possibility of incorporating the S. I.P. in Alabama. There are advantages and disadvantages to this. After consultation with an Alabama lawyer and others he is to report his findings to the Board.

7. The possibility of various youth groups going to Alabama for workshops, work camps, or inspection tours was discussed. The Director would look forward to arranging such events with any group.

8. You will soon be receiving a request for selected mailing lists or individual addresses of persons who might be interested in receiving the SIP newsletter. The newsletter has become one of SIP's most effective services. I don't feel enough people related to you and your work are being given the opportunity to get it.
   We send a prospective reader a sample newsletter, a stamped envelope and a form in which one may indicate whether or no one wishes to receive the thing.

BUDGET FOR OCTOBER 1, 1967 TO SEPTEMBER 31, 1968

Director's Salary	$ 8000.00
Director's Housing	1800.00
Director's Church Pension Fund (approx.)	1300.00
Part-time Secretary's Salary	1800.00
Support and Development of Projects	2130.00
Travel	2000.00
Telephone	1500.00
Office Supplies	540.00
Postage	300.00
Office rent	300.00
Rental equipment	228.00
Utilities	102.00
	$20,000.00

COMMENT

The "Support and Development of Projects" includes:

a) SIP programs such as Rural Life Conferences, the Freedom Quilting Bee and inter-racial meetings.

b) Emergency aid to local Black Belt organizations that spring up to meet special needs.

c) Expenses involved in developing and promoting programs. For examples this year: SWAFCA, Self Help Housing, Food Stamp program.

It need hardly be said that the Selma Inter-religious Project is supported by voluntary contributions. Its program will be as big, small (or non-existent) as its income. If more than $20,000.00 comes in next year we will expand. We could use another man on our staff, we could mesh our organization in more efficiently with other organizations. There's no end to the needs.

But this budget of $20,000.00 represents a reasonable base from which, with no increase in staff, we can continue to represent your concern with Selma and Black Belt Alabama. Your committment began with the March. It goes on from there.

NOTE ON FREEDOM QUILTING BEE

As of August 1, 1967 the Freedom Quilting Bee co-operative will be much more independent of the Selma Inter-religious Project.

On that date a full time manager and part-time manager will assume their duties with the co-op in Wilcox County. Heretofore the Director of SIP had been acting as the co-op's book keeper and manager. The co-op has been taking about half his time. He will be free now to attend to other needs. The finances of the co-op are completely independent of SIP. The two manager's salaries will total $6,000.00 paid by a grant and gifts. The Bee grossed $10,000.00 last year. We aim to double that amount in sales this year. While the managers are in no way connected with SIP formally the Director will continue to serve the co-op as chairman of its Advisory Committee.

Agency file

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA 35401

NUMBER 15 September 19, 1967

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Belt Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman.

SINCE THE LAST NEWSLETTER in July I've been on vacation, the cities of the nation have tottered on the edge of civil war, our ugly war escalates, Mississippi Negroes vote and fail to win one single place. Yet things plod on seemingly unchanged in the Alabama Black Belt. One feels a paralyzing fatigue when faced with reporting and writing after this time of critical action. The trailing floods of analysis and comment explain nothing. So we won't comment. The responsible know the reasons anyway. They know, yet they do not know. The expression of the prophets says it truly "your hearts are hardened." And the victims? They care nothing for reasons, only relief.

* * *

"FREEMAN HEARS COMPLAINTS OF 300 NEGRO FARMERS IN ALABAMA." So read a June 29 New York Times headline this summer. It brought a flicker of pride to my breast, which subsided as I recalled the details. Much after June 29 the Secretary of Agriculture made some piddling changes in his food distribution program.

Now, according to reports, if your children are wasting away from malnutrition, and if you are lucky enough to live in a county that deigns to accept the program, and if you are among the poorest of the poor, and if you have the guts to face the powers to prove you are among the poorest, and if the powers agree that this is true, it is now possible to get your dole for much less money and in some few places for no money at all.

Some congressmen pointed out to the Secretary during hearings that it was possible for the Dep't of Agriculture to release massive aid to the hungry by departmental action comletely apart from the food distribution plan under question. I do not know if this is true. I expect it is.

To give birth to this little mouse, to offer this little gesture to the hungry, several thousand people had to go through a sort of ritual drama. The cast was large. The numerous scenes covered many states.

The production costs were high.

Sometimes the curious ask me what I do to occupy my time. Like most people, I'm an actor. Last June I had a small part in an all but forgotten drama entitled "Starving Negroes."

"Starving Negroes" opened in Mississippi. Local critics panned it. Reviewers of national stature recognized it for the name actors in the first act - a senate committee hearing starring Robert Kennedy, and Joseph Clark. The second act, bringing to the stage some medical doctors, failed to generate excitement. It had none of the glamour or visual appeal of the first act. The doctors found it hard to dramatize "borderline starvation". Modern audiences, conditioned to the swollen bellies of Asiatic infants, were unimpressed.

My part came in a minor scene of the third act. The third act was called "Secretary Freeman's Trip". The task of this act was to prepare the audience to believe, forgive, allow, or tolerate the finale: "Congressional Hearings and Action".

Our little walk-on looked big to us. but this is to forget the heroic proportions of the play. This is how our part went. A worker from another agency called me from Eutaw. The play called for Secretary Freeman to stop at a small center in Eutaw and make a short speech. But everyone was re-writing. Originally the cast of act III was mostly black, but Southern congressman had demanded a change to mostly white. Would the Eutaw scene be cut? Then too there was a small struggle in Eutaw between leaders as to how the scene was to be played: a monologue by Freeman or a chorus of poor farmers? some of both? how much of each? This was a struggle between friends. The leaders in Eutaw would gather the chorus from over the countryside, no easy job.

Would I get religious groups, liberals, and maybe a few white folk in Alabama to send wires to the Secretary to urge that this scene be played? I agreed. Lobbying. We had one day, the Secretary was to spend the night here in Tuscaloosa, so the address was easy. I got a few telegrams promised, the usual ones. Even got two from Alabama. One refused from Alabama too. That took some time on the phone. Then I called a leader in another county. He promised a lot of farmers, poor and ready to talk.

Now for a refinement. Not that I was directly responsible, but I had encouraged a magazine reporter to be in Eutaw. The set worked in our favor too. It is impossible to get through Eutaw without passing the meeting place. It would not be right to threaten that farmers would fan out across the road if the caravan didn't plan to stop. But what if this possibility had not c occured to a Freeman staffer? Some one in the party should be reminded of this, should be told in passing that a reporter would be there, should realize how the highway made a confrontation necessary. I had heard of a person in the Department who had deep concern for rural Negro farmers. Perhaps he'd be in the tour and at the hotel. So at 7:30 the next morning I called him. I got him! Sleepy but very friendly sounding. I asked if he knew about the Eutaw meeting. "Do we know!" I begged that theystop and got across the other stuff too. He would convey all this to the Secretary. But as of 7:30 AM it had not yet been decided if he would stop. I didn't go to Eutaw myself. Later that day I heard he stopped. Newsweek carried a story on rural poverty. The New York Times did its story. The Eutaw stop was only one of many encounters with Negro farmers on the tour.

Did the petitioners expect a great deal? They received little. They gave much, all that they had: faith in the constitution and the republic.

I am not scandalized by the large amount of social energy, showmanship, shennanigins, and subtle threat that both the government and the people must use to effect change. People who want things from the state must be prepared to suffer. These tactics simply must be accepted. The needy never question the necessity Only the liberals and professionals get shocked.

But when a real play doesn't produce real money for its backers it folds. Not so a political drama. This one, as I see it, didn't pay. But it ran anyway by virtue of two subsidies: the desperation of the poor and the ulterior needs of the government. It was a trick. It looked like it paid but it didn't. Funny money for the liberals, reassurance for those who would not vote for a government that would let folks starve.

Petition and redress, a constitutional mechanism. What if the mechanism doesn't work? There are those who belive there is nothing in this nation to redress. There are those who who believe that there are some things a little wrong but if petitioning will only be proper and polite redress will follow. Then there are those, mostly black, poor and experienced in petitioning, who now believe there are many things wrong for which there is to be no redress.

These were known as leaders. They are leaders no more, the ground is cut from beneath them by the erosion of this system which no longer works. It costs to lead. It costs to organize. There is a price, related to expectations and small returns beyond which the leaders of victims can not go. That price has been reached.

The nation pauses now. It is the moment during which cries of petition sink to a sullen silence. It is still possible in this moment for the necessary things to be done, even so late, for those who will no longer ask. But if that does not happen a dissolution or reordering will begin.

* * *

THE FREEDOM QUILTING BEE is exhibiting a selection of quilts at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington D.C. through October. This is part of an exhibit prepared by the Dep't of Agriculture for its "Co-op Month."

Business relating to the co-op need no longer come to the Project office in Tuscaloosa. In August Miss Mary Brooks and Mrs. Eugene Witherspoon began work as managers. The co-op address is now:

Miss Mary Brooks
c/o Mrs. Eugene Witherspoon
Route 1 Box 72
Alberta, Alabama 36720

Because of an improvement in quality control and because of our general enthusiasm, the co-op has raised its prices slightly. Quilts are now:

Single	66X86	inches	$25.00
Double	76X86	inches	$30.00
Double(coverlet size)	80X106	inches	$35.00
King size(you send size)			$50.00

The co-op will also remake old quilts and handle special orders in which you specify size, design, and color. Cotton picking and fall work in the fields will soon be over. Quilt-making will commence in earnest in time for Christmas sales.

* * *

THIS SUMMER MY WIFE AND I VISITED NEW ORLEANS. I had been invited to observe a program called "Rural Youth Urban Orientation." The U.S. Dep't of Labor paid for it, the sociology dep't of Xavier University sponsored it. My part was to select 10 young people from Alabama and to evaluate and follow up what developed after the young people returned to Lowndes and Wilcox counties to begin their last year of high school. Thirty young people made up the program. The venture was successful in every way. These people are among the best informed in their situation. They know the urban life now and may make intelligent decisions about their future be it urban or rural.

While we were there it looked as if the kids were going to produce most if not all of "West Side Story" by the end of the summer. They still had to find time for a trip to the Ecumenical Institute in Chicago. There they would undergo an intensive conference, akin to group dynamics, designed especially to give Negro youth a look at new self images more truthful and healthy (possibly) than old ones. God willing, the Selma Inter-religious Project is going to find the money to bring the Alabama kids back together this winter for a weekend where they can evaluate and rehash their summer. This experimental venture by the Dep't of Labor was significant. The results could be used to produce better, more efficient, and much bigger versions. Of course the question is, always is, will it?

* * *

IN A FEW WEEKS SELF-HELP HOUSING, INC. will start production on more than its goal of 20 low income homes. We foresee new programs in Wilcox County. We're certainly trying.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1967 will mark the close of two years' operation of the Selm Inter-religious Project. It has been a gratifying two years for me.

* * *

Across the Black Belt, and in our neighbor Southern states are literally hundreds of small groups and corporations initiated, controlled and operated by Black people. In most cases these groups use or include persons, white and black, as technicians and consultants. These are second generation "outsiders". By and large this blending has been harmonious . We are all learning what we can and can't do, where we need help and where we don't, when to talk, when to let others talk.

These structures are led by local leaders born out of the Civil Rights Movement. These people are the wonder of the South. Perhaps they are the South's first generation of political leaders since the Civil War who truly understand the social structures (and the passions which uphold them) that make us what we are. Our white leaders could perpetuate the system and mystify it but not know what it was and what it did. That is why "Tell it like it is" is a cry of liberation. These men hold but a fragment of power, the hold is fragile. Whether this scene, of which I am a part, is the beginning of something workable or but the provincial survival of a dead cause is impossible to judge. But to those who have helped the Project be a part of it I am grateful.

TO: KEY PERSONS.

FROM: FRANCIS WALTER

RE: SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT MEMBERS TOUR SEPT. 23-24, 1967

You may already have indicated that you will be unable to attend the Sept. 23-24 tour. If this is so you are receiving this for your information and with the hope you may be able to send someone in your place.

I will be in Selma all day Friday Sept 22nd. I can be reached at the office of the Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative. It is at Mr. Calvin Osborne's gin in the 300 block of Jeff Davis Avenue. The telephone number is (205) 872-1242. If you are flying let me know your arrival time and you'll be picked up at the Montgomery airport. SIP Tuscaloosa numbers are 758-2301 and 553-6651.

A TENTATIVE SCHEDULE

Friday September 22

9 PM Informal meeting with members of the Dallas County Independent Free Voters Organization for those arriving early. Those arriving Friday evening will make their own arrangements to stay at the Holiday Inn or with friends.

Saturday September 23

9 AM Field trip with the Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative.

2 PM Meeting with S.W.A.F.C.A. officers and other groups.

5 PM Leave for Wilcox County.

7 PM Evening meal and visit with the Freedom Quilting Bee at Gee's Bend. Spend night in Gee's Bend.

Sunday September 24

Visit building sites and meet participating families of Southwest Alabama Self Help Housing, Inc. Visit Millers Ferry headquarters of the Wilcox County S.C.L.C. anti-poverty project.

If time allows a visit will be made in Hayneville of the Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights office.

At 5:30 PM and 8:45 PM flights leave Montgomery airport for Atlanta. New York connections for these flights leave Atlanta at 8:10, 8:20 and 9:10 P.M.

Please comment on this schedule. It can be adjusted.

Monday September 25

Any who can stay over are invited to Tuscaloosa Sunday night. After a visit there you can easily make a 1:50 PM direct flight from Birmingham to New York, arriving at JFK 6:00 P.M.

FLIGHT SCHEDULE - - - NEW YORK TO MONTGOMERY

FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 22

New York		Montgomery
3:00 PM	La. G.	7:12 PM
3:10 PM	JFK	6:15 PM
4:10 PM	Newark	7:12 PM
4:25 PM	La. G.	8:12 PM
5:00 PM	Newark	8:12 PM
5:10 PM	JFK	8:12 PM
5:20 PM	JFK	8:12 PM

SATURDAY SEPTEMBER 23

New York		Montgomery
6:35 AM	JFK	10:27 AM
7:00 AM	Newark	10:27 AM

If one is in Atlanta before 9:40 AM a connection may be made with a 10:35 flight to New York.

SUNDAY SPETEMBER 24

Montgomery	Atlanta
5:30 PM	8:10(leave for New York)
8:45 PM	8:20(same)

MONDAY SEPTEMBER 25

Birmingham	New York
12:40 PM	5:05 PM Newark
	5:21 PM JFK
	6:35 PM JFK
1:50 PM .....DIRECT.....	6:00 PM JFK

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

NUMBER 15 October 24, 1967

* * * * * * * * * *

October 1967 marks the beginning of the third year of the Selma Inter-religious Project. Listed below are the members of the Project. SIP is about as unofficial as can be. Any religious group may belong. Belonging means money, being at board meetings, cooperation with the work. Some give sizable amounts to the budget, some a little. It is a monstrously wordy list. I would despair of religion being organized except that it is not these titles for whom I care and who care for me. It's Peggy, Bal, Charles, Homer, Bruce, Henry, Quin, Gay, Grover, Kim, Ralph, Jack and Jim.

Executive Council of the Episcopal Church, Division of Christian Citizenship (Church and Race Fund Allocations Committee).

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity.

Board of Missions of the Methodist Church, Women's Division, Section of Christian Social Relations.

General Board of Christian Social Concerns of the Methodist Church, Division of Human Relations and Economic Affairs.

The National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice, Southern Field Service.

The National Council of Churches of Christ, Department of Social Justice.

The Synagogue Council of America

Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Commission on Inter-faith Activities

The Unitarian Universalist Association, Department of Social Responsibity

The United Church of Christ, Committee for Racial Justice Now

The United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., Commission on Religion and Race

A denomination which prefers to remain anonymous.

I WENT TO WASHINGTON this month with Joe Johnson, president of the Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative Association. We met another SWAFCA volunteer there. We did a little visiting around.

Problems of censorship arise from my being both agent and reporter. I can't say now who we saw. That happens a lot. Since 75% of all the schemes and deals I am in on flunk, I also find myself not reporting my activities because they didn't work out. No wonder people ask what I do for a living.

SWAFCA is raising a winter crop of turnips, collards and mustard greens. Mr. Johnson and I traveled by bus so we had time to talk about okra, greens and such like. I don't think Mr. Johnson would mind my repeating this.

"What about other crops that usually aren't grown down here?" I asked. "Well, we got an offer of a contract like that from a man in New York. He was so eager he wanted to fly the seeds down here himself. But I don't know exactly how to say it -bross... brock..." said Mr. Johnson. "You must mean broccoli." "I guess so." Then I messed up by saying, "Yeah, it's that white vegetable, like calves brains in the middle of a head of cabbage." "Oh, is that so?" said Mr. Johnson being polite. "I've never seen any." Then I said "No, no I'm wrong; that white stuff is cauliflower; broccoli are those little- bitty cabbage-like heads; no that's Brussels Sprouts." I gave up. "I don't know any of those, never saw any that I know of. But our specialists tell us that broccoli will grow in Alabama so we'll grow some this spring."

This proves:
a) Southerners don't eat many Yankee vegetables.
b) Poor people never eat any.
c) Nobody gives a damn about raising anything in Alabama except cows, cotton, pine trees, and the income of large land owners.

* * *

WE ALSO VISITED a famous and very kindly economist in Washington. We were in awe of him at first. Mr. Johnson and the SWAFCA advisor talked problems, got offers of help. Mr. Johnson asked for advice of one sort or another like: Are there any government agencies or commissions we have left untapped? The man began to list agencies. How pleasing to hear him in the most ordinary voice dismiss one arm of government after another. "____ is impossible. The only man in ___ is my friend ____ and he is immobilized. SWAFCA is new and innovative so it's threatening. So don't waste time with ___ or ___." Once he said, "___ is hopeless and I should know, I wrote the legislation that created them."

This was a piece of magic, one of those bridges truth can build between men. We relaxed. A Negro Alabama dirt farmer and a Washing economist, looking at each other smiling, appreciating the shared truth that for a second anyway made them one.

How far one has to travel from Alabama, how few can make the journey, to such a communion. What an expanse of Yahoos, phonies, time servers, cowards, and mindless functionaries had separated those two from that moment-so slight but so important.

A memo to all institutional functionaries: when your clients are seated before you, share thirty seconds with them about the rot in your organization. And relax, they know about it anyway. It will make humans of you both, generate bonds, smiles, make you want to go out together for a beer. Of course you may not want that nice, warm(dangerous) feeling.

* * *

WE WENT BY OEO too. You get that good old feeling there. At least in the Migrant Division, and in the one that is funding SWAFCA. Not to knock the other offices. I just don't know the others as well. A few beards around. Guys in wrinkled shirts. Lots of wandering around, like pacing- a good sign. You feel like you can plop down at any emptydesk, relax and use the phone. People smile. Somebody wants to know if you have a place to sleep tonight. A minor chief dashes by, "Look at you, great to see you, God the country's moving to the Right!" He's gone. You wanted to say, "You just finding that out?" but you realize he means lately, maybe as of Tuesday; after all it's his office, among others, Congress is after. Tension is in the air. You sense these nuts believe they can really change things, if they try very hard. A kind of Americanism I can buy.

After 6, after 7, after 8, they're still around working, dodging the cleaning people. Wives come by. Are they all pregnant? They sit, listen to their husbands. Kids chew on somebody's memo pad. "Ah, ah, don't eat that."

Very homey. Is it the last outpost of the Kennedy style, hidden, compressed into two offices? You hope not. How important is style. Would you call it soul? Doesn't it make the difference between love and business?

* * *

YET STYLES can only work their magic on your vital juices after deeper things are settled. Those who meet must be secure in something so that they don't threaten one another with destruction. That security can be in God, Jesus, a great mission, or faith in one's freedom and worth. You can't have soul/style with fear, indeed perfect soul casts out fear. Much dry, office type treatment, routine treatment by efficient, cool do-it-by-the-book types is really a projection of fear.

Sen. Lister Hill had style too when I heard him talk with Negro constituents. Lots of Southern talk: "Ha, ha, yes sir, good to see you; collard greens, fat back; you from there, my goodness, my uncle had a place..." Poor old style. Maybe it worked once but it can't bury the unanswered questions, the nest of loyalties and enmities; the old ways unmentioned, not apologized for, not accounted for; the fear.

* * *

THESE NEXT NOTICES ARE ESPECIALLY FOR ALABAMA FOLK.

* * *

WE WANT TO MAKE A CATALOGUE for people in Alabama listing all Alabama city and county Civil Rights groups, community organizations, credit unions, co-ops, and OEO organizations. The book would also list the addresses of the national Civil Rights groups, how to write your congressman, and the names of people known to us in federal agencies who will give a fair shake.

We will send you a copy as soon as it's finished. But we can't make a complete book unless we have the information from you. You may have already gotten a paper from us to fill out. If so please return it. If you haven't and you know of some group that maybe we have missed please write us and we will send you a paper to fill out. Please help us make this a full, complete catalogue that will list your organization.

* * *

HERE ARE TWO CHANCES TO SEND SOMEONE FOR TRAINING in community organization.

The first is run by Penn Community Services in Frogmore, S.C. You may remember Penn ran the voter education classes for SCLC up in Frogmore. Penn Services is sending around notices which say:

ARE YOU A PERSON WHO WOULD LIKE TO BECOME MORE SKILLED IN HELPING YOUR COMMUNITY TO BE A BETTER PLACE TO LIVE?

This is no two bit program. The course lasts up to four months, trainees are paid from $80 to $280.00 a month.depending on their needs. Only a very few from Alabama will be selected, but what a chance to help your community.

The only qualifications are (1) be at least 18 years old, (2) be able to read and write, (3) be already working to improve you community. If interested in more information write us or

Training Program
Penn Community Services, Inc.
Frogmore, S.C. 29920

The other program would train you in the same direction-making your community a better place to live. But it will be for only a few weeks. It will be for a group of Alabama folk who would go to the Upland Institute in Chester, Pa. It will probably be held before spring planting in slack time. It will be organized by the Selma Interreligious Project. Please write, you might be able to help your people so much.

* * *

SOME PEOPLE THOUGHT I WAS BITTER or depressed last month when I wrote about our efforts in Alabama to influence Orville Freeman to feed the hungry. A few readers, bless their souls, wrote letters to cheer me up. I appreciated them but I really wasn't depressed, just trying to tell the truth about my part of the world. I'm happy. I believe the day of the Lord is coming, has come, is here now. Those that have eyes to see it, let them see. The United States Gove't,even starvation,can't rob us of the joy that passes human understanding.

Besides, after that newsletter things began to look up a little Why Congress is still debating whether to feed the starving with some crash program. So there's hope yet.

* * *

NOVEMBER 14, 15, THE PROJECT WILL CONDUCT A TOUR through Dallas and Wilcox Counties. It will consist of a small group of white Alabama clergymen who are open and interested enough to come along. Any one may join us. It will be an overall look at SWAFCA, the quilt co-op, Gees Bend, Self-help Housing and the Wilcox anti-poverty program. If you want to come, write.

* * *

THE ALABAMA ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO THE U.S. CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION met in closed session in Birmingham Oct. 19. We adopted the project of examining employment and job training opportunities in Alabama. The Committee will examine the programs to see if they are administered in a non-discriminatory way and also see if they are reaching the people who need them most.

* * *

IF YOU BELONG TO A CO-OP IN ALABAMA or are hoping to start one you need to know

The Rev'd A.J. McKnight
Southern Cooperative Development
P.O. Box 3005/ Lafayette, La 70501

If they know who you are they can help you. Write them for your co-op.

file

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Number 17 November 30, 1967

* * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Belt Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman.

TWELVE PERSONS attended the Clergy Tour of Dallas and Wilcox Counties we conducted Nov. 14, 15. We had Methodists, a Baptist, Episcopalians, and a Roman Catholic. The people came from Tuscaloosa, Mobile, Birmingham, Thomasville, Selma and Livingston. The best part was the arguments we had. In a corn field in Yellow Bluff one minister said to a very gentlemanly Negro Civil Rights leader. "Have you met the(white) _____ preacher in your town, he's been there a year." "No, I haven't." "You should look him up," said the clergyman, "he's a lot different from the last man." "No," I said." The minister should look up Mr. _____."

"Now that's what I don't like, Francis!" said the guy who always waded into the thick of things. "You're promoting racism in reverse"

What a healing, healthy fuss followed. All the elements were there. But from this struggle in the corn field the black civil rights leader withdrew. This was the white man's hang up.

* * *

BOB ZELLNER IS A LEGEND IN ALABAMA. Now he's back among us. Bob, the son of a white Alabama Methodist preacher, has been beat up and jailed in Alabama more times than maybe even he knows. He was an early SNCC member. A year ago we heard rumours from Cambridge, Massachussetts (that source of many vague reports) that he would be back in Alabama soon working among the poor white population. Trying out that old dream, that suppressed historic fact, of the poor, white and black, working together on common problems. He is back but not just in Alabama, his area is the deep South. Here is his address

Bob Zellner
Grass Roots Organizational Work
3620 Coliseum Street
New Orleans, La.

Right now he is connected with a group of poor people in New Orleans who have begun a furniture manufacturing venture. But he is scouting all over the South for poor and working class white people who want to know how to get organized. This makes for the healthy kind of intergration; white people asking Negroes and their Movement for help and the benefits of experience.

* * *

WHY TALK OF EZEKIEL SOLOMON OF SAFFORD, ALA? Don't we know his story, or is it that we do not begin to know his story? He's a black man, family man, good man, running a grocery store, a farm, his own life. He is brave, he votes, he dared to run for ASCS, he belongs to SWAFCA. He has a chance.

A sign in his grocery says "Do not blaspheme in this store." Then what happened? The Hosmer boys are white, live down the road. The Hosmer boys are poor too, on their backs is the same load that's on Solomon's back, only they don't know it. People like the Hosmer boys we say, They're right out of a Faulkner novel. If only they were, only out of a book, but they live just down Dallas Co. Number 1 from Solomon.

Some sort of scuffle erupted in the store, not the Hosmer boys first. Since they just naturally get in trouble, drink and blaspheme all the time around whites too it was not "a racial incident." They came back later to murder Solomon, it is said. He shot back after his store was riddled.

Somehow it was Solomon who was indicted, who had to make bond, who had to beg the sheriff to come out to the store and see the Hosmer bullets on the floor. Yet Solomon didn't stop there, he swore out a warrant. The Hosmer boys and Solomon are all out on bail. The Hosmer boys are loose and mad. Solomon asked for police protection, didn't get it.

The old Negro truth and fear has realized itself in Solomon these last days. He has shot a white man. He absolutely must have the protection of the law. He is bitter because the sheriff seemed indifferent, because he can't get a pistol permit, because his children are in danger. So he talks of selling his store and moving away from the country, far off somewhere where a man can get protection under the law,

* * *

SOME OF OUR READERS are both generous and wealthy. The time for the Selma Inter-religious Project to do its once a year begging is not yet. But for those who benefit by making contributions in this tax year we can only say, don't let our reticence stop you if you want to give us something before 1968.

Tax deductible checks are made payable to "Selma Inter-religious Project c/o The Episcopal Society."

* * *

WANT TO DO SOME READING about efforts to organize poor rural farmers from the 1930's to the 1960's? Write us for a free copy of "Sorrow Song in Black and White" by Vera Rony. This is a reprint from New South, Summer 1967. It's all about the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, Rexford Tugwell, Mr. Mitchell of Tyronza, Arkansas, CIO, Will Alexander, Norman Thomas, and Communists in the South. On it goes right up to 1967, Cesar Chavez, hints of SWAFCA, and a monotonous parade of hungry children, black and white, and a countryside drained of its people from 1930 to 1967. It sure helps you connect with what's gone before. It is beautifully written.

Or you can read about the same thing only a little less words and more general. Write us for "Farm Labor Organizing 1905-1967" by the Nat'l Advisory Committee on Farm Labor.

And if you're a white Southern liberal but are wandering around a bit now-a-days trying to fit in you could read:

Seeds of Southern Change, Dykeman and Stokely, Univesity of Chicago Press, 1962, $5.95.

It's the life of Will Alexander, 1884-1956, the Methodist preacher who founded the organization that became the Southern Regional Council, who fought the Klan, who headed the New Deal's Farm Security Administration, who saved Gees Bend in 1933, (a whole chapter on Gees Bend). For me it was passing strange to read. I was tormented and relieved at the same time to read of a man who went through my own personal agonies of the early 1960's way back in 1915. Lord, we never learn! But then it's nice for us white Southern liberals to know we're part of a Movement too, and not isolated freaks.

Non-bigots of Dixie wake up! the past of your race has also been submerged and censored by the Yahoos.

This next book would make a good Christmas present.

The Jon Daniels Story, With His Letters and Papers, Edited by William J. Schneider, Seabury Press, 1967, $1.95

The Seabury Press
815 Second Avenue
New York, New York 10017

My return to Alabama began in August 1965. "Go to Selma" I was told. "Meet the Episcopal seminarian, Jon Daniels, he'll introduce you around. Ask questions and look, see if the people want a continued ministry representing the religious groups. See if you think you are the man to do it."

Jon was in jail in Hayneville when I got there. With him were Stokely, Fr. James Morrisroe and several others. We went to the Hayneville jail on a Wednesday. The jailor was quivering with tension. He dropped his cigarette from a trembling hand as he talked. We stood in a narrow passageway in front of the cells. This aisle was scattered over with crusts of corn bread, moldy black-eyed peas, fat back and wax paper. The jailor refused to remove this or the filth from the choked toilets. I talked with Jonathan and others for maybe 20 minutes. It was little but joking and newsy gossip. I had not met him before. The fact that it was one of those bail-for-everyone-or-nobody things was established even before we got there and confirmed in a word or two. Yet Fr. Stines, who took me out there with him, had the bail money for Jon. It was, of course, the proper thing to do.

Thursday we did not go out, we felt our presence made a tense situation even mor dangerous. Friday he was murdered and Morrisroe crippled for life. And Stokely, whose body survived that and other degradations, suffered too.

Why did Jon do it? It was to answer this for me and others that Fr. Schneider, the Episcopal Chaplain at Harvard, wrote the book.

* * *

I'VE BEEN DOING OFFICE WORK, producing our 1966-67 financial report, writing the groups that compose SIP to get promises of when and how much support for the October 67-September 68 year. There was a commentary on budget and program for the new year by the director. Part of it is reproduced below. Just thoughts on the Selma Project and the world it lives in. By the way, one life style to cherish most is public openness, no closed meetings, no buried reports. So if anyone wants to know how much my salary is, how much the Project took in and spent, and stuff like that please write us for a full report.

* * *

COMMENTS ON PROGRAM 1967-68

The situation in Alabama has gelled. Enduring, representative grass roots community improvement organizations dominate the area in which SIP serves. These groups grapple with economic, educational, political, and cultural problems in about that order. Providing services for these groups is now the primary function of the Selma Inter-religious Project.

How does the Director characterize the Project? Please note none of these listed factors are looked upon as necessarily wrong or needing change.

SIP is

- white
- non-grass roots
- liason with national church headquarters
- boundry located, where white and black touch and interact
- information/resource oriented
- pastoral

- favorable to inter-racial contacts to accomplish tasks but won't waste time getting people together to drink tea.
- servicing the needs of black people in the Black Belt first. Mission is not to the white churches, though this has its place.
- pragmatic in association; working with folks who accept us and keep faith with us, but not trying at all to keep up with groups that don't care to work with us. In this we are un-pastoral, I guess. Pastors have to keep up appearances with everyone in the flock.
- a consultation service
- interested in religious life in Alabama, hopes to cooperate with it.
- tour guide office for Yankee liberals making the Alabama scene
- public relations firm
- a lobby
- not separatist
- committed to achieving power for black people
- preaching that Alabama black people should put the integrity and power needs of their groups first before trying to wring gains and just services from the white power structure
- not revolutionary*
- a little square

* This simply means that so far our program works first to improve the system radically, rather than working and planning to destroy it. What we do and what we worry about may differ. A lot of guys think they are revolutionaries.

I have strong feelings and tenative beliefs that SIP is a consulation type operation that couldn't morally justify great growth. Suppose someone gave us $50,000 a year for three years. The way I feel now I wouldn't want to expand staff and program a great deal. How can we do that when I know that one of the most effective Negro leaders in Alabama, in a critical position, operates full time on $22.00 a week? We should give the money to his group so they can support him.

We have helped generate money and program for others, that is a laudable service. Why change? The need is great, but the need is to encourage and support indigenous forces. This year the director will be going to lots of meetings, sadly enough. But the web-like structure of agencies individuals, grants, federal people and projects must be mastered and joined if the benefits they represent are to be distributed in the region we service. I think SIP's structure and the limitations of my personality suit us for that role of middleman-ombudsman-operator. To be able to say, "I know this guy who maybe can help you all," is the rare fruit of sitting through many a stale gathering of fellow agents.

This year it may be that I will have more white contacts in Alabama, be in touch with state members of the groups that compose our board.

This year I have been invited by the people in Gees Bend to act as a research man for their community organization. So that will keep me at a grass roots level and in the same community where the Freedom Quilting Bee operates. I feel a responsibility to the new manager of that co-op so while I may spend less hours with the co-op the responsibility is still there.

This is the year of the northern ghetto. Hula hoops are not the true index of America's cultic obsession with fads-the real indicator is the liberal's approach to domestic problems. Lots of us in Dixie are going to have to spend a good bit of our time fighting to get folk to recognize that rural southern issues are inextricably part of the "urban" problem. Us Americans have no "urban crisis" we just got a crisis. It is in distributing resources that discretion is necessary; not, for God's sake, in stating the problem.

For instance, SWAFCA needs the attention, physical presence, and resources of religion now more than Selma needed it during the March. Fadism must not pre-empt the hard responsibility of assigning priorities. Listen to me folks, I'm talking to you.

* * *

AN EPISCOPAL PRIEST IN MOBILE sends out fitfully his version of a church bulletin. His recent effort is so superior to bulletins that announce to the hungry sheep that the opening hymn was composed in 1867 that I include part of it.

MEMO:
FROM: one would be slob
TO: certain other would-be slobs
Subject: our slobbishness

Your correspondent has only lately discovered, in his thirty-fifth year, that in most and for much of his life he has been a slob: which is to say, a waster of time, a maker of excuses, a spinner of daydreams, and shallow-headed butterfly...

The church would never be in the mess it's in if it were not for our slobblishness(and probably would have fewer members too.) Everyone of us--no exceptions---has a powerful tendency to slob it through life, because in the short run it's the easiest way. But a slob never understands anything; never accomplishes anything; never get anywhere.

He always hopes that somebody else will make his decisions for him, and that he will be excused from being called up to bat. Eventually he'll find rest in that six-foot hole where no more decisions have to be made--home at last, dead as a dodo. So while he lives, he slips and slides along towards that final hole, hoping that nobody will notice him and say "Hey there buddy, what are you up to?"

But the Eye is upon you. So make up your mind for once. If you decide to put your shades on, and pretend not to notice that Eye and keep on sliding along, then at least make that decision(it may be your last.) But if you decide you're going to break out of your slobbishness, my word to you is You can!

The church is almost dead(beleive me.) But before the coffin-lid snaps shut for good, you have time to make one last decision(decision, mind you, which only you can make not me, not God, not Jesus, only you): either--

LET ME OUT OF HERE: I'M GOING TO PICK UP MY LIFE AND LIVE!

or

LET ME LIE BACK ON THESE SATIN CUSHIONS: AND CLOSE THAT LID, WOULD YOU PLEASE.

* * *

LIFE AND DEATH are more than biology. The bulletin from Mobile had something in common with an exchange of letters I had with another friend who lives in Tennessee.

She wrote in September: "P.S. Please send a note at some time indicating we are still friends." In October I replied: "We are still friends. Most people would have asked, 'Are you still alive?' which shows that you are more interested in relationships than states of being. This makes you a contemporary person ..." In November she responded: "I would never think of writing someone to ask if he were still alive... Think how awkward it would be if his answer were to be 'No'"

But my correspondent doubts she is a contemporary person because her mother thinks she is "quaint and old fashioned." Well, everyone has a mother. I think my friends from Mobile and Tenn. would understand each other despite their parents.

ALABAMA READERS: THIS PAGE HAS INFORMATION ON IT FOR YOU

KEEP IT

THIS SIX PAGE NEWSLETTER is a pre-christmas bonus, we almost never do more than four. We hope you read it in small doses and excuse us the length this time.

* * *

LAWYER DON JELINEK HASN'T LEFT ALABAMA. I saw him at the SWAFCA Open House Nov. 25. "You still here?" I asked. Jelinek said that was the usual greeting he got from people. I sympathized for I get that too: you still here? White workers and workers in this field generally come and go-rapidly.

Lawyer Jelinek can't practive law in Alabama now but he can sure talk to you, if you want to talk to him. His outfit is

Don Jelinek
Southern Rural Research Project
802 1st Avenue
Selma, Ala.
mail address P.O. Box 956 Selma.

* * *

LOTS OF PEOPLE WANT HELP IN GOING TO COLLEGE. The best advice on how to get money for college is in a 35¢ book

College Opportunities for Southern Negro Students

Get one copy for FREE by writing

Scholarship Information Center
University of North Carolina YMCA
Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514

Or ask me for it, I carry free copies in my car.

* * *

THE NAACP HAS DONE SOMETHING GREAT (we think) for poor people. Keep this address.

Mr. Jack Greenberg, Director Counsel, National Office for the Rights of the Indigent
10 Columbus Circle
New York, New York 10019
phone (212) JU6-8397

They got one million dollars from the Ford Foundation to set up this "National Office for the Rights of the Indigent.""Indigent" is an NAACP word for "real poor".

How could it help you or your community? It is designed to give and create legal rights and protection for the poor under the law. Do you or your people seem to be maybe cheated by welfare? Is a man you owe money to possibly cheating you or lying to a judge about a judgement on you? Has one of your kids gotten in trouble with the law and you wonder if he has been treated fairly? What can you do about these things? Mighty little, you know, if you got no money, no lawyer, no job protection, no organization backing you up when the power structure begins to get rough on you. That is just what this N.O.R.I. is for. It's just possible you can now get the best help available. Of course you got to ask for it and really mean it. And I'll be glad to help anybody ask NORI for help. The Selma Project has learned how to holler in the last two years.

* * *

YOU ALL IN A CO-OP? Don't forget the help you can now get in Alabama from The Rev'd A.J. McKnight/P.O. Box 3005/Lafayette, La. 70501. Write for their newsletter so you can keep up. One worker now in Alabama is Ezra Cunningham/Rt 1 Box 2513/ Beatrice, Ala.

file

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Number 18 January 12, 1968

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Belt Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman.

GEES BEND IS A PLACE TO ITSELF.
After the muddy Alabama passes Pettus Bridge at Selma it weaves lazily toward Mobile like an Alabama river should. But thirty miles below the bridge it hooks to the east, to the west, then heads north only to give up and drop again toward Mobile. This eccentricity is Gees Bend.

Slavery came to the Bend in the 1830's. The first Mr. Gee pushed over from South Carolina. If his situation for those days was typical, he would have been well off, propertied in slaves. A capitalist pioneer leaving South Carolina soil leeched and eroded by his cotton for the virgin bottom land of the new Alabama plantation. The place must have been about 10,000 acres.

We assume Indians were still there when the slaves arrived. It was believed in those days that the Spainard DeSoto had visited a village there on the Chilatchee creek before pushing west toward his death on the Mississippi. We know many of the people in the Bend claim Indian blood today and look it.

After the Civil War the people were told they were free, but the plantation went on unchanged.

The river's loop confers on this land, then as now, a security and isolation that removes it from change and accomodation. At some point the land passes from the Gees to a nephew named Pettway but things went on as before.

In 1900 John Pettway and family left their large house in the Bend. No white man has lived there since. The place had failed. The Pettways left the land to the courts. They left the black people to the land. The land's life was wrung out by cotton 50 years before but the people stayed. They stayed in huts, in bush arbors, in pole houses with mud chimneys. The people believed, then as now, that as sure as there was a just God it was they who owned the land, never Gee or Pettway. So only the white mens' name remained: the loop called Gees Bend, and the peoples' surname, imposed or chosen - Pettway.

By 1933 things were as bad in some other parts of this nation as they had always been in Gees Bend. This fact caused the Bend to be "discovered" in 1933 by the New Deal. Exit Pettway, enter Roosevelt.

The Depression had even reached the Bend. The Pettways admitted to their visitors it had been a rough year. They allowed they were living off wild plums and hope that summer, little else.

These people, upon whom disruptive change had but previously conferred the monotony of poverty, now met modern times. What times! Eleanor Roosevelt, privies, Norman Thomas, cast iron cook stoves(no more pot hooks in the chimney!), Will Alexander, Rexford Tugwell, "precious" cookers, the Farm Security Administration and boll weevil dust!

That is to say that the Farm Security Administration secured 11,000 acres of the Bend and began an innovative, brilliant, bumbling, exciting, doomed restructuring of Southern agriculture. Call it a collective farm if you will. Much of it was Tugwell's idea, himself no farm boy.

It had the feel of a European farming village; the people lived in a village and went out to the fields surrounding it.

It was wild: 100 new houses sprang up, then a clinic, a gin, a community center, a church, canning facilities, a grist mill. Old pictures, some by Walker Evans, show what has not occured to many of us: the New Deal did more for the dead level poor in the South than three wars, a boom, the Great Society and the present desparate experiments in cooperative ventures. Fact is, relatively, the poor are poorer today.

Recently the Rev'd Gilbert G. Pettway went over to Yellow Bluff with some of us to see the first four houses begun by Southwest Alabama Self Help Housing. SWASSH hopes to put up about 25 low income houses in Wilcox.

I was about to burst with pride and excitement just to see something concrete come out of a long tedious struggle. We had just escaped the annual attempt of Congress to destroy the program. Five private agencies or so and as many Federal ones were exulting over our feat - four houses begun.

Rev'd Pettway was polite but quiet. Only when asked did he say this:

"In 1936 I was foreman of the roofing team. I topped 100 houses and 'bout that many barns that year in the Bend. We got $1200 loans, 3% interest, 40 years to pay. We had a foundation crew, sub flooring crew, and so on, went from house to house. I roofed 'em. We were paid 85¢ a day to do it, because some of our pay was held back to apply to the loan payments. Everybody's paid off those 40 year loans by now. So we had self help way back then"

If I remember correctly, there are less than 500 present day self help housing units in all America. And a postscript: Rev'd Pettway told me that when the new houses were finished and painted the FSA told them to burn the Gees big house which had stood deserted since 1900.

Could you have quessed that this creature of New Deal liberalism was really controlled by white people? And would you believe that even when the idea came from Eleanor Roosevelt herself it was executed by a white manager who was, after all, just a standard issue Mr. Charlie, born and bred in Alabama. The white South has ways of dealing with do gooders, if not one way then another.

The people will tell you today that the white management cheated and misappropriated. Certainly there was mismanagement, confused planning, indifference and hostility.

But what a connection! Roosevelt on one end, black Pettway on the other. Sounds great, looks good, liberalism man, this is America. Solving problems, man. But oh, oh look who's in the middle - Mr. Charlie. America, as it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be.

Mr. Thomas Jefferson, sitting down to write the Declaration. "By damn, blame slavery on the King of England too, get rid of it now before it spreads!" So says Jefferson. What a connection! Mr. Jefferson on one end, poor black slaves on the other. Liberalism man. Solving our problems. America. But oh, oh look who pops up in the middle, Mr. Button Gwinnet and the representatives from New England too: "Now Mr. Jefferson, better leave that part out until after the war-hurts unity, trade, and agriculture. Mr. Jefferson agrees, gotta win the War haven't we? that's liberalism.

Mr. Shriver, Mr. Humphrey, Great Society on one end, black Pettways, etc., on the other. What a connection! Oh, oh I see Judge Reynolds of Selma, I see Lister Hill, I see Armisted Selden, George and Lurleen, even Lester Maddox. (Hug Lester Hubert, it helps with the war.) Liberalism man.

Friends, I don't hate all these folk, they all say they're trying. No, I am just a white man trying to understand Rap and Stokely. Trying to understand why a little black kid calls himself "Che" in Selma and acts so mean around me when people tell him I'm trying to help. I think I do understand.

After the War in 1946 the U.S. Congress set about doing something for the Farm Security Administration and the mess that it seemed to have made of things like Gees Bend. Congress abolished FSA. Guess that showed those liberals. End Act 11 of Gees Bend.

In 1947 Gees Bend was divided up into private ownership setions and sold to the Pettways via the Farm Home Administration. Low interest, long term loans were provided. By virtue of their remarkable endurance at the very time the little man was being forced out of cotton, the Pettways paid off this debt too. They weren't quite able to afford it when the gov't offered to sell them the other facilities we mentioned. So the clinic, and the other things went by the board. Today only the old grocery store is community property.

From 1947 until today it was business as usual - survival. Children going off to New York, folks getting older everyday. Population declining dramatically in Gees Bend and everywere in Wilcox. From 1950 to 60 a 20% decline for instance. Cotton just not worth planting anymore but no marketing system available in the state to make anything else worth planting.

Well, we could write a book about Gees Bend and the Movement. How Dr. King came there to preach and cried. How the children struck from school. How quickly they registered, how they had to march first in Camden. How they had to take in their relatives when the evictions started.

Then came the Freedom Quilting Bee. Half the members are named Pettway. It's the center of our co-op. Then one of the Pettways got a contract to market cucumbers. That saved them last summer. Then SWAFCA.

But still the poverty. After the 1947 loans were paid off did illness take a holiday? Did hunger, or child-birth cease? No. So land was mortgaged again. Now and then a mortgage forclosed. The people would be so sad and secretive about it, then it would be out. Yes another white (don't they ever get enough) had bought land, slipping field by field, back into the "Project"- the 11,000 acres. Which is today, even with these invasions, the largest single Negro land holding in Alabama. The older people seem to blame themselves, "They tole us, I remember when they sold it to us in 47. The gov't people begged us, 'Don't sell it, don't sell to these white folks. Keep it, it's yours'"

If "Survival 1947-1967" is Act III of the Gees Bend story it is my belief that Act IV may begin in 1968. In a year or so a big lock and dam just down the river from the Bend will be activated. A lake will form. About a third of Gees Bend will go under water. The people aren't too happy about it. No farmer wants to see land disappear.

Maps show how beautiful the lake will be, especially around Gees Bend. We got lakes in Alabama: T.V.A. in the north, Logan Martin near Birmingham, Walter George lake on the Chattahoochee. Where the lakes are things develop: hunting lodges, boat landings, lake-front cabins, resturants. Why not in Gees Bend? Sure enough, didn't the president of one of the banks in Camden just recently buy some land in the Bend?

Rev'd Pettway and I checked over maps I had secured in Tuscaloosa. His plot will be a peice of lake-front property. Other whites holding mortgages or just wanting to buy are pushing. Why? Don't they have the whole rest of the lake from Millers Ferry to Cahaba?

But land prices are depressed (traditionally) in Gees Bend. Today it would be possible to buy on the lake for $150.00 an acre.

The potential others seem to see has slowly been dawning on me and the people in Gees Bend. "The Boykin Improvement Association," recently resolved: "To do all in our power to keep waterfront property in the hands of the community" Rev'd Pettway is preaching that the lake may be a source of income. People are catching on - and thinking. Yet even so, some very good waterfront land is mortgaged amd may be forclosed any minute. Or in another case, a man must sell waterfront land to pay off a mortgage on his house so he will have a house and at least a garden plot for his old age.

We have dreamed so far as to see Gees Bend as a recreational tourist spot for Negroes. Not just in Alabama but (why not) from Detroit, Harlem, Chicago. Even the FHA agent is helpful; loans for recreational developments are available. Rev'd Pettway talked to him recently. But no money iso available to do the first thing: keep Gees Bend's best land from being taken away. Back a month ago I got so dist bed about the crisis over the water-front land that I gave the Boykin Improvement Association $1,000.00 of S.I.P. 1968 money. A drop. But perhaps they could use it to pay a mortgage note or two or pick up an option on property that some individual just had to sell.

Today we are hustling, reading gov't pamphlets, thinking, writing people, plotting. Maybe the lake will pay off. The rock hard, patient people of Gees Bend want to stay there, try again, and keep their land.

file

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Number 19 February 2, 1968

* * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman.

THIS WILL BE THE LAST NEWSLETTER YOU WILL RECEIVE unless you return the slip that's on top of this page. Use the stamped addressed envelope.

Even if you don't want to get the Newsletter anymore use the slip and the envelope to let us know. We only waste postage when someone gets it who does not read it.

* * *

THIS IS ALSO OUR ANNUAL BEGGING LETTER. WE NEED MONEY. Last year individuals gave over $5,500.00 to the Project. We spent $16,250 last year. This year we hope to spend $20,000.00. That's our budget, anyway. So you see that we have come to depend on individual contributions.

Having lost every shred of my old Episcopalian reticence about getting emotional and frank about money, I earnestly hope you will make a generous contribution to keep me right here in Alabama.

* * *

LAST MONTH ONE OF THE PROJECT'S LONG HAUL, SNALL HOPE PLOTS PAID OFF. I wish I could surround the telling of it with red and blue star bursts.

Almost two years ago I was introduced to Mr. Stanley Selengut in New York City by Miss Doris O' Donnell. Miss O' Donnell is chief among those good friends in New York who spend a lot of their unpaid time promoting and scheming for the Freedom Quilting Bee. Mr. Selengut is a man who has built up an impressive business as a promoter, producer and broker of crafts-worldwide. His record shows he has served, among others, the State Department, the Zuni Indians, OEO, the Poor Peoples Corporation of Mississippi, General Learning and Holiday Magazine's gift section.

Besides all that, Stanley is a warm reasonable person who seems to be able to appreciate any folks set before him: poor rural quilters, unorthodox clergymen, or Ecuardorian Panama hat weavers.

Seeing Stanley at home in an office lined with crafts from the world over, it was obvious he was what we needed. He agreed. But even if he flew down to see the co-op for free (which he offered to do) we couldn't take his advice. Because his advice was to offer his knowledge of marketing and promoting and to recommend expansion and new products.

This took money, a good bit, for to spend less than a certain minimum was only to prolong a venture which he felt could never grow or increase its profits. Then too, back in those days our co-op did not have the unity and trust it has today among it members. In organizing, the last thing you want is the kind of hollow success that fills peoples' pockets but buys them off from running what they own and organizing their own lives. So the idea had to be shoved to the back of our heads. I would write Stanley every so often, tell Doris to give him our love. We all waited for something to happen.

Part of the game is to tell everyone about everyone else. This happened when the Southern Federation of co-ops was organized. But again, no money. Before it was officially announced that the Ford Foundation had funded Southern Consumers of Lafayette, Louisiana, I was on the phone to Fr. McKnight to tell him of Selengut and our program for the development of the Freedom Quilting Bee and other poor peoples' manufacturing co-ops.

Much later-- around Christmas-Fr. McKnight met in Selma with me and the managers of the co-op. This time things worked. On January 16 I was at the Montgomery Airport to pick up Stanley, Sara Stine, a toy designer, and Joseph Rodd, a furniture designer and woodwork production specialist.

We had a tremendous meeting that night at the church in Gees Bend; Fr. McKnight and his staff were there and a large and interested group of local people.

The next day Mrs. Stine looked at products and talked to people, Stanley thought.

A beautiful deal came out of the next day's meeting. Southern Consumers "hired" Selengut Associates. Selengut offered to work for expenses. The co-op received a $2000.00 management subsidy grant and a $5000.00 loan. What a loan: repayment at 3% interest at the rate of 10% of annual profits.

The idea is to form a demonstration group of 25 or 30 co-op members and show that we can raise their income from 25¢ to a dollar an hour in one year. The group will receive special training from Mrs. Stine, and Selengut Associates will buy fabric for us in the New York market.

We will build up an inventory of quilts and the new products Mrs. Stine will invent, then take these out and get contracts from stores. There is a phase two to this but that can wait.

The ladies can look forward to quilting satin and silk and making more money than they ever have off the land. But ladies, learn not only how to sew but how to manage, how to keep books, how to run your own show.

* * *

AT THE SAME TIME the Freedom Quilting Bee discovered it is the subject of a doctoral thesis. Miss Jeri Richardson has chosen the co-op as her subject for a degree in art education at Indiana University. She is in Alberta now doing some of the research. Can one ever use things like that in drafting grant proposals!

* * *

MANY PEOPLE IN ALABAMA were deeply saddened to learn of the death, after a long illness, of Jaunita Harrell, wife of the present director of the Southwest Alabama Self Help Housing Association.

Dan and Juanita were among the first civil rights workers to come to Wilcox. He was project director of the county for SCLC. One resident of the county remembers Juanita during the voter registration marches in Camden. "She walked up and down the lines with her face toward the sky and she told us, 'Don't be afraid children, the Lord is on our side'." Juanita was a tiny, delicate woman, very striking. I recall her in the winter of '65 at a typewriter in the ever drafty, cold church in Camden, while the rest of us huddled around a propane heater. Both she and Dan knew that her illness was greatly aggravated by exposure and over exertion. But exposure and over exertion were her contribution to the county as we gathered nearly a hundred cases of eviction for the Justice Department. No case was ever brought to court, none ever will be. It's forgotten. But people will not forget for a long time Juanita's devotion to her husband and her love for the people of Wilcox County.

EVERETT WENRICK AND HIS WIFE ANN USED TO LIVE IN SELMA. Everett and Ann took the place of Jonathan Daniels, who died in Hayneville. They put in a year. Everett is now finishing up at Episcopal Theological Seminary in Cambridge, Mass. Everett has a friend who has one of those family-style small foundations. One thing leading to another, Everett was able to get a contribution from the foundation of $1000.00. It went to our Selma Project. Everett came down to revisit old friends in Selma over Christmas. Then he and I decided to give the money to the Day Care Center across the Pettus Bridge from Selma.

The Day Care Center is one of hundreds of ventures across the South that start like this: We got a terrible need, no money, no experience, no place to set up, no outside help, no contacts. What do we do? Do? Let's get started and worry about that later.

The Day Care Center provides a service for about 30 children. All teachers work for nothing, beg for food for the children, who often come there hungry. They meet in a church. They can operate on $50.00 a month when they get it, on none when they don't. The thousand will allow them to buy some toys and equipment, but mostly food.

* * *

JAN 22-25 The Project helped sponsor a second conference at Baytreat Camp on Mobile Bay. We had the first one a year ago. This year our theme was "Who Are Our Enemies--what is our relationship to radical elements in American society."

About 25 people came. Organizations represented by people were the Delta Ministry,(Miss.), the Nat'l Sharecroppers Fund(Ga. & Tenn.), the Episcopal Society for Cultural & Racial Unity(USA), Self Help Housing(Ala.), Southern Regional Council(South), Southern Rural Research Project(Miss. & Ala.), Lowndes County Christian Movement(Ala.). Then there were students from the University of Alabama, clergymen and friends.

The talk was wide ranging. We had no agenda, no need to produce anything. My own reaction to it was this: It was a strain, all hail the strain.

We didn't lapse into black and white caucuses, but we could have. There is now a solid black movement with its own pace, style and needs. White liberals are still unsure of themselves in the South, they are still getting lots of money. Everyone talks about organizing around the needs of poor whites, but helpful analogies between this and the black revolution are not there. Besides that, movemants among whites are going to grow like Topsy just as the black ones did. All the Baytreats in the world won't produce a plan.

But it still bugged me. This week I got an invitation from the A. Philip Randolph Institute(you know, Bayard Rustin) and the Southern Regional Council. Big deal at an Atlanta Hotel in late February. I am invited. The idea is spelled out: The South is different; we aren't ghettoized yet, nor industrialized; we have had some gutsy confrontations with racism in the South. The North has always relied on hypocrisy. So the grand idea of coalition and reform, of which Rustin is the best spokesman, is a natural for the South. Chuck Morgan, our ACLU director, dreams like that too: The South becoming the model to the rest of the nation of the two races solving problems together.

Is this true, or is the other true-- that I heard at Baytreat? It's too late, baby. The bill is due. So, as I have asked before, is the South in which I can still operate as a white a new thing with a potential or only a provincial back water? Will I and my clients decide soon that we can no longer function? Or can the collaboration possibly go on without--as has always been the case so far--destroying the black man's integrity?

I hedge. I probably will go to Atlanta; but if there are a lot of people who are as unsure about it as I, I may just come home early.

* * *

SELF HELP HOUSING HAD HOPED TO EXPAND into Lowndes, Dallas, Clark and Monroe counties. Our refunding for the second year was to have included this. OEO funds the corporation, the corporation staff forms associations of five to ten families who borrow money from the Farmers Home Administration to build single family houses. The staff then trains the associations to select house plans, see the applications through FHA, acquire property, settle titles(a very difficult problem in the Black Belt) and finally build the houses as a team. Result: an FHA house assessed at maybe $9000.00 for way less half that amount borrowed.

All that ruckus in Congress remember? All that fight about OEO, the President's guns and butter speeches. Political chickens come home to roost. If you're poor you are on familiar terms with those chickens because you are where the roost is at. We middle class types read about this stuff and worry about it but never see the chickens face to face. SWASSH was up to its neck in chickens last week. Our proposal for a $280,000.00 housing program got a preview from one of our OEO agents. He said a 50 thousand proposal would be more in line, and suggested we only expand into one other county. We feel we will build over 30 houses with this year's $38,000. We wanted to do so much more. I'll let you know how it comes out.

ONE MORE PLUG: Did I ever tell you that the newsletter can't be mailed at the bulk rate for religious organizations? After a theological debate with the Birmingham Postmaster, it was decreed that the Newsletter is not "religious." SIP is not a legally chartered religious group either, so it costs to be secular. O God, incline us to get a little charge out of teensy persecutions but not use them for nourishment. Amen.

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Number 20 April 9, 1968

* * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman.

GENEROUS NEWSLETTER READERS have contributed over $2000.00 to the Selma Inter-religious Project. Mel Dubin our chairman, all members of the committee, and myself wish to thank you all. The mailing list is slimmed down to around 275. We bought an addressograph and have converted to a commerical 3rd class bulk rate.

* * *

THE SOUTHWEST ALABAMA FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION(SWAFCA) has announced the confirmation of an $800,000 loan from the U.S. Dep't of Agricuture and a $300,000 renewal grant from O.E.O..Among other things, the co-op plans to construct receiving sheds in each of the 10 counties it serves, buy or rent the necessary trucks, and set up a revolving loan fund for its members. SWAFCA's new board chairman, Mr. William Harrison, said that membership is now about 2000 families. Total political opposition is still the rule. Two weeks ago the Lowndes County field specialist was arrested for "possession of marijuana." SWAFCA is the biggest and best economic project poor people in the South have mounted.

A GROUP OF STUDENTS FROM PERDUE made a trip through Alabama the first of this month. It was my privilege to take them over to the SWAFCA office then over to the Freedom Quilting Bee office. They spent the night in Wilcox County in the homes of the quilt co-op members.

* * *

"THE CONDITION OF FARM WORKERS AND SMALL FARMERS IN 1967" this is the title of the annual report of Fay Bennet, Executive Secretary of National Sharecroppers Fund, to the board of that organization. Let me quote a couple of things.

Item "The annual out migration from agriculture exceeded a million in the 1950-60 decade; it averaged almost 800,000 annually (underlining mine) from 1960 to 1965."

Item "Most of the Poor are White" ... a recent Dep't of Agriculture report on White Americans in Rural Poverty reveals that of 9.65 million who live in non-metropolitan areas ... 80 per cent of them were white.

Of all farm families in poverty, 85 per cent are white... because of their lack of organization, poor whites have benefited even less than poor Negroes from the gains made in recent years."

Item "It is now admitted that the major beneficaries of the agriculture subsidy policy have been the large producers... A report prepared for the National Advisory Committee on Rural Poverty studied the distribution of benefits of the various farm commodity programs for selected years since 1960 and found that... in cotton... less then 1 per cent (of the dollars go to the 10 per cent who received the smallest payments opposed to 50 per cent of the money going to the 10 per cent with the largest payments)."

That last is complicated sounding but all in the world it means is that very rich farmers get more of the gov't money than the poor farmers.

* * *

HOW LONG WILL IT TAKE? A few of the young Negro men in the "rurals" (as we call it down here) don't leave to go seeking bread in the city. Perhaps they are wiser not to go to the ghetto, I don't know. Here at every turn their manhood is insulted by our culture, our nation. I see them standing around a store; or pacing the grassy edge of the black top, hanging onto their cool, tottering on the edge of madness. They do not belong to SWAFCA, they do not quilt. What hostility theybear, not muffled by a cancerous self-hate, surfaces occasionally in petty vandalism and violence among their own.

But injustice today is a perfect, patient teacher. These men may soon learn to direct their violence toward more realistic and productive ends. Given business as usual in the nation, the rurals may be the first to produce a sustained guerilla movement. Just think of all the cotton gins Mr. Charlie lets sit around unprotected, not to mention his lakes, corn fields, cattle, barns and pine trees.

* * *

A VOLUNTEER PROGRAM THIS SUMMER IS ASKING FOR STUDENTS - college students, medical students, and law students. This is a program of the Southern Rural Research Project run by our fellow worker, Mr. Don Jelinek. The following is reproduced from a brief description of it:

"CIVIL RIGHTS WORKERS NEEDED IN Mississippi, Alabama & Georgia
Summer - 1968

Many black people are starving by malnutrition in these areas. The Southern Rural Research Project has a massive direct action program planned to fight the discrimination in Federal agriculture and welfare programs which causes much of this suffering. College students, medical students, and law students are needed to work in the field this summer whether for a few weeks or for the entire summer. For further information contact: SRRP, P.O. Box 2427 Opelika, Alabama 36801

The coordinator of recruitment in Opelika is Barbara Oppenheimer. Write her about it if interested. And don't let all the talk about college students put you off.

If you are an Alabamian or have any experience in the Movement you should certainly ask to volunteer. We have about 30 copies of a prospectus of the program. We'd be glad to mail anyone a single copy.

This is an reasoned, well timed program. It is admittedly a very conservative approach because all it aims to do is help people get benefits the law already provides.

Indirectly, of course, it will advance the cause of a radical restructuring of the welfare system so badly needed.

* * *

LAST FEBRUARY WE MENTIONED THE S.H.A.P.E. DAY CARE CENTER which operates at St. Paul's AME Church across the river from Selma in a community called Selmont. The women who voluntarily operate it provide for over 30 children of working mothers. When food is available the children receive it. They come from homes where hunger is no stranger. The people who operate the center are not what you'd call Selma City Hall Negroes. Indeed, all of them are people who have been unable to go along with the adjustments of some Negro consciences that allowed Wallace to boast(accurately) that the great majority of Negroes in Selma voted for his wife.

In January the Center was visited by the fire dep't and the Dallas County Health Department. On January 26 a letter from Alabama State Welfare wrote "to recommed that this operation be closed immediately" because "the health department states that the facility is not adequate for the purpose for which it is being used."

Mrs. Theoda Smith, the director, told me recently that they used some of the money from a gift (I mentioned this last newsletter) to fix up what the health and fire people said was wrong. So now (April 1) Mrs. Smith was told that they'd changed their minds apparently and the whole building, despite repairs, is still inadequate. Naively reasonable people would believe that the health department and the state welfare people would be doing everything they could to encourage this enterprise. They in turn "believe" they are only maintaining the law.

It was the man Paul, in whose honor the delapidated building is named, who said, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

* * *

SOME BOOKS AND PAPERS YOU MIGHT WANT TO BUY OR BORROW ARE LISTED BELOW.

"Confessions of Nat Turner," order from Uniprint, Box 2094 Ann Arbor, Michigan 48106 Costs $1.50.

This is the testimony of a Negro who tried to lead a revolt against slavery in Virginia in 1831. After 55 whites were killed and many black people, he was caught and hung. This is his statement taken down by a lawyer who visited him in jail.

Soul on Ice, by Eldridge Cleaver, McGraw Hill, 1968, $5.95. Copy all this down to identify the book. If you live in Alabama you can order this book or any books you need through

The Episcopal Book Store
2019 6th Avenue North
Birmingham, Alabama 35203

Mr. Cleaver, a Negro, writes about himself, about the problems of being black in America today. A lot a high school kids I know should read this.

" Events at Orangeburg" Special Report by the Southern Regional Council, 30¢.

" Memphis-More than a Garbage Strike," Special Report by the Southern Regional Council. 30¢. Both of these car be ordered through

The Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Slam! Bang! go the headlines Flash! Flash! the T.V. More violence, more racial trouble, but how did it start?

What happened before? These two reports go behind events in Orangeburg and Memphis that have so far cost four lives. They show the months and years of insults, broken promises, neglect, and injustice that brought on violent revolt and violent repression.

"Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders", A Bantam Book, number QZ 4273, March 1968, $1.25.

This is the Riot Report, or Kerner Report, that blamed rioting on white racism. You can order a copy at a bargin rate of $1.00 from the

A. Philip Randolph Institute
271 West 125 Street
New York, New York 10027

Interested in housing for poor people? Read below.

"Operating a Self Help Housing Program." In volumes I and II. Single copy free, each volume $1.00 after that.

"Six Houses/Six Homes", a movie available in English and Spanish can be borrowed free. But give the exact date you want it.

This information on housing is available from International Self Help Housing Assoc.

Suite 1010 Dupont Circle Bldg.
1346 Connecticut Avenue N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20038

If you've got a mind and heart to root for federal programs you will be as happy with this book as a hog in an acre of sweet potatoes.

"Everyman's Guide to Federal Programs"

It is written especially "for local groups and poverty workers in the field" to help answer the questions we ask all the time about federal programs. It was done by the Citizens's Crusade Against Poverty. Order it from

New Community Press, Inc.
1220 15th Street N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

It's expensive. It costs $10.50, then you should send another $5.00. This extra 5 pays for new pages they will send you as the programs change. And brother, if the country's politics is any guage, they will change, for good or ill.

agency

SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT

This newsletter was composed before the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Today (April 8) I leave to attend his funeral. I will pass through Alberta to pick up Eugene Witherspoon who will have with him a king size Double Star quilt. This is to be a gift to Mrs. King from the members of the Freedom Quilting Bee. The stars are as varied and brilliant as Jacob's coat. The fabrics came from New York, North Carolina, Georgia, Montgomery, and from the sewing baskets of white people and black people.

Yesterday I went to Greensboro to a memorial service. I had not wanted to say anything, but found myself standing again in the pulpit from which I had, three years earlier, struggled to speak of the murder of Jonathan Daniels. Hate had forced us together again to celebrate and memorialize Love. After the preacher was introduced a man came to the pulpit and stood. With many, I expected he was the speaker. But then he began to sing "Precious Lord." I was seated directly behind him. The voice was high and it soared. It made the church, packed and now very hot in our Southern spring, seem bigger, higher, cooler. Able to receive now our grief, tension, love, guilt and wonder. The man's back quivered before me. I thought how his muscles must be working. Our tears could come now. There was release like breath held too long but something was given too. The voice and the flowing out allowed a flowing in. Since I am a Christian, I named it, to me it was the Spirit of God. The effect was to know, to be able to take, as if it were a material object, Love. The Love then was everything that is, bigger than hate or death, a force that binds, casts out fear, that sharpens, does not diminish, one's sense of tragedy, injustice and hypocrisy, that gives courage, not ease. The soul can begin to run from death and hate, hardly knowing the flight has begun. So death and hate enlarge themselves in that act of flight. To celebrate Dr. King, an emblem of love, stopt that for us. Our souls, infused with love, stand, turn on these demons, and see them diminished and without power.

File

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Number 21 June 7, 1968

* * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project is a joint effort of over a dozen organizations and denominations to continue the relationship established between these groups and the people of Selma and Black Alabama. The Chairman of the Project is Mr. Mel Dubin, a New York businessman.

IT'S BEEN A LONG TIME. I skipped the May issue. Skipping either means I've been busy or that something I think interesting is just about to happen. This time I waited until after a May 27 meeting in New York of the SIP board, the people in the religious groups who finance the Project.

* * *

I'D LIKE TO TALK ABOUT THE FUTURE OF THE SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT and of my own future in Alabama. To continue at all, drastic changes must be made and the worth of the program must be severely judged.

I'd like to tell you how we hope to stay in business and how I think the Project can evolve into something better.

First a little review. The Selma Inter-religious Project grew out of crisis and trauma. Most religious institutions have a department concerned with human rights, or social responsibility, or racial minorities-the names vary. Quite properly the heads of these divisions were participents in the Selma March of 1965.

The Selma crisis of '65 may seem dated or even a trifle quaint today (indeed, that's one facet of our money trouble). Back then it was a time of upheaval and mobilization for religion, a time of martyrs — Jimmie Lee Jackson, Viola Liuzzo, James Reeb, Jonathan Daniels. Then the March was over. The murders especially motivated talk among these men about a "ministry of presence" in Selma affirming that they hadn't marched and gone away. That summer of 1965 the Unitarians were keeping clergy volunteers in Selma on a two week rotating basis. The Episcopal Society, after Daniel's murder, was deeply concerned with Selma. What promise, what organization, would come from a city that had gone through what Selma had experienced? No one knew, but some religious leaders felt a responsibility to be a part of what happened.

By October of 1965 I had been interviewed and hired. I wasn't working for any official organization. Men I trusted hoped there was enough money here and there to put one man in the field for a year, maybe two years. The Episcopal Society volunteered to receive funds and do the book keeping required. These men also pledged themselves to meet as a board as frequently as need be. I was to be a liason between them and Selma, beyond that I was free to make my own job. It was unbelieveably open ended. I could return to my home state, from which I had been kind of ejected several years before, and involve myself in a viable, relevant ministry among people who were healing the sick, opening the prisons, giving sight to the blind, and raising the dead.

Thanks be to God, by this September SIP will have been in business three years.

The first year I did lots of follow-up work for the groups sponsoring SIP. Please check with this or that person. Check Mr.____, he writes he's in jail. See ir the National Council should be involved in this or that. There were many small grants for bail, emergency loans, and telephone calls. I began to see that I was functioning in part as a lobbyist and fact gatherer. The first court of appeal was the Justice Department. It was that post-Movement, running around era, when we still believed that the Civil Rights Act of 1965 had been passed so it could be enforced. Not that I initiated these responses or feelings. The role I chose was to work with indigenous organizations. The only thing we directly started was the Freedom Quilting Bee. The first year cost $14,000.

The second year(October 1966-September 1967 was the year of big money and lobbying and baptism into proposal writing. People began to send me money. I was amazed, but this innocence soon faded. Now I suppose I'd be surprised and saddened if you all didn't send SIP something every year. Innocence is fragile. There were some splendid large contributions from the Jewish groups and their friends. We ended the second year with a surplus of $8,000!

Leaving the Justice Dep't to its unproductive tasks, we did a lot of work for OEO funding of adult education programs, self-help housing and SWAFCA, the farmers co-op. There was less contact with the SIP sponsoring groups in New York. I was much more deeply involved with Alabama groups that had not existed at the time of the March. The Project sponsors effectively responded when called upon to argue for OEO funding. But I was now asking them to do things rather than them asking me to follow-up projects begun during the Selma March.

That was the year I became the instant integrator of three OEO funded groups initiated by the black community. For one of them, Self-Help Housing, I located whites outside the Black Belt whose talents were helpful: a lawyer, a businesman, a college professor.

That was also the year SIP began to implement a secondary ministry of finding middleclass(mostly white) Alabamians. We tried to help them get with the productive aftermath of the Movement in the Black Belt. We had workshops for these types, we collected people who would send telegrams from Alabama. This has been fairly successful.Need I say, it has not been a program to get people "to help Negroes."

The Freedom Quilting Bee made around $10,000.00 and got more and more exciting. A foundation made a $5,000.00 grant to it (renewal in '68). I was quickly spoiled, my second try at proposal writing and I'd made it. That year SIP cost $16,250.00.

The third year is now (October 67 until September 1968). This is the year of the end of a good thing, that was ad hoc, responsive and uninstitutionalized.

The SIP committee met in New York promising, as best it could, that we could hazard a third year. It didn't work. From October '67 until now only two of the ten groups that began SIP had made their contributions. This year has seen deeper involvement with the successes of the Freedom Quilting Bee, with the people in Gees Bend, and with mastering the sources of assistance to grass roots programs. Six months operation this year has cost SIP $10,300.00. We gave away a good bit. As of last month we had mighty little in the bank. But bear with me. This is not a story with a bad end.

While we enjoyed our third year of operation crisis and trauma bid Dixie goodby and settled in with the rest of America. The churches turned to the crisis in the cities. The northern riots, Vietnam, college students and a Negro identity loused up the Northern liberal's view of good and evil. Religion discovered community organization. I discovered community organization. So that's what I'm doing. The Episcopal Church cut loose with a plan to fund social change, millions of dollars. Somebody then invented the Inter-religious Foundation for Community Organization (IFCO).

Many of the men who founded SIP plunged into IFCO as heroically and with as little real resources as they had in 1965. It is indicative of the upheaval of 67-68 that it wasn't the National Council of Churches that subsumed the role IFCO is hoped to play. No indeed, it was created independently.

Now friend, if you think I'm knocking these unparalleled confusions and advances you are wrong. The upheaval in Selma in 1965 that touched religious institutions is now lodged in their upper stories. While indifference and racism waste away the base of our bottom heavy churches radical ideas rip into the upper structures.

These changes conspired to end the informal fashion of operating the Selma Project. It was obvious by this February that SIP was over. April and May were used to do some thinking and to arrange a board meeting May 27 in New York. That gives you the background. What do we hope to pull out of it?

First, I had to believe I had abilities and a store of contacts, methods, and experience that justified survival. Belief in one's self comes hard sometimes, but I managed it. Second, it was obvious the Selma Project was now a regional Alabama affair. For better or worse, it no longer served as a liason with the marchers of '65.. Third, the way things stood, I was not really answerable to anyone. The distant board only knew about the program through me. I was my own evaluator.

The obvious answer is to create a non-profit corporation with a board composed of my fellow workers in central Alabama plus others in the state who have shown a committment to the area.

The board should have a majority representation of people from the Black Belt who are already known as workers in their communities. The rest could include white and black people from other parts of Alabama. These would represent, as individuals, most of the Christian and Jewish bodies that started the Project. We contemplate 25 board members. The nice thing about it is that there are enough good people to go around and each can be asked to serve because of his personal qualifications and not because he is a Unitarian or from Lowndes County. It can be a body of people who already know each other and have worked with the Project.

So constituted in Alabama, committed to rural work in the center of the state, we would propose new programs, and continue to facilitate the development of people. Composed of people from across the Black Belt, it would provide and opportunity for local workers to come together to exchange ideas and talk of plans for the whole area. I trust we could add field staff. People who already live where they work could be freed for part time or full time work for very little. A program for placing theological students in the field for a year is being investigated. I mean mostly Alabama theological students. There's no end of things waiting to be done.

Where would the money come from? This is the realm of hope. An organization with board members who represent constituencies stands a far better chance of being funded by the religious agencies than SIP under its old arrangement.

The new Project can appeal to foundations, develop and propose programs, or better, aid others in creating programs that can be funded one way or another.

Then I can start asking for and accepting consultation fees which can go into the organization. I haven't done that so far. Finally, it's worth trying.

The meeting in New York considered all this, approved it and, as a generous gesture of support, has managed to scrape up just enough for us to operate until December.

We plan to covene potential board members in July to organze. By early winter we should know whether we will be able to operate in 1969. This gives us breathing room for the changeover. Can hard workers of the Black Belt and churchmen from the middleclass do one another any good? I think so

* * *

THAT WAS WRITTEN BEFORE THE LATEST ASSASSINATION. A friend of mine read something I wrote and commented it had a faint air of apology about it. So it did. It's a problem of mine. Then the killing, a familiar liturgy unfolding around one's own thoughts, channeling them. The shame. Shame at ever occupying the unspoken position: Please excuse me for being one of those who wish to change the way we are. This can be spoken to black and white: Excuse us for risking our lives. Excuse us for being white. Excuse us dear people of — community for hinting that you are still slaves, enslaved by self hate, mutual distrust, and antique feuds. Excuse us too white folks, we know the living God. Rage. Rage washes away the apologies. Rage must produce courage or its sweetness is lost. Faith, misnamed by the faithless "fatalism", must act or it distills away. Shame, rage, faith work now to bring a surety which is peace — thanks be to God. Now may you and I have this peace, an angular peace, a seething peace, a peace of direction, a peace of a center calm, but outward directed fury, a peace of action, ugly truth, unpolished ways.

file

NEWSLETTER
SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
The Rev'd Francis X. Walter, Director
810-29th Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Number 22 July 30, 1968

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Selma Inter-religious Project has been to now a program of several national Christian and Jewish groups who were closely involved in the Civil Rights Movement in Selma. It is now in the process of incorporating itself as a non-profit agency in Alabama dedicated to the interests of the poor in central rural Alabama.

THIS MONTH THE NEWSLETTER IS IN THE FORM OF A JOURNAL of my activities. The period covered is from the date of the last newsletter up to July 13, a period of 32 days. It covers a critical event, the reorganization of the Selma Project. Next month that step will be covered in more detail.

TUESDAY, JUNE 11: In office. worked on inviting persons to serve on the board of a reorganized Selma Inter-religious Project.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12: In office doing idiot work. I used to resent this as a parish priest. Now as some other kind of priest, I don't mind. I see it was much of parochial life I though irrelevant, rather than just the crank turning and chair moving. I gladly turn cranks and staple newsletters here.

Left for Gees Bend (98 miles) 4 PM to attend twice monthly meeting of the Boykin Planning Committee. The committee was slow to gather. I spent the time over at the little quilt house talking with Ruth Mosely, leader of a group doing special quilts. (There are in all five of these groups in three counties.) Listened to some of the problems connected with this more business-like type of production.

Many members are old, perhaps all need prescription eyeglasses, few have them.

In the close Gees Bend community public criticism of one's family group or one's elders is frowned on, yet if someone is ruining a quilt what is Mrs. Mosley to do? How to make a distinction between the demands of a business and the customs of the community?

The Planning Committee, which did not start until 8:30, wrestled with a late defeat: a petition to incorporate Boykin was thrown out by the Probate Judge of Wilcox County. What went wrong on our part? Plenty. It would be so easy to blame it all on Judge Dannelly, because he really is a scoundrel.

Flamboyant enemies are a temptation to avoid self criticism. Drove home late.

THURSDAY, JUNE 13: In office. Lots of letters to type for Pat Page, SIP's secretary who works Mondays, Tuesdays, and Fridays.

FRIDAY, JUNE 14: At 8 PM five potential SIP board members from Tuscaloosa met at my house. Over beer and Diet Rite Cola they heard me out and agreed to serve. That was a nice thing to go to sleep on.

SATURDAY, JUNE 15: Celebrated the Holy Communion at Brice Hospital, Alabama's segregated mental institution, located in Tuscaloosa. We kept the covenant in a bare visiting room. I congratulated the patients again on the spirit of their devotional responses which puts to shame the brethren outside the walls. Attended a reception for professors of the Dep't of Art of the University given by my wife at our house. Betty works at the University Art Gallery.

SUNDAY, JUNE 16: Once a month I celebrate the 8 AM Holy Communion at an Episcopal mission in Tuscaloosa. Today I preached the dangers of love. The congregation of 5 took it calmly. Worked in our backyard in the neglected vegetable garden. SWAFCA's cucumbers shrivel in this drought, spelling ruin or migration for many. My two rows, well irrigated, grace our table with salads. About 11 PM, the weekly call from Stanley Selengut, our quilt co-op consultant in New York. We conclude things are going as well as can be expected, but payments to members for quilts must continue to rise.

MONDAY, JUNE 17: In office, lots of mail. More work on potential board members. Dressed neatly, at 4 PM my wife and I pay our monthly visit to the Alabama Dep't of Pensions and Securities in Tuscaloosa. Nothing has moved in our three year struggle to adopt a child. But I won't get into that story.

7 PM: Drop in on the opening of the Marca-Relli exhibition at the University Art Gallery, do a little cookie tray hauling for Betty, who directs the reception. 7:30 PM attend part of a Presbyterian "Action Group" meeting at a campus church. I have been asked to provide a program on non-profit low cost housing next week. Home late.

TUESDAY, JUNE 18: In office. Ray Fowler, of the Psychology Dep't of University came over with several graduate students to enlist SIP's aid in a summer project. They have a grant to administer the Minnesota Multi-phasic Personality Test to about 100 southern rural black people who are normal. This will help further the accuracy of the test, they say. I urged that local black people be trained (and paid) to give the test. Later a call from New York from Miss Lucretia Mc Calmont. "You've probably forgotten my name, Fr. Walter, but Jack Willis of NET told you I'd be calling." She is with "Fortune" Magazine. I gladly allow my brain to be picked. An article on southern co-ops may result. She has visited the Freedom Quilting Bee and is now a quilt addict. P.S. The article will appear in August.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19: Leave for three days. Ray Fowler and friends accompany me for an initial contact about the psychological tests. I have suggested that Minnie McMillian, the Freedom Quilting Bee production supervisor, might like to give the test to quilters in Selma Gees Bend, Alberta, Gastonberg and Beatrice.

Arrived in Alberta (85 miles) in time for the F.Q.B. monthly board meeting. That afternoon worked on books of co-op, helped with monthly payroll. Drove back up to highway 5 (10 miles) to call Miss Scharberg of the Smithsonian Institution to give names of those of us coming to the Washington Folklife Festival. Also called Dan Harrell in Pine Hill. Dan, director of Southwest Ala. Self Help Housing, agreed to speak to the Presbyterian Action Group in Tuscaloosa. As usual, spent night at Witherspoon's. They have bought a second hand studio couch to replace the small cot I have grown so accustomed to. The new couch is very comfortable. The psychologists return to Tuscaloosa pleased and ready to begin testing next week.

THURSDAY, JUNE 20: Besides co-op business, the next two days are spent in a fast moving struggle to help David Mingo, husband of a co-op board member, acquire some land in Gees Bend. Mr. Mingo was evicted by a certain landowner for registering to vote. His family now lives on a plot of land in Gees Bend, but has none to farm. A neighbor, old Mr. Bennie Irby, has been foreclosed. The land has been sold at the courthouse to this very same landowner, David Mingo's former boss. Mr Mingo's efforts to buy the land himself have not been successful. Another peice of Gees Bend is lost. I managed to get David Mingo and Erskine Smith, a Birmingham lawyer, together through a trip by me (20 miles) back to the phone. Erskine tells us somthing we didn't know: Alabama has a right of redemption law that allows a bankrupt person to redeem land up to two years after foreclosure for the auction price plus 10%. This right itself can be sold. We discover that the landowner, in his certainty, has not had this right bought from Mr. Irby. There is a fast ride back to Gees Bend (20 miles) to find a copy of the county newspaper that describes the land. Then back to the telephone (20 miles) to dictate the description to Smith's secretary. Smith will then prepare a proper form for David Mingo and mail it. I got back to Mr Mingo with this unexpected new opportunity. We go cautiously to Mr Irby about it. He seems willing because David would be glad to allow the old gentleman to live in his house until he dies. Everyone is excited, but it really seems too good to be able to work out. It depends on a F.H.A. loan, after all.

I drive on from the Mingo's to Selma (45 miles). By 4;30 I'm asking Fr. Crowley of the Edmundit Order if we can use St. Elizabeth's for the SIP organizational conference July 12, 13. He graciously agrees. On to Ash Creek Church in Lowndes County (30 miles) for the monthly meeting of the Anti-Poverty Board of the Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights. I give a run down at the end of the meeting on national churches that have funds for such groups as L.C.C.M.H.R. Back to Alberta and the Witherspoons to spend the night (75 miles).

FRIDAY, JUNE 21: In Wilcox County. Day spent on co-op business and on further plans with Mr. Mingo to clinch this deal. The forms did not arrive today from the lawyer.

On the way home I stop off in Alberta to talk to Mr. Malachi Irby (who has the phone we use all the time) about what he can find out about an old house the co-op would like to buy and have moved. He has a friend who works for the white house-mover. Everything is by indirection. The white people have to be treated like children. The name Freedom Quilting Bee, is enough to offend them permanently, much worse to dare approach them directly about a house moving bid. Mr. Irby hears me out at his grist mill. He is preparing hog feed. He will help, but doubts we can do anything to secure this particular house.

I drive back to Tuscaloosa early enough to catch Pat in the office and look over the mail (85 miles).

SATURDAY, JUNE 22: At home. Leave at noon for 2 PM Self-Help Housing Board meeting at Antioch Baptist Church in Camden (100 miles). Stop off on way home to check with Mr. Malachi Irby about the house. No news.

SUNDAY, JUNE 23: Celebrated 8 AM Holy Communion at Canterbury Chapel at the University and preached at 9:30 AM. Both clergy are out of town so I am substituting. Preached on the Second Lesson, "Foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." I start talking about my Franklin, Louisiana great grandmother's four poster bed which we own. How it defines, as the past, who I take myself to be, how as a definition from the past it serves as a template for the impulse that comes from a God of the future.

After that service a visitor asks if he might have a copy of the sermon. I confessed it was now only notes on an envelope. He then explained he didn't want it for "religious" purposes, but as a "cultural anthropogist", wanted it in reference to his doctoral thesis. I tentatively accepted this as a compliment.

Left for Birmingham (50 miles) to stand as godfather at the baptism of Fr. and Mrs. Wirtz's daughter.

MONDAY, JUNE 24: The Feast of St. John the Baptist. I have been a priest ten years today. I try prayerfully to reflect on this, but find myself wondering whether my wife should not have commemorated this with some sort of occasion. But this would only be a substitute for the parochial bashes that I have said I loathe. That bed again!

Spend much of the day working on a new F.Q.B. price list that must show payment to members , material costs, retail and wholesale prices. How much dare we raise the quilt prices? The Board must make the final decision. Memos to all those who will attend the SIP meet in Selma. Everyone asked to serve has agreed, an admirable record. Later, I learn that David Mingo got Mr. Bennie Irby to sign over his right of redemption. That venture is still percolating.

At 7 PM I introduced Dan Harrell to the Presbyterian action group in Tuscaloosa, He gave a great talk. it resulted at the end in a challenge to the group to get to work on a non-profit housing corporation. Alas, no sparks flew in response, but may later. Betty gave Dan and his secretary supper after the meeting. We talked till late, then they left.

TUESDAY, JUNE 25: In office. Bought pair of tires on sale for F.Q.B. van that will carry us to Washington. Today there began the long planned two day leadership training workshop for the co-op board. Ezra Cunningham, field worker for the Southern Co-op Development Program, arranged this. Fr. McKnight, John Zippert, and others came over from their Lafayette, La. office. It involves sensitivity training and is a very, very sound approach toward co-op development. Called Selengut for advice on the new price list.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26: Left for Gees Bend 8 AM. Sat in on second day of the board workshop. In a real business session in which I presented the projected prices for discussion, while the group trainers observed, my relationship to the co-op came up for criticism. The advisor's role as developer is an ambiguous one, similar to a molecule bouncing back and forth in the boundry between a liquid and gaseous state. This is no job for people who can't live with ambiguity. It is the job of McKnight's project to push me and the co-op toward maturity and independence.

I had [illegible] a private workshop in book-keeping with Mr. Broussard, the S.C.D.P.'s accountant. He was pleased with the state of the Freedom Quilting Bee books. At 8 PM the Boykin Planning Committee met to await lawyer Erskine Smith who was scheduled to come to hear about the lakefront property problem. He did not make it that time. Stayed after to talk with a Vista volunteer now living in Gees Bend. To bed at the Witherspoon's late.

Oh yes, the Psychology people are back to start the Minnesota Multiphasic Test.

At the quilt office today a tape recorder droned, "Yes or no, people in power are out to get me." or something like that. The "normal" people took pencil in hand to respond.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27: At 8 AM, on schedule, a "New York Times" writer and a photographer arrived at the Witherspoons. This was the end result of several calls to me and a big hooraw in New York over an earlier article that gave the impression that the Parish-Hadley Company was employing people in Alabama at slave wages. The "Times" felt a fuller story was indicated and we were happy to oblige. The reporter, Mrs. Reif, was understanding and incredibly thorough. It was a tribute to the finesse of the "Times", I thought, that she carefully wrote down the names of the birds as we identified their calls for her. And sure enough, the birds appeared, letter perfect, in the article. The photographer, Mr. Liebowitz, had trouble understanding our drawls, was hot, and got confused over collards but enjoyed it all the same, for he had been hit on the head with a brick during his last assignment. This was different. They left about 4 PM.

Did some book-keeping work for F.Q.B. The house deal seems to have fallen though, the owner won't sell, Our need for space is desparate.

From 7 until 10 PM Fr. McKnight's team met with the Boykin Planning Committee. There was a good response from the committee and a mutual decision to have a far broder workshop in the future. Drove back to Tuscaloosa late that night (95 miles).

FRIDAY, JUNE 28: In office. Got draft of a proposal from the Selma Day Care Center to the national Episcopal Church for a grant.

It looks good but it will take more spelling out.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29: Worked in garden some. Call from Mrs. Reif for more information for the "Times" story.

SUNDAY, JUNE 30: After lunch drove to Alberta, loaded van with quilts, pot holders, bonnets, and aprons for an early departure for Washington to be in the Smithsonian Folklife Festival. To bed at the Witherspoons.

MONDAY, JULY 1: Up at ungodly hour to the smell of frying chicken. By 6 AM our 1965 Ford van, but newly purchased with Southern Co-op Development money, pulled out. Aboard were Callie Young, Estelle Witherspoon, Ruth Mosley, Gency Black and Francis Walter. Arrived in Charlotte, N.C. to spend the night with Bob and Jan Valder. Bob is with the NAACP Inc. Fund, but was of late director of the Ala. Council on Human Relations. Aside from burning oil the van ran very well.

TUESDAY, JULY 2: Good trip, spent the night outside Washington as guests of the Virginia Theological Seminary in Alexandria.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3: We breakfasted at the Seminary with John and Dale Fletcher. They are Alabamians, he teaches. Two of us in the van had never been to Washington. The rest only briefly. The one place the ladies wanted to see was the Kennedy graves. So that's the way we began our visit. It depressed me. For me and my friends everyone we associated with Washington was either dead or in jail.

The Festival on the Mall was as charmingly casual and as skimpily funded as last year. The latter the fault of Congress. Two of Washington's gentlemen, Ralph Rinzler and James Morris, moved about welcoming Kentucky soap makers, or orienting a lost Basque shepherd from Idaho. We got oriented at the Continental Hotel, found the tent for quilting, and then relaxed at the opening folk music festivity that evening.

THURSDAY, FRIDAY, SATURDAY, SUNDAY JULY 4, 5, 6, 7: People by the hundreds of thousands poured by. "Look dear, quilting. That's how they used to do years ago." The belief of these thousands in progress was touching. The co-op sold oodles, the bonnets and pot holders all went. One voluptuous quilt sold at $200.00. Recognition and interest came like balm from Gilead. We had all that music to listen to and there was much more soul in the Festival than last year. One could be proud of the Folklife Festival, it too was the poor of America, as they sang and worked: fairskinned Melvin Watson, carver of toys in the mountains of North Carolina; the Sea Island singers, black as ebony; the Coushatta tribe, weavers of baskets; a singer of ballards from the Hudson valley, mariachi bands from Texas; a Czech immigrant, player of the hammered dulcimer.

MONDAY, JULY 8: Tired as we could be, we left Washington early. Spent the night again with our friends in Charlotte.

TUESDAY, JULY 9: Going through Atlanta we stopt by the airport to check the "New York Times" and there was the story about the co-op. Bought ten copies.

Arrived in Alberta wishing I could sing "Lord, I'm Coming Home" because my companions were sure raising it sweet and clear. Time 5:30 PM.

After hugs and kisses, it turned out Mr. Witherspoon and Mr. Young had news for us. Miraculously, the white owner of the house and land we had always wanted to buy had changed her mind. Now she wanted to sell. All of us piled back into our cars, joined by Mr. Cunningham, the SCDP worker, to look at the house. It is a slavery time landmark. Only recently redone inside, it even has plumbing and a kitchen. Calls were made at the phone to confirm a time when the owner and the officers could get together. But she is starting at an impossible price. I left for Tuscaloosa bone tired but excited by this break. Home by 9 PM (590 miles).

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10: In office. Worked on final arrangements for Selma Project convention this Friday. Mail. Helped enroll some kids who live near my office in a summer reading workshop operated by the University. Call from Neal Maxwell, a reporter for the "Wall Street Journal", for information on a story about incorporating Negro communities in Alabama.

THURSDAY, JULY 11: Slept late. In office. Then paid call on a retired real estate sales lady, who showed her mettle two years ago when Betty and I ran into opposition in buying a house. After I got her interest she volunteered to ride down to Alberta to help, if asked, in our first encounter with the owner of that house.

2 PM we leave for Alberta (85 miles). A board meeting is hotly discussing the offer as we arrive. It adjourns so all can see the house when the owner arrives at 5 PM. After seeing the house, the board is unanimous in wanting it. Negotiations begin. This is a very big move for the co-op. Drove back to Tuscaloosa.

FRIDAY, JULY 12: In office. Leave for Selma for the SIP meeting. This is a big move for me. The outcome will determine whether I will be in Alabama in 1969 doing this work. An early arrival and I go out to buy the groceries. We'll cook for ourselves.

The evening session went well, mostly getting-to-know-you stuff. What a crowd, 30 people, all my friends, black, white, those who have suffered, those who have not, those who have only thought, those who have acted. Can we possibly unite aroung common needs? After the evening session the men go to sleep on mattresses in a recreation hall. The women go to the Rectory. The Edmundites are away at a general convention of their own in Vermont. Their course too, in question.

SATURDAY, JULY 13: Up at 6 AM though not my turn to cook, I end up in the kitchen before breakfast. The day's session went very well. At its conclusion incorporation papers were signed, a steering committee was charged with a long bill of instructions, a date of August 17 was chosen for another board work session. More about this in a later newsletter.

2 PM Erskine Smith the lawyer, who is now a SIP board member, left for Gees Bend with me. We did three things: consulted with Estelle Witherspoon on the tactics of real estate buying, talked with Boykin people on the land problem and set a date to meet again, gave David Mingo a chance to consult with Erskine about the redemption sale which is still pending.

The Freedom Quilting Bee

THE FREEDOM QUILTING BEE

Route 1, Box 72
Alberta, Alabama 36720

The Freedom Quilting Bee is a handcraft cooperative. It was organized in March of 1965 with over 150 women joining together to market quilts, sunbonnets, pot holders and other items of handwork and stitchery. The Freedom Quilting Bee has managed to teach new skills to old fingers, establish quality control of products, and infuse a spirit of dignity in individual accomplishment, all with a cooperatively agreed upon financial return for each member.

Quilting has been practiced continuously in Black Belt Alabama for 140 years. While Freedom Quilting Bee quilts derive from classic American patterns they are distinctly different from the more common Appalachian or New England types. The imaginative designs are decorative in the bold use of color and the strong contrasts between border combinations and blocks. It has been said that some of the designs are unconscious forms of Op art but perhaps the flattened abstracted designs just give a warmth in appearance not often seen in today's style of quilt making. Repetition is not one of the quilt maker's virtues. Each quilt is unique.

Many quilters and members of their families have been active in the Civil Rights Movement. For some this has meant eviction from house and land, foreclosure of loans, and the end of credit. These burdens, coupled with the automation of cotton farming have forced into being a number of cooperative experiments.

Rural Negroes across the South are using co-ops in an attempt to earn their own way. The Freedom Quilting Bee is one of these. The average annual income per family in this cooperative is under $800.00. The first step has been to make available to a woman the opportunity to earn additional money for her family. A cottage industry. With this encouragement some members have been able to increase their family income from 25% to 50%.

Formation of the Freedom Quilting Bee was initiated by the Selma Inter-religious Project which is an inter-faith ministry to Selma and central Alabama. It is sponsored by religious groups that participated in the Selma March: Roman Catholic, Jewish, Protestant and Unitarian. The director of the project serves as chairman of the cooperative's advisory committee.

Since its formation the cooperative has won national recognition from artists, designers and those concerned with the preservation of folk art. In July, 1967 the Freedom Quilting Bee exhibited at the Smithsonian Institution's Folklife Festival. In August, 1967 a small foundation grant allowed the quilters to employ Miss Mary Brooks, a former graduate student in the Department of Art at the University of Georgia, and Mrs. Eugene Witherspoon, the first president of the cooperative. The employment of full time managers was a step the co–op took to handle increased business and plans for future development.

★

The Freedom Quilting Bee came about through the help of many people. Your help is invited. Individuals, clubs and church groups are invited to send scraps from sewing baskets or garment factories. These are very much needed.

The co-op needs retail outlets. You may be able to suggest a store or gift shop.

Most of all it needs cash donations to its technical and educational fund. This fund is administered by the Alabama Council on Human Relations. Tax deductible donations may be made to the co-op through this fund. Checks may be made to "The Alabama Council on Human Relations. Inc. Freedom Quilting Bee Fund."

IN ORDERING

The pot holders are decorated with hand embroidered original designs. The popular "Hoot Owl" holder was designed by Mrs. Wiley McMillan. These come in all colors.

The sunbonnets were re-created from an heirloom dug from a trunk. The bonnets are often used for beach wear or for gardening. They are made in prints in all colors.

A quilt should be chosen carefully. You will find sizes listed on the order blank. A true quilt is not intended to be used as a spread or coverlet. But most people want them that way so we make sizes that will fit over the pillow. The sizes are listed to help you but you may place a special order for any size quilt. King size quilts are all made specially from your measurements.

There are literally thousands of quilt patterns. Each has its distinctive name. We make all the classic American patterns. Library books on quilting can help you if you don't know the patterns but most of our customers let us select a pattern for them. Or if necessary we can send sketches.

Quilts come in black and white, in two or three solid colors, or in mixtures of prints and solids. We will try to match the colors if you specify them.

If you place a special order you may specify exactly the design, the size and the colors. We will try to match swatches. Special orders take time. We also repair, remake, and reproduce old quilts. Quilts require no special care. They can be used as wild wall hangings, for picnic blankets or to set off an antique bed. We recommend they be dry cleaned.

There is a good deal of space on the order blank for you to tell us just what you want. The quilt you order will be unique. It will last a long time. The Freedom Quilting Bee wants you to be satisfied.

THE FREEDOM QUILTING BEE
c|o Miss Mary Brooks
Route 1, Box 72
Alberta, Alabama 36720

ORDER FORM

Name
Address
City	State	Zip
How Many?	Article	Price, Each	Amount
	Pot holder	$ 1.50
	Sunbonnet	3.50
	Baby Bed Quilt 38"x50"	12.00
	Single Bed Quilt 66"x86"	25.00
	Double Bed Quilt 76"x86"	30.00
	Double Bed Coverlet Quilt 80"x106"	35.00
	King Size Quilt (Made to Order)	50.00
		Plus postage that will be added.
		You will be billed for the total amount when your order is mailed to you.

REQUESTS or INSTRUCTIONS:

WHERE:

At the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church in Gees Bend, Wilcox County, Alabama. Gees Bend is an all Negro community located in a deep bend of the Alabama River. It is 90 miles from Tuscaloosa, 140 from Mobile, 40 from Selma. Gees Bend is also called Boykin. Once you get on county #29 anyone can tell you where the Pleasant Grove Church is in Gees Bend. It would be easier if you could get there while it is still light. One is in Gees Bend when one arrives at a wooden store on the right, white washed school buildings on the left, the pavement ends a quarter mile beyond.

WHY: Nothing has excited the wrath of some Alabama political figures more than Negro initiated attempts to create and operate anti-poverty programs in the Black Belt. Because of the bias of indifference of Alabama news media it has been well nigh impossible to hear any but the opposition's side of the value of these programs. We are convinced many Alabamians would like to know more and might take the here-to-fore unusual step of simply finding out from the groups themselves who they are and what they are doing. We are giving you that opportunity.

HOUSEKEEPING DETAILS:

Informal clothes for the workshop, one set of good clothes for Sunday. Ladies may wear anything but shorts aren't usually worn in Gees Bend. Bring a flashlight. All meals and expenses are included in the $5.00 fee.

For more information don't hesitate to write or call us. We'd like to encourage those who attended the last workshop to talk up this one.

- - - - - - - - - - - - -

RURAL LIKE WORKSHOP: ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS

NAME _____ telephone _____

ADDRESS _____

$5.00 registration enclosed. Checks made out "Selma Inter-religious Prokect c/o The Episcopal Society" are tax deductible.

MAILING ADDRESS:

SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT
810-29th Avenue
TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA 35401
(205) 758-2301

file

TO: INTERESTED ALABAMIANS

FROM: THE PLEASANT GROVE BAPTIST CHURCH, The Rev. G.G. Pettway, Pastor Boykin (GeesBend) Alabama.

THE SELMA INTER-RELIGIOUS PROJECT, The Rev. Francis X. Walter, Director 810-29th Avenue/ Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401/ 205 758-2301

ABOUT: OUR SECOND WEEKEND WORKSHOP June 23-24-25 Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

The Last workshop in December 1966 was so successful we're having another one. We're calling this one

A RURAL LIFE WORKSHOP: NEGRO GRASS ROOTS ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS

WHAT: Like last time it will be a weekend of seminars, lectures, informal discussion, inspection tours, good food, and recreation designed to give the participants an over all knowledge of the exciting, sometimes controversial programs operating in the Black Belt.

Noted local leaders, board members, and officers of these organizations have agreed to conduct the programs. We will hear from leaders of:

THE SOUTHWEST ALABAMA FARMERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION(recipient of $400,000.00 OEO demonstration grant)

SOUTHWEST ALABAMA SELF-HELP HOUSING, INC.(recipient of $38,000.00 OEO demonstration grant)

ANTI-POVERTY COORDINATING COMMITTEE, WILCOX COUNTY S.C.L.C. INC. (adult education, daycare center, youth programs; recipient of $302,000.00 OEO grant)

LOWNDES COUNTY CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAM(adult education, child and youth programs; recipient of $241,000.00 OEO grant)

There will also be time to enjoy some good country cooking, fish, maybe go on a coon hunt, and meet all sorts of interesting people.

WHEN: June 23,24,25 Friday, Saturday and Sunday 1967. Come anytime Friday. Officially we begin Friday evening but there will be plenty to do and see before. Participants will spend Friday and Saturday nights at the workshop and leave after church Sunday morning. If you can not come Friday come Saturday.

WHO: The Rev. Francis X. Walter of the Selma Inter-religous Project and Rev. G.G. Pettway and the deacons of Pleasant Grove Church are enthusiastically sponsoring their second workshop. Fr. Walter is responsible for the program. Rev. Pettway and the church are supplying the building, arranging hospitality, and inviting local workshop participants.

JUSTICE

'Justice, Justice, Shall ye Pursue . . .'

by NICHOLAS deB. KATZENBACH
Acting Attorney General of the U. S.

INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPARTMENT, AFL-CIO

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

JACK CONWAY, Executive Director

Vice-Presidents

I. W. ABEL
J. A. BEIRNE
GEORGE BURDON
JOSEPH CURRAN
KARL FELLER
MAX GREENBERG
A. F. HARTUNG
ALBERT J. HAYES
RALPH HELSTEIN
O. A. KNIGHT
WALTER L. MITCHELL
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
FRANK ROSENBLUM
LOUIS STULBERG
ARNOLD ZANDER

FOREWORD

by

JACK CONWAY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
INDUSTRIAL UNION
DEPARTMENT, AFL-CIO

TWO thousand years ago the Roman philosopher, Cicero, said, "The good of the people is the chief law."

It is concern for the "good of the people" which permeates this address by Acting Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach delivered before the Conference on Extension of Legal Services to the Poor.

His concern is humane; his ideas are practical.

He suggests that communities should include extension of legal services to the poor in their anti-poverty programs.

He calls for "increased involvement of the legal profession in the war against poverty."

He sees "a new breed of lawyers . . . emerging, dedicated to using the law as an instrument of orderly and constructive social change."

And, he adds, ". . . we are beginning to see the growth of new forms of organizations to provide legal service to the poor."

FROM my own experience with the development of the community action programs in the war against poverty, I know that citizen involvement is essential.

The war against poverty must be a massive attack that moves along all fronts with the same urgency as an army of liberation.

In order to achieve the profound social changes necessary to wipe out poverty, we must commit the moral force of our entire society.

We must become involved. We must have what Mr. Katzenbach calls "that willingness to stand up for the poor and to help the poor stand up for themselves."

This address by Acting Attorney General Katzenbach teems with exciting, socially creative ideas.

It should be read by all thoughtful persons who are courageously involving themselves in a tough fight—the war against poverty.

'Justice, Justice, Shall ye Pursue. . .'

An Address by

Acting Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach to the Conference on Extension of Legal Services to the Poor, Washington, D. C., November 12, 1964.

IT IS a pleasure for me to join today with such a distinguished group.

And, in view of the general importance of the subject that brings us here, I am pleased to see that this group consists of experts in administration, sociology, welfare, social work and other fields—and not just lawyers.

You may, as a result, be able to get something done. Thomas Jefferson once had occasion to observe that for "one hundred and fifty lawyers (to) do business together is not to be expected."

But it is fit that this group includes both lawyers and the others of you who are expert in the broader fields of social service.

For ours is a time in which we are experiencing not an expanded sense of charity, but what is really an expanding sense of justice.

This expanding sense of justice has, in the past two years, resulted in a series of advances in our attitude toward justice for the poor:

THE Supreme Court's decision in the Gideon case established the right of poor defendants to have attorneys appointed for them in state cases.

The recently enacted Criminal Justice Act established standards for representation in federal courts which had been sought unsuccessfully for 25 years.

The National Bail Conference last spring already has prompted 60 bail reform projects or studies.

And a new Office of Criminal Justice is just beginning its broad-ranging work in the Department of Justice.

All of these developments demonstrate a growing national concern for the legal rights of the poor. So far, that concern has focussed on the rights of a poor person accused of a crime.

Now, the concern is extending beyond the confines of criminal law. And this is as it should be.

Hopelessness and poverty do not observe neat jurisdictional lines between civil and criminal.

INDEED, there is irony in our devoting great attention and substantial resources to give legal help to poor people when they are accused of a crime, but failing to provide such help until that point.

Certainly our concern for the indigent accused is not misplaced. But it must not become exclusive.

We must be concerned with the jail sentence which a poor defendant might or might not receive.

But we must be equally concerned with the broader difficulties of the 20 percent of our population which is, in Attorney General Kennedy's phrase, serving a life sentence of poverty.

It is justice, rather than charity, which calls on us to see to it that the law and the lawyer are involved in the effort to reverse that life sentence.

I am sure there is little quarrel with such a high-minded solution. I am sure all lawyers—and all citizens—subscribe unanimously to the relevant platitudes.

The interesting aspect of this problem is how little it is understood to be a problem in the first place.

When I described this conference to one acquaintance and explained that it did not refer to attorneys for indigent defendants, he asked—well-meaning—what then, was this conference about, helping poor people do things like prepare wills? His question is not to be scoffed at.

MICHAEL HARRINGTON has aptly described the millions living in poverty in this country as the invisible poor.

It is no less certain that the problems of the poor which a lawyer can help solve are so far outside the experience of most of us that they are invisible problems.

But for the poor person, living in helplessness, they are overpowering.

Most of us have little contact with welfare laws or with housing codes aimed at rat infestation or with minimum wage laws or with protections against usurious loans or instalment purchase contracts.

And even if we did have that contact, we are equipped as articulate, educated citizens to deal with such matters.

To us, laws and regulations are protections and guides, established for our benefit, and for us to use.

But to the poor, they are a hostile maze, established as harassment, at all costs to be avoided.

CONSIDER, for example, what happened to five men in upstate New York in January of last year (1963).

For six months, they had participated faithfully in a work program for unemployed fathers whose families were receiving public assistance.

But on January 30, they refused to carry out their day's assignment. Their reason? It was near zero temperature and the task was to cut brush along a country road where the snow was waist-deep.

The five men offered to do different work—indeed, they requested, to do so.

But they were sent home and reported to the district attorney, who secured their conviction for "a willful act designed to interfere with the proper administration of public assistance and care."

They were sentenced to terms of four to eight months. It took until this past May to have the convictions reversed by New York's highest court.

THIS reversal did not just happen. It took extensive work by two lawyers provided by the American Civil Liberties Union.

It will take the extensive work of many more lawyers—and laymen—to right the wrongs which we can prevent but which the poor cannot.

For there are thousands of other examples, less dramatic perhaps, but equally unjust and equally demoralizing, which occur every day, throughout the country.

There is the case of the man caught up in debts who could have gotten a clean start with counseling and assistance in going into bankruptcy.

He did, finally, receive legal assistance. A defense attorney was appointed to represent him after he committed a petty offense. He wanted to be arrested so that his family would then become eligible for welfare.

There are large numbers of poor people who discover that they have a binding obligation to pay a finance company for furniture never delivered or for a TV set that never worked.

There are large numbers whose cars or washing machines are repossessed after months of payments—who have no idea they are entitled to the return of their equity.

There are large numbers whose public assistance is reduced or revoked—who have no concept of their rights of appeal.

THESE are the people on whose behalf President Johnson has undertaken the war against poverty.

These are the people whose problems constitute the new area of public concern—indeed the new area of law—with which we are dealing at this conference.

To be sure these are not new problems. It is our appreciation of them that is new.

There has been long and devoted service to the legal problems of the poor by legal aid societies and public defenders in many cities.

But, without disrespect to this important work, we cannot translate our new concern into successful action simply by providing more of the same.

There must be new techniques, new services, and new forms of inter-professional cooperation to match our new interest.

Legal scholarship is beginning to enter this new field—to analyze the rights of welfare recipients, of instalment purchasers, of people afflicted by slum housing, crime, and despair.

There are signs, too, that a new breed of lawyers is emerging, dedicated to using the law as an instrument of orderly and constructive social change.

THE Law Students Civil Rights Research Council which previously focussed on discrimination is now expanding its area of concern to include the legal problems of the poor.

Some of the best law schools—Yale, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Columbia—are adjusting their curricula so that, for instance, administrative law deals not only with the SEC but also with ADC.

Experimental internship programs like those run by Georgetown Law Center are beginning to infuse academic training with experience drawn from the reality of life, rather than the disembodied "facts" of appellate decisions.

Finally, we are beginning to see the growth of new forms of organizations to provide legal service to the poor.

The Committee on Group Legal Services of the California Bar Association has just produced a report proposing a massive revision of the rules governing group legal practice.

The Legal Aid Committee of the Judicial Conference here in Washington has just given unanimous approval to a proposal for neighborhood law firms to supplement the services of the lawyers' referral service, legal aid and the public defender agency.

Similar plans are underway in New Haven, Los Angeles and Boston.

Other communities planning comprehensive anti-poverty programs can be expected to include similar provision for the extension of legal services to the poor.

And the Office of Economic Opportunity has indicated a willingness to support such programs, both as part of a community action program and also as a separate research and demonstration project undertaken by law schools, bar associations and other institutions.

With new resources available, and with the increased involvement of the legal profession in the war against poverty, we can anticipate a rapid acceleration in the extension of legal services for the poor.

Your meeting here this week should provide a major impetus to this movement.

ONE of the threshold problems in this new area is simply to make rights known. Laws do little good unless people know about them. For a poor person to hold rights in theory satisfies only the theory.

We have to begin asserting those rights—and help the poor assert those rights. Unknown, unasserted rights are no rights at all.

Second, even if rights are known, they can provide and protect little if they are entangled in a maze of technicality, detail, and subsections.

Faced with such complexity, even the informed poor are given the choice of walking through life with a lawyer at their side, or surrendering to the "can't fight city hall" philosophy.

Third, the protection of the rights of the poor depends on advocacy.

If the poor are to be treated with fairness and with dignity, their side must be presented fully and forcibly.

There must be lawyers from all parts of the law, not merely from legal aid societies willing to represent the poor man in trouble.

And fourth, we must generate an understanding that law alone is no answer.

If we thought that courts were the place to resolve every dispute, we should be devoting our attention not to providing legal services for the poor, but to immediately finding thousands of judges for our courts.

THE realization of rights in our society is only ultimately—and inefficiently—achieved in courts.

We do well to recall the late Karl Llewellyn's description of the right to obtain damages for breach of contract:

> "That right could rather more accurately be phrased somewhat as follows: If the other party does not perform as agreed, you can sue, and if you have a fair lawyer, and nothing goes wrong with your witnesses or the jury, and you give up four or five days of time and some ten to thirty percent of the proceeds, and wait two to twenty months, you will probably get a judgment for a sum considerably less than what the performance would have been worth—which, if the other party is solvent and has not secreted his assets, you can in further due course collect with six percent interest for delay."

Our legal system works because litigation is the exception, not the rule. For rights to be worth anything, they must be honored—without lawyers.

COURTS are not the only forums in which rights are adjudicated.

There are administrative proceedings, there are dealings with landlords, merchants, social workers, and welfare officials—with all the people whose decisions can deeply change the lives of the poor.

It is in these areas, far more often than in the courts, that the poor person needs a counselor and an advocate.

You and I, in our daily lives, act as our own advocates. The poor do not. They concede defeat. They fear to argue because they fear retaliation.

The poor need advocates, not simply to present their side of the story but to give them hope, to demonstrate that the law is not an enemy, but a guardian, and that public officials are not their masters, but their servants.

And this is a function which can and must be filled not only by lawyers, but by concerned laymen. It does not take a lawyer to right every wrong. It does not even take professional training.

It takes only a human being with the capacity to recognize and respond to injustice.

AS AN example, let me recall the case on the West Coast of a woman with seven children, supported by welfare. A fire destroyed the roof of their house. The woman was too poor to move or repair the damage.

The response of the welfare agency was to cut off her welfare payments. She was living, they said, in unsuitable housing.

It does not take a lawyer to react to such a determination—and it did not.

A young woman who heard about this case took it upon herself to become an advocate—to go to the welfare authorities and indignantly ask what was the legal authority for the suspension of welfare.

The welfare check was issued immediately.

It is this kind of example which we must follow, and inspire in others. It is this kind of problem which can be solved without a law degree.

Not every injury requires a surgeon; not every injustice requires an attorney.

The need is for a spirit and a system of legal first-aid. We need more people like the young woman I just described.

We need what is, in effect, a new profession—a profession of advocates for the poor, made up of human beings from all professions, committed to helping others who are in trouble.

That job is too big—and, I would add, too important—to be left only to lawyers.

Until we can achieve that kind of broad involvement, that willingness to stand up for the poor and to help the poor stand up for themselves, old wrongs will go unredressed and new wrongs will occur.

And neither the poverty nor the injustice suffered by the poor will be remedied.

THE aim of the anti-poverty program, after all, is not simply to put money in people's pockets.

It is to put hope in their hearts and pride in their step.

President Johnson has described the anti-poverty program as one which "keeps faith with and puts faith in the dignity and capacity of the individual."

There is no more essential ingredient of such dignity than justice—not only justice in our courts, administered by judges and by lawyers, but justice in our society, with each of us playing a part.

The Hebrew prophets spoke not to lawyers alone when they commanded: "Justice, justice, shall ye pursue."

For Additional Copies, Please Write:

INFORMATION CENTER

INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPARTMENT, AFL-CIO

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N. W.

WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

PUBLICATION NO. 59 33 Printed in U.S.A.

DECEMBER 1964

JUSTICE

Landmark Case Being Prepared

Law Students Come to Aid of Negro Rapists

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the summer last year 28 law students spread through 11 Southern states to test a theory.

Long suspected but never proved conclusively, the theory is that Negroes facing rape charges in the South are more likely to wind up in the electric chair than whites convicted of rape.

The statistics those students marshaled — at a cost of more than $35,000 — are now being pressed on the Supreme Court in what could become a landmark case. Titled Maxwell vs. Bishop, it concerns specifically an Arkansas Negro, William L. Maxwell, 26, who is in death row at the Arkansas State Penitentiary.

Maxwell was tried in the circuit court of Garland County, Ark., in 1962 for the rape of a 35-year-old, unmarried white woman. He was convicted and sentenced to death.

APPEALS REJECTED

Various appeals, including one to the Supreme Court last year, were turned down and Maxwell's execution was scheduled for last Sept. 2.

A day earlier, however, Supreme Court Justice Byron R. White delayed electrocution so that Maxwell could appeal to the high court again.

Maxwell is described in court papers as indigent. His case has been taken up by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Legal Defense and Educational Fund and by a University of Pennsylvania law professor, Anthony G. Amsterdam, and others.

In a 70-page brief filed with the court this week, they do not argue over circumstances of the rape itself. Rather, they depict Maxwell as one victim in a 20-year pattern in Southern states in which, they claim, juries are prone to mete out the death sentence to Negroes tried and convicted of raping white women.

'SEEDS VIOLENCE'

And they suggest that the situation seeds violence among Southern Negroes.

In Arkansas itself, the law students — and consulting criminal lawyers, criminologists and statisticians — studied 19 counties and 55 rape cases dating back two decades.

Two of the major findings, used in the Maxwell case, are these:

—Of 19 Negroes convicted of raping white women, nine were sentenced to death. In cases where both the man and the woman were either white or Negro, only five death sentences were imposed.

—No convictions of white men for raping Negro women were found.

NOT CONVINCED

Thus, the study contended, a Negro convicted of raping a white woman had close to a 50 per cent chance of receiving the death sentence, while a man convicted of raping a woman of his own race stood a 14 per cent chance of receiving the death sentence.

These figures were presented to U.S. District Court Judge J. Smith Henley of Arkansas earlier this year. In August he said he was not convinced and refused to issue an order freeing Maxwell from prison.

Maxwell, Henley said, "has made no effort here to show that the individual jury which tried and convicted him acted in his particular case with racial discrimination."

In fact, Henley said, Garland County was not one of the 19 counties in the state covered in statistics presented to the court.

He added: "While the statistical evidence produced in this case is more extensive and sophisticated than has been produced heretofore the court is not convinced that it is sufficiently broad, accurate, or precise as to establish satisfactorily that Arkansas juries in general practice unconstitutional racial discrimination in rape cases involving Negro men and white women. . . ."

Undeterred, the civil rights lawyers are asking the Supreme Court to continue to stay Maxwell's execution and clear the way for consideration of their thesis in the U.S. Circuit Court in St. Louis, Mo.

Ed — you were asking once about rape statistics — thought this might interest you

Susan

 JUSTICE

JUDGES

Interpreter in the Front Line

(See Cover)

Every major human confrontation imprints names and images on the minds of those who witness it, and the struggle for civil rights has left deep imprints, especially in the South. There were the marchers streaming over Selma's Pettus Bridge on their way to Montgomery, Ala., after having been stopped by tear gas and cattle prods the day before. There was the blank puzzlement on the faces of Collie Leroy Wilkins and his two accomplices after their conviction for violating the civil rights of Selma Marcher Viola Liuzzo, after they had been previously acquitted of murdering her. There were the pictures of Negro voters forming a long line outside an Alabama country store to vote for the first time; of Governor George Wallace "standing in the schoolhouse door"; and of a younger Martin Luther King (before his Nobel Prize) organizing and leading the Montgomery bus boycott through to success.

Millions of Americans know these names and remember these scenes. Yet few know the name of the man central to them all, Frank Minis Johnson, the U.S. district judge for Alabama's 23 southeastern counties. At 48, Johnson has established an impressive record of calm and considered judgment that has stamped him as one of the most important men in America. In 11½ years of interpreting and enforcing the U.S. Constitution, he has wrought social and political changes that affect all of Alabama, all of the South, all of the nation.

The Man Who. It was Frank Johnson who applied the school-desegregation decision to the Montgomery bus system—and thus helped speed desegregation of all public facilities in the South.

It was Frank Johnson who ordered both marchers and police to halt their confrontation at Selma, and then—although he disapproves of most demonstrations—gave the marchers permission to go ahead.

It was Frank Johnson who sat as a member of the three-judge court that abolished the Alabama poll tax; that handed down the first order requiring a state to reapportion its voting districts; that produced the first reapportionment plan devised by judges. It was Frank Johnson who so inspired an Alabama jury with a sense of responsibility that it was able to convict the three Ku Klux Klansmen who gunned down Viola Liuzzo on the road back to Montgomery from Selma.

It was Frank Johnson who mustered the three-judge court that has just ordered desegregation of all of Alabama's 118 school districts next fall—the first such statewide ruling in the nation, and perhaps the most important school order since the Supreme Court's school decision of 1954.

Vision & Conscience. Johnson's record is all the more remarkable in light of the fact that federal district judges—314 of them in 97 U.S. district courts throughout the country—are more vulnerable to local pressures than any other members of the federal bench. Not only is a district judge drawn from his locality; he almost always owes his job to his state's dominant politicians—particularly the U.S. Senators. Chosen by men committed to local interests, he is then sworn to uphold national principles that may conflict with those interests.

LEVITON—ATLANTA

JOHNSON IN OFFICE
One man central to them all.

Alabama-born and bred, Johnson could not be more sensitive to his state's cherished traditions and prejudices. His courtroom in Montgomery is only seven blocks from the statehouse, where a band played Dixie while Jefferson Davis was sworn in as Confederate President, and where Lurleen Wallace now sits as Governor. Yet for Johnson, a rare Republican in a Democratic state, legal vision and the dictates of conscience have always outweighed local pressure. He rejects labels—liberal, conservative or any other. His sole cause is not civil rights but the law. "I'm not a segregationist," he says, "but I'm not a crusader, either. I don't make the law. I don't create the facts. I interpret the law."

Such dispassion is all the more impressive now that the steam has gone out of the civil rights movement. Johnson could easily soft-pedal equal rights—many of the Confederacy's 70 U.S. district judges have done just that. But he goes on applying the law to the facts in every case. Says he: "I don't see how a judge who approaches these cases with any other philosophy, particularly if he was born and reared in the South, can discharge his oath and the responsibility of his office."

Questions & Answers. Unmentioned in the Constitution, that office goes back to 1789, when U.S. district courts were set up with jurisdiction limited largely to maritime cases and suits between citizens of different states. But as federal law grew after the Civil War, so did the need for U.S. trial courts with broader scope. In 1875, district courts were given jurisdiction over a wide range of federal questions. District judges now handle every sort of lawsuit under the federal sun—including antitrust cases, bank robberies, bankruptcies, draft evasion, obscenity suits, patent infringements, railroad disputes, tax dodging and habeas corpus petitions from state prisoners (up 36% since 1963). Also copyright infringements, kidnaping, moonshining cases, compensation for injuries at sea and auto accidents involving citizens of different states (20% of all civil cases), and such federal misdemeanors as trapping migratory birds, concealing letters in parcel-post packages. And a lot more.

The civil case load rises relentlessly over the years. From 58,293 cases in 1961, it climbed to 79,906 last year. One reason is that many lawyers prefer federal to state courts on the ground that the judges are abler, the jurors brighter and the rules fairer. It has not done any good to hike the minimum dollar amount involved in many federal suits to $10,000: lawyers simply sue for more. Though Congress has added 73 district judges since 1961, almost 10% of all civil cases still take more than three years to settle.

Power & Prestige. None of this discourages lawyers from seeking district judgeships; for the last 63 appointments, 800 volunteered their services. Away from the urban anonymity of such hydraheaded courts as New York's 24-judge Southern District, a local U.S. judge may control a federal fiefdom that makes him a prime public figure. The $30,000-a-year salary may seem low viewed from Wall Street or Chicago's LaSalle Street, but it goes a long way in most areas, and the status is unbeatable. Appointed for life (barring misconduct), district judges are untouched by re-election pressures and are subject to no real discipline save a higher court's reversal. Kings of their courtrooms, they can set the whole constitutional tone in their areas. They can speed up or delay cases, comment on trial evidence, discipline lawyers, hold gadflies in contempt, and try many matters without a jury.

In many cases, the country's lowest-ranking federal judges can overrule the highest state judges. In 1908, district judges acquired wide-ranging power over cases in which state laws and actions are challenged as unconstitutional. If they so choose, federal judges can sometimes make litigants go to state courts first—a handy delaying technique for segregationist Southern judges.

Senatorial Courtesy. Indeed, the whole selection system may produce judges more attuned to local prejudice than to national principle. By law and by custom, the President appoints federal judges with the Senate's advice and consent. But if one of the state's Senators protests that the judicial nominee is "personally objectionable" to him, the whole Senate usually honors his veto. A lawyer's best route to the bench, therefore, is electioneering for Senators and the President. As chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the chief enforcer of "senatorial courtesy" is Mississippi Segregationist James O. Eastland. If he disapproves, a President's nominee may never make it unless he is "traded out" for one of Eastland's own favorite candidates for another judgeship.

In this situation, Southern Democratic Senators have managed to load the Southern bench with segregationists. Having no Southern Republican Senators to contend with, President Eisenhower managed to appoint some first-rate Southern Republican judges—notably, Elbert Tuttle and John Minor Wisdom of the trail-blazing U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, which has often kept the Constitution alive in the South. But Ike also had to trade with Eastland for several segregationists, and John Kennedy recoiled from offending Southern Democrats whose Senate votes he needed. Of Kennedy's eight Deep South appointees, four verge on racism.

Among the Kennedy appointees entrenched for life in Southern district courts: Mississippi's Judge W. Harold Cox, 65, who once called Negro would-be voters "chimpanzees"; Louisiana's Judge E. Gordon West, 52, who called the Supreme Court's 1954 school ruling "one of the truly regrettable decisions of all time"; and Georgia's Judge J. Robert Elliott, 57, who once said: "I don't want these pinks, radicals and black voters to outvote those who are trying to preserve our segregation laws and traditions." Little can be done about such Jim Cro-Magnons short of impeachment—a tactic used successfully only four times since 1789.

Shotgun in Bed. In the interests of constitutional government, other judges have stood fast against angry Negroes, Northern militants, Southern thugs, canny state lawyers and waves of state laws designed to perpetuate segregation. Many judges have been ostracized by old friends, abused by nocturnal phone callers, wiretapped by state agents, threatened with death. So hounded was South Carolina's Judge J. Waties Waring in the early 1950s that he retired and moved to New York. Refused local police protection in 1955, Alabama's Judge Hobart Grooms slept with a shotgun for months. But slowly, because of such dogged constitutionalists, the pall of segregation is being lifted from the South—from the schoolhouse to the bus station, from the jury box to the ballot box.

Boldly facing down the entire state legislature, Louisiana's Judge J. Skelly Wright desegregated New Orleans schools in 1961. With devastating dignity, Florida's Judge Bryan Simpson quashed bloody disorders in St. Augustine in 1964. By holding Bogalusa's do-nothing police in contempt, Louisiana's Judge Herbert Christenberry prevented a bloodletting among rights workers in 1965. Even rigidly segregated Plaquemines Parish fell to Christenberry's school-integration order in 1966, and Mississippi's foot-dragging Judge Cox now concedes that "segregation is completely out the window."

Catfish Row. Since 1955, one of the principal battlegrounds of the law has been the district courtroom on the second floor of Montgomery's post office, a federal outpost that flies the Stars and Stripes rather than the Stars and Bars that top the statehouse. Frank Johnson's courtroom is stylishly WPA, a towering place with ornate ceiling beams, a gallery, and a bench that stands before a blue wall studded with gold stars. Through a door in the starry wall strides the judge, lean and tanned in his unvarying crisp black suit, white shirt and black tie. He usually shuns robes: "If a judge needs a robe and a gavel, he hasn't established control."

Control was the word for Johnson in the recent trial of Harvey King Conner, a former Elmore County deputy sheriff charged with beating a Negro motorist to death last November. A county grand jury refused to indict the 200-lb. Conner, although two state troopers had seen him hitting the 155-lb. Negro with a blackjack. He was therefore tried in Johnson's court on the federal charge of having denied the victim's civil rights.

On the bench, Johnson perched half-moon spectacles on his patrician nose; his brown eyes scanned a document in the Conner case. He peered up from under bushy brows; a hush fell. The room was jammed with veniremen: Negroes as well as whites, women as well as men—a Johnson jury. Only one Negro survived defense challenges—an elderly Negro brickmason who later voted for conviction—but that might have happened in northern Maine. At one point, a defense lawyer mocked a Negro witness in the patronizing accents of Catfish Row. Objection by the prosecution. "Sustained," snapped Johnson. "Such remarks have no bearing on this case." At another point, a Government lawyer thudded to the floor in a dead faint. Pandemonium. Unfazed, Johnson intoned, "The other lawyers will carry on." They did. Conner was acquitted with all the fairness that can be wrung out of the jury system in Alabama.

Mutual Bell. One civil rights lawyer says that Johnson "runs his courtroom like a ship in the old tradition, like an

WILSON-LEVITON—ATLANTA

ALABAMA NEGROES REGISTERING (1965)
The kings set the constitutional tone.

SELMA MARCHERS TURNED BACK FROM PETTUS BRIDGE (1965)

STEVE SCHAPIRO—LIFE

GREAT-GRANDFATHER JOHNSON (1875)
Straight is a trait.

English man-o'-war. He is about as good as a trial judge can be." Another rights lawyer calls Johnson "entirely fair. You can never tell whether he's going to rule for you or against you." Even lawyers on the other side of the civil rights fence cannot restrain themselves. Adds one: "He's the quickest at grasping points of complicated cases of any judge I've ever seen." Says another Alabamian: "He gives 'em all hell."

The classic example occurred in 1961 after Montgomery police watched idly as Freedom Riders were beaten. Sternly enjoining all parties from further action and reaction, Johnson limned a segregationist's nightmare: "If there are other such occurrences, I'm going to put some Klansmen, some police officials and some Negro preachers together in the U.S. penitentiary."

Republican Island. Johnson's austere impartiality is a family trait. As the first Republican sheriff of Fayette County, Great-Grandfather James Wallace Johnson was so fair that people called him "Straight Edge." Frank Johnson grew up in northern Alabama's non-Negrophobe Winston County. Because it had few slaves in 1861, Winston refused to secede in the Civil War (Johnson's forebears fought on both sides) and stayed neutral as "the Free State of Winston." It remains independently Republican. At one point, Johnson's father was the only Republican in the Alabama legislature—a situation that is now an ironic impossibility, since Johnson reapportioned the state. Combined by the judge with a more populous Democratic county, the Winston district now elects a Democratic legislator.

Johnson's mother was born Alabama Long. His father was once elected Winston County probate judge, and young Frank loved to hang around Daddy's courtroom listening to lawyers arguing cases. (Johnson's only child, Johnny, 18, does the same today.) All the same, Johnson did not decide to become a lawyer until he had graduated from Mississippi's Gulf Coast Military Academy, worked as a surveyor, spent a year in business college and, at 19, married a Winston County girl named Ruth Jenkins. Both worked their way through the University of Alabama.

Ruth graduated first and helped the family finances by teaching speech at nearby Tuscaloosa County High School. One of her ace pupils was Lurleen Burns, now Governor Lurleen Wallace. One of Frank's law classmates was George Wallace, a sometime bantamweight boxer and big man on campus. Even then, recalls Johnson, Wallace had "an uncanny ability to sense moves and determine an effective appeal."

George courted Lurleen at a local dime store, where she was a 16-year-old clerk, then went off to World War II service as a B-29 crewman (nine combat missions in the Pacific). The war also separated the Johnsons. Ruth served as a WAVE lieutenant in Washington, editing secret papers for an admiral on the Joint Chiefs of Staff. An infantry lieutenant in Patton's army, Frank won a Bronze Star in the Normandy invasion, was wounded twice and sent back to England as a legal officer.

Activist Opener. Back home in Alabama, Trial Lawyer Johnson discovered the sometime profit of being a Southern Republican. Though Stevenson swept Alabama in 1952, Johnson served as one of Eisenhower's nine state campaign managers. His reward: appointment, at 34, as U.S. attorney for northern Alabama. His two-year record: impressive. In one of the few such cases since Reconstruction, for example, Johnson won a peonage conviction against two Alabama planters who had paid Mississippi jailers to bind Negro prisoners over to them. In 1955 fate intervened with the death of the U.S. judge for Alabama's Middle District. Johnson drew up a modest résumé, won the support of state G.O.P. leaders, met Ike in Washington and got the job one week past his 37th birthday.

Far younger than most new district judges (average age: 51), Johnson quickly made a name for himself in 1956 by extending the Supreme Court's school decision to Montgomery's segregated buses. In Browder v. Gayle, Johnson joined with Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives (a Truman appointee) on a three-judge panel to hand down a decisive majority vote to desegregate the buses.

More Than Peanuts. The result not only vindicated Martin Luther King's Montgomery bus boycott—it also keyed Johnson's whole judicial development. If a right applied in one area, he quickly applied it in another—always in spare, lucid opinions based on rock-hard facts. Thus, in 1963, Johnson broadened the Supreme Court's famous Gideon right-to-counsel decision (1961) by ruling that court-appointed lawyers must be paid for their services because the Constitution requires "effective" counsel. Congress soon followed with a law requiring payment in federal courts everywhere in the U.S. Conversely, last year Johnson condemned another kind of legal pay: the fees for convictions that Alabama justices of the peace had long pocketed as their only income. That ruling, faithful to a widely ignored 1927 decision of the Supreme Court, may kill the archaic j.p. system all over the South. "If a judge has a financial stake in the outcome," says Johnson, "he's disqualified."

Even in the 75% of his cases that resemble any other district judge's—from bankruptcy to counterfeiting—Johnson is a judge of rare innovation. Before handing out sentences in open court, for example, he follows the unusual practice of inviting all defendants and their families to discuss presentencing reports in the privacy of his chambers. His compassion is evident in even the most minor cases—many of which inevitably involve race. In one, a white man had allegedly hired four Negroes to help him steal peanuts from a federal warehouse. The jury acquitted the white man, convicted the Negroes. Poker-faced, Johnson dropped a balancing thumb onto the scales of Alabama justice as he handed down the Negroes' sentence: 30 minutes in the custody of the U.S. marshal.

Happy Reversal. In 1957, in another balancing problem—inequities in voting—Johnson's hewing to the law earned him his only civil rights reversal by the Supreme Court. In Tuskegee, where Negroes outnumber whites 4 to 1, the state legislature had gerrymandered the city in a 28-sided figure that barred all but four Negroes from voting in municipal elections. Citing Supreme Court precedents, Johnson held that he had no power over that particular kind of state action. By disagreeing, in Gomillion v. Lightfoot (1960), the Supreme Court took the crucial step toward its historic "one man, one vote" decision in Baker v. Carr (1962). Not unhappy with the reversal, Johnson then restored the boundary lines in Tuskegee, where Negroes were soon elected to office.

WAVE LIEUT. JOHNSON (1944)
Teaching Lurleen and editing brass.

Since then, the Supreme Court has sustained Johnsonian opinions all the way. After Baker gave U.S. courts power over state voting districts, Alabama tried to base apportionment of the legislature's upper house on geography rather than population. A three-judge court including Johnson voided that idea in Reynolds v. Sims (1962), which produced the first court order for reapportionment in U.S. history. After that, Alabama tried to bar Negro legislators by combining white and Negro counties. In voiding that scheme in Sims v. Baggett (1965), the judges reapportioned the legislature themselves—another national first.

Freezing Formula. Johnson has long been the foremost champion of voting rights on the Southern bench—even though he was temporarily stymied in the early stages of U.S. v. Alabama, launched in 1959 as the first major test of the 1957 Civil Rights Act. In Macon County, 97% of eligible whites were registered to vote v. 8% of eligible Negroes—the familiar result of intimidation and tricky tests applied only to Negroes. To avoid giving the federal courts a target for injunction, the Macon registration board periodically resigned. The tactic worked; Johnson found that the 1957 rights law authorized suits only against "persons." When the registrars resigned, there were no persons left to act against. The Justice Department could not sue the Governor, since he does not exercise direct control of registrars; Johnson therefore had to refuse an injunction plea against "the registrars of Macon County."

As a direct result of this adverse ruling, the 1960 Civil Rights Act authorized voting suits against states and state governmental groups as well as persons. In 1961, Johnson duly rapped the Macon board's "puny excuses" and enjoined its assorted subterfuges. Most important, he ordered the board to register any Negro whose qualifications equaled those of the "least qualified white." Called the "freeze doctrine," that rule for righting imbalances became the Fifth Circuit's standard formula in voting cases, and was substantially incorporated into the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

Reflex Anger. Before the passage of that act, militant civil rights leaders descended on the Dallas County city of Selma in March 1965. They delighted at the reflex anger of Dallas Sheriff Jim Clark and his mounted "posse men," his electric-shock cattle prods, and forced marches of Negro children. After the inevitable clash on Sunday, March 7, 1965, when 650 Negroes met tear gas and clubs, Judge Johnson enjoined both Governor George Wallace and Martin Luther King from further action. Then he pondered a tough issue—whether to let the Negroes cross Pettus Bridge, march on Route 80 to Montgomery, and petition Governor Wallace for their voting rights.

Johnson permitted the march in an opinion holding that "the right to assemble, demonstrate and march peaceably along the highways and streets in an orderly manner should be commensurate with the enormity of the wrongs that are being protested against. In this case, the wrongs are enormous."

He has also ruled in the other direction. In 1966, he refused jurisdiction in a school-desegregation case after finding that Negroes had assaulted the principal and become a "hysterical mob." Also rebuffed: 167 persons who disobeyed police while picketing the state capitol. As Johnson saw it, civil righteousness is no excuse for lawlessness.

LEVITON—ATLANTA

GOLFING AT MAXWELL A.F.B.
Nothing lost worth keeping.

Last-Ditch Verdict. Soon after Selma came Johnson's finest hour of putting down lawlessness: the trial of the three Klansmen for gunning down Detroit Housewife Viola Liuzzo on Route 80 after the march. A Lowndes County jury had acquitted Collie Leroy Wilkins, though an FBI informant testified that he saw Wilkins commit the murder. The case then moved to Johnson's court. In a 30-page charge to the jury, Johnson painstakingly discussed the American trial system as "a beacon of hope and a last resort for the protection of individual citizens." Solemnly, he called for a verdict that "rests completely upon the proposition of justice rendered by an impartial court and rendered by twelve impartial jurors."

After 24 hours' deliberation, the jury reported back "hopelessly deadlocked." Coolly Johnson replied: "There is no reason to assume that the case will ever be submitted to twelve more intelligent, more impartial or more competent men to decide it, or that more or clearer evidence will be produced on one side or the other." He sent them back. After three more hours, the jury reached a verdict: guilty. Johnson sentenced all three Klansmen to the maximum ten years in prison.

Positive Clout. Predictably, Johnson's bold blows for justice have triggered an increasing number of collisions with George and now Lurleen Wallace. Johnson's current battle with the Wallaces grows out of a 1963 case in which he ordered twelve Negro students admitted to all-white Tuskegee High School. After the whites switched to a private school, receiving state tuition grants of $185 a year, Governor George Wallace sent 216 state troopers to bar the Negro children from the high school. In the ensuing struggle, Wallace mobilized the Alabama National Guard, President Kennedy federalized it, and Wallace closed the school. Johnson put the Negroes in other white schools—and a five-judge court convened at Johnson's request ordered Wallace to quit sabotaging desegregation.

This March that order was given the most positive clout in Southern school history. Invoking the 14th Amendment, a three-judge court mustered by Johnson ordered Alabama to "take affirmative action to disestablish state-enforced or -encouraged" segregation across the state. Wallace & Co. could no longer pin the rap on individual school boards, said the court. By all evidence, the state itself controls all public schools and most state colleges. As a result, Alabama has the lowest percentage of Negro integration of any state (2.4%). More than 25% of Negro high schools are unaccredited, compared with 3.4% of the white schools. School spending is $607 for each white student, only $295 for Negroes. Of the state's 28,000 teachers, only 76 teach students of another race.

Affirmative Precedent. To right the wrongs, Johnson's court issued a top-to-bottom desegregation plan that allows every student to designate the school of his choice. Choices must be made during the current school year, with no second guesses permitted when the new year begins. If overcrowding results, students will be assigned to the schools nearest their homes, without regard to race or color. The state is enjoined to foster integration in all other areas of public education: the location of new schools, faculty assignments, bussing, and spending per pupil.

Much of this plan for Alabama, notably the school-choice system, was echoed by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals this month in a no-nonsense decision ordering "affirmative" desegregation next fall in all grades in seven school districts in Alabama and Louisiana. The Supreme Court has refused to stay that order. District courts are now obliged to apply it throughout the Fifth Circuit's territory: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and

Head Office, 5670 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles

INSURED

THE BIG MONEY KEEPS MOVING TO THE NATION'S LARGEST FEDERAL

ASSETS EXCEED $1.4 BILLION

Join the big money movement. The nation's largest federally chartered savings association offers the nation's highest yield on insured passbook savings. Current annual rate: 5.25%, compounded daily. Earnings are paid quarterly and paid to exact date of withdrawal on funds in account 3 months or more. Established in 1925. Safety assured by the most experienced management group in the savings industry. Account insurance to $15,000 by a U.S. Government agency. 550,000 individuals, corporations and trusts served in over 100 foreign countries and 50 states, many with accounts of $25,000, $100,000, $200,000 and more. Special attention to mail accounts. Funds earn from date of receipt (and from the 1st, if received by the 10th). Join the big money movement—just send your check or money order with the coupon below.

CALIFORNIA FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

18 Offices in Los Angeles, Orange, Ventura Counties

FREE! HOW TO GET AND KEEP BIG MONEY! 240-page book, "Master Plan for Financial Security." Tells how the big money people use savings, stocks, bonds, real estate, insurance. Tips you can use to build wealth and security. Mail coupon today for free copy!

California Federal Savings Association, Box 54087, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles, California 90054

☐ Please send free Financial Security book and CalFed MAIL-SAVER®. T-45

Please open account:
☐ Passbook ($50 or more)
☐ Joint ☐ Individual ☐ Trust

Name(s) _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State _____

Funds enclosed in amount of $ _____

Soc. Sec. or Ident. No. _____

Texas. After 13 years of deliberate delay, 77.5% of the South's Negro pupils are still segregated; now they may get a crack at equal education.

The "affirmative action" precedent may some day be used to attack de facto segregated schools in the North as well. Not that Northern judges are yet obliged to follow the precedent: its applicability depends on proof that a segregated system is the result of unconstitutional state action. Meanwhile, the Wallaces are apparently determined to stage a dramatic happening in Alabama next fall—a confrontation between state and federal forces comparable to Little Rock. George has already declared: "You know what we're goin' to tell them when they ask us to give 'em more in the schools of Alabama this fall? I'll tell you what we'll tell 'em: 'Goddammit, we jus' ain't."

Toward that end, Lurleen delivered a TV speech in March invoking the discredited doctrine of interposition—the notion that a state government can halt any federal action it deems unconstitutional. Conjuring up visions of parents being jailed wholesale by federal agents, Lurleen asked the legislature to hire more state troopers. Not only must all Alabamians resist desegregation "in every possible way," cried Lurleen, but "the entire nation is the battlefield! This is what Hitler did in Germany!"

The argument failed to impress a group of three Southern Governors convened by George and Lurleen to map strategy against the integration order. But it was bound to go down well in Alabama, where State Education Superintendent Austin R. Meadows said last summer: "Segregation is the basic principle of culture. The good segregate themselves from the bad." Avoiding euphemism, Alabama's Chief Justice J. Edwin Livingston says plainly: "I'm for segregation, and I don't care who knows it. I would close every school from the highest to the lowest before I would go to school with colored people."

Unlisted Number. Judge Johnson pays no attention. Two boys once burned a cross in his front yard, but to Johnson it was just a prank. After anonymous callers threatened to bomb his family, he simply got an unlisted number; federal agents have periodically guarded his comfortable ranch house ever since. He keeps a current file on all active Alabama Klansmen. Asked whether his wires are tapped, Johnson lights up another Home Run cigarette (a brand that makes Gauloises seem bleu by comparison) and noncommittally drawls: "I've made a studied effort to avoid areas of paranoia."

It takes an effort. When the judge's son Johnny was attending a private school in Montgomery, George Wallace chortled that Johnson was evading desegregation, and state agents descended on the school to investigate alleged "Communist overtones." No clues have yet led to the persons unknown who set off a bomb outside the Montgomery home of Johnson's 69-year-old mother two weeks ago. The Johnsons have lost friends, though "none we wanted to keep." They belong to Montgomery's handsome country club, but the judge confines his avid golfing (mid-80s) to a few open-minded military partners at nearby Maxwell Air Force Base, where "it's easier to be just Frank Johnson." He is not about to defend his decisions by writing articles or giving law-school lectures. "Judges make their decrees," he says. "They can't sell 'em."

One of Johnson's rare lapses into the luxury of legal lecturing comes each May 1—declared Law Day by President Eisenhower in 1958. Johnson regularly schedules naturalization ceremonies for that day to emphasize the supremacy of the law. Last week Johnson assembled 41 new Americans in his Montgomery courtroom to make points not only about the law in general, but about the law as it pertains specifically to the Alabama and the U.S. of 1967.

JIM PEPPLER

MRS. JOHNSON SR. AFTER BOMBING
Difficult to avoid the paranoia.

"It is necessary," he said, "now more than ever, that the responsible American citizen realize and discharge his obligation constantly to support and defend the proposition that our law is supreme and must be obeyed. This means that irresponsible criticism—by those who can hardly read the Constitution, much less study it and interpret it—must not be allowed to stand unchallenged.

"When those who frustrate the law, who undermine judicial decisions, run riot and provide uncurbed leadership for a return to nothing more than medieval savagery, for the responsible American citizen to remain silent is tantamount to cowardice; it is a grievous injustice to the proposition that in America the law is supreme."

On or off the bench, Judge Johnson has rarely been silent.

JUSTICE

OPPORTUNITIES FOR SERVICE
IN
THE PROCESS OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Several weeks ago, the Project on Crime & Corrections of the Southern Regional Council proposed to enlist the cooperation of the Fellowship of the Concerned - United Churchwomen - to prepare a booklet based on a survey of arrest and detention procedures in the Southern Region as they bear on misdemeanant offenders.

After a preview of the national survey of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice was reviewed, more attention was focused on the very poor provisions for the administration of criminal justice (law enforcement, including officers and the legal profession, the judicial process, probation and parole, and corrections) in the South. (Some of the data abstracted from the survey, and some of the more than 200 recommendations, are attached.)

We realized that we were asking the Fellowship to venture out into unknown territory because few persons, lay or professional, are able to acquaint themselves fully with the arrest, judicial and correctional processes.Therefore, we secured the services of a member of the California bar, Mr. Ronald Sievers, who is a VISTA volunteer, to organize a pilot experience so that you would have some understanding of the problems that you will encounter in the study process.

After two meetings with some of the members of local religious organizations, the following women either visited local institutions or gathered as much data as possible from jail and court records. Some of these participants will apprise you of their experiences.

Mrs. John Golden
Mrs. Byron Kirkland
Mrs. Jack Patterson
Mrs. James Leak
Mrs. Marshall Solomon
Mrs. Herbert Slotin
Mrs. Jane Scherago
Mrs. Philip Shulhafer

Perhaps the worst problem encountered was the nature and variety of the records and the limited data that are available. Also, most apparent were the attitudes of suspicion that had to be overcome.

We were interested in the types of misdemeanors committed; the age, sex and race of the defendant; geographic distribution; the use of bail, detention or release on own recognizance; sentences, and time between arrest and disposition. (a copy of the schedule that we used in collecting the data is attached.)

We ran into a number of problems, and we made mistakes. However, we learned that such a study is possible, with group understanding and conviction to see it through.

PROBLEMS:

1. Often, the Police Department would not cooperate and open records to us despite the fact that in Georgia, by law, these records are open to inspection by the public. Thus, it appears that a group undertaking the survey would have to invest a lot of know-how, pressure and influence in gaining access to "public records."

2. Lack of time of volunteers. The work probably would be done by volunteers. The work can be tedious as it is mainly a job of copying from records. Moreover, because of the poor methods of record-keeping sometimes used, the work can be very time-consuming.

3. Orientation was also a problem. Before the project is initiated in any particular area, the volunteers should be fully orientated to the job. The volunteers should be given a clear definition of the types of crimes they are interested in (this will vary by state) plus a questionnaire should be provided which will correspond to the records available to the volunteers. The volunteers would need professional guidance from a judge, attorney, police official or other person who is familiar with a particular agency or department.

4. It was found that the records kept are often incomplete. However, the effort would be worthwhile if it were only able to expose such situations.

A study similar to this (The Westchester Misdemeanant Survey) was published by the National Council on Crime & Delinquency in 1966. The data were collected by women volunteers.

The Westchester Survey was a first step toward brining light into the darkness that now obscures most of American crime. Misdemeanor, as a legal term, covers the vast catalogue of criminal violations punishable by a fine or imprisonment in a local jail or other institution as against the more serious violations, felonies, punishable by death or confinement in a state prison. The latter are studied and debated, but very little data are available to show how misdemeanants are dealt with, although they account for at least 9 out of every 10 arrests.

To find out what happened to misdemeanant offenders in Westchester from arrest to final disposition and from this infromation to make recommendations for improvements in the system was the starting point of the survey. The project relied primarily upon public police and court records. Information gathered was supplemented by interviews with police chiefs, judges and other government officials. It is this pattern that we hope to follow in our own effort.

A survey of misdemeanant procedures in the Southern Region would constitute the foundation upon which many service-relevant programs could be developed. Additionally, it would help to validate the assumptions that are proposed relative to youth detention and treatment and to identify gaps in service and record-keeping procedures.

PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON LAW ENFORCEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

A national survey indicating that correctional programs and institutions in the United States have not been provided adequate resources was disclosed today.

The survey--the first national examination of correctional personnel, programs and criminal offenders in the history of the United States--was sponsored by the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice and the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance.

The corrections survey is one of a large number of major projects undertaken by the Commission in the preparation of its report to President Johnson, now scheduled to go to the White House in January. The survey was conducted for the Commission and OLEA by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

The Chairman of the Commission, Undersecretary of State Nicholas deB. Katzenbach, said the survey for the first time provided factual evidence of the severe handicaps under which correctional agencies in most parts of the United States are now operating. "In few areas has the 20th century made such shallow penetration or are public preconceptions so hardened."

"If the nation is truly concerned about crime--and there is no doubt it is--then the nation must come to be equally concerned about the quality of its jails and prisons, and the quality of its probation and parole services. So long as men are held in prisons for years on end without any kind of vocational training, so long as those who have served their time are released from institutions with little hope and no assistance in finding decent jobs, so long must we expect some of them to return to crime."

To document the basic conclusion that society is not providing corrections with adequate resources, Mr. Katzenbach pointed to a number of the survey's specific findings.

--Of the more than 400,000 children who were detained in 1965, about one quarter were held in jails and police lock-up, often with hardened criminals. Only two states and Puerto Rico claim they never use jails for children. Less than 20 percent of the jails in which children are held have been rated as suitable for adult offenders.

--Barely 5 percent of all personnel working in local jails and institutions devote their time to treatment and training. More than 90 percent are administrators and guards. These are the institutions which imprison many of the country's first offenders--presumably the most receptive to rehabilitation.

--Thirty percent of the state operated adult institutions, which hold those convicted of committing more serious kinds of crime, provide no form of vocational training.

--Only 5 of the 50 states operate "halfway houses" to help released offenders make a gradual readjustment to society. Such "halfway houses" have been operating for years in a small number of jurisdictions. Only a handful of states operate work release programs where offenders can gain on-the-job experience before they are released.

--Eleven states have no probation services for adult misdemeanant offenders, six states have only the barest fragments of such service, and most other states provide it on a spotty basis.

--Nearly one half of all state felony probationers are cast into caseloads of parole officers supervising over 100 persons, far in excess of recognized minimum standards.

In addition to providing positive evidence of the critical shortage of resources, Mr. Katzenbach said the survey also provided basic new data which for the first time would permit all levels of government to see how the various parts of the extraordinarily complex correctional system operate in relation to each other.

NUMBERS OF OFFENDERS

On a recent single day, 1965, there were more than 1,220,000 persons under the supervision or care of state and local agencies or institutions.

Because new offenders are constantly being added while other offenders are being discharged, and many offenders are convicted more than once a year, about 2,550,000 persons--more than double the daily population--come in contact with the system during the course of a year.

LOCATION AND TYPES OF OFFENDERS

About one-third of all offenders are in institutions. These institutions are often fortress-like constructions where security is the predominant goal and where rehabilitative programs are absent. Two-thirds are in the community, under the supervision of overworked, underpaid, and poorly trained probation and parole officers.

Twenty-eight percent of all offenders are juveniles, seventy-two percent are adults. Viewed from a different perspective, 12 percent of the 1.2 million persons under the control of correctional agencies on a recent day were adults in local institutions and jails. These jails are too often old and ill-kept, and totally devoid of educational and vocational training programs, while 16.0 percent were adults in state institutions.

COSTS

The cost of operating state and local correctional services is almost one billion dollars a year. One breakdown shows that $93 million a year is spent on juvenile probation and parole services, $221 million for state and local juvenile institutions, $93 million for adult probation and parole and $754 million for state and local adult institutions. On a percentage basis, 81 percent of the total operating costs of state and local correctional agencies is allocated to institutions, 19 percent for community-based services such as probation, parole and aftercare.

One other way of examining correctional expenses is to compare overall daily costs for maintaining those under different types of supervision. The average adult probationer costs 39 cents a day, the average adult parolee costs 88 cents a day, the average offender in a local institution costs $2.87 a day, and the average adult offender in a state institution costs $5.24 a day. Care for the institutionalized offender is thus more costly and may be less effective for many offenders.

As Mr. Katzenbach has recently said, "Those engaged in corrections increasingly sense the possibilities in community treatment of offenders through supervised work programs."

DISTRIBUTION OF PERSONNEL

As indicated earlier, an overwhelming majority of correctional personnel devote their time to guarding offenders. Considering the distribution of personnel in all state and local institutions, only 3.6 percent are treatment staff and 5.9 percent are academic and vocational staff. Thus more than 90 percent of the persons working in state and local correctional institutions are administrators and guards.

From a different perspective, the survey indicated that only 12.75 percent of all state and local correctional personnel handle probationers and parolees even though this group represents more than two-thirds of the nation's offender population. Adequate guidance and supervision for parolees and probationers is sadly lacking.

STATISTICS

It is impossible to evaluate the success or failure of a given program without understanding how the program operates. The fact that the corrections survey is the first of its kind in the history of the United States is an indication of how little thought has been given to attempting to measure the effectiveness of various parts of the correctional system. Unfortunately, this pattern of indifference holds true in most states. Nowhere in the nation, for example, did the survey uncover a single state agency responsible for collecting operating statistics from all the correctional services in a state. The survey further shows that 75 percent of the states collect no statistics on jails and local institutions, 65 percent of the states collect no statistics on misdemeanant probation and 43 of the states fail to collect any statistics on various aftercare programs. No one knew how many offenders were under correctional control on any given day or how many individuals contacted the system within a given year. No one knew the total costs of correctional operations or even the cost of any single component such as probation or parole. No one knew which programs were most effective and for whom.

HOW THE SURVEY WAS TAKEN

Early in 1966, the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice and the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance decided that it would be impossible to make sound recommendations about improving the jails and prisons and the probation and parole services without a comprehensive knowledge of correctional facilities, programs, personnel, funding and offenders in the United States at the present time.

Because such comprehensive information simply was not available, the Commission and OLEA asked the National Council on Crime and Delinquency to make the first such national survey ever attempted. The Council is a large non-profit organization devoted to improving the system of criminal justice in the United States.

After examining the problem, the Council decided that complete data would be collected from the correctional agencies operating at the state level in all the states and Puerto Rico and the correctional agencies operating in a representative sample of 250 counties. A special team of more than 50 NCCD staff members then moved out into the states and counties talking with officials operating within literally thousands of state, county, and city correctional agencies and institutions. From these thousands of interviews emerged the statistical profile.

But to get a better understanding of the correctional problems as perceived at the state, county and local level, an additional survey technique was employed. This involved the calling together of a small group of correctional leaders in each state and Puerto Rico for 51 separate, carefully recorded seminars on the needs of the entire correctional system and how these needs could best be satisfied.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF NATION S CRIME COMMISSION

TO ASSURE AN INFORMED CITIZENRY

Adopt centralized procedures in each city for handling crime reports from citizens, with controls to make those procedures effective.

Separate the present index of reported crime into two wholly separate parts, one for crimes of violence and one for crimes against property.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY AND YOUTH CARE

Housing and Education:

Expanded efforts to improve housing and recreation.

Families:

Develop methods to provide minimum income.
Revise welfare regulations so they contribute to keeping families together.
Insure availability of family planning assistance.
Expand counseling and therapy.
Provide assistance in problems of domestic management and child care.
Develop activities that involve the whole family together.

Involviing Youths in Community Life:

Involve youths in community activities.
Employ young people as subprofessional aides.
Establish youth services bureaus to provide and coordinate programs for deliquents and nondeliquents.
Increase involvement of religious institutions, private social agencies, other groups in youth programs.
Provide residential centers.

Schools:

Provide financial support for needed personnel and facilities.
Improve the quality of teachers and facilities.
Reduce racial and economic segregation.
Compensate for inadequate preschool preparation.
Develop better means for dealing with behavior problems.
Use instructional material more relevant to inner city life.
Encourage students capable of higher education to pursue their education.
Revise programs for students not going to college.
Expand job placement by schools.
Increase contacts between the school and the community.

The Juvenile Justice System:

Formulate police department guidelines for handling of juveniles.
Train police officers in handling of adolescents.
Limit police custody of juveniles to instances where there is objective specific suspicion.
Maintain confidential records of all frisks and extended interrogations of juveniles.
Limit stationhouse adjustment of cases by police.
Provide alternatives to adjudication through youth services bureau.
Increase referrals to community agencies.
Employ voluntary preliminary conference at intake.
Adopt consent decree as alternative to adjudication.
Narrow juvenile court jurisdiction over noncriminal matters
Restrict prehearing detention and provide separate detention facilities for juveniles.
Provide particularized notice in advance of hearings.
Provide counsel wherever coercive action is possible.
Divide court hearings into adjudicatory and dispositional proceedings.

POLICE

Community Relations:

Establish community relations units in departments serving substantial minority population.
Establish citizen advisory committees in minority-group neighborhoods.
Recruit more minority-group officers.
Emphasize community relations in training and operations.
Provide adequate procedures for processing citizens grievances against all public officials.

Personnel:

Divide functions and personnel entry and promotion lines among three kinds of officers.
Require minimum of 400 hours of training.
Assess manpower needs and provide more personnel if required.
Recruit more actively, especially on college campuses and in inner cities.
Increase police salaries, especially maximums, to competitive levels.
Consider police salaries apart from those of other municipal departments.
Set as goal requirement of baccalaureate degree for general enforcement officers.
Require immediately baccalaureate degrees for supervisory positions.

Personnel (cont'd):

Improve screening of candidates to determine character and fitness.
Modify inflexible physical, age and residence recruitment requirements.
Stress ability in promotion.
Encourage lateral entry to specialist and supervisory positions.
Improve training methods and broaden coverage of non-technical background subjects.
Require one week yearly minimum of intensive inservice training and encourage continued education.
Require 12 to 18 months' probation and evaluation of recruits.
Establish police standards commissions.

Organization and Operations:

Develop and enunciate policy guidelines for exercies of law enforcement descretion.
Clarify by statute authority of police to stop persons for questioning.
Include police formally in community planning.
Provide state assistance for management surveys.
Employ legal advisers.
Strengthen central staff control.
Create administrative boards of key ranking personnel in all departments to maintain police integrity.
Experiment with team policing combining patrol and investigative duties.
Adopt policy limiting use of firearms by officers.

Pooling of Resources and Services:

Provide areawide communications and records coordination.
Pool and coordinate crime laboratories.
Assist smaller departments in major investigations.
Explore pooling or consolidation of law enforcement in all counties or metropolitan areas.

COURT

The Lower Courts:

Unify felony and misdemeanor courts.
Increase judicial manpower and modernize physical facilities.
Provide prosecutors, defense counsel, and probation officers in courts now lacking them.
Abolish or overhaul state justices of the peace and U.S. commissioner systems.
Initial stages of a criminal case.
Establish bail projects.
Enact comprehensive state bail reform legislation.
Establish station house release and summons procedures.

COURT (cont'd)

The Lower Courts:

Improve decisions on which defendants should and which should not be charged.
Insure fair and visible negotiated guilty pleas.
Develop and share dispositional information early in case.

Court Proceedings:

Establish standards for publicity in criminal cases.
Provide single, simple state postconviction procedure.
Extend prosecution's right to appeal from pretrial rulings suppressing evidence or confessions.
Enact general witness immunity statutes and coordinate immunity grants under them.
Eliminate special standards of proof in perjury cases.

Sentencing policies and Procedures:

Revise sentencing provisions of penal codes.
Consider whether to retain capital punishment.
Establish probation services in all courts for presentence reports.
Expand sentencing institutes and conferences.
Abolish jury sentencing in noncapital cases.
Institute procedures for promoting just and uniform sentencing.

Officers of Justice:

Improve selection of judges through better screening.
Provide judicial tenure of at least 10 years.
Expand programs for training judges.
Establish commissions on judicial conduct with power to discipline or require retirement.
Institute salary and selection reforms for prosecutors.
Coordinate local prosecutors through state attorneys general and prosecutor's councils.
Establish programs for training prosecutors.
Extend early provision of counsel for indigents.
Institute state-financed, coordinated assigned counsel or defender systems.
Expand training programs for defense counsel.

Court Scheduling, Management and Organization:

Create single, unified state court systems.
Centralize administrative responsibility.
Institute timetable for completion of criminal cases.
Utilize experts in business management and business machine systems.
Improve facilities and compensation for witnesses and jurors.

CORRECTIONS

Community-Based Corrections:

Make parole and probation supervision available for all offenders.
Provide for mandatory supervision of released offenders not paroled.
Increase number of probation and parole officers.
Use volunteers and subprofessional aides.
Develop new methods to reintegrate offenders by mobilizing community institutions.
Make funds available to purchase services otherwise unobtainable for offenders.
Vary caseload size and treatment according to offender needs.
Develop more intensive community treatment programs as alternative to institutionalization.

Correctional Institutions:

Establish with state and federal funds small-unit institutions in cities for community-oriented treatment.
Operate institutions with joint responsibility of staff and inmates for rehabilitation.
Upgrade education and vocational training for inmates.
Establish state programs to recruit and train instructors.
Improve prison industries through joint state programs and federal assistance.
Expand graduated release and furlough programs.
Integrate local jails and misdemeanant institutions with state corrections.
Provide separate detention facilities for juveniles.
House and handle persons awaiting trial separately from convicts.
Provide separate treatment to special offender groups, through pooling or sharing among jurisdictions.

Correctional Decisionmaking:

Strengthen diagnostic and screening resources.
Appoint parole boards solely on basis of merit, providing training and requiring full-time service.
Develop standards and procedures to insure fairness to offenders in decisions affecting them.

Research and Training:

Improve university research and training in corrections.

ORGANIZED CRIME

Proof of Criminal Violations:

- Impanel annual investigative grand juries.
- Provide right of appeal for grand juries to obtain special investigators and prosecutors.
- Enact general witness immunity statutes and coordinate immunity grants.
- Eliminate special standards of proof in perjury cases.
- Clarify law regarding wiretapping and eavesdropping.
- Provide power to impose extended sentences on organized crime leaders.
- Extend prosecution's right to appeal from pretrial rulings suppressing evidence or confessions.
- Establish federal residential facilities to protect witnesses.

Investigation and Prosecution Units:

- Form organized crime intelligence units in offices of state attorneys general and local police departments.
- Assign special prosecutorial manpower to organized crime cases.
- Create computerized central federal intelligence office.
- Expand staff of Organized Crime and Racketeering (OCR) section in U. S. Justice Department.
- Give OCR section authority over U.S. attorneys on organized crime cases.
- Furnish federal technical assistance and training to local jurisdictions.
- Provide federal assistance for development of state and regional intelligence systems.
- Encourage research.
- Create permanent joint congressional committee on organized crime.
- Establish permanent state and citizens crime commissions.

Noncriminal Controls:

- Use existing regulatory authority against business controlled by organized crime.
- Encourage private business groups to prevent and uncover criminal business tactics.
- Increase news coverage on organized crime.
- Brief local government officials regularly on organized crime.

NARCOTICS AND DRUG ABUSE

Enforcement:

- Increase staffs of bureaus of customs and narcotics.
- Adopt state drug abuse control legislation.
- Amend federal drug abuse control law to strengthen record-keeping provisions.
- Revise sentencing laws to give adequate flexibility.

Research and Education:

Undertaken research with respect to regulation of drugs.
Conduct research at National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) on marijuana use.
Develop education materials of NIMH.

DRUNKENNESS

Eliminate crimal treatment of drunkeness when not accompanied by disorderly or otherwise unlawful conduct.
Establish civil detoxification centers.
Coordinate and extend aftercare programs.
Expand research.

CONTROL OF FIREARMS

Enact laws prohibiting transportation and possession of military-type weapons.
Prohibit potentially dangerous persons from acquiring firearms.
Require registration of handguns, rifles, and shotguns.
Require permit for possessing or carrying a handgun.
Prohibit interstate sale of handguns and regulate such sales of other firearms.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Police Operations:

Undertake studies in large police departments of crimes, arrests, and operations.
Permit public access to police callboxes.
Establish single, uniform police telephone number.
Develop police radio networks.
Require metropolitan areas to coordinate requests to FCC for additional frequencies.
Make greater use of multichannel radio trunks.
Consider allocating portions of TV spectrum to police use.
Establish federal project to underwrite initial costs of new radio equipment.
Initial research of new fingerprint recognition system.

Information Systems:

Establish criminal information systems.
Establish national criminal justice statistics center.

General Federal Research and Assistance:

Sponsor science and technology research and development program.
Provide technical assistance to criminal justice agencies.

RESEARCH

Expand research efforts of universities, foundations, and other private groups.
Establish a national foundation for criminal research.

A NATIONAL STRATEGY

Establish agency or officials in every state and city responsible for planning and encouraging improvements in criminal justice.

CASE RECORD

Municipality _____

(The following information should be obtainable from the police arrest blotter.)

Name _____ Age_____ Sex_____ Race_____

Address _____ Case # _____

Arrest: Date_____ Time_____ Not Recorded _____

Booking: Time _____ Charge _____

Bail: Yes____ No_____ When arranged_____ Amount_____

Cash?_____ Bond? _____ D O R?_____

Detained? _____ Local lockup?_____ County Jail_____

Did accused make telephone call? _____

(The following information should be in court records and may sometimes also be found in police records.)

Arraignment: Date_____ Plea: Guilty_____ Not Guilty____
(1st appearance in court)

Name of Judge _____

Have Lawyer? Yes____ No_____ Bound over? Yes_____ No_____

Adjournment? Yes_____ No_____ If yes, what date?_____

Bail?_____ DOR_____ Detained_____ Amount?_____

Cash? _____ Bond_____

Prior criminal record? _____ If yes, detail:

_____

_____

Trial: Date_____ Charge tried on_____ Jury?_____

Prosecuted by? _____

Have lawyer? _____

Lawyer's name _____

Verdict: Guilty? _____ Not guilty? _____

Presentence investigation? Yes_____ No _____

Sentence: Fine _____ Suspendended sentence _____

Probation Supervision_____ Amt. _____

Commitment _____ Time Served _____

What records did you use?

_____

_____

_____

_____

Comments: (Please report any problems you find. Use back page if necessary.)

Name _____ Date _____

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL
Friday, February 25, 1966

Mutual Fund Aimed At Negro Investors Registered With SEC

* * *

Everyman Fund, Inc., Planning Initial Offering of 500,000 Shares at Price of $10 Each

By a WALL STREET JOURNAL Staff Reporter

CLEVELAND—Everyman Fund, Inc., a new mutual fund aimed at "bringing the Negro into a larger participation in the nation's economy" was registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Termed the first Negro mutual fund in the country, the company plans an initial offering of 500,000 shares at $10 a share, said Norman L. McGhee, president, who formed McGhee & Co., Cleveland, in 1952, among the first Negro investment concerns in the U.S.

At present a closed-end investment firm with $94,601 in assets and 10,339 shares outstanding and 15,000 authorized, the fund plans to become an open-end company with redeemable shares following the initial stock offering, he said, and will at that time begin the purchase of securities for its portfolio.

A closed-end investment company has a limited number of shares, whereas an open-end concern, or mutual fund, continuously sells its shares and stands ready to redeem them at prices based on asset values of its portfolio.

The fund has an imprint of the Statue of Liberty on its preliminary prospectus and will have the slogan, "Helping every man to help himself." The Everyman name is taken from a 15th Century morality play by Peter Dorland.

Plans call for the establishment of sales agreements with broker-dealers with qualified Negro salesmen with the objective of selling investments nationally in the fund primarily to Negroes, though there will be no racial restrictions on investors.

Sales will be concentrated at the outset in five states—Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Georgia and South Carolina—though this will be expanded later to other states, particularly those with large Negro populations, Mr. McGhee said.

Fulton, Reid & Co., Cleveland investment company, has been retained as the fund's investment adviser to furnish reports, statistical and research services, advice and recommendations on portfolio investments. W. Yost Fulton, Fulton-Reid's chairman, will be a member of the Everyman board.

The fund's investment objectives are to provide long-term income and growth from a diversified portfolio made up of 75% in common stock or securities convertible into common stock. The rest will be invested in quality bonds and preferred stocks. The investments will be made largely in well-known established companies but may also be made in lesser known, smaller corporations where marketability is adequate, according to the prospectus.

Besides Mr. McGhee and Mr. Fulton, a 13-member board is comprised of Harold Ferguson, a research engineer for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; Norman L. McGhee, Jr., secretary and a director of McGhee & Co.; Lorimer D. Milton, president of Citizens Trust Co., Atlanta, and trustee chairman of Howard University; Mrs. Tommie P. Patty, executive director of the Phillis Wheatley Association, a private social welfare organization; Arnold Pinkney, president of Pinkney-Perry Insurance Agency, Inc., Cleveland; Max Reiter, president of Printz-Biederman Co.; Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of the Interdenominational Theological Center, Atlanta; Helen W. Sheffield, formerly a teacher at the State College of South Carolina; George W. Whitehead, a Cleveland attorney; W. R. Wilkes, trustee chairman of Wilberforce University, and J. W. Walter Wills, president of J. W. Wills Co., funeral directors.

Conference on

Poverty Research, Communications, and the Public

Sponsored by

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR RESEARCH ON POVERTY

and

RUSSELL SAGE - UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM
SOCIAL SCIENCE WRITING PROGRAM

Wisconsin Center

April 29-30, 1966

FRIDAY, APRIL 29

10:00 a.m.—"A Case Study in Communicating Poverty Research to the Public." Room 227

Speaker: David Caplowitz, Columbia University

Panel:
Gordon Bivens, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.
Samuel Adams, St. Petersburg, Fla. Times, and Southern Regional Council.
Richard Jacobs, St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

1:30 p.m.—"Giving Direction to Poverty Programs Using the Reports of Mass Media and Research." Room 227

Speaker: Lisle Carter, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.
Dartmouth - St. Johns U.

Panel:
Tom Joyce, Detroit News.
Irving Kristol, The Public Interest.
Robert Lampman, University of Wisconsin.

6:30 p.m.—Dinner Room 109

"The Institute for Research on Poverty at Wisconsin."
Speaker: ~~Joseph Kershaw~~ Robt Lampman, Office of Economic Opportunity.

8:00 p.m.—"Involving and Informing the Active and Interested Public." Room 227

Speaker: Robert Lekachman, Stony Brook State University, New York.

Panel:
Martin David, University of Wisconsin.
Martin Rein, Bryn Mawr College.
Leonard Zweig, Trans-Action.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30

9:30 a.m.—"Problems in Reporting Poverty Projects and Research." Room 227

Speaker: Tom Joyce, Detroit News.

Panel: Robt Lewis, aide to Wisc Gov - Dept of Ag
~~Lisle Carter, Assistant Secretary of Health~~, Education and Welfare.
~~Joseph Kershaw, Office of Economic~~ Opportunity. Warren Haygood, Community Action Center Syracuse, N.Y.
Erwin Knoll, Newhouse National News Service.

Samuel Adams

PROGRAM

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

$$$$$

CO-SPONSORED By

NATIONAL BUSINESS LEAGUE
&
NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE

$$$$$

ATLANTA

AMERICANA MOTOR HOTEL
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

MAY 18-19-20, 1966

FRANK STANLEY

Negro press enjoying highest period of prosperity

122 Negro papers

Negro market is 30 billion

17% of soft drinks

23% of all shoes

12% money for food at home (of income)

50% of sardines

high birth rate — heavy consumers of evaporated milk

5½ of income for home furnishing (Negro

4% of income " " " by whites

50% contributors to inner-city economy.

31% of income being spent in housing development.

Atlanta — 350 mil

- P R O G R A M -

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18

9:00 -- 9:45 a. m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - REGISTRATION

9:45 --12:15 p.m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - OPENING GENERAL SESSION

PRESIDING

Dr. Frederick Patterson
Chairman of Board
National Business League

Purpose of Institute: Clarence D. Coleman, Director
Southern Regional Office
National Urban League

Welcome: Honorable Ivan Allen, Jr., Mayor
City of Atlanta

W. Lee Burge, President
Atlanta Chamber of Commerce

J. B. Blayton, Sr., President
Atlanta Urban League Board

Franklin O'Neal, President
Atlanta Business League

Introduction of Speaker: Dr. Frederick Patterson

Speaker: Frank Stanley, President
National Newspaper Publishers Ass'n.
Louisville, Kentucky

Subject: "Negro-Oriented Business in a Bi-Racial Economy"

Data Processing

Whitney Young

$2,898 median income of Negro
57.7 % of Negroes below poverty line

72% of Harlem's business is absentee owned.
Less than 1½ % of Negroes are self employed –
– We – traditionally cautious people
Howard Thurman's story of Barryman (dog) & picket fence ... Sand drift & no longer a fence as barrier ... both panicked.
"The negro is the barometer of the validity of the free enterprise system" Whitney Young – trip to Africa & in that few hours suddenly found all the people tending plane were white. His first inclination was to go up & congratulate them on getting those jobs. They must) pretty good ~~###~~ FEPC there.
He too brainwashed because he felt some anxiety.
One business man said ... I want to move fast. I saw what happened in the major leagues ...
Integration is a two way street ...
Formerly ∂. captive market ... Protected market of past is gone x
Don't make the mistake of ignoring blue collar trades.
Increased visibility outside the ghetto will go far to eradication, the lingering prejudice

---

Man with horse & wagon pulling a load & having tough haul .. Passed a man & asked:
"Mister how long is this hill."
Reply: This aint no hill ... your rear wheels are off ∂ stopped to analyze his situation

Arthur Allen
Rm 626

Lion in jungle came upon a bull .. roared & killed & devoured it.
His stomach full, he

12:30 -- 2:00 p. m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - LUNCHEON MEETING

PRESIDING

Milton Cummings, President
Brown Engineering Co.
Huntsville, Alabama

Invocation: Dr. Harry V. Richardson, President
Inter-Denominational Theological Center
Atlanta, Georgia

Speaker: L. D. Milton, President
Citizens Trust Company
Atlanta, Georgia

Subject: "Welcome and Comments on the Atlanta Business Outlook ---Opportunities And Trends"

Introduction of Speaker: Opie L. Shelton, Executive Vice President And General Manager
Atlanta Chamber of Commerce

✓ Speaker: Whitney M. Young, Jr.
Executive Director
National Urban League

Subject: "Economic Development and the Negro"

DISCUSSION

2:30 -- 4:00 p. m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - PANEL #1

OPPORTUNITIES IN URBAN RENEWAL

Moderator : Charles S. Wright, Consultant
Shaw Renewal Project
Washington, D. C.

Speaker: Dr. James L. Green, Professor
Department of Economics
University of Georgia
Athens, Georgia

Subject: "Opportunities in Urban Renewal"

DISCUSSION

Panelists: Waddell R. Thomas, Chairman
Urban Renewal Committee
National Association of Real Estate Brokers
Washington, D. C.

Must be switch hitters
work both sides of the street

T. M. Alexander, Sr., President
Alexander and Company
Atlanta, Georgia

John H. Winters, President
John H. Winters Company, Builder
City Councilman
Raleigh, North Carolina

L. H. Persells, Area Coordinator
Regional Office
Department, Housing and Urban Development

Luke Brown
Business Relocation Specialist
Regional Office
Department, Housing and Urban Development

Richard Marshall, Mortgage Department
Prudential Life Insurance Company
New York, N. Y.

4:00 -- 5:30 p.m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - PANEL #2

STRENGTHENING EXISTING AND DEVELOPING NEW BUSINESSES

Moderator: Jacob R. Henderson, Field Coordinator
Southeastern Region
Economic Development Administration

Speaker: Percy La Bohne
Philco Corporation
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Subject: "Strenghtening Existing and Developing New Businesses"

DISCUSSION

Panelists: Le Roy Gaillard, Builder
Birmingham, Alabama

E. L. Simon, General Auditor
Atlanta Life Insurance Company
Atlanta, Georgia

J. M. Anderson, Manager
Sub-contracting Division
Lockheed Corporation of Georgia

Jac Wasserman, Field Director
National Sharecroppers Fund
Atlanta, Georgia

W. A. Shields
Former Executive Director and Manager
Tuskegee Credit Union
And
Former Vice President
Southeastern Cooperative League
Tuskegee, Alabama

Elmer J. Moore
Research Division
Office, Economic Opportunity
Washington, D. C.

Harry Bennett, Principal Review Examiner
Bureau of Federal Credit Unions
Atlanta, Georgia

THURSDAY, MAY 19

9:30 -- 12:00 noon - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - PANEL #3

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO SMALL BUSINESS
Financial Resources in Government

Chairman: Robert L. Shirley
Johnson C. Smith University
Representing: United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

Moderator: Benjamin Goldstein, Director
Office of Economic Assistance
Small Business Administration
Washington, D.C.

Subject: "Government Assistance to Small Business"

DISCUSSION

Panelists: Jay Wade, Business Manager
Johnson Publications
Chicago, Illinois

John T. McDermott, Vice President
Chicken Delight

Robert J. Holley, Franchisee
Chicken Delight
Atlanta, Georgia

Lee Hood, Chief
Financial Assistance Division
Small Business Administration
Regional Office
Atlanta, Georgia

Thomas Burress
Loans and Management Assistance
Small Business Administration
Washington, D.C.

Robert W. Newman, Chief
Development Company, Assistance Division
Regional Office
Small Business Administration

Charles Dannals, Area Director
Partake of Atlanta, Inc.
(Franchise Consultants,
Atlanta, Georgia)

12:30 -- 2:00 p.m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - LUNCHEON MEETING

PRESIDING

Norman L. McGhee
President, McGhee & Company
Investment Securities
and
President, Everyman Fund, Inc.
Cleveland, Ohio

Invocation: Rev. J. A. Middleton, President
Morris Brown College
Atlanta, Georgia

Speaker: Kermit G. Bailer, Director
Community Relations Division
Housing and Urban Development

DISCUSSION

2:30 -- 5:30 p.m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - PANEL #4

FINANCIAL RESOURCES -- PRIVATE

Moderator: J. B. Blayton, Sr., President
Mutual Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n.
Atlanta, Georgia

Speaker: Edward Irons, Chief
Foreign Investment Survey
Agency for International Development
Washington, D.C.

Subject: "Financial Resources -- Private"

DISCUSSION

Panelists: W. L. Calloway, President
Atlanta Mortgage Brokerage Company

Mack Hannah, President
Standard Savings and Loan Company
Houston, Texas

T. M. Alexander, Jr., Accounts Executive
Courts and Company
Atlanta, Georgia

Q. V. Williamson, President
National Association of Real Estate Brokers

Al Ulmer, Director
Community Organization Planning
Southern Regional Council

A. G. Gaston, President
Citizens Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n.
Birmingham, Alabama

FRIDAY, MAY 20

9:00 -- 12:00 noon - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - PANEL #5

EDUCATION FOR MANAGERIAL AND TECHNICAL MANPOWER

Moderator: Adolph Holmes, Associate Director
National Urban League
New York, New York

Speaker: Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, President
Clark College
Atlanta, Georgia

Subject: "Trends In Southern Economic Development"

DISCUSSION

Panelists: Dr. E. B. Williams, Chairman
Department of Economics and Business Administration
Morehouse College
Atlanta, Georgia

Dr. Lincoln Harrison, Dean
School of Business
Southern University
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

Willis Martin
National Industrial Training Advisor
Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training

Harold Milby, Industrial Specialist
Atlanta Regional Office
Small Business Administration

Ray Greeson, Area Supervisor
Division of Distributive Education
State Department of Education
Atlanta, Georgia

Dr. Maurice Dawkins
VISTA
Washington, D.C.

Today

Unemployment rate in Watts in 1960 c. 11%
Six yrs later it c same, but median income fell

We must need to create...
More than to protest, we must create

Don't call it remedial education, call it educ. of deprived.

Pope Paul – Catholics – don't call Protestants any more. He calls our "separated brotheren"

Write it into contract...
Trust everybody but cut cards.

Since 1947
204,000 jobs } left New York.
Out migration of white middle class.
Negroes moving in...

Integration — come in middle class. Middle class Negro — more likely to move among white middle class in suburbs.
Poor — more likely to stay near others of their ethnic group.

Training — fine. But jobs now.

More beyond opportunity to achievement. The time to start is now

Cleveland Chandler, Morgan State College
Department of Business and
Office of Economic Opportunity
Washington, D.C.

12:30 -- 2:00 p.m. - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - CLOSING LUNCHEON

PRESIDING

Berkeley Burrell
President, National Business League

Invocation: Rev. William Holmes Borders, Pastor
Wheat Street Baptist Church
Atlanta, Georgia

Speaker: The Honorable Eugene P. Foley
Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Director, Department of Economic Opportunity
U.S. Department of Commerce

DISCUSSION

Institute Projections: Clarence D. Coleman, Director
Southern Region
National Urban League

ADJOURN

RESOURCE PEOPLE

Jesse Merrell, Deputy Director
Southeast Regional Officer
Office of Economic Opportunity
Atlanta, Georgia

John Dean, CAP Regional Manager
Southeast Regional Office
Office of Economic Opportunity
Atlanta, Georgia

George Robinson, Program Officer
Office of Economic Opportunity
Washington, D. C.

A. D. Gaither,
Regional Equal Opportunity Officer
Regional Office
Bureau of Public Roads
Department of Commerce
Atlanta, Georgia

Adolph Holmes, Associate Director
National Urban League
New York, New York

Eugene Patterson, Editor
Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Georgia

William Sims, Associate Director
National Urban League
New York, New York

Rev. James H. Costen, Pastor
Church of the Master
United Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.
Atlanta, Georgia

Thomas Skinner, Assistant
Public Relations Division
National Urban League
New York, New York

Dr. Harding Young, Dean
School of Business
Atlanta University
Atlanta, Georgia

Robert R. Moton
Investments and Insurance
Atlanta, Georgia

Harold N. Arnold, Executive Director
Atlanta Urban League
Atlanta, Georgia

Franklin O'Neal, President
Atlanta Business League
Atlanta, Georgia

Harold Milby, Industrial Specialist
Atlanta Regional Office
Small Business Administration
Atlanta, Georgia

Merlin Taylor
Industrial Training Advisor
Atlanta Region
Bureau of Apprentice & Training
Atlanta, Georgia

Phenizee F. Ransom
Employment Service Advisor
U. S. Department of Labor
Atlanta, Georgia

Robert A. Thompson
Regional Assistant to the Administrator
Housing & Home Finance Agency
Atlanta, Georgia

Percy Prothrow, Agency Director
Atlanta Life Insurance Company
Atlanta, Georgia

C. E. Prothro, Jr.
Industrial Development Specialist
Economic Development Center
Atlanta University

Jesse Hill, Actuary
Atlanta Life Insurance Company
Atlanta, Georgia

John H. Harmon, Chairman
Board of Directors
United Small Business Ass'n. Inc.
White Plains, New York

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Atlanta Coca Cola Bottling Company
Atlanta Federal Savings and Loan Association
Atlanta Life Insurance Company
Citizens and Trust Company
Convention Bureau - Atlanta Chamber of Commerce
Ivan Allen Company
Mutual Federal Savings and Loan Association
Small Business Administration

COOPERATING AGENCIES

Atlanta Business League
Atlanta Urban League
Economic Development Administration
National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Atlanta Chapter
Office of Economic Opportunity
Small Business Administration
Southeast Regional Council of the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

Answer to black + white must be green X
Green = dollars
X = mark on ballots.
Meant no offense in pronouncing the word Negro: It had something to do with, language. The movement 9 cured P.

INSTITUTE HEADQUARTERS

A. G. Rhodes Building
78 Marietta Street, N.W.
Suite 417
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
688-8778

Waging War on Poverty through . . .

Economic Opportunity Loans for Small Business

Small Business Development Centers

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

An Agency of the Federal Government

"... the War against Poverty will not be won in Washington. It must be won in the field, in every private home, in every public office, from the courthouse to the White House."

- - President Lyndon B. Johnson

The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, which launched our Nation's War against Poverty, recognizes the vital role of small business in providing more jobs, higher incomes and a better life for those who cannot now provide for the minimum needs of themselves and their families.

The Act calls on the Small Business Administration to help open the doors of opportunity for the impoverished through new small business and job opportunities. This is to be achieved through SBA-approved Economic Opportunity Loans to eligible small businesses and persons who want to go into business.

In considering an Economic Opportunity Loan, SBA relaxes traditional credit standards and places greater emphasis on the character and ability of the individual. A professionally-staffed Small Business Development Center, sponsored by local citizens, screens, evaluates and recommends loan applications and makes certain that continuing management assistance is available to borrowers.

"Small Business Administration programs give a poor man a chance. If he is ambitious, if he is determined to succeed and wants to work hard, we can help him enter the mainstream of the American economy. He belongs there. Every American benefits when one American succeeds."

- - Ross D. Davis
SBA Executive Administrator

ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY LOANS

Who May Borrow ?

SBA will make loans to persons with low incomes who want to go into business or are already in business. Applicants must live in or near neighborhoods designated as "target" areas by the Office of Economic Opportunity. An applicant's income, if he is a single person, may not exceed $4,040; married persons with families may have incomes ranging up to $7,590 for a family of seven or more.

By law, Economic Opportunity Loans can be made only to persons who are unable to obtain needed financing from banks or other private sources or under other Government lending programs.

Loan Terms

SBA may lend up to $15,000 for as long as 15 years. The interest rate is 5½ percent, except in severely depressed areas where it is 4 percent.

Collateral

In making Economic Opportunity Loans, SBA assigns great importance to a borrower's character and ability and no loan will be turned down solely because the applicant lacks collateral. However, there must be reasonable assurance the loan will be repaid, and any available collateral must be pledged. The borrower's home, furnishings, car and life insurance will not have to be pledged as collateral.

Management Counseling

Many persons who receive Economic Opportunity Loans will need management counseling as well as money. Therefore, before approving a loan to a borrower who needs management assistance, SBA makes certain that it is available to him and he will make use of it. This assistance may take the form of individual counseling, small workshops or training courses.

Management assistance may be provided by SBA, other groups in the community, or the Small Business Development Center, which is responsible for making certain that adequate management services are available to applicants for Economic Opportunity Loans.

Applying for a Loan

To apply for an Economic Opportunity Loan, see the Small Business Development Center in your community. A list of these appears on the back of this pamphlet.

THE SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER

A Small Business Development Center (SBDC) is the heart of a community's efforts to strengthen its small businesses while attacking the roots of poverty. An SBDC can do much more than provide the screening and management assistance required for SBA to make Economic Opportunity Loans in a community.

Through an SBDC, local civic and business leaders carry out programs to identify potential businessmen from among the impoverished and help them go into business, to find and develop small business opportunities that will provide jobs for unemployed and unskilled persons, to assist faltering or marginal small businesses, and help to plan the overall economic development of a community or segment of a community.

Forming an SBDC

An SBDC should have a broad-based board of directors representing such groups as business, industry, professional and trade associations, labor unions, banks, colleges and universities, vocational schools, small business or merchants' associations including those in impoverished neighborhoods, ministerial and human relations councils, local governments, the local SBA office and any other organization whose support would contribute to success of the SBDC.

SBDC's should be staffed with professional personnel capable of implementing the policies and programs the SBDC board sets as its goals. Volunteers from the local business and professional community may supplement the staff. In addition to assisting clients with problems relating to Economic Opportunity Loans, the SBDC staff should be familiar with all SBA programs and other Government and private programs and resources that can benefit the community economically.

Financing an SBDC

Financing for the operations of an SBDC is available under Title II of the Economic Opportunity Act. Community Action Organizations can submit proposals under which the Office of Economic Opportunity will provide up to 90 percent of the financing necessary for an SBDC. The remaining 10 percent must come from local sources. Some SBDC's have been financed by private foundations, or combinations of public and private sources.

SBA is not authorized to finance an SBDC's operating expenses, but does make Economic Opportunity Loans from its own revolving fund.

For Further Information

For further information about this program contact the nearest SBA field office, or the Office of Economic Opportunity Assistance, Small Business Administration, Washington, D.C.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTERS NOW IN OPERATION IN THE FOLLOWING CITIES

Phoenix, Ariz.
Window Rock, Ariz.
Los Angeles, Calif.
Oakland, Calif.
San Jose, Calif.
Hartford, Conn.
Washington, D.C.
Miami, Fla.
St. Lucie County, Fla.
Tampa, Fla.
Atlanta, Ga.
Chicago, Ill.
South Bend, Ind.
Paducah, Ky.
Portland, Maine
New Bedford, Mass.
Detroit, Mich.
Escanaba, Mich.
Waubun, Minn.
Boone, N.C.
Franklin, N.C.
New Bern, N.C.
Rocky Mount, N.C.
Winston-Salem, N.C.
Asbury Park, N.J.
Atlantic City, N.J.
New York City, and Upper and Lower Manhattan
Brooklyn
Bronx
Queens
Staten Island
Hempstead, N.Y.
Cincinnati, Ohio
Cleveland, Ohio
Idabel, Okla.
Pawnee, Okla.
Poteau, Okla.
Philadelphia, Pa.
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Providence, R.I.
Aspermont, Tex.
Dallas, Tex.
Cheyenne River, Wis.
Hayward, Wis.
Keshena, Wis.
Milwaukee, Wis.

SBDC's SCHEDULED TO BE OPENED SOON

Birmingham, Ala.
Baltimore, Md.
Boston, Mass.
Minneapolis, Minn.
St. Louis, Mo.
Newark, N.J.
Huntington, W.Va.

Issued By The Office Of Public Information

MAY 1966 OPI-22

Program

OF THE

NATIONAL BUSINESS LEAGUE

3418 Georgia Avenue, Northwest

Washington, D.C. 20010

RA. 6-6200

PROGRAM OF THE NATIONAL BUSINESS LEAGUE

The National Business League exists for the benefit of the thousands of Negroes who own, manage or find employment in those enterprises which are a part of the national business community.

This program is designed to guide the League's membership in becoming a normal part of the American economy, in terms of size, profitability, and stability of enterprises. Program activities will concentrate on those problems, opportunities, approaches, and techniques which are typical of those generally found in the average business.

Expanding opportunity, combined with rigorous competition, makes significant progress possible only for those who unite in an intelligent, joint effort in order that they may function efficiently in their chosen vocations. The special role of the NBL arises out of the fact that the many obstacles impeding the progress of Negroes in business can be solved only through collective effort and a strong national voice to be clearly and effectively heard in the marts of trade and the agencies of government.

The program that follows is designed to give substance to the aspirations of people who have come to a joint self determination. It is divided into two sections:

I. The program at the national level;

II. A suggested program at the local level.

The National Business League therefore declares the following to be its program:

PART I

THE NATIONAL PROGRAM

The national program will operate under four headings. The activities called for will be developed by committees representative of the local affiliates. The League, wherever necessary, will seek the expert assistance required for guidance on a given project, from the ablest sources available. The League's purpose is not to perpetuate a segregated relationship for the Negro in business but to remove all barriers to his full participation in the economic life of the local and national community.

The items of program which the national organization will carry out are listed under the following headings:

1.) Business Opportunities

2.) Capital Development

3.) Education and Research

4.) National Relations

It is believed that under these major headings there can be grouped the numerous splendid detailed suggestions on program coming from many members of the NBL.

It is recommended that each of these major program activities be developed by a committee representative of the national membership. These major committees will appoint such sub-committees as may be required to carry out the work of the individual units under each major group. This procedure will enable the League as a whole to have the value of the great wealth of experience to be found in its national membership.

A. BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

1. Regional vice presidents will organize and activate locals in all areas of the country.
2. The national organization will stockpile for prospective employers of all regions information on qualified persons for use in their enterprises.
3. Emphasis will be placed on making Negroes aware of the need for immediate action in preparing themselves for the operation of such establishments as drive-in restaurants, hardware stores, supermarkets, motels and hotels.
4. Locals will be encouraged to feed a continuing flow of information to the National for the benefit of the entire membership.
5. Through information from locals, the NBL will endeavor to remain completely informed as to opportunities in business both at home and abroad, in order that its members may take swift advantages of all new or expanding opportunities.

B. CAPITAL DEVELOPMENT

1. The National Business League, with the cooperation and the participation of the locals, will lead in the formation of a fund of available money for areas that need financial assistance.
2. The National will encourage local units to spearhead the organization of financial institutions to meet the local needs.
3. It will provide information on the organization of banks, credit unions, state and federal savings and loan associations and investment companies.
4. To initiate a directory of businesses that are interested in developing one of the above, the NBL will, upon request, suggest the leadership and recommend the technical assistance for training of personnel for the successful organization and operation of such an enterprise.
5. Through the leadership of the League, schools, churches, hospitals and other institutions will be encouraged to consider supporting these financial enterprises for the mutual assistance of all.

C. EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

The purpose of National Business League Education and Research shall be:

1. To give advice to schools on available business and employment opportunities and the requirements for taking advantage of them.
2. To give advice to teachers and personnel counselors in order that their approach to the problems of guidance will be realistic.
3. To lead and direct the locals in the conduct of conferences and seminars in administrative management, personnel motivation, and public relations.
4. To initiate a directory of businesses that are owned wholly or in part by Negroes throughout the country.
5. To maintain a reservoir of basic facts on population as to numbers, income shifts and trends, for the purpose of enhancing the possibility of enterprise growth—both small and large. (With the assistance of the locals).
6. To call attention of our national membership and other interested persons to the J. E. Walker Educational Trust Fund, to which all members of the League who are able to do so are urged to contribute. The management of this fund is entrusted to the Finance Committee, and only the income will be used for educational purposes.
7. To establish a program of consumer education to teach the importance and the economic significance of businesses owned wholly or in part by Negroes.
8. To bring about discussions for providing internship training for students at the local, state and national levels.

D. NATIONAL RELATIONS

1. The NBL, with its sixty-year history as a basis for its claim to leadership, will use its influence to weld together any soundly conceived organization concerned with minority business. A Council of National Organizations will serve as advisor to the Board of Directors.
2. Rapport will be established with all fraternal organizations and other groups, with a view to creating a better understanding between them and the NBL, to enhance the chances of growth for all.
3. The NBL will encourage other groups, such as the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, National Insurance Association, The Beauticians Association and others, to hold their annual conventions at the same time and in the same city as the NBL, for the purpose of incorporating ideas, wherever possible.

PART II

SUGGESTED TOPICS FOR MORE EFFECTIVE LOCAL NATIONAL BUSINESS LEAGUE MONTHLY MEETINGS

To assist local program committees in planning for the year, the National Program Committee has worked out in detail twelve topics which can be used for each of twelve monthly business meetings.

In order to meet the needs of the majority of the businessmen in each community and thereby increase both membership of the locals and attendance at meetings, the program stresses general problems of management and promotion rather than the specific operation of any one type business.

To help planners and speakers get to the heart of the problem, an introduction to each topic or foreword has been prepared. Suggestions for sub topics have been listed so that each major topic may be treated in its broadest sense.

To help each local develop a program of action as well as a program of words, suggested follow-up activities have been listed at the end of each unit. It is not expected that locals will want to undertake each activity listed nor is it expected that they will confine themselves to the activities suggested here. Local program committees are to get new ideas for next year from the novel experiences which grow out of the local action programs.

Since many of the topics require weeks or months of planning, the final suggestion of the local program committee is that each topic and preparation for each month be assigned to individuals and committees at the earliest possible opportunity, as the success of meetings will depend on how well the preparation for each meeting has been accomplished.

MAKING FRIENDS FOR YOUR BUSINESS

The alert businessman is constantly seeking new customers or friends for his business. Careful analysis of the factors involved in repeat sales should be well worth the effort. Two businesses of the same type and general outlay may differ greatly in the number of people who think of these businesses as their store or firm. Such people patronize the business regularly and suggest to their friends that they do so as well.

Sub Topics:

1. Role of social courtesies
2. Soft sell versus high pressure
3. Knowledge of business or services inspires confidence

4. General appearance of establishment and em ployees
5. Role of modernization, color selection, refrigera tion, air conditioning, etc.
6. Role of comparative prices
7. Brand buying and status seeking
8. Is the customer always right?

Resource Persons:

A panel including several of the following may serve to show businessmen how customers feel about certain practices: home economist, social psychologist, market research analyst, housewife, interior decorator, motivation research expert.

Suggested Activities for Followup:

1. Make up a form to be used by members in a self evaluation study
2. Ask group of impartial housewives to rate stores on same form
3. Arrange for forms to be turned in to the owner of business unsigned
4. Repeat same study six months later to rate improvements that have been made and to see if the effort has paid off in increased patronage

SALES PROMOTION

All businesses depend upon sales. It is therefore of the greatest importance that those who manage business should be fully aware of the many factors that increase or decrease sales. A sound sales promotion program must have many parts. It must deal with everyday practices which encourage sales from cleanliness to courtesy and must be equally aware of those special activities engaged in a seasonal or occasional basis intended to increase sales.

Sub Topics:

1. Educational activities (demonstrations, shows, exhibits, lectures, etc.)
2. Contests and drawings
4. Cashing checks
5. Charge accounts, credit cards, bank credit plans
6. Anniversaries and special days
7. Refreshments, social activities

Resource persons:

1. Promotion manager of a large department store

2. Executive of an advertising firm
3. A NBL member who has sucessfully promoted a successful sales campaign

Followup activities:

1. Invite officials of "Diner's Club" or a local bank credit card plan to discuss their services.
2. Talk with a representative of the state fair or a local home show about space
3. League members may wish to sponsor a special sale day among Negro businesses

ADVERTISING — HOW TO MAKE IT PAY

Advertising is a normal part of any successful business. It is just as essential for the successful business as for the business greatly in need of customers. Effective advertising should be related to the size of the business and nature of the product being sold. The purpose of this program is to encourage an understanding of the various advertising media and ways they be used to best advantage.

Sub Topics:

1. Promotional advertisement
2. Institutional advertisement
3. Advertising media—newspapers, radio, television, direct mail, handbills, signs, posters, the Yellow Pages.
4. Research—objective approach
5. Cooperative advertising
6. Checking the effectiveness of advertisement (AIDA) —attention, interest, desire, action

Resource Persons:

1. Advertising manager from one or more of the following: large department store, advertising agency, newspaper, radio or television station
2. College or high school public relations director or journalism teacher
3. Director of a social research institute

Followup Activities:

1. Check with manufacturers or dealers about their cooperative advertisement plans
2. Set up an experiment using a small percent of income for advertisement with expert assistance. Report results to League.

KEEPING SOUND BUSINESS RECORDS

The business which attempts to operate without sound records is in for serious trouble and is doomed to failure. The needs of the business itself require the accumulation of knowledge about the business that should be carefully recorded and filed so that it can be available on a moment's notice.

Embarrassment, expense and even criminal indictment may result from inability to properly account to state and federal tax authorities on income and expenditures. If a business is to be sold, an accurate record of its performance may mean a much higher price to the seller.

Thus to enable businessmen to appreciate the importance of good records and the variety of purposes they may serve, the program on sound business records follows:

Sub Topics:

1. Daily journal
2. Ledger or balance sheet
3. Assets, current and fixed
4. Liabilities
5. Profit and loss statement
6. Book inventory
7. Records and statements of individual accounts
8. Checkbook, deposits, statements
9. Use of machines and electronic devices

Resource Persons:

1. Bookkeeping teacher
2. Certified Public Accountant
3. Head bookkeeper in fair sized company
4. City, state or federal auditor
5. IBM programmer for large business or government installation.

Followup Activities:

1. Set up a NBL seminar in any area of particular concern
2. Arrange with school authorities to offer night courses to meet the needs of members if the need warrants it
3. Supply names of CPA's who will handle small accounts

Financing Your Business:

The Negro in business usually has all of the problems of the small businessman plus the handicap of color. Abundant evidence exists to indicate that this is a national problem. This is true because the fact of color too often denies the Negro businessman the casual and informal as well as organized contacts in which information is passed and much American business is done. This program attempts to acquaint League members with sources of credit and venture capital and suggests the basic requirements involved in qualifying for loans.

Sub Topics:

1. Equity capital
2. Trade credit
3. Partner (general, silent, secret, limited)
4. Corporation (stock)
5. Banks and finance companies
6. Government insured loans
7. National Business League Project

Resource People:

1. Regional or national officers of National Business League
2. Representatives of Small Business Administration
3. A local banker
4. A corporation lawyer
5. Persons who are known or thought to have considerable money in the bank should be invited to the meeting

Followup Activities:

1. Perhaps one or more persons in attendance will want to back a business or corporation
2. Write to Small Business Administration and request free materials for distribution to members

ORGANIZING A FINANCIAL INSTITUTION

The reason the Negro businessman is at an extra disadvantage in getting credit is twofold. First he is regarded as a poor risk based on the general stereotype of unreliability and inadequate resources. Second the Negro borrower too often must depend entirely on credit sources under the control of whites, many of whom have little interest in making the loan or because of race prejudice make the requirements more difficult for the Negro borrower.

The answer to this problem is found in large part by financial institutions under the ownership and control of Negroes. Much evidence exists to indicate that such institutions exert an influence far greater than their lending resources because the fact of their existence introduces an element of competition which makes more freely available the total lending resources of the community.

This factor of competition becomes increasingly important with the growing purchasing power of the Negro community. Thus many Negro establishments have employed Negro personnel and made other concessions not evident in situations where lending facilities managed by Negroes do not exist.

Sub Topics:

1. Banks
2. Savings and Loan Associations
3. Personal loan companies
4. Mortgage and home improvement associations
5. Real estate companies

Resource Person:

1. Regional or national officer of National Business League
2. State or local CUNA officer
3. Representative from U.S. Department of Commerce
4. Representative, National Negro Bankers Association
5. Professor of commerce from state university

Followup Activities:

1. Form a committee to investigate availability and sources of capital
2. After deciding on the type of institution best suited to the community's needs and resources, make preparation leading to application for charter

TAXES — MAKING THE MOST OF THEM

Taxes are generally considered a bother whether to the individual taxpaper or the owner and operator of a business. Tax laws are complicated but since the payment of taxes is unavoidable, it is highly necessary that they be paid in such a way as to take advantage of those provisions in state and federal tax laws which assist the businessman and avoid those practices which penalize the operation. The businessman should not only be acquainted with all of the tax-free deductions he is allowed but also the best method by which they may be taken. Full and free discussion of taxes in business should result in many helpful suggestions. These can and should be followed up in the proper way by the individual operator.

Sub Topics:

1. Employee withholding taxes, Social Security, federal income, state income, workers compensation insurance
2. Employer participation in Social Security
3. Handling sales taxes
4. Tax consideration based on business form (individual and partnership versus corporation)
5. Depreciation and improvement allowances
6. Losses—capital gains

Resource Persons:

1. Corporation lawyer
2. Certified Public Accountant
3. Federal or state tax representative
4. College or high school professor of commerce and finance

Followup Activities:

1. Set workshop with Department of Internal Revenue
2. Arrange for Health, Welfare and Education Department representative to discuss problems of social security for those interested

EFFECTIVE PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT

A successful business requires competent and enthusiastic employees. The small business owner has an especially difficult problem in attempting to compete with larger businesses in salary and other benefits. It is important to know what these benefits are and the method by which as many of them as possible may be provided. Perhaps the failure to meet certain benefits may be offset by being especially generous in terms of others. Profit sharing or other incentive plans which relate compensation to the success of the operation should be considered. The more the owner-operator understands the nature of benefits and appreciates the necessity of good relations with his employees, the more efficient will be his operation.

A. Selection of Employees

1. Training in High School and College
2. On-the-job Training

B. Compensation

1. Straight Salary
2. Commission
3. Base pay plus commission

C. Fringe Benefits

1. Vacations, holidays, sick leave
2. Group life, accident and hospital insurance
3. Social security, workman's compensation insurance

D. Welfare and morale

1. Social and recreational programs
2. Discounts and profit sharing plans

Resource persons:

1. The personnel director of a large plant, store or military installation
2. Trained guidance counsellor
3. Labor relations expert for federal, state or city government

Followup activities:

1. Talk with insurance executive about the cost of group insurance
2. Investigate diverisfied occupations or distributive education program of local school system

WORKING WITH THE SCHOOLS

Much good can come from business and school working together. It is up to the locals to consider those ways of mutual helpfulness between local high schools and colleges and the business community. Certainly each has resources, including goodwill, that the other needs. Those members of local school faculties who are teaching business subjects should be encouraged to become members of the local chapter and therefore of the National Business League as well. Students should be guided toward careers in business and given apprenticeship opportunities to learn and earn.

The school should use its students in business to conduct a business census each year and evaluate the buying power of the Negro community. Business should be based on fact rather than fancy or hearsay. A great national weakness, so far as the Negro in business is concerned, is lack of factual and carefully prepared information on the extent, character and quality of businesses owned and operated by Negroes. Schools should be encouraged to supply this lack. Accordingly the program suggested indicates how the relationship between the schools, the Business League and individual businesses can be made one of genuine usefulness.

Sub Topics:

1. Careers in business next year and ten years hence
2. Scope of business training open to Negroes in public and private institutions in this vicinity
3. High school practice courses, diversified occupations, distributive education programs.
4. College internship programs
5. The use of NBL members as resource persons in the business courses and in guidance programs in schools and colleges
6. The use of educators as resource persons in the in-service programs and staff meetings of local businesses

Resource Persons:

1. Business teachers from schools and colleges
2. D. O., D. E. and other vocational teachers
3. Principals, supervisors and administrators connected with vocational programs
4. Guidance counsellors and representative of social agencies for youth
5. Businessmen with a very good in-service program

Note: A panel representing a cross-section of business and education may make the most effective presentation for this meeting. It may be well to invite all the persons (public and private college and high school) directly concerned with education and guidance of youth in the area of business to attend the meeting.

Followup Activities:

1. Cooperate with Career Weeks, Better Business Week, etc. which may be sponsored by other groups
2. If no such programs exist in local high school, initiate one in cooperation with educators and social agencies
3. Cooperate with schools in presenting exhibits, assembly programs, etc., aimed at guiding more young people into business
4. Cooperate with NBL in providing scholarships for students entering business
5. Send a delegation to the local board of education to suggest ways and means of improving training in business and commerce

KNOWING YOUR COMMUNITY

A business is a part of the community in which it is located. It has the responsibility of serving the community well. To succeed, a business must be fully aware of the many aspects of the community which influence its success or failure. A new business should give much thought to its location in terms of the customers it seeks to serve. Many communities are undergoing drastic changes. Slums are being torn down. Redevelopment schemes are converting large areas to new uses.

Some changes reduce the need for businesses of a certain type. These changes may create the need for new types of business. The general moderinization programs going on mean that most businesses need a face-lifting, new types of labor saving equipment and other evidences of being up to date. Locals should work to have their members elected to communitywide committees on development, education and government. In this way, their membership will not only be informed on what is going on but will have a voice in important matters affecting the welfare of the total community.

Sub Topics:

1. Size and makeup of population of both city and shopping orbit
2. Earning power and spending habits of potential customers
3. Effects of urban redevelopment and move to suburbs on the present location of central Negro business center
4. Number and kinds of Negro businesses
5. Number and kinds of businesses in general community
6. Areas of business which appear to be overcrowded

Resource Persons:

This meeting should be attempted only after a thorough survey has been made by a competent researcher. A local college or high school professor of economics, statistics, business, or social studies may be happy to undertake the study as a class project. An organization such as the Urban League or the Chamber of Commerce may have much of the statistics on file.

Followup Activities:

1. Mimeograph findings and circulate same
2. A subsequent meeting may be devoted to meeting the challenges of this meeting

NEW OPPORTUNITIES AND TRENDS

The program which follows on "New Opportunities and Trends" is closely related to the program on "Knowing the Community." The need to examine in some detail new opportunities suggests that a full meeting may profitably be devoted to the subject.

Sub Topics:

1. Demands brought about by move to suburbia (delivering services, mobile merchandising centers, hardware stores, etc.)
2. Demands brought about by new leisure created by shorter work week and longer life span (travel service, motels, bowling lanes, etc.)
3. Demand brought on by improved means of com munication (advertising agencies, secretarial services, messenger and delivery services)
4. Demands brought on by high turnover, low profit margin sales (supermarkets, department and variety stores)
5. Demands created by improved means of trans portation (auto, boat, and plane dealerships; service stations, auto parts dealers, delivery services, mobile merchandising)

Followup Activities:

1. Draw up a list of locations where new businesses are needed to meet the expanding city
2. Draw up a list of buisinesses which need to be pioneered by Negroes in your community
3. Encourage people going into business and businesses from the list
4. Promote the building and staffing of shopping centers by Negroes near new housing developments large enough to support such ventures

COOPERATION BETWEEN LOCAL INSTITUTIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS IN SUPPORT OF NEGRO BUSINESS

A local business league has the obligation to explore all avenues of creating more business for its members. Business competition is such that only those institutions that serve the public efficiently and constantly seek new cus tomers to serve, may hope for large success.

The local business operated by Negroes should seek to serve the community without regard to race or religion. Such businesses should take advantage of the need for goods and services by schools, hospitals and other organizations where the demand is large. A discussion of the resources of this nature which exist and an assessment of the need to be served should provide a useful evening's discussion along the lines herewith suggested.

Sub Topics:

1. Selective buying by churches, schools, hospitals, restaurants, etc., in support of wholesale and retail businesses owned or managed by Negroes
2. Putting organization treasuries as well as individual checking and savings accounts to work in Negro banking institutions to increase lending power
3. Financing businesses to create new jobs bringing more support to the churches, clubs and organizations, thus completing the cycle
4. The importance of meeting competition on a "dollar for dollar, service for service" basis.

Resource Persons:

1. NBL representative
2. Urban League representative
   Note: Leaders from a cross section of the community should be invited to this meeting

Followup Activities:

1. Make a survey of the institutions controlled by Negroes to see what they buy and how much
2. Encourage NBL members who deal in the same goods and services to compete for these contracts on a merit basis
3. Promote the organization of wholesale houses or jobbers owned by NBL members to supply the other needs
4. Conduct a survey to determine an esttimate of the liquid assets of individuals, organizations, churches, etc.
5. Conduct a school to educate leaders on the value of pooling these resources to create new capital for the establishment of Negro businesses
6. Conduct an educational program through churches, clubs, etc., to show how dollars spent in Negro businesses help to create jobs for Negro youth

ATLANTA

ATLANTA

May 7, 1963 MA Thank you Radical Right

Daniel Bell (Ed.), The Radical Right, N.Y. Doubleday & Co., 1963. 394pp. $4.95

Collection of essays, in perspective and depth. Authors: Peter Viereck, David Riesman, Richard Hofstadter, etc. re 1955 McCarthyism, John Birch, General Walker, Senator Goldwater. Generally deplore radical right while agreeing conservation has a thesis of merit. The fear of modernity and the difficulty of meeting complexity, uncertainty, rapidity of change and the need to negotiate are cited as bases of longing for simpler, direct and decisive answers that presumably would be present if only we adhered to first principles and firm leadership as defined by other than those holding the reins of power.

2nd

Donald Janson and Bernard Eismann, The Far Right N.Y.: McGraw-Hill Co., 1963. pp. 259 $5.95

Journalistic report of each major right address and personage.

Willmoore Kendall, The Conservative Affirmation Chicago: Henry Regnery Co., 1963. pp. 272 $5.95 seeks to affirm the conservative position and then to illustrate this affirmation in controversy by illustrating the use of the conservative affirmation by his book reviews. Hastily done.

Right wing Org.

July 17, 1964

Mr. William K. Wyant
Washington Bureau
St. Louis Post-Dispatch
Washington 6, D. C.

Dear Bill:

I am so far behind in everything that I must begin by apologizing for the delay in answering your letter of July 6. I hope this will reach you in time to be of some use.

Wesley McCune is a good source, and we have leaned on him rather more than vice versa. I would suggest that you also check with the Anti-Defamation League, either at its national office (315 Lexington Avenue, New York0 or at its Atlanta office (41 Exchange Place).

Actually, we have not published anything on the subject. I am enclosing a couple things we have done on the fruits.

There are 2 or 3 recent books on the subject. James Cook, The Segregationists; Hodding Carter, III, The South Strikes Back; Arnold Rice, The Ku Klux Klan in American Politics (this is about the 1920's, chiefly).

Attached also is a list of some articles which you probably already have found. Enclosed also is one news clip, plus a copy of a letter we sent out so someone else a few months ago.

There is not much I can say except the pb ious things. Given the nomination of Senator Goldwater, and given the civil rights campaigns of this summer, it is not far fetched to say that the country may very likely be entering a six-month or so period of modified civil war. I don't mean this, of course, in any too literal sense, but only with the meaning that some unprecedentedly sharp and direct confrontations are going to occur this year which go to the radical depths of our national ties and linkage with each other. I am enclosing also an article which I did a few months ago; just read the last page.

Every now and then James Reston produces a piece which justifies fully his reputation. He did in the New York Times of July 16. I am sure you have already read it. (I am not persuaded, though, that President Johnson will be induced to go "right.")

It may surprise you to read this from me, but I think, along the line that Reston takes, that we liberals have to accept some measure (small I think, but nevertheless existent) for the feeling on the right. Lord knows, the WASPS have given, over the decades, enough provocation for almost anything. But we live in the present. I think some things which have happened in the last few years have not been necessary. Among these I would include the way in which this whole school prayer question has been handled, some of the pointless civil rights demonstrations in the north (garbage throwing, Triborough Bridge lie-downs, etc. -- for agreement see Bayard Rustin's comments in the article about him in the current Saturday Evening Post), the Supreme Court's puzzling decision in the Colorado re-apportionment case (do we really want to tell the majority that it cannot decide how it wants to govern itself? -- and remember, there was no First Amendment or other individual rights question involved). I am also enclosing a marked copy of New South in which I griped along this line a bit also

ARTICLES ON THE RADICAL RIGHT

1. Wilson, Joseph and Edward Harris, "Hucksters of Hate-Nazi Style," Progressive, June 1965.

2. Cook, Fred J., "Radio Right-Hate Clubs of the Air," The Nation, May 25, 1964.

4. Billy James Hargis's March (1964) Newsletter.

5. News from National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee

6. Friedman, Saul, "The Tussle in Texas," The Nation, February 3, 1964.

7. Marine, Gene, "New Hope of the Far Rights" January 27, 1964 (California)

8. McMillan, George "The Klan Scourges Old St. Augustine," Life, June 26, 1964.

9. Cleghorn, Reese, "The Segs", Esquire, January 1964.

10. Long, Margaret, "The Imperial Wizard Explains the Klan," New York Times Magazine, July 5, 1964.

11. McMillan, George, "The Birmingham Church Bomber," Saturday Evening Post, June 6, 1964.

But I repeat, the age-old provocations of the WASPS have been mighty and maddening. I'll be looking eagerly for the publication of your piece.

Sincerely yours,

Leslie W. Dunbar
Executive Director

LWD/mmj
Enclosures
(Thermo copy: Ark. Gazette clip - 1/28/64: "about 9-million Amers. belong to Extremist Groups . . . "; Thermo copy: N. Albright Ltr. of 12/4/63 to Mr. C. L. Wynne re: Extremists groups; Lord's Journal of Politics piece; New South on Mississippi)

Ken McKee, Asso. Press - 7-18-64 Louisville Courier Journal

Robed order appears strongest in parts of Ala., Miss., & Fla. Has apparently been gaining in Ala., Miss., & La. Spurt of activity in N.C. during past month.

Other seg groups have cut into Klan's field since 1954: white citizens councils; Nat'l States Rights Party (Ala.) but Klan larger & better organized;

Geo. Carmack, Scripps Howard, 8-7-64 Knoxville News Sentinel

~~J. Edgar Hoover~~ Klan officials in office of the United Klans of Am., Inc., Tuscaloosa, Ala., (generally agreed to be largest) said the Klan has members in 34 states with 4 other states "showing interest." Publishes a paper call "The Fiery Cross"

Crosses were burned in 60 Miss counties on a single night last April.

KKK has been for many years declared a subversive organization by atty gen's office & since 1951 has also been listed as subversive by the HUAAC

In Miss. every candidate for public office & also every state employee is required to take an oath that he is not a member of a subversive organization.

Close-Up

8-10-64

Time May Come---but Not Quite Yet

An angry letter-writer informs me that (among other things) the Ku Klux Klan "died a natural death quite a few years ago."

I, too, have pronounced the Klan dead on several occasions, only to find each time that the death certificate had been issued prematurely.

It is true that the Klan is no longer the robust, sheet-wrapped stripling who ruled several states and a number of political fortunes back in the late 1910s and early 1920s.

It is true that compared with those golden years the Ku Klux Klan is in a declining state of health—lingering, perhaps, but not yet dead.

Indeed, across the South, the Klan is said to be now enjoying something of a revival. Perhaps it amounts to one last flexing of weakening muscles, but there seems to be an upswing in Klan activities this summer.

In Mississippi, it was reported earlier in the summer, crosses were burned simultaneously in more than 60 counties. About 17 crosses, said a correspondent in Mississippi, were burned in the city of Jackson alone.

And in April, a reporter for a New Orleans television station was captured and beaten by Klansmen while covering an assignment near Baton Rouge.

These were the stirrings that signaled the Klan revival.

Once before, shortly after I wrote that Klansmen were passing from the modern scene, several hundred of them gathered at Stone Mountain and had a tense confrontation with the state patrol.

That cured me of saying that the Klan had expired.

But maybe the time will come when we can say, finally, that the Klan has gone to its reward.

I'm sure my angry letter-writer joins me in hoping so.—MARVIN WALL.

INFORMATION SERVICE

Published Bi-Weekly, Except During July and August, and monthly in November by the BUREAU OF RESEARCH AND SURVEY

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
475 RIVERSIDE DRIVE, NEW YORK, N. Y. 10027

Price $3.50 Per Year—Single copies of this issue 25 cents. Volume XLIII, No. 16

The National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America is the cooperative agency through which thirty-one communions render united service. Articles appearing in this publication furnish information on current issues and are not to be construed as declarations of official attitudes or policies of the National Council of Churches.

Entered as second-class matter January 4, 1924 at the Post Office at New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

The Radical Right

In this issue INFORMATION SERVICE surveys some part of the wealth of current writing on the nature, methods and objectives of the organizations and personalities that make up the "radical right" of the American political scene. The fact that these forces and their ideas have moved from the fringes of American life into a prominent role in the current political campaign underlines the importance of a working knowledge of objective, reliable sources of information and analysis that are available.

With varying emphasis the hundreds of organizations on the radical right agree that one target of their attack is the great majority of churches and churchmen who believe that the Gospel has both individual and social relevance. Naturally related targets are the councils of churches that were born out of this conviction. The classic book on this phase of the rightist "war" is Ralph Lord Roy's Apostles of Discord (Beacon Press. 1953). In the ensuing ten years this attack has continued and intensified.

It is, however, well for churchmen to be acutely aware that the churches are only one and, for most rightists, a secondary target. The primary challenge is to the basic philosophy of democracy and to government itself as we have known it. The broadside attacks on our Presidents, our educators, our press, our major parties, our churches, even our PTA's are component parts of this basic challenge. Does this seem too alarmist, an overstatement? The mass of evidence in the basic references cited in this issue will provide a background on the scope and seriousness of the efforts of these groups.

In particular three current books are strongly recommended as indispensable resources, the Overstreets' The Strange Tactics of Extremism, Forster and Epstein's Danger on the Right and Walkers' The Christian Fright Peddlers. Each is reviewed below.

"The Strange Tactics of Extremism"

Harry and Bonaro Overstreet approach their subject with extraordinary credentials. Their book, title above (W. W. Norton, 1964. $4.50), follows three penetrating studies of the theory and practice of Marxism-Leninism. The thread of comparison and contrast of the ultra-right and the ultra-left is a major contribution in the present volume.

Roscoe Drummond writing in the Saturday Review of October 3, 1964 offers this summary of the Overstreets' qualifications:

"This is a calm book on a hot subject, written by the right authors in the right spirit and at exactly the right time. Harry and Bonaro Overstreet have the credentials, the temperament, and the talent (for documentation without dullness) to turn an incandescent light on the strange tactics of extremism in the United States. They are respected by all thoughtful people as wise, compassionate and alert commentators on American society. Moreover, by their words and by their deeds, by their writing and by their actions, they are firmly established as implacable and effective opponents of Communism. In their books, What We Must Know About Communism, The War Called Peace, and The Iron Curtain. they have done as much if not more than any other two Americans to expose the evils and uncover the deceptions of Communism and the extreme Left. It will be well to bear this

Plain Nonsense

"Ignorance and misinformation can handicap the progress of a city or a company—but they can, if allowed to prevail in foreign policy, handicap this country's security. In a world of complex and continuing problems, in a world full of frustrations and irritations, America's leadership must be guided by the lights of learning and reason—or else those who confuse rhetoric with reality and the plausible with the possible will gain the popular ascendancy with their seemingly swift and simple solutions to every world problem.

"There will always be dissident voices heard in the land, expressing opposition without alternatives, finding fault but never favor, perceiving gloom on every side and seeking influence without responsibility. Those voices are inevitable.

"But today other voices are heard in the land—voices preaching doctrines wholly unrelated to reality, wholly unsuited to the sixties, doctrines which apparently assume that words will suffice without weapons, that vituperation is as good as victory and that peace is a sign of weakness. . . .

"We cannot expect that everyone, to use the phrase of a decade ago, will 'talk sense to the American people.' But we can hope that fewer people will listen to nonsense. And the notion that . . . strength is but a matter of slogans is nothing but just plain nonsense."

—Excerpt from text of undelivered speech scheduled for presentation in Dallas, Texas, on November 22, 1963, by the late President John F. Kennedy.

in mind, because, together with their great personal and professional integrity and their respect for others' opinions, this record is their impenetrable shield."

The authors' own "Foreword" provides a preview of the content and an accurate prophecy of its effectiveness.

"This book is one kind of invitation to learning. It is about the ways in which extremism operates among us to accomplish its peculiar purposes. Because we have in our three books on Communism dealt at length with the tactics of Marxism-Leninism, our major stress here is upon those of the Radical Right. But the similarities and the competition between the two extremes—each of them wanting to reshape our common ways of looking at things, in order to gain power enough to reshape our society—make up a significant part of our theme.

"There is one fortunate thing about the writings and the methods of the far Left and the far Right. While they can catch us off guard and do tremendous harm so long as we do not familiarize ourselves with their character, they are far more stereotyped and repetitive than are those of the general run of Americans. Hence, they can be taken apart, as it were, and studied, to see what makes them function. When they have been studied, they can be recognized with a fair degree of accuracy in our further encounters with them. And when they are recognized for what they are, they lose most of their power to confuse our minds and to set us against one another."

What It Covers

About a third of the text is devoted to a study in depth of the John Birch Society as the most potent of the organizations of the radical Right. Part Two examines the operations of a selected sampling of other leaders—Dan Smoot, Carl McIntire, Myers Lowman, Edgar Bundy and Billy James Hargis. Part Three explores the questions of "How united is the Radical Right?," their political tactics, the composition of their rank and file. The book closes with a "self-portrait of a radical rightist" and an examination of the "task ahead of us." The "us" to whom the book is addressed is the "liberal-conservative or conservative-liberal center" for, in the authors' judgment, we are "overwhelmingly a nation of moderates."

The book is annotated and indexed and includes appended listings of both "how to get far-right publications" and "organizations that have resource materials."

The present review cannot attempt to summarize either the evidence or the conclusions of a 313-page volume packed with both. In essence, as the Saturday Review has said: "Their book does not aim to shock; it illuminates. Their book is no smear of the radical Right; it dissects the radical Right. On the basis of massive research, it brings into sharp focus and under penetrating analysis the ideas, policies, purposes, tactics, and foreboding implications of the principal spokesmen of extremism. It will enable you to know what the extremist leaders are saying to their followers and, so far as possible, to the nation."

Extremism and the Churches

The treatment of the attack upon the churches within the larger context of the total rightist assault will be of special interest. It can only be sampled here.

One of many concrete examples cited centers on the "Christian Crusader," Billy James Hargis: "How far Hargis is willing to depart from clear and responsible thinking is made plain in an undated letter sent out in the late spring of 1964, under the heading 'The National Council of Churches and the "Bloody Race War" Planned for this Summer!' This document, aimed at the then pending Civil Rights Bill, is being pushed by 'liberal preachers' who have gone 'crazy with their socialistic and revolutionary schemes . . .' They will, he says, 'divide our people and throw us at the mercy of a United Nations' occupation force which undoubtedly will be demanded by the liberals to maintain peace within the U. S. in event of a new civil war between now and the elections in November.' "

Fundamentalism Misrepresented

The authors analyze the relation of this kind of "Christian" fulmination to the substantial number of fundamentalist Christians in the United States and draw a careful distinction. "It would be more to the point," they conclude, "to say that Christian fundamentalism is actually misrepresented by these Rightists. Their doctrine is a highly selective blend of those aspects of the New Testament that specifically relate to personal salvation and those aspects of the Old Testament that give them permission to be exclusive and to hate their enemies."

What is the end to which this highly selective biblicism is directed? "All of us who belong to the liberal-conservative center would do well to recognize," the authors conclude, "the meaning in depth of the Radical Rightist assault upon the 'social gospel.' It is easy to miss this meaning if we focus on the Rightists' opposition to some particular act on the part of the National or World Council of Churches: some act which we, too, feel to have been ill-advised. It is easy to miss it, also, if we let ourselves become confused by the efforts of McIntire, Bundy, Hargis, and others to show that the church Councils work hand-in-hand with 'liberalist-socialist-Communist elements' in the United States Information Agency, or the State Department, or the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

"But the two basic targets of attack in all this vast output of Radical Rightist propaganda are the sense of human unity and the sense of mutual responsibility as these have been traditionally instilled in us by religious influences. We dare not miss the fact that today's right-wing extremism is, in its very essence, a schismatic force: one that tries to identify Americanism with a kind of social atomism—each nation for itself; each race for itself; each class for itself; each man for himself. At many points, its use of anti-socialist and anti-Communist terminology seems little more than a convenience."

The emphasis is in the original text.

Self-Portrait of the Radical Rightist

Out of the detailed analysis of particular rightist organizations the Overstreets devote a chapter to a composite description—a "self-portrait." Three major aspects of this portrait are stressed. The first is an exploration of the difficulty of describing the movement with "any of our ready-made political labels." The contradictions are such that:

"It is not really strange, then, that some people call today's Radical Rightism anarchic, while others call it fascist. Neither term fits the complex actuality; and we have found none that does. Our current choice, till we find a better, is anarchic totalitarianism—which is self-contradictory enough to cover both the Rightists' fierce objection to being controlled in any way and their readiness to control and coerce others by all expedient means."

The second point is that "the Radical Rightist line—the nature of which is made plain by the resolutions adopted at one gathering after another—is not underwritten by any coherent theory. It is a product of anger, not of thought: of anger, and of a will to be on top of some heap. It expresses a determination to climb up and to pull down."

The third is the need "to defend a structure of ideas that cannot stand alone, and that cannot stand any rough-and-ready encounter with reality, that accounts for the Radical Rightists' singularly standardized over-reaction to criticism: their 'dirty, filthy lie' reaction; their quick retreat into martyrdom; their exaggerated determination to demolish the critic."

A House of Cards

Each of these descriptions is documented at length in the chapter and the volume. The three combined make for a highly vulnerable "house of cards" which must be protected at all costs. The attack on William C. Sullivan, assistant director of the FBI, for questioning the rightist allegations of the extent of Communist infiltration of Protestant churches is reviewed and the reasons for the bitterness analyzed.

"One whole section of the extremists' house of cards is built on the interminably reiterated assumption that Communist infiltration of and influence on the Protestant clergy and the National and World Council of Churches are of massive proportions. Therefore, not Mr. William C. Sullivan, nor even Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, can be permitted to pull out this key card that supports other cards. By the Radical Rightist code, it is better to destroy public confidence in the FBI than to permit the FBI to render more rickety than it already is a 'necessary' proof that Communist influence is rampant in high places.

"This is one of those points at which Right extremism shows how sharply divergent it is from both conservatism and plain average Americanism. Most Americans can believe that Communism is a threat that must be taken seriously without seeing it as in control of any major sector of our society. Most Americans, again, would welcome trustworthy evidence that church leaders —or educators, or labor leaders, or business men, or government officials—had been learning the score and making it harder than it once was for Communists to infiltrate our institutions. But the Radical Rightists come so far from being able to welcome any such evidence that they feel impelled to demolish the person who presents it."

Highly Recommended

These excerpts, although extended, fall far short of doing justice to this rounded and unusually competent treatment of the "strange tactics of extremism." The book is must reading.

Finally, let the authors speak on a common device of extremism, right or left.

". . . Surely the time has come to recognize that it is of the nature of extremism to go in for protective coloration. For the Communist, the most useful disguise that can be donned is that of the anti-imperialist, the peace-lover, and the seeker after social justice. For the Radical Rightist, it is that of the anti-Communist.

"Wearing this guise, the Radical Rightist can often achieve a remarkable freedom to practice his special type of legerdemain: that by means of which he converts into a Communist or pro-Communist anyone with whom he disagrees on domestic or foreign policies. Most far-right action-programs are, in plain fact, as gigantically irrelevant to the real threat of international Communism as Communist action-programs are to the cause of freedom, peace, and justice."

National Council for Civic Responsibility Is Formed

"The purpose of . . . [this] press conference is to announce the formation of the National Council for Civic Responsibility, an organization whose purpose is systematically to bring to the American people, through the mass media, the truth about the John Birch Society and related radical reactionary groups, and about the misstatements on public issues and personalities that they are spreading on a rapidly increasing scale."

With these words, Dr. Arthur Larson, Chairman of the National Council for Civic Responsibility, launched, Sept. 22, 1964, the newly-formed organization backed by 80 distinguished Americans from business, religion, science, law, labor, education and public affairs. They include persons predominently identified with both political parties. "What they have in common," Dr. Larson said, "is a growing concern about the damage that will be done to American standards of public discussion and responsible behavior in a democratic society, unless a methodical and continuing program is launched to expose both impropriety of methods and falsity of substance as they appear in radical reactionary broadcasts and publications."

Dr. Arthur Larson is a 54-year old expert in international law and is best known for his service, 1956-1957, as Director of the U.S. Information Agency. He served also in other key posts in the Eisenhower Administration; those of Under-Secretary of Labor 1954-1956, and Special Assistant to the President, 1958-1961. At present, Dr. Larson is Director of the World Rule of Law Center at Duke University. Some of the 80 Council members are by fields: Public Affairs, Marion B. Folsom, director of Eastman Kodak, and former U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; James P. Mitchell, former U.S. Secretary of Labor; Roy Wilkins, executive director, N.A.A.C.P.; Business, Clarence B. Randall, former chairman, Inland Steel Company; John A. Roosevelt, partner, Bache and Company; Science and Education, Dr. Deltov Bronk, president of Rockefeller Institute; Dr. Erwin N. Griswold, dean, Harvard University Law School; Religion, Bishop Reuben E. Mueller, president, National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.; Rt. Rev. Arthur Lichtenberger, presiding bishop, The Protestant Episcopal Church; Bishop Lloyd C. Wicke, president, Council of Bishops, The Methodist Church; Labor, Jacob Potofsky, president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

Right Wing Can't Be Ignored

"For many years Americans, including myself, thought that the best way to treat the radical reactionary movement was to ignore it. Their charges—that Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy, Truman and Roosevelt were traitors; that Earl Warren should be impeached together

Page 1 "The Strange Tactics of Extremism"
Page 1 Plain Nonsense
Page 3 National Council for Civic Responsibility Is Formed
Page 4 "Danger on the Right"
Page 6 "The Christian Fright Peddlers"
Page 7 A Brief Directory of Extremist Groups and Guide to Radical Right Broadcasters
Page 9 "Right Wing Broadcasts" (a spot map)
Page 10 A Catholic Analyzes the John Birch Society
Page 11 Some Dare Call It Slander
Page 12 The Radical Right: A Brief Bibliography

with most of the rest of the Supreme Court for good measure; that most of the legislation asked by Congress in the last 30 years was unconstitutional—seemed so preposterous as not to deserve to be dignified by an answer."

But, Dr. Larson said, "a number of Americans who felt this way are now changing their minds."

"The principal reason is that the sheer quantity and persistence of radical reactionary propaganda has reached the point where it is now going far beyond the function of merely reassuring the reactionary prejudices of a small fringe group." The statistic Dr. Larson found "most ominous" is that there are "more than 7,000 radio and television broadcasts weekly in 50 states now being aired by groups whose officers are either acknowledged members of the John Birch Society or linked with it in other ways." (See the spot map in this issue entitled "Right Wing Broadcasts.")

More than a score of organizations are engaged in the kind of propaganda Dr. Larson refers to. "Radical reactionary organizations now spend upwards of $20,000,000 a year."

"The coordinated policy and impact of these groups is not surprising in view of a sort of interlocking directorate exemplified by the presence of top Birch Society policy makers in top policy positions in 12 of the most active groups," Dr. Larson said.

Four Reasons

Dr. Larson feels that the phenomenon of rightwingism can no longer be ignored and stated four reasons why.

First of all, "by virtue of the saturation tactics used, radical, reactionary propaganda is producing an impact even on large numbers of people who, themselves, are in no sense extremists or sympathetic to extremist views. When day after day their hear distortions of fact and sinister charges against persons or groups, often emanating from organizations with conspicuously respectable sounding names, it is no wonder that the result is: confusion on some important public issues; stimulation of latent prejudices; and creation of suspicion, fear and mistrust in relation not only to their representatives in Government, but even in relationship to their neighbors."

Secondly, "although these extreme views have practically never prevailed on a question of national policy, there are many local communities in which the tactics of extremists have made life miserable for good citizens—through spying, nocturnal phone calls, economic and social pressures, stonings, even bombings, and other tactics alien to the American way of working out political decisions — citizens whose only offense is that they upheld the policies of the national government, under successive administrations, and of the vast majority of Americans on such matters as social security or the United Nations."

The third reason why the right wing can no longer be ignored "is that the unchecked increase in this kind of propaganda is degrading the American political dialogue to such a point as to damage our self-respect at home and our reputation for public responsibility abroad.

"The fourth reason," Dr. Larson said, "is that radical, reactionary positions, taken at their own worth, quite literally, and not as a matter of rhetoric, are undermining American democracy as we know it. We have three branches of government. We are told by this propaganda that: as to the Executive, four successive Presidents were traitors; as to the Judiciary, most of the judges in the highest court should be impeached; as to the Legislative, most of the major legislation asked by Congress is either unconstitutional or socialistic, or both.

"What then," Dr. Larson continues, "is the average citizen supposed to conclude about the validity of the form of government which allegedly produces nothing but such disastrous results in all its branches?"

"At a time when we are engaged in a world struggle to vindicate the rightness of our system, we cannot afford to have the confidence of Americans themselves in the integrity of our democratic system eroded by this Niagara of distortion and abuse."

Sponsorship

The National Council for Civic Responsibility is sponsored by the Public Affairs Institute, a non-profit educational organization, directed by Dr. Dewey Anderson, an economist with a distinguished career in education, government service and public affairs.

For 17 years, the Public Affairs Institute has conducted surveys, published books, pamphlets, research reports on issues involving the public interest. The PAI has specialized in agriculture, independent business, education, health, resources, fiscal policy, international relations, the governmental process and national welfare.

The work of the National Council for Civic Responsibility will be financed by voluntary contributions to the Public Affairs Institute, 312 Pennsylvania Avenue, S.E., Washington, D.C. The contributions are tax exempt.

The National Council for Civic Responsibility, located at 65 E. 55th St., New York, N. Y. 10022, will prepare, publish, and make available to news media and organizations, accurate information on the origins, leaders, objectives, viewpoints, and financing of extremist groups.

The NCCR will "arrange a series of daily radio programs . . . correcting the errors being currently propagated." It will seek the cooperation of press, radio, and television in exposing these groups and in presenting positive, educational programs expressed through published features related to the issues.

"Danger on the Right"

"The authors of Danger on the Right have attempted to write a definitive book on the attitudes, personnel and influence of the Radical Right and the Extreme Conservatives on the American scene. I believe they have succeeded." Thus Dore Shary begins his foreword to this book "written as a part of the total public service program" of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith (New York, Random House, 1964, 294 p. $4.95, cloth; $2.95, paper). Although the volume "is the end result of a combined staff effort" the authors are Arnold Forster and Benjamin R. Epstein, well-known for previous similar reports such as The Troublemakers and Some of My Best Friends.

Definitive is a very large word and requires the test of time. Certainly Danger on the Right is a widely comprehensive, fact-packed, perceptive and eminently readable survey of most of the major organizations of both the radical right and extreme American conservatism. A unique feature is an appended exploration of the "Sources of Finance of the American Right Wing" which names names and supplies amounts of donation. This data is summarized as follows:

14 Million Annually

". . . It is a fair and conservative estimate that the minimum cost of the overall Rightist propaganda assault on the American mind is in the neighborhood of $14,000,000 a year. This encompasses the known expenses of the American Right, ranging from the extremely conservative organizations to the Radical Right. It does not include the far-out organizations tainted with racism and anti-Semitism; they raise more than a million dollars for their own special purposes.

"A substantial portion of the $14,000,000 that is poured into extremely conservative and Radical Right propaganda comes this way: from some 70 or more foundations (almost all tax-exempt), 113 business firms and corporations, 25 public utilities, and some 250 individuals who can be identified as having contributed at least $500 each in recent years."

Ministers in particular will be interested in the revelations of just who has been paying for the flood of rightist propaganda that swells their mails.

A Typology of the Right

The book is structured on a threefold distinction of the radical right, the extreme conservatives and the "rabble rousing gutter bigot." Both the authors' own admission and the evidence presented stress the difficulties of this sorting process. The borders tend to blur. However, the criteria of distinction between each "type" have their own importance.

Essentially the radical right refuses to accept the ordinary democratic rules of American politics and public discussion. Their tactics, often quite explicitly and in other cases without acknowledgment, are borrowed from the end justifies any means arsenal of Mao, Stalin and other "tacticians" of the ultra left. They refuse to be confused by ethics.

The authors' own summary analysis of the comparison and overlap of the radical right and the extreme conservatives deserves quotation in full:

"Considerable research by ADL's staff into the operations of this movement turned up no evidence that the Radical Right—as distinguished from its conservative allies—should be regarded as part of this nation's responsible political fabric. On the contrary, the evidence is that in reality it is a fringe political activity, and no more sound as a political position than the troublesome Communist conspiracy. The Radical Right sometimes has surrounded itself and often functions with certain characteristics of secrecy, furtiveness, and hidden motivation —marks of an organized conspiracy, which it is not. Ironically, the Radical Right's analysis of all national and international problems is rooted in a conspiratorial concept. Everything is blamed on a 'Communist conspiracy.'

"In the eyes of the Radical Right, the American Republic is imperiled on almost every front by this Communist conspiracy which, says the Radical Right, has been entrenched in Washington for the last thirty years, and which has been softening up the country for an imminent Communist take-over.' The softening-up process, in the mythology of the Radical Right, has resulted from the advocacy by the 'conspiracy' of socialism in domestic policy, and sellout and softness in foreign affairs.

"This Radical Right mythology differs in degree and intensity, but not in kind, from the viewpoint of the Extreme Conservatives. The latter also view American domestic policy of the last thirty years as socialistic and dangerous, and our foreign policy of the same period as prone to softness and appeasement in dealing with the Communist threat.

"The basic difference is that, unlike the Radical Right, the Extreme Conservatives generally do not tend to ascribe the alleged socialism and softness to any sinister plot in high places, but rather to blindness, stupidity, and bungling on the part of four Presidents and their liberal advisers.

"Nevertheless, if there are some differences in interpretation of recent history between the Radicals of the Right and the Extreme Conservatives, there are also similarities which are noteworthy. If these two wings of the American Right differ on the reasons for the fancied perils and problems the country faces, they agree basically on the nature of the 'evils' they fight—Federal taxes, Federal spending, Federal social welfare programs, and Federal regulation of private business, as well as foreign aid, UN activities, and negotiations with the Soviets.

"This basic similarity of viewpoint has led to an ideological blur between these two segments of the American Right. The less extreme often 'fellow-travel' with the Radicals of the Right, much as some Liberals fellow-traveled with the Communist Left twenty or thirty years ago. As a result, individual Conservatives today often lend their names, their sponsorship, and their financial support to organizations and causes of the Extremists."

Excluded from this volume is "the rabble-rousing gutter bigot, who combines political extremism with promoting racial and religious hatred" although it is pointed out that "the conspiratorial theory of the bigots is the same as that of the Radical Right but with that extra noxious ingredient of racial and religious hatred." The practical reasons why Rockwell's American Nazis and their counterparts are excluded are previous extended coverage in the early reports mentioned above and a relatively limited access by these groups to the coffers of ultra-conservative wealth. The distinction is, however, an arbitrary one. The case is perhaps clearer on anti-Semitism than on anti-Negro bias. Almost without exception, as the detailed reporting clearly establishes, the entire right is arrayed against the Negro revolution and the civil rights bill.

Organizations of the Radical Right

Danger on the Right classes as radical right and devotes separate chapters to Robert Welch's John Birch Society, Dr. Fred Schwartz' Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, Dr. George Benson's National Education Program, Rev. Carl McIntire's 20th Century Reformation Hour, Dean Clarence Manion's Manion Forum, Dan Smoot Report, Edgar Bundy's Church League of America, Kent and Phoebe Courtney's Conservative Society of America, and Willis Stone's Liberty Amendment Committee of the U.S.A. Obviously, this list is much more extended than that of the Overstreets' study. Nevertheless the profiles of history, program and personalities are fact-packed, startling and sobering.

Some particular citations are taken from the treatment of the John Birch Society because its preeminence in and interpenetration of the entire radical right is a central fact.

Robert Welch, the self-appointed leader of what he himself describes as "a monolithic body" has made periodic estimates of the extent of Communist control of the entire life of the nation. The most recent of these is "50%-70%." How can such a wildly distorted image of the American reality be explained?

The essential clue is in the "early Welch" of 1954-1958 as set down in his manuscript, The Politician. The 1962 published version of this self-revelation has been "dressed up" and "toned down" as Forster and Epstein document. The original version however is the real Welch of a "50 to 70 per cent Communist controlled" America. Here it is:

"In the second stage, Truman was used by the Communists, with his knowledge and acquiescence, as the price he consciously paid for their making him president. In the third stage, in my own firm opinion, the Communists have one of their own actually in the presidency. For this third man, Eisenhower, there is only one possible word to describe his purposes and his actions. That word is treason."

Faced with this phantasy, near-hopeless world it is small wonder that Welch makes such calls upon his followers as that one official monthly agenda, "Join your local P.T.A. at the beginning of the school year, and go to work and capture it." Parallel advice has been offered, and followed, for churches, civic organizations of all types, party structures and school and library boards.

The authors' summary description of the Birch Society program would apply with minor modifications and additions to the whole spectrum of the radical right:

"The chief stance of the John Birch Society is, of course, open hostility to United States foreign and domestic policies of the last thirty years, policies which have been, in the suspicious Birch view, elements of Bolshevik strategy. Manifestly, Birchers would like to set the clock back at least three decades, repealing American political and economic history from the 1930's to the present. The domestic reforms of the last three decades, many of them instituted clearly to preserve the free enterprise system in a workable form, are seen as service to the enemy. So, too, are the programs of military preparedness for the United States and its allies. So, too, are the far-reaching provisions for foreign military and economic aid to allies and underdeveloped countries. So, too, is the bipartisan United States policy of support for the United Nations, from which Robert Welch would have the United States withdraw. As he puts it: 'Get the U.S. out of the U.N. and the U.N. out of the U.S.'"

"Extreme Conservatives"

The "Extreme Conservatives" described and analyzed are Admiral Ben Moreell's Americans for Constitutional Action, James Wick's Human Events, the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, the Young Americans for Freedom, and William Buckley and his National Review.

Acknowledging that "the two factions are difficult to separate at times," a major difference is seen in that "most conservatives do not . . . accept the conspiracy theory of American history. Still the overlap is at least as conspicuous as the difference."

"Extreme Conservatives do not advocate impeaching the Chief Justice, but they deplore many of the same Supreme Court decisions as those who do. Most of these Conservatives do not actually urge repeal of the income tax, or American withdrawal from the U.N., but they denounce income taxes as confiscatory or socialistic, and attack the world organization with comparable fervor for many of its activities. These Conservatives of the Right do not actually invade supermarkets which sell hams from Poland, but they applaud those who do. The Extreme Conservatives may deplore the extremism of a Robert Welch for calling President Eisenhower a 'dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy,' but they do not reject those who follow Welch. In fact, they are frequently quoted as saying that the Birch Society includes many 'good Americans.'"

Clearly the lines of distinction are not drawn, largely because the extreme conservatives show a continuing reluctance to do so. The combined danger is very real.

"It is a fairly certain fact that the leaders of the Right Wing—Radicals and their conservative allies—have not yet mobilized anything but a fraction of [the] potential reservoir of support. And it is reasonable to expect that these leaders may, in the next few years, mobilize and activate new thousands, if not millions, of confused and frightened citizens not now marching in the Rightist ranks.

"This is all the more likely because the fears and frustrations of the 'long, twilight struggle' seem likely to continue for years. Those who seek the quick and the easy answer to the complex and delicate problem of the cold war will continue to be drawn to the Extreme Right, whose siren song appears to offer such an answer. At home, the tensions of the racial crisis will test the tolerance, the good will, and the steadfastness of the most stable Americans—let alone the citizen who is mercurial, short-tempered, prejudiced, or worse. The latter may easily be drawn to the slogans and banners of the Radical Right."

"The Christian Fright Peddlers"

"This book is about fear and its consequences in the form of right-wing extremism in the Protestant churches, in the private and public lives of Americans. I attempted to present the facts with as much feeling for the core realities of life and liberty as objectivity would permit. But I have eschewed that pseudo-objectivity which substitutes 'available evidence tends to indicate' for 'I think,' or presents personal experiences as though they were general conclusions. I have attempted to strike a balance between recounting personal experiences with broader implications, and generalizations that may be made from others' experiences and an accumulation of data."

This is the author's own statement of the purpose of his book, title above (Doubleday, 1964, 290 p. $4.95). He succeeds admirably. The author is Brooks R. Walker, the young Unitarian pastor of the Emerson Unitarian Church in Canoga Park, California. He speaks in part from first hand experience since his outspoken opposition to the radical right has been punctuated by bombing, first of his home then of his office.

Despite this, an outstanding virtue of the book is its low-keyed calm, the author's refusal to become a mirror-image of the hate groups on the right. His work is more personal, less systematic than Danger on the Right or The Strange Tactics of Extremism. It has more direct personal observation and illustration by specific incident. Both approaches have value. Walker's complements the others and adds new dimensions of understanding of the nature of the radical right.

Focus on the Churches

It is natural that as a minister, the author's chief concern and coverage is the rightist assault in the name of religion and against the churches and the church council movement. His work provides a valuable updating a little over ten years after another minister, Ralph Lord Roy, surveyed the "apostles of discord." For churchmen there is also special interest in the point by point and vigorous defense of the National Council of Churches by one whose own denomination is not a constituent member of that Council.

The program and tactics of Billy James Hargis' Christian Crusade and of Carl McIntire's American Council of Christian Churches are principal topics as are Fred Schwartz' Christian Anti-Communism Crusade and, inevitably, Robert Welch's John Birch Society. One full chapter deals with "Target: The National Council of Churches" and others deal insightfully with "sources of the radical right," "the attack on practically everyone" and the historical and theological problems involved in the drive to "put God at the head of our nation."

Space compels the inclusion of only a few samples of the content. Walker sees the basic indictment as this:

"Of this much, however, we may be certain: The Christian fright peddlers have done untold damage. They have attacked free institutions and free men in an open society without regard for the disciplines of responsibility acknowledged by those who cherish liberty. They have sounded the alarms of distrust with unrelenting insistence, knowing full well that the only environment capable of sustaining freedom is one that begins with a trust in persons and ends with a deep confidence in the democratic process. Their offense, their true offense, is in their tampering with that process, in their attempts to coerce it—in short, in their antidemocratic bias.

"Perhaps the following judgment by the Rt. Rev. John P. Craine, Episcopal Bishop of Indianapolis, is too severe, but it is entirely relevant:

" 'It is interesting to note that the far right has adopted the same tactics as the Communists—the repudiation of democracy, the fundamentalist, dogmatic attitudes, the theories of guilt by association. Any clergyman who has any liberal inclinations, who is concerned about housing or segregation or even supports the National Council of Churches or the United Nations is accused of softness toward communism. I can only say that if I were intent on destroying this great nation I can think of no better way than to create distrust, hate and fear, as is being done today.' "

Why the Attack on the NCC?

The essential issue in the attack on the National Council is summed up in these words:

"The deepest conflict involves the question of the churches' social responsibility. The NCC believes that both the churches and the Council have not a right, but a weighty responsibility to speak the word of ethical wisdom in the world of secular concern. Religion, the Council assumes, permeates all dimensions of life or it is not truly religion. For the Council, the God of creation is also Lord of creation, or he is not God. Men and their institutions, which are but two aspects of one creation, must be molded by humanitarian concerns stemming from an acknowledgment of Jesus Christ as Divine Lord and Savior.

"The value system held by the Shreveport vestry committee is just as coherent as the NCC's, but it begins at a different point. For the vestry committee, politics is politics, and religion, religion. The church should concern itself only with the redemption of men. It is enough that individual Christians in public life may be called upon to give evidence of their faith. You cannot coerce society. You cannot reform culture by legislating out of a pious concern.

"So far as I can see, these premises and their corollary beliefs are wholly antithetical. They admit no possibility of reconciliation. And they go to the very root of the crucial conflict over what it means to be a Christian in our culture. The final question posed by the conflict is this: Does the gospel have any direct relevance to man as a social being, to society and its structures? For my own part, I find that the humanitarian commitment of the National Council speaks to me of true religion."

False Freedom

The drive of the whole of the radical right and particularly of the John Birch Society is seen as the perversion of freedom:

"If we are truly sensitive, the John Birch Society and its like can tell us much about ourselves. It can remind us that there are always men willing to sacrifice freedom in the name of freedom, men willing to establish the Great Protectorate, to play the part of the benevolent despot. We have only to relax the maintenance of justice and of liberty. We have only to neglect the cultivation of freedom, and the self-appointed guardians of our persons will take over. Already, they have discovered that the Supreme Court of this land is the key to our stability as a free nation. The attack on the court has therefore been relentless. "Impeach the Chief Justice and reform the Court,' we are told. The brooding corollary is never voiced: 'We will tell you how to be free,' it says. 'We will instruct you in how to use your liberty.' "

The one positive note from the radical right is a frighteningly nihilistic one.

"The elemental notion that there could be no triumphant nation in a full-scale thermonuclear war is accepted by nearly everyone, it seems, except for those who live in the pre-1945 world of the far right."

"What do you do with an anger that encompasses the whole world? You propose total destruction. The one 'positive' plank in the right-wing platform is the means for destruction. The arms budget should be increased. Our preparedness for war should be stepped up. We should drop our 'no win policy' and move on to victory—a victory that would mean death for most of us, including the nihilists themselves. That is the logical outcome of the foreign-policy position taken by the death makers."

What is the great risk and the real answer?

True Answer to the Radical Right

". . . My point is this: authoritarianism begets authoritarianism. The first answer to fulminations is likely to be counterfulminations. The first reaction to violence is likely to be violence. The first response to an attempt at dehumanization is to play the part—that is, to become dehumanized and to insist that one's adversary is a block of wood, a social dinosaur, an insolent crackpot.

"The great danger from the radical right is that the man who is attacked will let his attackers rule him by shouting authoritarian answers into the wind in a vain attempt to return the sentiments of his attackers.

"The true answer to the radical right—or to any other form of authoritarianism—is the nonauthoritarian answer implied by the phrase 'the democratic method in human relationships' and made real in every encounter that is truly humanistic."

This is a book of continuing value for every minister and every layman and laywoman.

A Brief Directory of Extremist Groups and Guide to Radical Right Broadcasters

The newly formed Council for Civic Responsibility in releases made to press, radio and television personnel by Dr. Arthur Larson, chairman of the Council, has linked 12 ultra-right organizations directly to the John Birch Society through top officers or principal financial supporters of each organization.

Dr. Larson, former director of the U.S. Information Agency and member of the Eisenhower Administration, said the interlocking directorate provided all extremist groups with "cordinated policy and impact" in carrying out their programs.

The groups, their activities, and their ties to the John Birch Society are detailed by the National Council for Civic Responsibility as follows:

Americans for Constitutional Action

Program: A political action group dedicated to electing and re-electing conservative and ultra-conservative members of Congress, formed as a reaction to the Americans for Democratic Action. ACA publishes an index of voting records of Congressmen and Senators, rating them as to degree of conservatism. Local chapters are active in political campaigns.

What They Say: "Americans have been running away from their own revolution in order to embrace an armament program saturated with Marxist ideology."

Birch Links: Vice Chairman and Secretary, General Bonner Fellers, Birch Endorser. Treasurer, Charles Edison, Member, Editorial Advisory Committee, American Opinion, Birch Society Magazine.

America's Future

Program: In addition to the weekly commentary by R. K. Scott broadcast on 365 stations, and the newsletter which draws from the broadcasts, the group publishes pamphlets and books voicing extremist views. It also is the sponsor and financer of "Operation Textbook," a group which evaluates textbooks in use in public schools for their coverage of American society, economy and government.

What They Say: The group's secretary, Rosalie M. Gordon, in a book, Nine Men Against America, said ". . . the Supreme Court has struck down practically every bulwark we have raised against the Communist conspiracy in America. . . ."

Birch Links: Thomas Anderson, Trustee, member Birch National Council; F. Gano Chance, Trustee, member Birch National Council.

Christian Crusade

Program: This organization was founded and is headed by Rev. Billy James Hargis. In addition to sponsoring daily political-evangelistic programs on 55 radio and 7 television stations, the group publishes a weekly newsletter and pamphlets and brochures.

What It Says: In a signed pamphlet titled "No Room in the Inn—Or The U.N." Hargis said: "We slapped Christ in the face at the setting up of the United Nations in San Francisco, in April, 1945, just as surely as the Jews slapped Him on the night of His betrayal 2,000 years ago. We gave in to Communist pressures and agreed to make no mention of Jesus Christ, or God, The Father, in the United Nations Chambers. From the beginning, there has been no room for Him in the U.N. . . ." He also has said: "For 14 years, I thought the 'ism' that was the greatest threat to our nation was Communism. Now, I am convinced it is liberalism. The liberals have the finances and numerical strength the Communists lack; yet their socialistic objectives are much the same . . . To be a real good liberal, you've got to be 100 per cent stupid. . . ."

Birch Links: Billy James Hargis, member of Birch Society's Committee of Endorsers.

Christian Freedom Foundation

Program: This group is the vehicle of Howard E. Kershner whose "Commentary on the News" is broadcast on approximately 148 radio stations weekly. Kershner is also editor of Christian Economics, a fortnightly magazine intertwining religion and economics, and he also writes a weekly syndicated column which goes to about 700 newspapers.

What It Says: In a speech at Harding College in 1961, Kershner said: "We are driven to the conclusion that evil men in strategic positions with the aid of their dupes, stooges and fellow-travelers have been able to mold public opinion in our country and shape governmental policy along lines that are hurrying us onward to destruction. In a real sense, the Communists have taken over our country and have greatly influenced our major economic, fiscal, military and foreign policies."

Birch Links: The principal financial support for the Christian Freedom Foundation comes from J. Howard Pew, who is a member of the Editorial Advisory Committee of the Birch magazine, American Opinion, and is also a stockholder in Robert Welch, Inc.

Church League of America
(also called National Laymen's Council)

Program: Research Section maintains "five tons of files" and "over 850,000 cross-referenced index cards on all organizations and individuals who had aided the cause of subversion." Since 1962, it has sponsored a weekly 15-minute radio program carried on 17 stations in eight states. It conducts a film rental service which distributes such films as "Communism On The Map," which was produced by the National Education Program at Harding College and based on sections of the Birch Society's Blue Book.

What They Say: "Communism and theological modernism are as one." The Girl Scout Handbook is "un-American."

Birch Links: Two members of the Board of Directors, E. L. Wiegand and Mrs. H. Dillon Winship, are on the Birch Society's Committee of Endorsers.

Citizens Foreign Aid Committee

Program: Publishes weekly newsletter "Facts on Foreign Aid" regularly urging cutback or elimination of aid funds.

What They Say: Describes itself as "crusading to kill the foreign aid program."

Birch Links: National Director, General Bonner Fellers, Birch Endorser; Vice Chairman, Clarence Manion, Birch National Council; Chairman, J. Bracken Lee, Birch Endorser.

Conservative Society of America (Courtney Complex)

Program: Publishes the "Independent American" and runs right wing broadcasts on 39 radio stations.

What They Say: Get out of the U.N. Eliminate the income tax. Free the government of "infiltration by subversive agents."

Birch Links: Board of Directors includes the following Birch Endorsers: Medford Evans, Dan Hanson, E. Merrill Root, Maj. Gen. C. A. Willoughby, George J. Hess, J. Bracken Lee, R. W. Orell.

Liberty Lobby

Program: "A monthly newsletter of, by and for the American right wing." Also publishes brochures such as "How to Write Your Congressman," by Billy James Hargis.

What They Say: Oppose Federal aid to education. Favor repeal of the income tax, and withdrawal from the U.N.

Birch Links: Board of Policy includes: Tom Anderson, National Council member; Billy James Hargis; J. Bracken Lee; and E. L. Wiegand, all Birch Endorsers.

Manion Forum

Program: Weekly radio programs on 240 radio stations. Promotes "Conservative Clubs." Now claims over 4,000 such clubs seeking charters from Manion.

What They Say: To wage war by television, radio and the printed page against (1) the confiscatory, Marxist income tax; (2) wanton foreign aid squandering; (3) Socialistic "public power"; (4) destruction of states' rights; (5) futile conferences with Kremlin gangsters; (6) ridiculous budgets; (7) Federal aid to education; and (8) unrestrained labor bossism.

Birch Links: Clarence Manion, member National Council Birch Society.

National Economic Council

Program: Publishes semi-monthly economic news letter.

What They Say: "All branches of American life, especially such unsuspected areas as the Christian churches, have been infiltrated by Communists." On the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court: "Warren has led the job of making the court one of the strongest allies Moscow has in America."

Birch Links: President, Mark M. Jones, Birch Endorser; Founder, Merwin K. Hart, deceased, was Birch Endorser; Constance V. Dahl, Executive Vice President, Birch member.

Dan Smoot Report

Program: Publishes weekly report and runs nationwide radio-TV broadcasts on 70 radio stations, and 40 television stations.

What They Say: Calls for impeachment of Earl Warren; suggests "that the Cuban invasion fiasco was organized betrayal, planned in Washington and Moscow."

Birch Links: Leading financial supporter is D. B. Lewis, a member of the Council of Endorsers of the Birch Society.

We the People

Program: Holds an annual Constitution Day rally (One featured Robert Welch on subject "This is a republic, not a democracy.") Also issues "Home Study Kits."

What They Say: Wants impeachment of Earl Warren. Investigation of National Education Association. Wants to get out of the United Nations. "You cannot expect the American people to sacrifice to fight the enemy if the President does not act now to clean the enemy out of our State Department."

Birch Links: President, Tom Anderson, is on National Council of Birch Society. Board members include: C. W. Pavey, E. Merrill Root, J. Bracken Lee, all Birch Endorsers, and Revilo P. Oliver, member of the Birch Society National Council.

Radical Right Broadcasters

Nine of the leading Radical Right broadcasters account for over 7,000 programs a week over radio and television stations. The following spot map shows the location of "only seven key extremist-sponsored radio programs taped and distributed to stations throughout the country. . . ." They are: "Life Lines"; "Dan Smoot Reports"; "Manion Forum"; "Howard Kershner"; "Christian Crusade"; "20th Century Reformation Hour"; and, "America's Future."

Source: National Council for Civic Responsibility, 1964.

The nine leading groups or individuals responsible for over 7,000 programs a week over radio and television include the following, according to the National Council for Civic Responsibility:

Howard Kershner

This 15-minute commentary on the news by Kershner is broadcast weekly on 148 stations in 41 states. It is financed by the Christian Freedom Foundation, which is largely supported by J. Howard Pew, oilman, and member of the Editorial Advisory Committee of American Opinion, the Birch magazine.

Manion Forum

A weekly 30-minute commentary by Clarence Manion, member of the National Council of the John Birch Society, broadcast weekly on 240 radio and 30 television stations.

Dan Smoot

A 15-minute weekly commentary by Smoot, broadcast on 70 radio and 40 television stations. Leading sponsor of the program is D. B. Lewis, an Endorser of the John Birch Society.

America's Future

A 15-minute commentary by R. K. Scott, broadcast on 365 stations in 48 states sponsored by America's Future, on whose Board of Trustees serves Thomas Anderson and F. Gano Chance, both members of the National Council of the Birch Society.

Independent American Radio Edition

A 15-minute weekly program broadcast on 39 stations in 18 states, written by Kent and Phoebe Courtney, whose Conservative Society of America has many Birch Endorsers on its Board of Directors.

Billy James Hargis

A 30-minute daily broadcast on 55 radio and 7 television stations, sponsored by Hargis' Christian Crusade. Hargis is an Endorser of the Birch Society.

Church League of America.

A weekly program broadcast on 17 stations in eight states, started in 1962. The League's Board of Directors includes two Birch Endorsers, Mrs. E. Dillon Winship and E. L. Wiegand.

Life Lines

This 15-minute program is broadcast daily on 325 radio and 69 television stations. Leading financial supporter is H. L. Hunt, Texas oilman, whose wholly-owned or affiliated companies are sponsors of the broadcast.

Twentieth Century Reformation Hour

A 30-minute daily program broadcast on 546 radio stations in 45 states featuring the religious-political views of Carl McIntire.

A Catholic Analyzes the John Birch Society

"While most of the right-wing organizations now proliferating claim the highest patriotic purposes, the fact is that they weaken the fight against communism by indiscriminate charges against the most respected leaders of government and public opinion." Thus writes Robert A. Graham, S.J. in an article "The John Birch Society," appearing in Between Two Cities: God and Man in "America" (Chicago, Loyola University Press, 1962. $1.95 paper). The volume is a collection of articles taken from America, a National Catholic Weekly review published by the Society of Jesus in New York City. Between Two Cities was published on the occasion of the 50th anniversary, 1912-1962, of this distinguished periodical.

Father Graham observes that many of the new organizations "now recruiting the extremists of the country in their ranks are small and insignificant both in numbers and in the quality of their leadership. This, however, cannot be said of the John Birch Society. . . . The JBS boasts of a national council comprising leading industrialists, military men and former government officials, as well as several well-known Catholic figures, one of whom is a priest." We can believe, Father Graham writes, Birch Society President Robert F. Welch's Catholic secretary who said that there is "a high percentage of Catholics in the John Birch Organization."

What Is the John Birch Society?

The John Birch Society was founded in Indianapolis, December 9, 1958, by Robert Welch, a retired New England candy manufacturer. It is named after a young Georgia-born fundamentalist Baptist missionary who worked for the Office for Strategic Services in China during World War II and was killed by Red Chinese troops ten days after V-J Day. He is hailed as "the first victim of the Cold War." Its purpose is to cope with "the threat of the Communist conspiracy." Unless, Welch said, "we reverse forces which now seem inexorable in their movement, you have only a few more years before the country in which you live will become four separate provinces in a world-wide Communist dominion ruled by police-state methods from the Kremlin."

"Growth of the new society was rapid," Father Graham writes, and it is now described as "the base-organization of the extreme right" by various observers. The John Birch Society spearheads a campaign to impeach Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren and its material was used by Gen. Edwin A. Walker in his controversial right-wing activities in the U. S. armed forces in Germany.

"The JBS is perhaps most known," Father Graham continues, "for its founder's sweeping charges against President Eisenhower, whom Mr. Welch has described as a conscious Red agent. Relying less on mass membership than on disciplined and organized (and perhaps often camouflaged) small groups scattered around the country, the John Birch Society seems capable of making its influence felt, if only by coordinating the efforts of other existing extremist groups that await direction."

Who Belongs

According to reports the John Birch Society has an estimated membership of 60,000. Among these, Father Graham notes, there is "no doubt, a large number of ordinary citizens who seek to 'do something' to combat communism. They are usually surprised and puzzled that an organization led by such a God-fearing man as Robert Welch, who patriotically aims to save the country from what they are convinced is imminent danger, should be subjected to denunciations and complaint. The attacks on the JBS they regard only as confirmation of the gravity of our national peril and proof of the extent of Red influence. These persons," Father Graham writes, "exhibit an amazing naïveté about the real issues at stake and what they are getting into."

Criticisms of the John Birch Society

At first the criticism leveled at the JBS was based mainly on instinctive fears of any right-wing organization and not on any detailed knowledge of Mr. Welch or his program. "After all, these movements are not new," Fr. Graham reminds the reader. "They all tend to follow a common pattern, since they recruit from much the same reservoir of human temperament and political bias. They are usually anti-Semitic and anti-Negro. Many are also anti-Catholic. All are anti-Communist, but it usually turns out that they use the Communist issue as a cloak to cover such less admirable features as racism, bigotry and intolerance, both religious and social. Even the best of them invariably attract a host of dubious personalities all too ready to ride the crest of popular hysteria. The general public cannot easily forget the Ku Klux Klan or the Christian Nationalists of Gerald L. K. Smith. "

The JBS, according to Fr. Graham, has avoided "the cruder manifestations of the extreme rightwingism of its predecessors. Accusations leveled against it on the score of anti-Semitism seem based on suspicion rather than on the record. While it opposes desegregation, it refrains from anti-Negro bias. Nevertheless, the JBS inevitably falls heir to the heavy legacy of distrust and revulsion that sad experience of previous right-wing groups have generated. The feeling is almost unavoidable that the old forces of bigotry are latent in the society, ready to burst forth at the right moment."

The Blue Book as "bible"

The "bible" of the JBS is known as the Blue Book and it consists of talks Robert Welch delivered to the charter members in Indianapolis in 1958. In this book the society is described as "a monolithic body." It is not, Fr. Graham relates, to be run on representative principles or on the principle of local autonomy. Welch declared "The John Birch Society will operate under completely authoritative control at all levels."

There is no doubt, Fr. Graham observes, that Mr. Welch is not only the founder but the main force of the society. He stresses repeatedly in the Blue Book the leadership principle "that recalls the grim Nazi precedent." Mr. Welch wrote: "The men who join the John Birch Society . . . are going to be doing so primarily because they believe in me and what I am doing and are willing to accept my leadership anyway."

The methods proposed in the Blue Book provide "another reason for criticism by seeming to sanction the use of any means, fair or foul, in combatting communism. 'The front business,' said Mr. Welch, 'like a lot of techniques the Communists use, can be made to cut both ways.' He advocates the pillorying of suspected Communists by techniques which he admits are 'mean and dirty.'"

The Real Danger

The real danger of the JBS "lies not in its organization and methods but in its impact upon the American national life at this moment. It is proving to be an instrument of division and a threat to the national morale. For, to justify its claim that the country is infiltrated by Communists, the John Birch Society has embarked on an unprecedented and arrogant campaign against almost all our leaders, Democrats or Republicans, liberals or conservatives. A man," Father Graham writes, "for whom President Eisenhower himself is a 'dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy,' can only be said to use the Communist issue for his own purposes and to define 'communism' in a sense all his own." Although Birchites claim this famous statement about President Eisenhower was made prior to the formation of the JBS, it still reflects the thinking of the leader of the Society, Mr. Welch, and to this day, he has never repudiated it.

The Fundamentalists and the Right Wing

"It was not so long ago that Catholics were regarded as the most active foes of communism. This can no longer be said today. Dr. Fred C. Schwarz' Anti-Communist Christian Crusade is of predominantly Baptist inspiration. The National Educational Program of Dr. George Stuart Benson of Searcy, Ark., is another fundamentalist operation. It is no accident that the key centers of the John Birch Society are in the fundamentalist South and Southwest, and that Welch himself stems from this background. John Birch, be it recalled, was a fundamentalist."

To these Fundamentalists who are ultra-right, "the charge of widespread Communist infiltration seems to make sense," Father Graham continues, "when they look at the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States. For years they have regarded with distrust the efforts of their NCCC brethren in the urbanized regions of the country to adapt Christianity to the social problems of modern times. This is 'modernism,' or 'liberalism.'" In their minds the transition is almost automatic to socialism or communism, and they will have none of it.

Red Infiltration and the Clergy

"Related to this tension within the Protestant body in this country was the uproar over the Air Force training manual. . . . In that text, the author (who drew his material from one of the fundamentalist anti-Communist organizations) charged that the Communists had infiltrated the Protestant clergy. The National Council reacted with vigor to these charges and succeeded in having the manual withdrawn by the Defense Department.

"The charge of Red infiltration of the Protestant clergy remains in the air," Father Graham observes. Mr. Welch explicitly refers to it in his talks. "As he himself reports, his remarks are usually matched by the query as to whether the Reds have also infiltrated the Catholic clergy as well. In a talk at Garden City, N. Y., October 9, 1961, Welch said that about one-half of one per cent of Catholic priests are 'comsymps.' When challenged on this statement by the Boston Pilot, Welch admitted that his figure was 'simply pulled out of a hat, as a complete guess, and without any substantiation even being claimed.' In the same letter, however, he revealed that by 'comsymp' he means not merely a priest whose sympathies may happen to be turned toward 'socialism,' but, actually, a Communist who became a priest. So far does Robert Welch push his theory of Red infiltration."

The tactics of the JBS have made it more difficult to cope with the Communist tactic of dodging and camouflage. "If allowed to proceed with its works of confusion and division, it will destroy the basis of a solid effective fight against communism carried on by such organs as the FBI," Father Graham writes.

Some Dare Call It Slander

The Office of Information of the National Council of Churches has issued the following statement on None Dare Call It Treason by John A. Stormer:

Purporting to be "carefully documented," the thesis of this book is that the Communists and their "dupes" have infiltrated and threaten to take control of the Government, the courts, the schools, the labor movement, the mass media, health agencies, the psychiatric profession and, as the New York Times reports (Sept. 27, 1964) "virtually every phase of American life." And once again the charges of communism in the churches and the National Council of Churches are revived, charges which were totally discredited back in the McCarthy era.

Included in the book's documentation are numerous quotations from statements by J. Edgar Hoover. But the author does not print other statements made by the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation which are on the record.

Referring to a statement attributed to him before a meeting of the House Committee on Un-American Activities in 1947, Mr. Hoover wrote: "The quotation which you set forth was taken out of context from remarks I made . . . I want you to know that neither on this occasion nor at any other time have I made any statement criticizing the Federal Council of Churches or the National Council of Churches." Again on June 13, 1960, the FBI director found it necessary to disclaim that he had ever said that "the National Council of Churches is under the control of Communists." He wrote: "I have made no statement, either personal or official, such as you have mentioned concerning the National Council of Churches."

The author digs up the four-year-old story of an Air Force Trainee Manual which contained baseless charges of so-called Communist infiltration in the churches, but omitted informing readers that it was withdrawn by the Defense Department and drew a public apology from the Secretary of Defense to the National Council of Churches.

Virtually all of Stormer's sources in the chapter on the churches are the well-known "apostles of discord" familiar to most church people as professional dissidents dedicated to discrediting the nation's clergy very often to their own personal profit. He also quotes from the Congressional Record to give authority to some blatant misinformation. Not quoted from the Record are the articles entered in it which categorically refute such misinformation.

According to the book, Mr. Stormer is chairman of the Missouri Federation of Young Republicans, a member of the Missouri State Republican Committee and attends a fundamentalist church. A former trade magazine editor, he now appears to be a professional lecturer on communism. Virtually no other information is available on him. In the book he goes on record in support of virtually all right-wing extremist groups and their leaders now known to be operating in our country. Mr. Stormer is said to be his own publisher, the "Liberty Bell Press," of Florrisant, Mo. (Mr. Stormer's place of residence), being solely established and owned by him. According to the New York Times (Sept. 27, 1964), Mr. Stormer's printer, the W. H. Hall Co., of Chicago, has announced completion of orders for seven million of the books. This vast printing and distribution are partly accounted for by the fact that during the 1964 election campaign millions of copies have been distributed freely, or at a nominal price, by extremist groups in the interests of their favorite political candidates.

The Radical Right: A Brief Bibliography

The following brief selected bibliography of recent titles on the radical right is provided with the hope that it will aid the reader in understanding this disturbing phenomenon in American social and political life. To discover other titles presently published in book or magazine form on this subject, the reader is referred to the following major reference sources. For books consult The Cumulative Book Index; for magazines and journal articles, the Public Affairs Information Service, the International Index and the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature. These major reference sources can be found in most libraries throughout the United States.

Some of the books in this bibliography are available as paperbacks, and wherever this is true the symbol (P) will be found at the end of the citation. Paperbound Books in Print, the standard reference source for all paperbacks, will help the reader discover what is currently available in paper and what will be forthcoming in the future. Complete data helpful to those desiring to order by mail is supplied.

Bell, Daniel (ed.). The Radical Right. Garden City, N. Y., Doubleday and Company, 501 Franklin Ave., 1963. 394 p. $5.75. (P) Anchor Books, 575 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y. 10022. $1.45.

Broyles, J. Allen. The John Birch Society. Boston, Mass., Beacon Press, 25 Beacon St., 1964. 170 p. $4.50.

Burlingame, Roger. The Sixth Column. Philadelphia, Pa., J. B. Lippincott Co., East Washington Sq., 1962. 258 p. $4.95.

Cain, Edward. They'd Rather Be Right: Youth and the Conservative Movement. New York, N. Y., Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Ave., 1963. 327 p. $5.95.

Dudman, Richard. Men of the Far Right. New York, N. Y., Pyramid Books, 444 Madison Ave., 1962. 185 p. 50 cents (P).

Forster, Arnold and Benjamin B. Epstein. Danger on the Right. New York, N. Y., Random House, 457 Madison Ave., 1964. 294 p. $4.95, $2.95 (P) [Reviewed in this SERVICE].

Grove, Gene. Inside the John Birch Society. Greenwich, Conn., Gold Medal Books, Fawcett Publications, 1961. 160 p. 50 cents (P).

Johnson, Donald and Bernard Eismann. The Far Right. New York, N. Y., McGraw-Hill Company, 330 W. 42nd St., 1963. 259 p. $5.95.

Nelson, Jack and Gene Roberts, Jr. The Censors and the Schools. Boston, Mass., Little, Brown and Company, 34 Beacon St., 1963. 208 p. $4.50.

Overstreet, Harry and Bonaro Overstreet. The Strange Tactics of Extremism. New York, N. Y., W. W. Norton Publishers, 55 Fifth Ave., 1964. 315 p. $4.50. [Reviewed in this SERVICE].

Raywid, Mary Anne. The Ax-Grinders: Critics of Our Public Schools. New York, N. Y., Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Ave., 1962. 260 p. $5.00.

Sherwin, Mark. The Extremists. New York, N. Y., St. Martin's Press, 175 Fifth Ave., 163. 242 p. $5.00.

Vahan, Richard. The Truth about the John Birch Society. New York, N. Y., Macfadden Books, Macfadden-Bartell Corp., 205 East 42nd St. 50 cents (P).

Walker, Brooks R. The Christian Fright Peddlers. Garden City, N. Y., Doubleday and Company, 501 Franklin Ave., 1964. 290 p. $4.95. [Reviewed in this SERVICE].

For those who are interested in sampling some of the Right Wing material, the following two items, selected from a wide range of material flooding the market during this election year are as follows:

Stormer, John A. None Dare Call It Treason. Florissant, Mo., Liberty Bell Press, P.O. Box 32, 1964. 254 p. $2.95. (P) 75 cents.

An excellent exposé of the inaccuracies of the content of Stormer's None Dare Call It Treason was placed in the Congressional Record by Representative Charles A. Vanick, of Ohio, on September 10, 1964. It is found on pages A4650-A4653. Those interested in obtaining this critique of Stormer's book, prepared by the National Committee for Civic Responsibility, Cleveland, Ohio, may do so by writing Representative Charles A. Vanick, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

Welch, Robert. The Politician. Belmont 78, Mass., The Author, 1963. 300 p. $8.00 (P).

Two additional volumes pertaining to the Christian churches' response to Right Wing charges are:

Roy, Ralph Lord. Communism and the Churches. New York, N. Y., Harcourt Brace, 750 Third Ave., 1960. 495 p. $7.50.

Roy, Ralph Lord. Apostles of Discord. Boston, Beacon Press, 1953. 437 p.

Apostles of Discord, now out of print, is a useful reference source on many of the right-wingers associated with politico-religious movements and certain Fundamentalist churches as well as with other groups. It can be obtained on loan from many major libraries.

While this issue deals with the radical right, knowledge of the nature and tactics of the radical left is also essential. For basic reading on the subject, see the 16-page "Communism, A Selected and Annotated Bibliography," INFORMATION SERVICE, May 25, 1963. A limited supply is available from this office. The price is 40 cents for a single copy.

SPECIAL LOW RATES FOR THIS SPECIAL ISSUE

Churchmen, churches and local councils have been pleading for a compact, factual reply to the attacks of the radical right. This is it. Use it!

50 Copies	$ 4.50
100 Copies	8.00
1,000 Copies	70.00

Bulk rates plus postage

Order this special issue from the Office of Information, National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York, New York 10027.

333 Printed in U.S.A.

OCTOBER 25, 1964

The New York Times Book Review

An Arsenal Of Facts

DANGER ON THE RIGHT. By Arnold Forster and Benjamin R. Epstein. 280 pp. New York: Random House. $4.95.

By ALAN F. WESTIN

ONE evening during the late spring of 1962, as part of my research for an article on corporate connections with the radical right, I attended a public meeting in New Jersey at which Dr. Fred Schwarz of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade was the featured speaker. The hall was filled with a predominantly enthusiastic crowd. As I entered, I noticed someone who looked quite familiar methodically picking up the literature that was being distributed at a table outside the auditorium.

Later, I found myself sitting only one row away from this same man, who was carefully taking notes during Schwarz's main presentation and the lively question period that followed. It bothered me that I knew the man but couldn't bring his name and identity to mind. Then the light flashed, and I felt doubly foolish for not having realized at once who it was—a staff member of the Anti-Defamation League, obviously on "evening assignment" at the Schwarz rally.

"Danger on the Right," as its co-authors acknowledge in their preface, is the product of just such first-hand research by dozens of A.D.L. staff members throughout the country. More than that, it represents the collective wisdom of one of the most useful private organizations in the United States. With the publication of this book (timed so perfectly on the eve of an election in which the future influence of the radical right in America is a central issue), the A.D.L. places all of us deeply in its debt.

THIS is the most detailed, accurate and factually complete popular description of the radical right that has yet appeared—its groups, leaders, doctrines and especially its financial supporters. Because it does not rely on hard-breathing rhetoric to supply missing bricks of fact, it is not just another exposé, but an indispensable book for every American citizen who wants to know the "who, what, and how much" of the radical right.

Benjamin Epstein, the A.D.L.'s National Director, and Arnold Forster, its General Counsel, divide their portrait of the ultra-right into two sections, with a chapter for each organization and leader that they treat. The first section, "The Radical Right," has chapters on the John Birch Society of Robert Welch; the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade of Dr. Schwarz; the Christian Crusade of Rev. Billy James Hargis; the National Education Program of Dr. George Benson; the 20th-Century Reformation Hour of Rev. Carl McIntire; the Manion Forum of Dean Clarence Manion; Life Line Foundation and Dan Smoot; the Church League of America under Edgar Bundy; the Conservative Society of America under Kent and Phoebe Courtney; and the Liberty Amendment Committee of the U.S.A., led by Willis Stone. Out of an estimated 500 right-wing organizations, the book concludes that some 26-27 represent "major groups." The 10 discussed above, in the authors' view, are the most influential and lively of the radical-right component among the 26-27.

The second section, titled "The Extreme Conservatives," dissects five leading groups among the organizations that do not adopt the pure, full-strength doctrines of the radical right—but do espouse many of the same ideas, join in common rallies and causes, have overlapping directorships, and often enjoy the financial support of the same rightist "angels." This section focuses on Americans for Constitutional Action, led by Admiral (Ret.) Ben Moreell; Human Events, under James Wick; the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists; Young Americans for Freedom; and The National Review of William F. Buckley, Jr.

In each chapter, "Danger on the Right" does four things. It traces the history of the organization's formation and growth; presents representative quotations of the group's positions; describes who controls the group, and who makes up its leading directorate; and reveals the major financial support behind each group—which the authors state adds up to more than $14,000,000 being pumped yearly into the pipeline of the radical right, primarily by wealthy individuals and large corporations. All of this material is presented with literary verve and succulent quotations. It succeeds perfectly in pinning each wildly fluttering ultra-right butterfly to its proper page in the specimen book.

Already, press accounts of the facts presented in "Danger on the Right" have evoked angry denials by some of the people and groups mentioned, and threats of suits for libel. There have also been furious denunciations of the A.D.L. as a "Jewish secret service" agency, long a favorite charge of the anti-Semitic organizations that were the subjects of earlier books by Forster and Epstein.

Despite the inferences of "planted" agents and hidden tape recorders, the clear truth is that the A.D.L. presentation is based on the public record: the public speeches and published writings of the rightists themselves, newspaper reports of their meetings and memberships and financial reports required by Federal or state tax and administrative agencies and open to public inspection. The A.D.L. has been systematically collecting and filing such clippings, publications and financial records for at least three decades. When the radical right expanded in the late 1950's and early 1960's, the A.D.L. simply expanded its coverage accordingly.

THE result of this fact-finding operation is the material with which to expose the radical right through its own words, deeds and associations. The last element—associations—is perhaps the most distinctive contribution of this book. Many other writers and organizations have discussed the ideology, publications and meetings of radical-right groups. But the A.D.L. surpasses everyone else in two respects—documenting the fact that many leading radical-right figures have also been associates or supporters of well-known anti-Semitic or hate groups, or have given them financial support, and showing the connections between the radical right and the extreme conservatives.

The decision of the authors to focus almost exclusively on the speeches, writings and interconnections of the ultra-rightists, and to devote only a handful of pages to larger sociopolitical analysis, is in one important sense the great strength of their presentation. It lets the public judge. It shows a confidence that the civic consensus in America will recoil from the positions of these groups, that exposure represents the best policy of counter-action, the only approach consistent with the A.D.L.'s own commitment to democratic ideals.

One could still wish that the authors had not carried this policy through quite so rigorously. There has been a wealth of excellent analysis done by social scientists on who joins radical-right groups and why; there have been others on the social dynamics of ultra-right organizations. With the exception of casual references to one social-science report of this kind—and far from the best one at that—"Danger on the Right" does not use these analytical resources, or even popularize them in the authors' own words.

In addition, there is not as careful and complete an analysis as one would like of the borderline between radical right and extreme conservative. In describing the fact of interconnections, the book does superbly. It is completely sound in saying that when "hard" conservatives do not police their own border against infiltration, they deserve to be judged harshly for any blending of causes that results. But some of the statements on extreme conservatives being "soft on the radical right" have a troubling ring to them, one that could have been avoided with more attention to systematic analysis.

The vacuum is all the more evident when one considers the excellent studies the A.D.L has itself produced—or drawn on from special articles in their publications on discrimination and prejudice. Presented in the same lively fashion, such analyses are both valuable and necessary for the general reader. However, the basic value of the book remains, despite this lack.

Here is an arsenal of facts for harassed civic leaders in communities throughout the nation. Next time the Birch Society begins to bully a school board, or Americans for Constitutional Action condemn a congressional incumbent for his "pro-Communist" voting record, or a major national corporation begins to saturate the communities around its plants with National Education Program films on "Americanism," "Danger on the Right" will provide community leaders with the ammunition to fight back, through exposure of what these groups really believe, say, and do.

A copy of the book belongs on the shelf of every person who is active in the civic life of the nation, just as a manual on poisons belongs in the medicine chest.

Methods

RADICAL Right groups do not essentially seek to create new political parties. Rather, they seek by concerted propaganda drives to change the political climate in the United States, to turn the winds slowly their way. They do so by penetrating and influencing both major political parties. And in this effort, the John Birch Society has emerged as the strongest of such organizations.—"Danger on the Right."

Warnings

RADICAL Rightists urge people to watch out lest coddling of labor unions brings the welfare state one step closer. . . . They shout to beware of social security as a large step forward to socializing the Republic. They signal an alarm that the income tax is simply a means of pauperizing the rich in favor of the poor in order to communize the United States. They admonish in urgent voice for all to believe that the United Nations is a weapon the enemy is using to destroy American sovereignty. —"Danger on the Right."

Mr. Westin, who teaches at Columbia, writes frequently of political extremism. He is a contributor to "The Radical Right," a symposium edited by Daniel Bell.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
315 LEXINGTON AVENUE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10016

or your nearest ADL Regional Office

Please send me____hard cover copies of DANGER ON THE RIGHT at the special price of $3.95, or____soft cover copies at the special price of $2.35.

Payment enclosed_____.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____State_____ZIP_____

 Resist Groups - KKK

Sept-Oct '64 Cdr. Israelite

The North Carolina Klan

The Ku Klux Klan—She ain't what she used to be—Many long years ago. They hated, the Negro and the Jew—
And the Catholics they hated, too— Many long years ago.

Now the Klansmen raise their banners high for the grandson of a Jewish peddler whose running mate is a Roman Catholic (and at that William Miller refused to scorn their support). Amazing, isn't it?

The Charlotte Observer sent two of its best reporters to write a series of articles on the resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan in North Carolina. We Tar Heels are in the infamous position of having a Klan membership so large that only three states outrank us.

The Klan is always having a rebirth of sorts, but this recent movement is well-financed and well-organized. This time the Klan intends to stay. For where previous Klan movements have been local and regional affairs, this movement is based in both the agricultural and industrial areas of the state. There is no Klan activity in the western part of the state—Asheville and Flat Rock—because, as one Klansman told the reporters, "There ain't no niggers in the mountains."

Lots of money is involved. According to the Observer expose, there are 2,500 dues-paying Klansmen in North Carolina. Each pays a $10 initiation fee plus $12 membership dues each year. The membership contributes a half million right off. In addition, Klan officers pass the plastic basket at every meeting and certainly at every cross burning and many a $5, $10, and $20 bill flutters into it. At conservative estimates, that is another quarter of a million dollars. It adds up to big money for these promoters. Hate has paid handsome dividends through the centuries. And today, more than ever before, even the uneducated are skilled in whirling the people away from themselves into fear, even the uneducated are skilled at separating people from both their reason and their money.

Klan robes are made of low-grade satin. The Observer reporters found the same material selling at 60c a yard and questioned tailors and seamstresses to discover that in large quantities klansmen's togas and hoods could be produced at $3.50 each. The Klan, however, sells its regalia at $15, but that is not the end of it. Patches and badges are extra and so is the big button.

The big button has enormous popularity. This popularity was probably generated after an unfortunate error made by the Charleston, South Carolina, police last year. The cops were breaking up, in their inimitable fashion, a Negro sit-in demonstration at a segregated restaurant. The cops were arresting pickets and demonstrators charging them with trespassing. The son of the restaurant owner was trying to push his way in to help his father. Said fellow was a golfer with a heavy tan and the cops spotted him and whisked him away in the paddy wagon figuring he was a sit-in. He spent two hours in jail before anyone would listen to his impassioned story.

The Ku Klux Klan sells badges for $1 which, in yellow letters on a white background reads, "I Am White" on one line and underneath there is the single word, "Superior."

More important than the Klan's inventiveness is the salient fact that its recent re-organization has met with very little significant criticism. The Observer noted that ten years ago, a Klan meeting at the most attracted two or three hundred people. A meeting today attracts two or three thousand. Nor does the membership figure of 2,500 tell us the whole story. There are many businessmen who contribute to the Klan excusing their contribution as necessary for business. Thousands more believe in the work of the Klan, in its goals and in its methods, but haven't the guts to become members, or they are ashamed to join up. In the rural Eastern area of Carolina, there are some police officers actively engaged in Klan activities and when the Klansmen get a little rowdy there is no hope of police suppression.

Dr. I. Beverly Lake recently campaigned in the Democratic gubernatorial primary. He received 200,000 votes. Unmistakeably, Dr. Lake was the segregationist philosopher. He is personally a man of considerable talent and education and he was able in the run-off primary to transfer in toto the whole of his 200,000 votes to the conservative Democrat who thereby beat the liberal candidate.

In our day and age, Dr. Lake is a significant phenomenon. He espouses racist ideas, yet he can still inspire respect and remain respectable. Few people call him a radical thinker, fewer insist that he is dangerous, and even fewer criticize his demagoguery. His support was a straw in the wind. Analyzing Dr. Lake's power made the nomination of a Barry Goldwater and a William Miller less of a surprise.

All of this madness—the nomination of Senator Goldwater with his amateur ideas about government, the activity of the Klan transpiring openly has its effect throughout the world. The old world no longer worries with de Gaulle that the United States is trying to control Europe. As James Reston of the New York Times observed, "Europe is now worried about the United States being able to control itself."

K.K.K. - ALABAMA

Jan. 22, 1964--Montgomery. Three former Klansmen convicted of emasculating a Birmingham Negro will be granted parole hearings. Announcement followed recent release on parole of a fourth convicted man, Jesse W. Mabry, former KKK secretary-treasurer; he had served five years of the 20 years to which all four were sentenced. Parole brought bitter protest from Jefferson County Circuit Court Solicitor Emmett Perry and the trial judge, Circuit Judge A. L. King. The four granted parole hearings are: Grover McCullough, Bart A. Floyd, Joe P. Pritchett.

April 4-1964--Tuscaloosa. Members of KKK planning to establish private communities to avoid desegregation, according to announcement by Imperial Wizard Robt. L. Shelton, United Klans of America.

July 27, 1964--Tuscaloosa. Alabama KKK leader has filed a $500,000 libel suit against the Tuscaloosa News and its publisher, charging the newspaper with defaming him in front page editorial July 7th.

Sept. 6, 1964--Birmingham. At a weekend meeting of more than 500 persons, including grand dragons and delegations from Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, Robt. Shelton attacked Supreme Court rulings, the United Nations as a tool of communism, President "lightning bug Johnson", "bobby-sox Kennedy", Martin Luther King, Birmingham's mayor-council form of government, and the civil rights movement, which he said was communist-infilterated.

Oct. 9, 1964--Birmingham. The KKK has an exhibition this year at the Alabama State Fair, complete with cross and free literature.

Oct. 11, 1964--Birmingham. A local group of the Nat'l Conference of Christians and Jews protested the exhibit of the Klan at the Fair. Protest first came from Dr. Sherman Raffel, head of the psychological section of the Medical College of Alabama Psychiatry Dept. and president of the Alabama Psychological Ass'n.

KKK--ARKANSAS

History of the Arkansas Klan may be found briefly in the Arkansas Gazette, Aug. 9, 1964, "When the Klan Was in Arkansas," by W. T. Shelton. Longer and more detailed in ArkansasHistorical Quarterly, Winter 1963, "Defeat, Decline, Disintegration: The KKK in Arkansas, 1924 and After," by Charles C. Alexander.

Feb. 2, 1964, Pine Bluff. The Nat'l Patriots League announced Saturday they would join the White Citizens Council in a boycott of stores here that hire Negroes for clerical and other non-menial jobs. C. D. Green said his group numbered at least"two or three thousand."

L.D. Poynter, chairman of the Arkansas White Citizens Council issued a statement saying the more than 3,000 council members would boycott these stores.

first J. D. Bass, identifying himself as a representative of the KKK, handed out a statement saying his group (about 200) would not trade at the stores either.

Before Feb. 9, 1964--Texarkana. A cross was burned at a Negro home on the Texas side of Texarkana. Leon Wash and his family were not a home at the time.ofcthecfire.

KKK--FLORIDA

With the exception of Jacksonville and St. Augustine, the Klan has declined in numbers and influence in Florida. One reason is that the Klan conveys the image of being a fraternity of roughnecks inclined towards violence. St. Augustine membership in Klan has been estimated at 2,500, including some law enforcement officers. (Progressive, Sept. 1964, "Fear & the Far Right," by Pat Watters.)

WP 2-5-64 Baker "Fernind Klan Isn't funny any more"

Klan claims 3,000 in northern Fla.; FBI est. 500 dues-paying

May 1, 1964. Jacksonville--Mayor Haydon Burns Thursday issued a permit to the KKK for a parade through racially troubled Jacksonville on Saturday. Purpose of parade is to protest the civil rights bill now before the U.S. Senate.

May 2, 1964. Jacksonville--The Klan invited other interested white citizens to join today in a parade through downtown Jacksonville. About 300 (including women and children and about 35 youths) sloshed thru a downpour, soaked to the skin. About 100 people were watching. Some young Negroes laughed and yelled taunts at the marchers. Police were stationed at nearly every intersection. The parade ended at the city auditorium, where J. B. Stoner of Atlanta exhorted the group: "We must destroy the civil rights bill and all its backers. ...The Blacks must go." A rally was held later that evening, where Mr. Stoner again talked of "sending the niggers back to Africa."

see back pg. >

June 15, 1964. St. Augustine--Fortified by a message of hate from J. B. Stoner, swarms of Klansmen and friends marched through the Negro section Saturday night. Along in front was Sheriff L. O. Davis, accompanied by police dogs. Klansmen were met by a hugh banner with "Welcome. Peace and Brotherhood to You" and the streets were lined solidly with Negroes singing "We love everybody. In our hearts."

July 2, 1964. St. Augustine--The KKK will march Saturday, but this will not violate the racial truce, a Klan spokesman said.

July 6, 1964. Jacksonville--An all-white jury yesterday declined to convict any of the five admitted KKKlansmen charges with conspiracy in the bombing of a Negro's home Feb. 16.

Jacky Don Harden, 25--~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ acquitted on 2-count indictment.
Robt. Pittman Gentry, 26--mistrial on 1st count; acquittal on 2nd
Barton Griffin, 25--Willie Eugene Wilson, 39--Donald Eugene Spigal, 31--mistrials on both counts.

Count 1--conspiracy to violate constitutional rights
Count 2--conspiracy to violate rights under court order

July 24, 1964. Tampa--KKK being reorganized to fight civil rights law, according to leader Bill Hendrix of Oldsmar, who said he was imperial wizard of the old Southern Knights and Northern Knights of the KKK. The new organization will be known as the American Underground (AUG). "We will cooperate with all Klan groups and other right wing groups...we will fight legally as far as we can, and violently if necessary." Hendrix said about 30 Klan groups are in Florida, with no connection. He called for the groups to unite.

July 25, 1964. St. Augustine--Law enforcement officers launched a crackdown against the KKK today shortly after pledges were made by Florida Attorney General James Kynes and Mayor Joseph Shelley that law and order will prevail. This was after another act of violence in which a fire bomb was thrown into the restaurant of the Monson Damage estimated at $3,000.

Motor Lodge around 3:15 a.m. today./ Warrants were obtained against five men prominently associated with klan rallies near here during the past week: J. B. Stoner, Atlanta attorney; Connie Lynch, California, a fiery segregation preacher; Paul Cothran and Barton Griffin of Jacksonville; and Bill Coleman of St. Augustine. ~~Damage~~ Stoner, Lynch, Cochran and Coleman were charged with placing or causing to be placed on property of the City Baking Co. a burning cross without first obtaining written permission of the owner. Griffin, Stoner and Lynch, in another warrant, were charged with burning a corss without permission of the owner of the property and Cochran in a third warrant with wearing a mask or hood which concealed his face while holding a demonstration on private property without permission of the owner. Conviction can result in a fine of $500 or 90 days.

An attempt was made early yesterday to burn the A. & W. Root Beer Drive-in. Two hours after fire-bombing, two white men were picked up and later charged by state officers with possessing concealed weapons and ~~px~~ pornographic materials: Wm. Stuart Williamson, 33, of Ocala, and Robt. Edw. Leonard, 22, of St. Augustine.

July 26, 1964. St. Augustine. A state investigator said a year ago Klan membership was estimated at only a few hundreds; now estimated at 2,500. Sgt. John Cunningham, Duval County Sheriff Dept's expert on Klan activities, estimated KKK membership at no more than 3,500 in the three most active counties: Duval, St. John's, & Nassau.

additional, Florida--fill in

New York Times, June 7, 1964--"Klan An Issue in St. Augustine," John Herbers

Unusual amount of racial violence in recent months. U. S. Dist. Judge Bryon Simpson suggested from the bench that Klansmen had infilterated the Sheriff's office.

February--Auto of parents of Negro child attending white elementary school was burned. Home of another Negro family with child in school destroyed by fire. Shots were fired through home of Dr. R. B. Hayling, a Negro dentist who heads integration drive here.

March--John Kilinos, president of local restaurant ass'n, served four Negroes during sit-in demonstration. Next morning windown in his car, home, and restaurant were broken. He re-segregated.

Auto of Negro minister burned after his church used for civil rights rally. Negro admitted to adult education courses in a white school was beaten by two men while on way home from class.

Dr. Hayling and three other Negroes were beaten at Klan rally last Sept. 1963 while they tried to listen from their car.

a white shrimp fisherman, driving through Negro neighborhood with shotgun across lap, was shot and killed.

During last few days, newsmen attacked during demonstrations, and autos owned or driven by civil rights people were fired into.

James Hauser, 44, Negro, was one of those ~~beka~~ beaten at Klan rally. Last week he was beaten by six men in the parking lot of plant where he works after he appeared in demonstration. (Plant--Fairchild Stratos Corp.) Three of the men were plant employes and suspected KKK members. Fairchild has government contracts.

FLORIDA

3-5-64, N.Y.T.
A "close associate" of North Florida Ku Klux Klan leaders was charged today with bombing the home of a Negro boy who cracked the segregation barrier at a Jacksonville elementary school. The suspect was William Sterling Rosecrans, 30, an Anderson, Ind. mechanic who once worked in Alabama. He was also questioned about the bombing of a Birmingham church Sept. 15, 1963, in which four young Negro girls lost their lives. Police said Rosecrans had admitted the Jacksonville bombing. The FBI said Rosecrans lived near the spot in Jacksonville where 800 sticks of dynamite, with detonating caps and fuse wire, were found about six weeks ago.

(pleaded guilty and received 7-yr sentence in federal prison.

7-3-64, NYT Rosecrans testified that five KKK knew the stolen dynamite "would be used on niggers." Rosecrans was brought from prison to testify at the conspiracy trial of the five. He is serving a 7-yr term for the bombing Feb. 16 of a Negro boy's home. He told the jury of 12 white men that two defendants, Barton Griffin andRobert Gentry, helped him steal 13 cases of dynamite from two storage sheds in a wooded area north of Jacksonville. He said he joined the Klan last Jan. with Mr. Griffin's help, "to fight niggers." He said he and the five klansmen had also made bombs and had discussed uring them on a local hdqs of the NAACP as well as on a liquor store operated by whites that catered to Negroes. He said the charge used to wreck the home had been m made up in the garage of Donald Eugene Spegal; the primer cord and fuse had been taped in the garage of Willie Eugene Wilson.
7-6-64, ATL.CONST. Jury failed to convict five admitted Klansmen charged with conspiracy in dynamiting Negro's home. Each of the five had been charged with violating the Negro's right to attend a white school and interfering with a court order admitting him to the school.
7-5-64 NYT WP - A sheriff testified today that St. Augustine segregationist Hals tea

Memo from MONTEZ ALBRIGHT

Manucy sold him information leading to the arrest of the man who bombed a Negro's home here. St.John's County Sheriff L. O. Davis made the statement in test at the trial of five Ku Klux Klansmen...Davis said he had agreed to pay Manucy $300 of the reward money offered for the arrest of the railroad bombers Defendents were: Barton Girffin, 35; Jacky Don Harde 25; Willie Eugene Wilson, 39; Donald Eugene Spegal, 3 31; and Robert Pittman Gentry, 26.

FLORIDA

N.Y.Times, 5-4-64
300 at Klan Meeting Applaud Slurs on Negroes
by John Herbers

300 at Klan Meeting Applaud Slurs on Negroes

By JOHN HERBERS
Special to The New York Times

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 3—As the last refrain of "The Old Rugged Cross" died out and a 25-foot cross burned against a dark sky, a chubby man in a gray suit and bow tie stepped to the speaker's stand.

"People in other parts of the country like to think of niggers as human beings because they have hands and feet," he said. "So do apes and gorillas have hands and feet. If a nigger has a soul I never read about it in the Bible. The only good nigger is a dead nigger."

The audience of about 300 men and women—most of them in robes, hoods and masks—applauded and began to murmur other anti-Negro sentiments as the speaker went on:

"The nigger is a willing tool of the Communist Jews and is being used to destroy America. They want to pump the blood of Africa into our white veins."

Children at Play

The faces that could be seen were hard and humorless. Children played in and out of the robes, apparently unaware of what was being said.

This was a Saturday night meeting of an extremist fringe of the Ku Klux Klan, itself a fringe group among prosegregation Southerners. Small in numbers, these groups—known as the Klan or by other names—exist in pockets across the South. The authorities believe they inspire bombings and provide the spark for other racial violence.

Children Play Amid Hooded Men and Women at Night Rally in Jacksonville

They met in a field just north of the Jacksonville Municipal Airport. Earlier, they had paraded through downtown Jacksonville to protest the civil rights bill. Mayor W Haydon Burns, a candidate for Governor in Tuesday's Democratic primary, had granted the permit for the parade.

To the relief of the police, a thunderstorm throughout the parade reduced pedestrian traffic, and with it, the possibility of violence in the city that was the scene of riots Easter week.

The speaker at the night meeting was J. B. Stoner, an Atlanta lawyer who has long been connected with Klan activity. A few weeks ago he was nominated as the Vice-Presidential candidate of the National States Rights party, another fringe group that exists chiefly in Birmingham, Ala.

His running mate for President is John Casper, who served a prison term for inciting racial trouble in Tennessee.

The speaker praised a fellow Klansman, Bart Griffin, who has been indicted in the bombing of a Negro home here. A few days ago Mr. Griffin's home was destroyed by fire reported to have been started by a bomb. But the Duval County authorities said no bomb was involved and they had found no evidence the fire was set by Negroes.

"I suspect that niggers bombed it with F.B.I. consent or the F.B.I. bombed it itself," the speaker said. "Even if they didn't, they set him up as a target."

His voice was carried for blocks by a loudspeaker.

It was difficult to ascertain which Klan group was in charge. The parade was arranged by Woodrow Woods, who calls himself the Grand Titan of the United Klans of Florida. Some knights who wear black robes call themselves the Knights of the Golden Eagle. One leader identifies himself as a Kleagle (organizer) from Augusta, Ga.

From the tone of the meeting, it was obvious that this was not the Klan element that asserts it has adopted nonviolence.

KKK--GEORGIA

March 23, 1964. Atlanta--An estimated crowd of 1,000 persons attended a United Klans of America rally at Hurt Park Sunday (22nd) and heard klan leaders denounce the civil rights bill, Mayor Ivan Allen, Police Chief Herbert Jenkins, and U. S. Atty-Gen. Robert Kennedy. Included were approximately 200 robed klansmen, Jerimiah X, a Black Muslim leader, and members of SNCC and SCLC.

A white youth who accompnied SNCC members was struck by a robed klansman. A white and a Negro couple who appeared together were cursed and threatened by the crowd.

Speakers wer Calvin Craig, Georgia's grand dragon, Venable, Klan attorney of Atlanta, and grand dragons from Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Tennessee.

May 3, 1964. Griffin--Five white men accused of planting a flaming cross in front of a dry cleaning business run by two Negroes were convicted of disorderly conduct.

July 10, 1964. Atlanta. KKK leaders Robert M. Shelton of Alabama and Calvin Craig (United Klans of America, Inc.) said the robed order is launching a large-scale campaign of white resistance to racial integration throughout the South and in other parts of the nation. Plans will include marches, mass rallies, economic reprisals, and white voter registration drives.

A street march is planned for Savannah July 20.

Three rallies were held Saturday night: Gadsden, Ala., Albany, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla. Three to five per week are planned during the next two months in Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, and Tennessee. Dates for some were announced:

July 27--Jacksonville, Fla.
Aug. 17--Spartanburg, S.C.

Sept. 6, 1964. Atlanta--About 600 people attending a cross burning meeting Saturday night, held in a field near Stone Mountain, were told by KKK leaders that the klan politically controls nine states. Many klansmen were both robed and masked, and saluted the burning cross Nazi-style. Many carried clubs and/or guns.

Opening prayer by robed preacher asked "..the Lord put grace and grit in the white Caucasian race...and help destroy this black ape race." Venable said, "You'll never be able to convict a white man that killed a nigger what encroaches on the white race of the South." when commenting on the acquital of klansmen tried for the murder of Lemuel Penn.

July 27, 1964. Atlanta--Calvin Craig announced klan support for Goldwater.

GEORGIA

Atl Constitution, 3-23-64
Klan Draws 1,000 at Hurt Park Rally

An estimated crowd of 1,000 persons attended a United Klans of America rally at Hurt Park (Atlanta) yesterday. Included in the crowd were approx. 200 robed Klansmen, a large number of white-helmeted Klan "Security Police" and Jeremiah X and several members of SNCC. Threats were hurled at the Negroes, and one white youth who accompanied two Negroes was struck in the back by a robed Klansman, but no other incidents occurred.

Speakers were Robert Shelton of Ala., Imperial Wizard, and Grand Dragons from Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Tennessee. Also Rev. J. W. Nail, pastor of the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church in Baxley.

Three rallies were held Saturday night in Gadsden, Ala., Albany, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla. Shelton said three to five rallies a week were planned during the next two months in Ga., Fla., N.C., S.C., Ala., La., Texas, and Tenn. Giant rallies were planned July 27 in Jacksonville, and Aug. 17 om Spartanburg, S.C., and a street march in Savannah, Ga. on July 20. Shelton said the Klan was extending its activities in the North and Midwest. "They're not open in the North because of fear of economic reprisals," Shelton said, "They are not identified as Klan organizations but are operating on the same principles."

Not if Orgs. of Ku Klux Klans meeting

The next meeting in Ga. was planned for Sept. 56 at Stone Mountain, on land owned by James R. Venable, Atl. attorney. An estimated 400 people (from 19 states Venable said) and white, purple, green, red, and yellow robes dotted the hillsides. So did curious college-age youngsters and their girl friends. Venable scoffed at President Johnson and FBI Director Hoover: "You will never be able to convict a white person that kills a nigger what encraoches on the Southern way of life" And two members of a rival United Klans of America had just been acquitted in Danielsville of murder charges in the death of Washington educator Lemuel A. Penn.

A minister from Chattanooga, Tenn, who said he represented the Dixie Knights of the KKK opened the meeting with a prayer. "Our Father, who art in Heaven," he said solemnly, "...put grace and grip in the white Causasian people...to destroy the black ape race." members turned to the lighted cross, their left arms raised in a stiff, Nazi-like salute. One speaker was Charlie Maddox of Savannah (unmasked

Mr. Venable said the six other Klan groups in Georgia are the U.S. Klan, the Improved U.S. Klan, the Associated Klans of Georgia, Dixie Klans, Federat Klans, and National Knights of the KKK, Inc. Mr. Venable is imperial wizard of the latter grou as well as chairman of the national association embracing all six. He said the association also has groups from Fla., S.C., La., Miss., Tenn. and Ohio.

7th { Calvin Craig is Ga. grand dragon of the United Klans of America

WP - 10-8-63

"You'll never be able to convict a white man what kills a nigger that encroaches on the white race in the South. They tried it in Phila (Miss.) and over in Meridian ville (Ga.) [Ala.] You see a jury there last night turn 'em Scott free. Now Mr. Hoover & Mr. Johnson, what do you say about that?"

Memo from MONTEZ ALBRIGHT

KKK--LOUISIANA

~~XXXXXXX~~
1-19-64, ~~X~~ CORE asked the FBI to investigate 150 crosses burned in five parishes last night.

1-20-64. Baton Rouge--Police reported more than 20 crosses were burned in various sections of Baton Rouge Saturday night. (An anonymous caller had told the Morning Advocate that 100 corsses would be burned.) Last September klansmen burned crosses in 12 or more cities and towns across the state, mainly in the so-called Florida parishes of Louisiana--an area of 5,000 sq. miles.

Crosses reported: Clinton--3, add'l in rural area around Clinton; and in Ethel, Zachary, Baker, Covington, Abita Springs, Slidell, and Folsom.

May 4, 1964. Denham Springs--About 300 to 500 klansmen attended a klan meeting held 12 miles east of Baton Rouge. (A Baton Rouge television newsman was beaten not far from here recently when he tried to film a meeting believed to be a klan gathering.)

Before the meeting started, members were warned to leave weapons in cars and to keep hoods on. One group drove to meeting in Washington Parish School bus. Newsmen were not allowed to take pictures; afterwards klan members handed out Polaroid snapshots.

May 30, 1964. Natchitoches--City attorney Arthur Watson said he intended to prosecute klansmen who recently prevented a Negro band from playing at a white prom. Sheriff Sam James, who also appeared at a meeting of some 250 white parents, promised to provide protection for a Negro band engaged for a forthcoming dance at an all-white parochial school.

The city attorney said a man who identified himself as the head of the Louisiana klan insisted the Klan was not responsible, and that all the men involved wore street clothes and no klan symbols were in evidence. The man also asked him not to prosecute if complaints were filed.

June 1, 1964. Bogalusa. A statewide meeting of the KKK will be held in Alexandria on July 11. The meeting was announced at a Washington Parish KKK metting Saturday night attended by about 500 robed and hooded men. An unidentified speaker said 10,000 members were expected to attend the Alexandria rally.

July 11--?

LOUISIANA

Atl.Journal, 1-20-64
Burning Crosses Flood Louisiana

More than 150 crosses were burned in what appeared a well-organized move. Crosses were reported in five parishes last night, near Negro homes, churches, and schools, mostly in East Baton Rouge Parish.

Oct. 19, 1964. Baton Rouge--Gordon Flory, AFL-CIO legislative leader, said he believes KKK and WCC activity is stirring up Goldwater sentiment in labor unions. "I know there is some sentiment among our people for Mr. Goldwater," he said, "I think the primary reason for this is that the KKK and WCC have been able to infiltrate our organization."

Nov. 4, 1964. New Orleans. 13 crosses were burned Monday night in central and northeast Louisiana, some of them at polling places being used in Tuesday's election.

Alexandria police siad 8 crosses were burning in the central Louisiana city and surrounding area. Monroe and West Monroe police confirmed five burnings in their area.

A CORE worker, Dave Kramer, put number of burnings in Monroe at 7.

Nov. 7, 1964. Alexandria. Lynn Foreman, 22, city employe, was fired, sentenced to 15 days in jail and fined $100 after pleading guilty to trying to burn a KKK cross in front of the City Court building on election eve.

Memo from MONTEZ ALBRIGHT

Att J-C - 9-6-64
by Paul Vanderline "Rally Heard Klan Contrals, 9 States" (politically)

Louisiana - 10,000 members

Ohio - member predicted that in few years his state will have double the no. it had in the 1940's, some 45,000.

Natl Orgo of Klans federation of 19
Klan groups across nation

Miss.

United Klans of America Miss., Realm, E. L. McDonald
Grand dragon

NYT - 7-25-64

La - Bill Hendrix, Goldsmer, La., former imperial wizard of KKK is organizing a group called the "American Underground" to fight the Civil Rights Act.
"We will fight legally as far as we can," he said, "and violently when necessary." He said the new
org. had members in La., Ala.,
Miss., & La.

KKK--MISSISSIPPI

Feb. 2, 1964--Vicksburg--7 different Vicksburg locations Friday night saw crosses burning. An anonymous caller had telephoned a Vicksburg Post newsman and told him where corsses would be burned. Vicksburg police checked out 7 reports of crosses burning. (Two weeks ago a caller telephoned Baton Rouge (La.) Morning Admocate and told of cross burnings in the city; one week ago a caller called Jackson Clarion-Ledger and warned of cross-burnings in southern Mississippi.

March 22, 1964. McComb. The KKK has delivered foot to a needy Negro family according to a salvation army official. He said four Klansmen dressed in traditional robes Wednesday night visited a Negro family with 13 children and delivered food. They obtained the name from him.

April 25, 1964. Greenville--A rash of cross burnings throughout Mississippi in recnet nights brought a sharp denouncement from Greenville police chief W. C. Burnley, who said it appeared "obvious" the burnings were the work of the klan. There were at least three in the Greenville area. Others appeared in Jackson, Greenwood, Canton, Hattiesburg, Fayette, Meridian, Natchez, Vicksburg, Utica, Prentiss, Crystal Springs, & Winona.

May 13, 1964. Canton, Miss. The director of the State Sovereignty Commission, Earle Johnston, Jr. today irged Mississippians not to join "any secret organization which might have well-meaning motives, but could get out of hand under emotional leadership."

May 17, 1964. McComg--At an outdoor rally of about 1,000 persons (sponsored by the klan but with no one appearing in klan costume) the head of the United Klans of America (Shelton) hailed Gov. Geo. Wallace of Ala. and urged other southern governors and congressmen to rally behind Wallace's camapign in the north.

May 18, 1964. A Pike County klan leader claimed the secret organization's membership totals 100,000 in Mississippi. J. E. Thornhill Sr. of Summit said at a klan rally Saturday night, "We have somewhere between 3,000 and 4,000 down here; we have about 95,000 members in the state. When questioned about the attitude of law enforcement officers toward the klan, he said "They haven't bothered us, besides, a lot of them are members anyway. The rally was sponsored by the Pike County KKK chapter and Phillip Brady, a McComb selectman and radio station owner, introduced Imperial Wizard Robt. M. Shelton, speaker.

May 24, 1964. Jackson--Claims have been made by some acknowledged klansmen that membership in Mississippi now exceeds 90,000, including some law enforcement officers and public officials. Intelligence being gathered by state authorities here indicates the klan is busily organizing in every part of the state, but that the membership is more in the number of 7,000.

There was a rash of cross burning over the state--in 64 counties--on a recent weekend designed to show klan strength.

Sept. 29, 1964. Natchez--E. L. McDonald, grand dragon of the Mississippi klan, issued a denial that the kaln was responsible for any bombings in this area. He was specifically referring to two Friday night bombings which damaged the homes of a Negro and Mayor John Nosser.

Oct. 2, 1964. Winona-- The weekly Winona Times said editorially Thursday that the KKK was as "dangerous to civilization as the 'wrongs' they so self-righteously claim they oppose." The newspaper described the the klan as a "Southern Gestapo" which retarded the growth of the state.

Nov. 27, 1964. Laurel. A labor union has told its members to arm themselves against the KKK and stand ready to fight. The announcement was signed by all 18 officials of Local 5443 of the International Woodworkers of America, AFL-CIO and was issued after a union official was beaten by masked men.

Most union members are among the some 3,000 workers at the Masonite Corp plant which under federal pressure recently adopted a policy of nondiscrimination in job placement. Otis Matthews, 41, asst. business manager of the local, told officers he was abducted and whipped with a strap on Nov. 16 while en route home from work. He was treated at a hospital. He said the hooded men blockaded the lonely road and took him from his car at gun point.

Nov. 28, 1964. Belief is growing among moderate leaders here that a KKK
N.Y.T. mob of at least 50 persons plotted the murder of Michael H. Schwerner at least six weeks before he and two other civil rights leaders were slain last summer.

Nov. 26, 1964. Drew Pearson in Washington Post. Emmet Thornhill of McComb called Drew Pearson the other day and told him, "I've been out of that outfit (the klan) since they dropped the first three bombs. Let the law handle it, not the klan. This is not why we organized the klans. I thought they were a God-fearing outfit when I got into them. I didn't know they were doing this kind of thing. I'm against it."

Thornhill is a walthy oil man, several times a millionaire, who Pearson had reported was high up in the klan and had invluence with the McComb police force.

Memo from MONTEZ ALBRIGHT

WP - 10-7-64 "Most Southerners Regard Reborn Klan w/ Contempt" Paul Good.

McComb, Miss. arrests for bombing N homes turned up Klan membership cards in suspects' cache of weapons.

Membership in 20's estimated at 1,000,000!

Today - 75,000 - drawn largely from ranks of ill-educated + economically impatent.

2 major groups: United Klans of Am. Inc & Natl KKK Ass'n.

Washington Post, 4-26-64 ~~LOUISIANA~~

Crosses Set Aflame Across Mississippi Miss.

Cross burnings, most of them about 10:00 p.m. on April 24th, included the following places: Greenville (at least 3), Jackson, Greenwood, Canto Hattiesburg, Fayette, Meridian, Natchez, Vicksburg Utica, Prentiss, Crystal Springs, and Winona. Several other burnings had been reported around the state in recent days.

XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY

Resist. Gps - KKK

Klansman Resigns in McComb

By Drew Pearson

I received an interesting phone call the other day from a Mississippian who has been active in the Ku Klux Klan, Emmet Thornhill of McComb.

Pearson

Thornhill is a wealthy oil man, several times a millionaire, who I had reported was high up in the Klan and had influence with the McComb police.

"I've been out of that outfit ever since they dropped the first three bombs," Thornhill told me. "Let the law handle it, not the Klan.

"This is not why we organized the Klans. I thought they were a God-fearing outfit when I got into them. I didn't know they were doing this kind of thing. I'm against it.

"There never has been a colored church that I haven't contributed something to. I put up $1000 for several. I have lots of friends among the colored people. I have to do business with 'em all the time; I sign oil leases on their property. This publicity you've given me has hurt me with 'em."

I asked Thornhill if it was not true that when the Klan held a big rally on the McComb fair grounds last July he had helped organize it.

"I paid for the advertising and the broadcast for Shelton," he replied, referring to Bob Shelton, Grand Dragon of the Alabama Ku Klux Klan and ardent supporter of Gov. George Wallace.

"But I got out of this outfit the first time three bombs were thrown in Burgland."

Thornhill referred to a Negro community which is part of McComb.

"I'm not in favor of beating a colored man out of a single dime," Thornhill continued. "I've never been against the Nigras. I don't believe in beating Nigras in any way.

"You said my son was a member of the McComb auxiliary police. He's not. He makes $28,000 a month."

"You mean $28,000 a year?" I asked, thinking I had misunderstood.

"No, $28,000 a month," Thornhill corrected. "He makes it from oil wells and hauling oil."

I asked Thornhill what he thought of the petition just signed by 650 McComb residents backing law and order and equal opportunities for Negroes.

"That petition is like one I suggested seven months ago," he replied. "It demonstrates what I said, but at that time nobody paid any attention to it."

Thornhill and Gregory

I am delighted to publish Mr. Thornhill's present views on both the Klan and the race problem, and to give him the benefit of the doubt on his treatment of Negroes. And I would like to go further and make a suggestion whereby Mr. Thornhill may undo any injustice he was responsible for when he promoted the big Klan rally for Grand Dragon Shelton.

Dick Gregory, the Negro comedian, is trying to raise money for 20,000 turkeys to be flown to Mississippi just before Christmas. He thought he had part of the turkey money raised from the Liston-Clay fight, but the bout fizzled.

Probably there is no man in America, even Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, who is more hated by the Ku Klux Klan than Dick Gregory. He has given up performance fees of more than $6000 a week to raise money for the Freedom Movement in Mississippi and elsewhere.

Likewise, there is no organization more hated by Dick Gregory than the Ku Klux Klan.

However, if a man who has now renounced the Klan, such as Emmett Thornhill, should join in Dick Gregory's drive to give turkeys to the less privileged people of Mississippi—both white and black—it would prove beyond any possible doubt that he means what he says about a fair break for Negroes.

This being Thanksgiving Day, it might be a significant time to show that two men, with different backgrounds and different philosophies, can agree on the basic principles of the Founding Fathers.

When the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, approximately 350 years ago, they were seeking a new land where they could be free from Old World prejudices. And after one year of living in the New World, they gave thanks for the fact that they had made a start toward that goal.

Since that time, we have gone a long way toward that goal when it comes to material things. But we have faltered of late in spiritual things, we have faltered in the important goal of "love thy neighbor as thyself."

The people of McComb, Miss., where I was last month, have been among the worst sinners when it comes to this goal. No city west of Saigon has been more torn by the bombs of bigotry. No city has had more churches and Negro homes destroyed.

But recently, 650 of McComb's citizens have turned the town to face the other direction. I am delighted that Emmett Thornhill, former financial backer of the Ku Klux Klan, has turned with them, and I hope he'll go further along with a man he probably doesn't like, Dick Gregory, in healing the wounds of hate.

© 1964, Bell-McClure Syndicate, Inc.

Microfilm Code No.

SERS Library

MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL APPEAL

p. 8

Date: NOV 13 1964

Ku Klux Klan

also Mississippi

Winona Weekly Lambasts KKK

Terms Klan Is 'Repugnant To Civilization'

WINONA, Miss., Nov. 12. — (AP) — The weekly Winona Times said editorially Thursday the Ku Klux Klan was as "dangerous to civilization as the 'wrongs' they so self-righteously claim they oppose."

The newspaper described the Klan as a "Southern Gestapo" which retarded the growth of the state.

"If there is one thing Winona or Montgomery County or Mississippi does not need in the least," the Times said, "it is a group of hooded, self-appointed administrators of 'justice,' who themselves are as dangerous to civilization as the 'wrongs' they so self- righteously claim they oppose.

"For as long as Mississippi must continue to put up with bombings, brutal murders and needless violence, our growth will be retarded our finer points obscured, and we will remain the object of the nation's scorn."

The Times said on the eve of the presidential election the Klan distributed pamphlets in the area indicting everything from the Communist Party to public officials who deal with bi-racial groups.

"It is precisely this type of half-witted, irresponsible tension-inciting claptrap that causes trouble. The very idea of grown men, in many instances leaders of their communities and respected church members, participating in the underworld tactics espoused by the Klan is repugnant to the very concept of civilization," the Times said.

June 25th Jones, in interview w/ Ethel Stead now Va. Pilot staff writer, said est. N.C. Klan strength at "under 100,000."

K.K.K.--NORTH CAROLINA

Raleigh News & Observer, Aug. 23, 1964, series by Oliver Williams on the Klan in North Carolina (condensed)

A surveillance of Klan activities by state and local law enforcement agencies reveals:

1) strongest in Northeast, principally Wilson, Nash, Martin, Halifax and Warren Counties. In this area enforcement officials believe Klan has upwards of 1,600 followers who are either members or sympathizers. (Klan claims 59 Klaverns in state; about half of state membership here.) Survey believes from 3,000 to 4,000 Klan members & sympathizers in state.

Klan is weak west of Raleigh (although Grand Dragon and four others in top positions are from Salisbury) In January sources said Klan had only 525 paying members, with 13 Klaverns and 12 more being organized. Today the FBI indicates the Klan has 35 to 40 Klaverns. Six years ago the FBI counted no more than 150 Klansmen in state; had names of practically all in their files.)

When Klan announced "show of strength" prior to Democratic primary, crosses were supposed to burn in 55 areas; only 13 did burn, 11 in eastern counties mentioned above) and mainly on court house lawns.

Hillsboro, Aug. 5, 1964. About 400 spectators including a number of students from Duke and University of North Carolina and a number of women and babies attended rally.

Salisbury, Aug. 10, 1964. The State grand dragon of the Klan said Sunday night employes of news media will be barred from taking pictures or attending future Klan rallies.

Cross-burning Saturday night--2,000 spectators and 250 robed klansmen. A small fire was extinguished before it did much damage at a Negro church near Salisbury shortly after Klan rally ended.

Salisbury, Jan. 11, 1964. The commander of the Salisbury Nat'l Guard unit said Friday a KKK rally originally scheduled for the armory here Jan. 25 will not be held in the guard facility. Capt. Leroy P. Spoon of Charlotte said he will "definitely break the contract" under which the armory was being rented to the klan.

Salisbury
Jan. 25, 1964. Klansmen from at least six southern states were expected at the regional meeting of the Knights of the KKK, to be held at a farm near the Dunn's Mountain community.

Durham, March 26, 1964. The KKK will stage a rally Sat. on the outskirts of Chapel Hill. Featured speakers will include John R. "Bob" Jones of Salisbury, N.C. grand dragon, and Robt. Shelton of Ala., imperial grand wizard. Expected are about 100 members from S.C. and Ga., with 200 to 300 from neighboring klaverns.

Williamston, May 2, 1964. Posters announcing a KKK rally May 9 at 8 p. m. have been widely circulated.

May 28 - 50 Crosses were burned in 50 N.C. Counties at 10:00 p.m.

Raleigh, June 6, 1964. The KKK denied Friday that cross burnings the week of theMay 30 primary were intended to affect the vote outcome. Allen Bailey, campaign manager for Dr. I. Beverly Lake, has issued statements claiming the crossburnings had contributed to his candidates defeat.

KKK, N.C. continued:

Wilson, June 9, 1964. An estimated 2,300 people attended a KKK rally near here, sponsored by the Wilson county Improvement Assn. More than 100 klansmen and several klanswomen participated in the crossburning ceremony.

Raleigh, June 13, 1964. The grand dragon of the N.C. KKK, J. R. Jones of Granite Quarry, has indirectly endorsed Dan K. Moore for governor in the Juen 27 run-off Democratic primary. He did this by saying he would not vote for the opposition candidate, and neither would any klansman. (active dues-paying members believed to be not more than 1,000.)

Granite Quarry, June 21, 1964. N.C. KKK grand dragon Robt. Jones and about 250 klansmen from the Elm City area "advised" a group of 12 northern teenagers and two adults to leave Elm City. The group, which returned Thursday night to Pittsburg, Pa., were in town to assist the Rev. James H. Costen, pastor of the Negro Presbyterian churches in Elm City and Rocky Mount. Jones said the Northerners "had been living with a bunch of niggers since Sunday and the white people were mad as the devil."

The group was sponsored by the United Presbyterian Church and its purpose was to paint the church and to conduct a Bible school. Costen said the project was entirely church-related and not a civil rights action.

Charlotte, June 22, 1964. The United Presbyterian Church, USA has been asked to send another white group to Elm City, this time of college age, to replace the high school students and adult advisors from the Mt. Lebanon Church who left town at the request of the KKK. The Executive and Field Service Commission of the church's Synod of Catawba asked that older students be sent and said it was prepared to send a group of ministers also to lend moral support by its presence. The telegram said, in part: "Yielding to such threats as these (of the Klan) place our church in an embarrassing position..."

June 27 - Rally ~~announced~~ in Burgaw Sat. night.

Greensboro Daily News, July 13, 1964. Gov. Sanford assured the interracial group planning to arrive in Rocky Mount Monday night and then proceed to Elm City, that it will have full protection of the law and that the state will back up local officials. He warned the Klan to stay out of the matter of who is painting a Negro church.

Enfield, Aug. 8, 1964. A white civil rights worker Sat. asked state and federal protection from "racial terrorism" for Halifax County Negroes. John R. Salter, Jr. said there was "rapidly mounting klan activity here which resulted in the attempt about midnight Sat. to burn down the store owned by Curtis Pittman of Enfield." He also mentioned incidents of armed and robed klansmen riding thru Negro sections on "intimidation raids." "Crosses have been burned in front of Negro homes and anonymous threats have been made against civil rights workers," he said. Several large fuel tanks stood about 25 yards from the store and had the fire really developed, it could have easily ignited the tanks and destroyed homes in the surrounding Negro community. A large amount of kerosene had been poured on the side of the store and ignited. Police Chief F. C. Sykes refused to answer questions and said Salter "is just a trouble maker..."

Chief F. C. Sykes of Enfield says there have been three crosses burned in the town and six outside the town in a year and a half. He said there had been no increase in racial incidents.

Negroes say the figure is higher, and that crosses have been burned elsewhere in the county. A spokesman for the Negroes said the first cross in the Enfield area was burned in late April, 1963. Others followed, this year, on July 4, Sept. 2, several on Sept. 3, and Sept. 21. A disputed store fire was also reported on July 30. They believe a new klavern has been organized in protest of a local Negro voter registration drive.

(the Klan has scheduled rallies over the weekend at Goldsboro, plans one for Louisburg next Sat. night, and another at Lexington on Oct. 24.

Goldsboro, Oct. 12, 1964. The KKK burned a 55 ft. cross and urged a crowd of about 2,000 to fight thru the ballot box for white supremacy. Speakers criticiaed N. C. newspapers, "most" churches, Gov. Sanford, President Johnson, and Hubert Humphrey, and Dr. M. L. King.

Persons with cameras were escorted to the grand dragon by security guards; persons identifying themselves as newsmen were welcomed by the grand dragon and assigned security guards.

Winston-Salem, Oct. 24, 1964. The KKK burned a cross in a field near Clemmons (Forsyth County) last night--but not without difficulty. Two different meeting places leased to them were cancelled when two owners in succession had a change of heart and a third was obtained at the last minute--a field at Pfafftown belonging to Constable Lucien Mabe, first cousin of R. L. Mabe, exalted cyclops of Forsyth County's klan.

A small army of law enforcement officers was present, with a sizable band of highwaypatrolmen. At 8 p.m. Sheriff Ernie Shore had a bigger crowd than the grand dragon did. But a large group came in as the meeting was being postponed. Speakers were the grand dragon from Florida, Imp. Wizard Shelton of Ala., J. R. Jones, and Geo. Dorsett of Greensboro, chaplain of the klans's security guards. He seemed chiefly opposed to the law enforcement pfficers in the crowd.

Nov. 4, 1964, Dunn. The first public meeting of the KKK in Harnett county in more than 25 years drew about 5,000 to 6,000 people.

Knightdale, Nov. 9, 1964. A torrential rainfall dampened a KKK meeting here Sunday night. While 30 robed klansmen and another 50 dripping persons retreated to their cars, Jones mounted the platform and addressed his followers. There were about 100 cars and most of the 300 or so people present preferred to remain in them. A kerosene lighted cross was burned.

Greensboro Nov. 15, 1964. In an interview, the grand dragon of the N.C. klan refused to give membership figures, but laughed at estimates of news reporters that the total state membership is 2,000 to 3,000. He also announced futur e meetings as follows: Nov. 15, Beauford, Sunday, Lenoir, Nov. 28, Winston-Salem, Nov. 29, Durham (at civic center).

Wilson, ~~xxx29x~~ 11-28-64. Four unmasked men in KKK robes walked out of a racially integrated Thanksgiving Day service here yesterday (Nov.26) when a Negro minister arose to read the Scripture. An estimated 250 persons, including not more than a dozen Negroes, attended the service sponsored by the W Wilson Ministers Asso. in the First Baptist Church. The pastor, the Rev. John Wilson, president of the Asso., termed the walkout "sacriligeous." There have never been any incidents at racially integrated Easter sunrise services held in Wilson in the past.

Richomnd, Oct. 12, 1964. Richmond News Leader, "Klan Loses Ground in N.C." ~~xxxKpjxxG~~ by John Gunn.

N.C SBI director Walter Anderson was quoted as saying that paid membership in the klan has dropped off ~~s~~ considerably since several schools in the northeastern part of the state desegregated peacefully last month.

At one time in August the membership may have reached 6,000; today it is about 600, he said. While membership is on~~e~~ the downgrade, law enforcement officers are still maintaining close surveillance. "Any organization that can arm itself" is dangerous, Anderson said.

NORTH CAROLINA

~~x~~N.Y.Times, 9-6-64
Big Gains Scored by Carolina Klan

A new Ku Klux Klan, which began raising its firey crosses over N.C. 12 months ago, has become the biggest and strongest Klan organization in this state in 40 years. The organization has spread rapidly into a majority of the counties in eastern and Piedmont N.C. Only in the mountainous west has the Klan failed to gain a foothold. As one high Klan official told reporters recently,"There ain't no niggers in the mountains."

While no more than 3,000 persons are dues-paying members, several times that many N.C. are active sympathizers who attend rallies, donate money and follow the Klan's line in politics. More than 40 Klaverns, or local units, meet weekly across the state in lodge halls, private dining rooms, business places and Klansmen's homes.

The Anti-Defamation League, which monitors Klan activity all over the country, now believes the N.C. is among the four most active states in a national Klan revival. The others are Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee.

present organization seems to be dominated by men i in their 20s and 30s; leader J. Robert Jones, forme sailor, bricklayer and lightning-rod salesman.He is Grand Dragon of the state Klan.

While the Klan's bloc of votes is almost certainly too small to be significant in statewaide races, the Klan still may wield political influence in scattered small towns and rural communities where anti-Negro sentiment is intense.

Despite the new Klan's insistence that it will stic to politics to achieve goals, there have been strong indications that threats, intimidation and even violence are still part of Klan's operations.

Ambivalent leaders: "We are not a violent order, b but it's better to die for something than to live fo. nothing."

"We really mean it (disclaimer of violence) but you gotta watch these young boys. They'll go off and do anything."

Memo

from MONTEZ ALBRIGHT

Resistance Groups - KKK
NY Times
34 9-6-64

BIG GAINS SCORED BY CAROLINA KLAN

Resurgence Most Vigorous Since the Early 1920s

Special to The New York Times

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 5 —A new Ku Klux Klan, which began raising its fiery crosses over North Carolina 12 months ago, has become the biggest and strongest Klan organization in this state in 40 years.

Not since the early nineteen-twenties, when Klansmen were elected in numbers to the State Legislature, has North Carolina witnessed so vigorous a resurgence of the robed order.

Gov. Terry Sanford and state law enforcement officials, worried about the Klan's potential for violence, have kept a careful watch as the organization has spread rapidly into a majority of the counties in eastern and Piedmont North Carolina.

Only in the mountainous west has the Klan failed to gain a foothold. As a Klan official told reporters recently: "There ain't no niggers in the mountains."

Many Sympathizers

While no more than 3,000 persons are dues-paying members of the Klan, several times that many North Carolinians are active sympathizers who attend rallies, donate money and follow the Klan's line in politics.

More than 40 klaverns, or local units, meet weekly across the state in lodge halls, private dining rooms, business places and Klansmen's homes.

The Anti-Defamation League, which monitors Klan activity all over the country, now believes that North Carolina is among the four most active states in a national Klan revival. The others are Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee.

The league, along with law enforcement men and other students of the Klan, is convinced that Klan operations in North Carolina today are far more widespread and well-organized than in any other period since the nineteen-twenties.

While the new Klan in North Carolina has its share of older men who are veterans of earlier Klans, the present organization seems to be dominated by men in their 20s and 30s, for whom this Klan adventure is their first.

Led by Former Sailor

Their leader, and the man primarily responsible for the Klan revival in the state, is J. Robert Jones, 36 years old, a former sailor, bricklayer and lightning-rod salesman. He is the Grand Dragon of the state Klan.

Jones, the son of a Salisbury, N. C., railroading family, now devotes all his time to organizing new klaverns and encouraging old ones. He says he has driven 75,000 miles in the last year in behalf of the Klan.

It all began, Jones said in a recent interview, in June, 1963, when he got eight friends together to discuss Communism and the civil rights movement.

"We decided something had to be done," Jones recalled, "whether it was on a local or national basis."

After three nights of talk, Jones and his friends agreed to revive the Ku Klux Klan in North Carolina and to affiliate with United Klans of America, Inc., the biggest of several national Klan organizations.

Political Strength Doubted

North Carolina's Grand Dragon and his youthful lieutenants insist that their group has disavowed violence as a means for preserving white supremacy. Their energies will be directed instead toward politics, they contend.

Political observers in North Carolina, however, are virtually unanimous in dismissing the Klan as a serious political force in statewide elections.

While the Klan's bloc of votes is almost certainly too small to be significant in statewide races, the Klan still may wield political influence in scattered small towns and rural communities where anti-Negro sentiment is intense.

Despite the new Klan's insistence that it will stick to politics to achieve its goals, there have been strong indications that threats, intimidation and even violence are still part of the Klan's operations.

Potential for Violence

The Klan's own leaders are ambivalent in public statements on the subject. Nearly every disclaimer of violence has been coupled with an implicit threat of violence.

"We are not a violent order," one speaker told a crowd of cheering Klansmen recently, "but it's better to die for something than to live for nothing."

Law enforcement officials believe that whatever the Klan leaders' real views of violence are, the Klan's greatest potential for violence rests with individuals who may decide, without authorization, to translate violent oratory into violent action.

One veteran Klansman from eastern North Carolina summed summed it all up when asked whether the Klan was serious when it disclaimed violence:

"We really mean it," he said. "But you gotta watch these young boys. They'll go off and do anything."

Microfilm Code No.

SERS Library

WINSTON - SALEM
JOURNAL (N.C.)

Date SEP 30 1964

Minister Tells Of Klan Threats

FARMVILLE (AP) — A Raleigh minister yesterday told of being threatened, harassed and illegally searched Saturday night while attending a Ku Klux Klan rally with his wife and two fellow clergymen.

The Rev. Jack Crum, a Methodist, said he was forced to surrender a roll of film to a so-called Klan security guard clad in military regalia, including a helmet, boots and club.

Before the group could leave the rally, at a field near Farmville, they were shaken down by J. R. Jones of Granite Quarry, grand dragon of the North Carolina Klan, he said.

In driving away from the rally, the clergymen noticed that a tire was flat. They continued anyway, stopping to change the tire when they reached a nearby road where a highway patrolman was directing traffic.

"Through my lifetime, I've only been searched and had something of my personal belongings taken from me against my will in two places," Crum said. "One of those places was in Communist Russia; the other was at the Ku Klux Klan meeting."

The State Bureau of Investigation has been called into the case.

Crum went to the rally with two Farmville clergymen, the Rev. Gordon Kendall, a Catholic, and the Rev. Tom Taylor, an Episcopalian.

"We went because we had heard there was a rally, the public was invited and we wanted to know more about the Klan because of its reputation," Crum explained.

The Raleigh minister, director of Christian social action for the North Carolina Council of Churches, said he doubted the Klansmen were aware he and the others were clergymen. He was carrying a camera.

"A security guard noticed the camera hanging outside my raincoat," he recalled. "'You can't take pictures,' he told me. I went to the car to put the camera up."

As he was doing this, Crum said, a Klansman in a white robe told him, "If you take pictures, that camera won't be here. You may be beaten up, too."

Mrs. Crum was carrying a small telescope in a case. As the rally continued, she decided to put it back in the car.

On returning to the vehicle, Crum said, "we were surrounded by 15, maybe more of those security guards."

"We will have to have the film in that camera," he quoted a guard as saying. "I told them I hadn't taken any pictures and had put the camera up, trying to cooperate with them. They still wanted the film.

"I had little alternative, so I gave it to them. They said they'd send it back to me.

"One of the Klansman remarked, 'I've got his license number. We'll find out who he is.'"

Crum said the Klansmen examined his wife's telescope and then asked him to open his car trunk. Kendall's mention of a search warrant, he said, was ignored.

After the last speaker, Kendall said, "Let's go home."

"A security guard stationed behind us," Crum recalled, "said, 'You're not going anywhere.'"

When Kendall challenged this, one of the guards blew a whistle and "we were surrounded by security guards," Crum said. "We were detained there without our consent for several minutes and didn't know why, and then we found out we were being held so the grand dragon could talk to us."

Crum told Jones about the earlier threat. "If a Klansman said he'd beat you up, you'd better watch out, for he'll do it," he quoted the grand dragon as saying.

After a meeting between the grand dragon and some security guards, Crum said, he was forced to empty his pockets and received a full-dress shakedown from Jones. Then they were permitted to leave.

Crum said the security guards appeared quiet and well disciplined. They used no profanity.

"They reminded me of stories I read of Nazi Brown Shirts—always eyeing people, never smiling," he said.

KKK--SOUTH CAROLINA

Feb. 3, 1964. Columbia. More than a dozen robed and hooded Klansmen appeared on downtown Columbia's Main Street Sunday night. A spokesman for the group said they were not demonstrating, but paying a courtesy call on the head of the local white citizens council. The klansmen had been attending a state meeting of the staff of the grand dragon of S.C., R. E. Scoggin. They had met to discuss organizational procedures for the coming year. About 11 counties were represented.

Aug. 16, 1964. Greer. A motorcade of 40 robed klansmen rode thru downtown Greer Sat. Afternoon. The motorcade of 10 cars was unexpected, but police cars escorted it thru main streets of city.

Aug. 22, 1964. Spartanburg. Robt. Scoggin, S.C. grand dragon of the United Klans of Am. said Friday the "United Klans of Am. along with many other dedicated societies in S.C." are circulating petitions urging the recall from office of Gov. Donold S. Russell. He said the recall was being sought because of the governor's "inability to represent the people of S.C. and carry out their wishes." He did not elaborate.

Aug. 24, Greenville. An estimated 500 persons gathered at a meeting of the United Knights of the KKK here Sat. night and heard three speakers verbally degrade the civil rights movement and criticize government leaders. Speakers were: Robt. Scoggins, Robt. Shelton of Ala., and Dr. Edw. Feels of Birmingham, Ala. Several state and county law enforcement officers were on hand to handle traffic and keep order.

Sept. 22, 1964. The grand dragon of the S.C. Klan, Bob Scoggins of Spartanburg, sat behind Representative presidential nominee Barry Goldwater last week at a Palmetto state appearance. Investigation revealed he was invited by L. Maurice Bessinger, who had headed the "Wallace for President" signature campaign before Gov. Wallace withdrew. He had been given some tickets to distribute.

KKK--TENNESSEE

From a

April 18, 1964. Chattanooga. Chatt. Times ed. "KKK Hall Is Taxed Again after Four Years Exemption. The Glass Street ~~bxuxi~~ building used by the Dixie Klan's Knights of the KKK was exempted from Hamilton county's property tax for the 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963 tax years, records in the office of assessor Hoyt Selcer showed Friday.

Oct. 26, 1964. Maryville. Robed but unmasked KKK were subjected to jeers of "trick or treat" as they stationed themselves at entrances to Maryville College Sunday and handed out mimeographed sheets of paper assailing Dr. Eugene Carson Black, speaker at the college.

Dr. Blake, stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, spoke to about 600 area Presbyterians and visitors as part of Union Presbytery Day.

KKK--VIRGINIA

June 25, 1964. Portsmouth. In an interview with Ethel Steadman, Virginian-Pilot staff writer, J. R. Jones, grand dragon of the N.C. United Klans of America, claimed the demand for membership applications from this area has been so great the Virginia Klan called him to assist in organizing unites. He said he had "chartered three units in two days here."

Jones plans a public rally here "within the next month or six weeks" which he predicted will draw w0,000 people. He did not say where the rally will be staged, but the date and site will be advertised in advance. He left Virginia Wednesday night for West Virginia, but plans to be in Burgaw, N.C. Saturday night for a rally near there.

The membership application he hands out states, "If you are a Native-born Loyal United States Citizen, 18 years old, a White Gentile Person of Temporate Habits, of Protestant Faith, and believe in White Supremacy and Americanism, you are eligible to join the United Klans of America, Inc., Knights of Ku Klux Klan."

Raleigh, Oct. 1, 1964. During a Sat. night KKK rally at Farmville, Va., the Rev. Jack Crum, a Methodist minister and director of the Christian Social Action for the N. C. Council of Churches, said he, his wife, and two fellow clergymen were twice surrounded by klansmen and at one time he was forced to hand over a camera he was carrying. Crum said a so-called security guard warned him to put away his camera and while he was in process of returning to his car to put up the camera he was told by a robed klansman, "if you take any pictures, that camera won't be here. You may be beaten up, too." The minister quoted J. R. Jones, grand dragon of the N.C. klan, as telling him, "if a klansman said he'd beat you up, you better watch out, for he'll do it." Crum said he was later subjected to a shakedown by Jones. He was also forced to hand over his roll of film.

State bureau of Investigation director Walter F. Anderson said the incident was a "local matter" and later added he could not understand why the minister had not filed his statement with the SBI.

Charlotte, Oct. 3, 1964. editorial in Charlotte Observer. "Strong Arm Methods of the Klan"

"...The Klan's security guards, whose dress and demeanor are reminiscent of the storm troopers of Nazi Germany, apparently think of themselves as a private police force armed with special authority to intimidate and order people around.

"Private citizens should by now be aware of the fact, of course, that risk is involved in attending Klan meetings out of curiosity. People who think they are a law unto themselves and who don costumes to disply their imagined superiority will not tolerate disagreement or ridicule.

"It is N.C."s shame that bedsheet bigotry is on the rise again in the state. But it would behoove the private citizen, whether he is concerned or merely curious, to depend upon law enforcement agencies to keep an eye on the Klan.

"In that connection, we disagree with SBI director Walter Anderson that the incident near Farmville should be classified merely as a 'local matter.' It has implications for the entire state.

"It is past time for authorities to use existing state law to test the Klan's legal structure. If that law is not sufficient to stop the Klan's threats against people and its clandestine activities, the 1965 General Assembly should turn its hand to strengthening the statute."

KKK. West Virginia

March 22, 1964. Hinton. The recently organized KKK chapter here has a new leader, W. E. Houchins, a 32 year old correspondence course salesman and former John Birch Society member. Houchins and Noah Palmer, plumber, organized the chapter in January "to fight mongrelization of the races." Palmer dropped out of the klan and Houchins (originally wnd in command)moved from grand dragon to imperial wizard last Monday.

Houchins said about 113 "white Protestants" from Mercer, Raleigh, Summers and Broxton counties currently comprise the group but predicted thousands would attend planned summer rallies and 1,400 would join by early June. Several rallies have been held since January, Houchins said, with an average attendance of about 75. He said he had received about 60 letters last week 40 of them from women who are worried about their daughters attending integrated schools.

Newsweek 12-21-64
KKK. Miss.

ready approved Ray Bliss, Ohio's nonsectarian GOP handyman, as Burch's eventual successor. And Bliss has agreed to serve. Ike himself put the frosting on the cake—talking up his own leadership scheme: Bliss as national chairman in tandem with Minnesota's retired Rep. Walter Judd (a conservative but no Goldwaterite) as party spokesman.

"Preposterous," said Burch.

THE SUPREME COURT:

The Bedroom Issues

Marriage between the races is against the law in nineteen states—the eleven members of the Confederacy, plus Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indiana, and Wyoming. But the Supreme Court shook the foundations of those ancient statutes last week.

At issue was an 83-year-old Florida "black code" making it a crime for an unmarried Negro and white to "habitually ... occupy in the nighttime the same room." For violating the law in Miami Beach in 1962, Connie Gonzalez Hoffman, an Alabama white woman, and Dewey McLaughlin, a Negro seaman from Honduras, were fined $150 each and sentenced to 30 days in jail. The Supreme Court unanimously upheld their appeal and struck down the statute.

"There is involved here," said Justice Byron R. White delivering the Court's opinion, "an exercise of the state police power which trenches upon the constitutionally protected freedom from invidious official discrimination based on race." Justice Potter Stewart, in a concurring opinion joined by Justice William Douglas, was stronger: "I think it is simply not possible for a state law to be valid under our Constitution which makes the criminality of an act depend upon the race of the actor ..."

The Court rejected a Florida argument that the law must be preserved to prevent intimacy leading to intermarriage. It did so, said Justice White, "without reaching the question of the validity of the state's prohibition against interracial marriage." But if it prudently side-stepped the miscegenation issue for the moment, few doubted that its views would demolish mixed-marriage laws as soon as the issue was directly posed.

■ The Court also agreed to hear again a case based on an 1879 Connecticut law barring the use and prescription of contraceptive devices. Passed by pious Protestants, the law has been stoutly defended since by Roman Catholics. In 1961, the court refused to rule on its constitutionality on the ground that it wasn't being enforced. But later, two Planned Parenthood members were arrested after opening a birth-control clinic in New Haven.

UPI

Miss Carter: Freedom for 19

MISSISSIPPI:

'Jesus, No!'

The last place in the world Miss Esther Carter might have chosen to be last week was the crowded little Meridian, Miss., courtroom, where she had to conduct a preliminary hearing in the matter of the June lynching of three young civil-rights workers.

Such hearings are among the usually routine duties of her office of eighteen years, as U.S. commissioner for the Southern District of Mississippi. But Miss Carter is a demure spinster in her 60s, never much of a one for personal attention; besides, like most U.S. commissioners, she isn't even a lawyer. Friends said she had asked Sidney Mize, the Federal judge who appointed her to take her off the case and run the hearing himself. Mize couldn't if he wanted to; the best he could do was send a young clerk to sit beside her and counsel on the law.

Associated Press

Mrs. Chaney: Tears for a son

So, with the eyes of her state and her nation fastened on her, Miss Esther Carter did her duty as she saw it. And when she had finished, nineteen of the 21 defendants walked away scot-free—and the prosecution, to its stunned disbelief, was left at least temporarily with no case at all.

Setback: Only six days before, the FBI had arrested nineteen of the men—including Neshoba County Sheriff Lawrence Rainey and Deputy Cecil Price—on conspiracy charges in the triple-killing, and two more for withholding information. Federal authorities had reckoned from the first on the difficulties of prosecuting a racial case in stubbornly segregationist Mississippi. But they plainly hadn't figured on a setback so early. All they had to do was produce enough evidence to show the probability that a crime had been committed and that the defendants had something to do with it—a burden of proof that seemed simple enough with the newest trump card in the FBI's hand.

The nineteen defendants—and almost as many lawyers—had barely settled in their seats when moon-faced Justice Department attorney Robert Owen played that card. He called FBI agent Henry Rask and asked him if he had questioned any of the accused men.

"I interviewed Horace Doyle Barnette on Nov. 19, 20, and 21," Rask replied.

"Did you get a signed confession?"

"I did."

The manful smiles faded along the row of defendants. Doyle Barnette had moved to Meridian from the Shreveport, La., area only last May—and moved back with his pregnant wife, Virginia, on Aug. 7, a bare three days after the discovery of the bodies of Mickey Schwerner, Andrew Goodman, and James Chaney on a tip widely rumored to have cost the FBI $25,000.

'Spending': Back home in Louisiana, where Barnette lived in a modest green duplex and worked as a meat-truck driver, he was known as a quiet, humble, God-fearing young man of 26. "His only fault," a former boss said, "was you sometimes had to hold him down on spending." But now he stood accused of being one of the ten men who actually executed the alleged Ku Klux Klan assassination plot on a back-country road—and, worse still in the eyes of some Mississippians, talking to the "Federal Bureau of Integration."

But what had he said? Members of the defense battery leaped to their feet demanding a copy of Barnette's statement. Miss Carter turned them down on that. But she upheld the defense when it objected to any further testimony about the confession as hearsay, since Barnette—arrested and scheduled for his own preliminary hearing in Louisiana—was not present. And there she held fast, even when Owen read her a Supreme Court decision upholding the use of hearsay evidence before a grand jury in the income-tax case against gambler Frank Costello.

Thunderstruck, Owen won a recess so he could call acting Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach for instructions. The Justice Department's official phrase for the ruling was "totally without precedent;" unofficially, one source called it "incredible." It left the Justice command with only one recourse: to abandon the preliminary hearing entirely and take its case to a Federal grand jury (which had examined the evidence once—before Barnette's statement—and refused, reportedly by a single vote, to return indictments).

And so it played. "We will simply not produce any more evidence," Owen told Miss Carter when the hearing reconvened. With that, Miss Carter dismissed the charges, freed the nineteen, and ordered their bail—a total of nearly $100,000—refunded. Next day in Biloxi, at the government's request, U.S. Commissioner Verta Lee Swetman freed a twentieth defendant. And that left only Barnette still nominally charged; he was free on $5,000 bail.

Anti-Klan Speeches: The nineteen were jubilant. Sheriff Rainey and Deputy Price had returned to duty as quickly as they could post bail the day of their arrests, smiling, bantering, shaking hands with well-wishers; their chief counsel, Laurel Weir, talked of raising a defense fund out of public donations. But not everyone seemed to wish them well. Down home in Philadelphia, Miss., the preachers—breaking a long silence—had begun talking about law and order and justice. During the week, Rainey and Price turned up at the Mississippi Sheriff's Association convention in Jackson, heard a fresh round of anti-Klan speeches—and watched the sheriffs pass a resolution praising J. Edgar Hoover.

But now, the ex-defendants left court in a glow of vindication. Never mind that the government planned to press its case before the grand jury; Miss Carter's ruling, the fourteen defense lawyers said in a joint statement, was tantamount to a finding of "not guilty" in a prosecution forced on the President and the FBI by Martin Luther King Jr. Never mind, too, the little knot of demonstrators—James Chaney's weeping mother among them—outside the courthouse, or the Negro woman who swooned to the sidewalk moaning, "Jesus, Jesus, no!" The charges were lifted; while some of the nineteen retired to the Davis Grill across the street, Rainey and Price handshook their way through a sidewalk crowd, and a Meridian cop drawled, "Ole Rainey could be elected governor now."

Ku Klux Klan's White Knights

They Practice a Mississippi Brand of Klansmanship

From every corner of Mississippi they came, in pickups and jalopies and shiny big cars, churning up swirls of brick-red dust on the normally deserted web of backwoods roads in Simpson County. Security was even tighter than usual; invitation was by whisper only, and the pilgrims had to pass through four ranks of guards posted at checkpoints up to 15 miles from the meeting place—a clearing hidden deep in 10,000 acres of piney woods. There were no

Don Sturkey

Klandestine in Carolina

burning crosses to light their way, no bedsheets to identify their order. The heat was on the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan—the newest and meanest of a bewildering assortment of pretenders to the century-old Invisible Empire—and the White Knights knew it.

There was, by one solid account, a crisis air about the 300-plus Klan insiders meeting in the woods that Sunday early last month. The FBI was gradually tightening the screws; its evidence had figured in more than two dozen arrests for acts of racial terrorism and intimidation, and its agents wouldn't stop nosing around in the civil-rights murders up near Philadelphia. Worse still, at the behest of segregationist Gov. Paul Johnson, even Mississippi's own highway patrol had sacked two Klan infiltrators and added its weight to the FBI pressure. They'd have to talk to Ole Paul about that. Meanwhile, there was nothing to do but continue a month-old moratorium on the worst of the violence—the killings, the church-burnings, the bombings—until the heat died down.

It didn't. Barely a month later, the FBI rounded up its 21 suspects in the Philadelphia murder case—Meridian's Exalted Cyclops and several other Klansmen among them—and laid the triple-lynching to a Klan-led conspiracy. Once again in its long, ugly history, the Klan's name loomed in black headlines. Once again, the old visions danced in the national imagination: the spectral figures in white robes and hoods, the torchlight rallies, the fiery crosses.

Klanguage: But this time the vision missed the mark. Mississippi's estimated 3,000 to 4,000 White Knights have much in common with the dozen or more major competing Klans now active in the South. They share the same fanciful titles, the same taste for alliterative Klanguage, the same wide-ranging bigotries (not only against Negroes but, according to a Mississippi recruiting leaflet, against "Jews ... Papists ... Turks, Mongols, Tartars, Orientals ... [and] any other person whose native background or culture is foreign to the Anglo-Saxon system of government ...").

But the Mississippi Klan has an all-business turn of mind; it has no taste for bedsheets or public Konclaves, and, during the peak months of last summer's civil-rights campaign, Klan-style night riders burned more churches than crosses in Mississippi. The White Knights are a home-grown Mississippi product, barely ten months old, and their brand of Klansmanship is custom-tailored to suit a deep, dark strain in the Mississippi soul. This Klan is tough. It is insular. It is more secretive than most; its suspected state leader, a small-town pinball-machine man, is so reluctant a Dragon that he denies being head man. For some of its members, indeed, the Klan is hardly more than a name and an organizational convenience for vigilante activities of the sort that have always scarred Mississippi history.

Through most of the state's history, in fact, even the deepest-dyed-in-the-woolhat segregationists felt safe without a Klan; in a state so monolithic from the governor's office down in its dedication to preserving the color line, who needed bedsheets? Even in the bitter Reconstruction days after the Klan was

Here are Twenty Reasons WHY you should, if qualified, join, aid and support the White Knights of the KU KLUX KLAN of Mississippi:

1. Because it is a Christian, fraternal and benevolent organization.
2. Because it is a democratic organization, governed by its members.
3. Because it is a dedicated and just organization.
4. Because it is a working organization which not only talks but ACTS.
12. Because the KKK has twice saved this nation from destruction as history clearly records.
13. Because there comes a time in the life of every man when he has to choose between the right or wrong side of life.
14. Because there are today many alien forces entering the United

White Knights leaflet: No Negroes, Jews, Catholics, Turks, Mongols, Tartars, Orientals, or foreigners need apply

born in Pulaski, Tenn. (and christened with a corruption of the Greek word kyklos, or circle), the Invisible Empire found fewer subjects in Mississippi than in her sister Deep South states. So did the leaders of the great Klan revival of the 1920s, when the KKK enlisted perhaps 4 million members on both sides of the Mason-Dixon line and controlled political offices in several states. Though splintered, bickersome, and unsheeted by a succession of state anti-masking laws, the Klans stirred to new life after the 1954 Supreme Court desegregation decision. But once again, Mississippi denied it a toehold; while bitter-enders elsewhere turned to the Klans, Mississippians united behind an intransigent state government and joined the fledgling white Citizens Councils.

Beachhead: Only when its white-collar guardians failed to hold the line against the inexorable advance of integration did Mississippi diehards turn in any real numbers to the white-sheeted apostles of the Klan. First, in July 1963, came the tough, Louisiana-based Original Ku Klux Klan, proselytizing most effectively in bellicose Southwest Mississippi. Its beachhead was partly preempted, in turn, by the South-wide United Klans of America, Inc., Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, the biggest of all the Klans with 10,000 members. One night last spring, the United flexed its muscles, burning crosses in 64 of Mississippi's 82 counties; in May, it brought Imperial Wizard Bobby Shelton over from Tuscaloosa, Ala., for a rally at gritty McComb—the state's first public Klan gathering in memory.

But by then, the White Knights had ridden into the lists to compete for members—and ultimately to eclipse its rivals. Some Klan leaders were irked at the fat cut of local dues siphoned off by the out-of-state headquarters of the United and the Originals. Some found Shelton's United too tepid, besides. Its talk is tough, and two of its members were tried (and acquitted) this year in the shotgun murder of Negro educator Lemuel Penn near Athens, Ga. But the United is the most public—and the most public-relations-minded—of all the major Klans; it favors open, family-plan rallies, attended even by pre-school toddlers. Moreover, Mississippi was still Mississippi, distrustful of strangers.

The dissidents met last February in Brookhaven, formed the Mississippi-only White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and started recruiting. They papered the state with leaflets full of Armageddon-tinged warnings about the "Jew-Communist" civil-rights movement and the scarcely veiled rhetoric of violence. "The issue is clearly one of personal, physical SELF-DEFENSE or DEATH for the American Anglo-Saxons," said one broadside, posted—among other places—on the bulletin board in Philadelphia's Neshoba County courthouse.

Fueled by such heady talk, the White Knights built on a modest foundation—some 480 members by spring—to its present strength, eight to ten times the size of the straggling remnants of the United. At the same time, the equally strident Americans for the Preservation of the White Race started signing up recruits. The growth of both groups paralleled the rise in integrationist pressures on Mississippi: the summer student "invasion," the passage of the Civil Rights Act, the court-ordered school integration this fall. And it was accompanied by a rising tide of terrorism.

Newsweek—Karl Fleming

Georgia rally: Toddlers, too

Warning: The Klans have been a mounting problem in other states as well. But their aggregate size—under 20,000 members by solid estimates—has been held in check by their own bad press, by Dixie's growing acceptance of the inevitability of integration, and by stern control measures. In North Carolina, Klansmen threatened businessmen sponsoring integrated Christmas parades scheduled for last week in two towns. When he got wind of the threats, moderate Gov. Terry Sanford rushed out a warning: "I would urge all members of the KKK to read the Christmas story and the message of goodwill to all men contained in the Bible. In the meantime, I am instructing the State Highway Patrol to provide all aid necessary . . . If there are illegal acts on the part of the Ku Klux Klan, they will be prosecuted." There was no trouble.

Mississippi has learned that lesson well this year. Governor Johnson and other officials mounted an anti-Klan campaign by public and private means; at one point, the governor quietly asked the state's top Masonic leaders to counsel their brother Masons not to join, and Attorney General Joe T. Patterson warned last week's Mississippi Sheriffs Association convention against being made "captive" by groups like the KKK.

But the heaviest pressure has come from the FBI. In the wake of the Philadelphia murders, Hoover opened a full-time Jackson office, called in able veteran Roy K. Moore, 50, to head it, and put up to 150 agents at a time on the Mississippi racial beat. Moore's men set up a full-time Klan division; in the space of a few months, the bureau has effectively infiltrated the White Knights. "A hell of a lot of the Klan people are now specifically known, name by name," a Justice Department official says—and that list was the starting point in the lynch investigation. The Klan, indeed, can scarcely take a turn without an FBI man hearing about it. Even the top-secret November session in the Simpson County woods had two uninvited guests: a pair of Feds dressed as hunters who slipped the guard and looked in on the meeting.

INVESTIGATIONS:

Jenkins in January

From the start of the Bobby Baker investigation the Senate Rules Committee has imposed sensitive limits on the inquiry. "We're not," said chairman B. Everett Jordan early in the year, "investigating senators." And the Democratic majority shied away from other tender areas. They adamantly refused to subpoena Walter Jenkins—when he occupied a corner office at the White House as Lyndon B. Johnson's right hand. But Jenkins' status changed, and last week so did the committee's attitude. It decided that Walter Jenkins—disgraced, ill, and jobless since his arrest on a morals charge last October—should be called to testify.

With this reversal the committee wound up a two-week round of hearings in its revived study of Robert G. Baker, the onetime page boy who rolled up a private fortune while secretary to the Senate majority. The decision to seek testimony from Jenkins was unexplained—and it was a long time coming.

A full year ago, the committee's star informant against Baker—Maryland insurance man Don B. Reynolds—publicly charged that Walter Jenkins made him buy $1,208 worth of unwanted advertising time from the Johnson family's Austin television station—as a kickback, Reynolds said, on a big life-insurance premium Lyndon Johnson had paid to Reynolds. Jenkins denied the charge in a written statement to the committee. At the time, despite Republican demands that Jenkins appear in person, Senator Jordan of North Carolina and his fellow Democrats saw no need for prying further into his story.

'Depressive Reaction': Now, Jordan announced, Jenkins would be "subpoenaed at an appropriate time" when the hearings resume in January. Jordan added that Jenkins was not called this month because a physician, Dr. Leon Yochelson, reported him in a "depressive reaction of the utmost gravity" that could be complicated by "situations of stress." Last week the former Johnson aide, responding to treatment, according to Yochelson, was on a brief golfing vacation with his wife at the Dorado Beach Hotel in Puerto Rico. Would he appear as a witness? Jenkins said only: "I'll see, after my stay here."

The committee's about-face on Jenkins was the week's big surprise. The hearings, not surprisingly, resolved no basic questions about Bobby Baker's activities. But witnesses did add new detail to the ever-growing Baedeker of Washington's world of wheeling and dealing. For instance:

■ Comptroller of the Currency James J. Saxon testified that, despite its generosity to Baker, the D.C. National Bank in Washington got no help from Baker when it was seeking a national charter from Saxon's office. The bank's organizers gave Bobby Baker an inside track on initial stock purchases. Nonetheless, Saxon told the committee the Washington bank would be "merged out of existence." He didn't spell out all his reasons publicly but later told NEWSWEEK that the D.C. bank, which had granted Baker a loan of $125,000 in 1963 secured only by his house, had made a new loan to him "within the past few months." "It was a shock to me," said Saxon, who didn't complain about "the collectibility of the Baker loan" but about the "suitability," he said.

Associated Press

Jenkins: Golfing in San Juan

■ Maywood Boggs, vice president of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders, Forgers, and Helpers, AFL-CIO, testified that he bought $2,300 worth of Mortgage Guarantee Insurance Co. stock on Bobby Baker's recommendation in 1959 and sold it back to him for $4,600 a year later, when the stock's market value was about $32,000. "Utter stupidity" was the way Boggs described his own generosity—all the while denying that Baker helped get the FHA to approve financing a union-sponsored retirement home in Pascagoula, Miss.

■ Washington lobbyist Wayne L. Bromley, a friend of Baker's, remained silent before the committee—on constitutional grounds. But investigators testified to his unsworn story about a $5,000 check he had received as a fee for helping a California banker get a Federal charter approved by the U.S. Currency Comptroller. Bromley, according to them, said Bobby Baker had endorsed the check—from organizers of the Redwood National Bank of San Rafael, Calif.—and cashed it only so Bromley's wife would not "know about the money." Later Currency Comptroller Saxon denied Baker had intervened in the San Rafael bank's charter application. Then Saxon announced he had just demanded the resignations of [illegible] officials who had paid the check to Baker's friend Bromley. He got them.

Sharp Conflict: Before recessing, the committee agreed to ask the Justice Department to help evaluate the credibility of Reynolds, whose stories have conflicted sharply with testimony by a variety of witnesses. It was Reynolds' story that he was the bagman in a $25,000 political kickback from former Democratic Treasurer Matthew McCloskey to Bobby Baker that prompted the resumption of the Rules Committee hearings. McCloskey flatly disputed Reynolds, and the conflicting stories, at the recess, were left unresolved.

So were persistent rumors that party girls linked to Baker had been used to influence government actions. Chairman Jordan announced that the committee had decided not to investigate at least one party girl—Elly Rometsch—or reports of Democrats shaking down corporations for donations.

GOP committee members were "happy" with the decisions, Jordan amiably reported. But he was promptly corrected by Kentucky's GOP Sen. John Sherman Cooper—the only Republican present when the committee acted. "I," Cooper said, "was not happy."

DEFENSE:

Mac the Knife

Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara seems to dote on a steady diet of sacred cows. Just three weeks after he streamlined the once sacrosanct inventory of surplus shipyards and military bases, McNamara took on two of the most powerful lobbies on Capitol Hill: the Reserve Officers Association and the National Guard, curators of the hoary—and expensive—concept of a vast citizens' army. At a weekend press con-

January 13, 1965

Lolis Elie, Esq.
Collins, Douglas & Elie
2211 Dryades Street
New Orleans, La.

Dear Lolis:

This is to confirm the Elie - Dreyfus - Rubin telephone conference of last night.

I would appreciate your looking into the following matter at your earliest convenience:

(1) The enclosed KKK letter contains a clear threat ("Those who do attend this meeting will be tagged as intergrationists and will be delt with accordingly by the Knights of the KU KLUX KLAN."); is it actionable? Can we connect the rights guaranteed under the First Amendment (Peaceable Assembly) and those under the Fourteenth (as Leonard said, what is liberty if not freedom from this sort of intimidation?)? Can we bring suit under any of the Civil Rights provisions?

(2) Can we bring suit as an organization, LCLU vs. KKK? New York will want a voice in this.

I may be able to produce an LCLU member who (a) lives in Bogalusa, (b) had the enclosed left on his lawn at night by parties unknown, and (b) had planned to attend the Brooks Hayes meeting which was called off. (I'm in touch with him at present, but we've got to make sure that anyone who approaches him, including by mail, uses the utmost discretion. He's confined to a wheelchair and is, in Bogalusa, pathetically vulnerable to KKK reprisals. He's also a very courageous man, and has gone up against the Klan publicly.)

The enclosed KKK letter is the one which was left on his lawn.

If it is feasible, I should like this to be an LCLU case -- for selfish, organizational reasons. In addition, I should not like to have our member bring the action; it will be bad enoughh producing him as a witness.

Best,

Steven H. Rubin, President

Bogalusa

PUBLISHED BY THE ORIGINAL KU KLUX KLAN OF LOUISIANA

On Sunday, December 27, 1964, the Bogalusa Daily News announced that a "renowned layman" Brooks Hayes, is to speak in Bogalusa, on January 7, 1965. His subject will be better community relations. The Bogalusa Daily News stated,

> " a group of civic, religious and business leaders of Bogalusa have invited Hayes to speak here at the St. Matthew's Episcopal Church Parish House. Due to limited seating facilities, the meeting will be by invitation."

The Daily News did not tell you the whole true story concering this meeting and it is the purpose of this leaflet to give you the full story concerning this meeting.

In the first place, this meeting of January 7, 1965, is to be an intergrated meeting. The meeting was arranged by Bascom D. Talley, Jr., the local public or community relations commissioner who is holding this job by appointment of Lyndon B. Johnson under the infamous civil rights act. Bascom D. Talley formed a committee to help shoulder the responsibility of this meeting. This committee of intergration minded people are the group of "civic, religious and business leaders" referred to by the Daily News. Mr. Talley's committee is composed of Bruce H. Shepherd, Minister of the St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, Vertrees Young, a member of the Episcopal Church, Reverend Jerry Chance, Minister of the Main Street Baptist Church, Reverend Paul G. Gillespie, Minister of the Memorial Baptist Church, Reverend James T. Harris, Minister of the Methodist Church, Reverend Bob Lambright whose similar escapades have made him a Minister without a church, Ralph Blumberg, owner and operator of the radio station WBOX, and, of course, Lou Major, Mr. Talley's favorite puppet.

In the second place, this intergrated meeting is for the sole purpose of planning the intergration of your Church, Schools, Businesses, Restaurants, Hotels, Motels, etc, and those who will receive invitations to the January 7th. meeting will be people whoBascom D. Talley hopes that Brooks Hayes can convince that they should change their social and religious lives, and that in turn will try to convince you that you should help intergration by sitting in Church with the black man, hiring more of them in your businesses, serving and eating with them in your cafes, and allowing your children to sit by filty, runny-nosed, ragged, ugly little niggers in your public schools.

In the third place, the Bogalusa Daily News did not tell you the whole story about Brooks Hayes. He is a traitor to the South. He assisted Sherman Adams draw the order to send Federal Troops into his own State of Arkansas, to put nine little niggers into white schools, the result of which was spending $5,000,000 of the taxpayers money as well as the beating and jailing of hundreds of white citizens.

As a result of Hayes' intergration efforts, he was defeated in his efforts for re-election to Congress by a political unknown, Dr. Dale Alford. Brooks Hayes is now a member of the Civil Rights Community Relations Committee and he is paid a lucrative salary by the Federal Government to make talks such as he is scheduled to make in Bogalusa, on January 7th., 1965.

The Ku Klux Kan is strongly organized in Bogalusa and throughout Washington and St. Tammany Parishes. Being a secret organization, we have KLAN members in every conceivable business in this area. We will know the names of all who are invited to the Brooks Hayes meeting and we will know who did and did not attend this meeting. Accordingly, we take this means to urge all of you to refrain from attending this meeting. Those who do attend this meeting will be tagged as intergrationists and will be delt with accordingly by the Knights of the KU KLUX KLAN.

There is in Bogalusa a man named Talley, who with a hand picked committee has planned an intergrated rally;
This man would love the nigger,
in order to grow financially bigger;
He and his committee have come up with an intergration plan, which is bitterly opposed by the KU KLUX KLAN;
Talley has attended Nigger Churches to sing,
this was done to please Martin Luther King;
While Talley sings with his nigger group,
the KU KLUX KLAN will more Knights recruit;
Soon Talley and his committee will know who is boss, as the KU KLUX KLAN lights the fiery cross.

XERO COPY
XERO COPY
XERO COPY
XERO COPY

The Saturday Evening Post · January 30, 1965 · 25c

POST

34F

HOW WE'LL REBUILD THE G.O.P.
BY DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

THE GIRL WHO WROTE 'SEX AND THE SINGLE GIRL'

GERM WARFARE □ THE FAKE DOCTOR □ KANGAROO STEW

'The National Committee, of course, has no monopoly on brains in the Party.'

For example, where should the leadership reside when our Party does not control the Presidency? Obviously, the leaders of our Party in both houses of Congress will develop alternatives to Democratic plans and programs and will be responsible for the tactics of opposition—but what should be the role of the Republican National Committee? Should it be the body for coordinating overall Party policy—or should it be more of a civil-service organization staffed by career specialists in various fields of political science, while a separate, high-level body, broadly representative of the entire Party, formulates policies and acts as spokesman on the national level?

On these points, almost every individual who has had experience in government will have his own ideas, some of which may seem radical. For example, I, personally, long have held the view that in the leadership echelon of the Republican National Committee there should be two individuals, each responsible for distinctly separate functions. To one I would assign responsibility for all of the work of organization and administration of every kind; his duty would be to perfect the machinery of the Party and keep it working.

The other would have the task of acquainting himself with the consensus of Republican thinking and would be sort of an evangelist, traveling the land up and down and across, providing the public with a correct picture of the Party's policies and programs and seeking recruits to carry them forward. He would, of course, be assisted by a strong and broadly based Advisory Committee.

Each of these men would, in my view, have a full and highly important job. Together they could do much to strengthen and inspire us.

In any event, the country needs a healthy Republican Party—and never more than in the years immediately ahead. Apparently the current Administration intends to plunge ahead with its many experimental domestic plans and programs. And here is something which I hope will be well understood: As Americans first, Republicans do not quarrel with the aims of some of these programs; with others, we do.

Believing that government must have a heart as well as a head, Republicans have pioneered solutions to many of the country's problems. For example, a Republican administration initiated a medical plan for the care of the aged—admittedly not yet perfected, but one which does not introduce compulsion. We led in developing a program of "defense education" to meet pressing national needs without overpowering local responsibility and authority. Republicans proposed methods for bettering the situation of farmers—without diminishing their freedom—and launched what now is known as the Food for Peace program to utilize portions of our farm surpluses to feed hungry peoples abroad. Republicans developed forward-looking plans for conserving our natural resources and for protecting the beauty of our land for enjoyment of present and future generations. We Republicans have striven to promote better cooperation among labor, capital and management to increase the nation's productivity and well-being. In 1954 we secured what was then the greatest tax reduction in history, and we consistently have fought to keep our fiscal affairs and our currency sound for the benefit of all.

Ours is a proud record: In countless ways over the past century, Republicans have proved their dedication to human welfare.

In contrast, I see a real danger in some Administration welfare plans because they are programs imposed from the top down, usually well lubricated with subsidy from the Federal treasury. They tend to subordinate the individual citizen and groups of citizens to Federal regulation. This is just the opposite of the Republican approach. We belive in programs that start with the individual, the community, and the state and build toward the top, with responsibilities and costs shared all the way.

For example, we are convinced that it would be dangerous to our free system should educational systems, the fountainhead of our democracy, ever come under Federal control. Certainly Federal aid should be given, when and where necessary to maintain adequate educational opportunity, but never in a form that remotely implies Federal control of teachers or the teaching process. This peril is not as remote as we might think. Currently, most of our great universities obtain much of their money for research from government contracts. There were cases some two years ago, I have been told, when misguided Federal bureaucrats threatened universities with withdrawal of this or that contract unless certain professors, opposing governmental plans, were "shut up."

The present Administration evidences a considerable salesmanship in grouping its programs under appealing labels, such as "War on Poverty" or "Great Society," and implying that anyone who finds fault with the proposed methods is a reactionary who would ignore the poor and oppose all progress.

I am among the first to admit that our society, for all of its accomplishments, has serious shortcomings. Some, such as persistent unemployment and pockets of poverty side by side with economic expansion and rising standards of living, may seem baffling. However, I have no doubt that as we meet the urgent needs of the present, these troubles eventually will yield to education, training and a climate of opportunity.

Some of our problems are shameful, such as the violence, terror, delinquency, and murder which have plagued our cities in recent years. Here again, we Republicans emphasize that the primary responsibility for maintaining order remains with communities and states as their duty under the Constitution. And, as those units of self-government are closest to these situations, we can hope for fair, lasting solutions only if they approach their responsibilities in a true American spirit. In the struggle for civil rights we have seen far too much disrespect for the law. But we are making progress and will make more as we enforce the law and build a moral climate in which a majority of people in all areas of our society simply will not permit inequalities and racist fanaticism to exist.

In seeking answers to any of our problems, let us not, above all, discard the common-sense ideals and methods which have proved themselves throughout our national history and embark, as recent Democratic administrations seemingly have been determined to do, on risky, untried theories. A number of those theoretical programs, whether they succeed or fail, are bound to have at least one result—the concentration of more power in Federal hands. Also, just as sure as the sun rises in the East and sets in the West, current fiscal policies are piling up deep trouble for the nation in the future. Deficit spending has not been stopped. The fire of inflation is thus being fueled, threatening the value of our currency. The adverse balance of payments, causing a steady leakage of our gold reserve, ultimately could bring great difficulty for the dollar on a global scale. It is a Republican duty constantly to remind the country that it is time we discipline ourselves, hold expenditures below income except in emergencies, and adopt policies which eliminate adverse balance of payments.

However, my purpose here is not to lay out an indictment against Democratic policies. Rather, I want to emphasize the need—in the interest of our country—for the Republican Party quickly to build its strength as an effective "loyal opposition," and, so doing, become the majority party at an early date.

We must understand that failure to do so creates a danger that is quite real, and no mere partisan alarm. The danger is not that we will lose our liberties by any one accretion of Federal power, or any one deficit, or any one threat to a business firm by Federal bureaucrats. Rather the hazard is that our incentives and mechanisms to practice self-government gradually will slip through our fingers by a lack of vigilance—until one day we could discover it is too late. This can never occur as long as we maintain a vigorous, healthy, two-party system.

National Committee boss Burch.

Thoughtful Americans of either political persuasion will rest easier, I believe, if they know that a strong and alert opposition constantly is watching the majority, seeing that voters hear both sides of every issue, eager to bring to light any evidences of misgovernment or corruption. Do you suppose, for example, that under a one-party system the Bobby Baker case would have seen the light of day? Perhaps so—perhaps not. There always exists a strong human temptation for the party in power, if not to condone, at least to sweep such embarrassing incidents under the rug. As it is, the public certainly has the feeling that up to the time of the election the Baker case had not been thoroughly investigated.

Here is the challenge, perhaps the greatest the Republican Party has faced since the Civil War: Can we Republicans put aside our differences and agree on a plan for increasing the strength and influence of our Party? I believe we can give a positive response. We have a clear opportunity, by building upon a responsible, forward-looking program, to develop plans and leadership behind which the Party can, by action and example, enlist not only confirmed Republicans but thoughtful independents and discerning Democrats as well. That, I am convinced, is the way we can best serve America. □

Imperial Wizard
Robert Shelton, the top Klansman, declaims at cross burning.

THE KU KLUX KLAN is moving boldly into the open in a last-ditch fight against integration.

'WE GOT NOTHING TO HIDE'

By HAROLD H. MARTIN and KENNETH FAIRLY

Photographs by Lynn Pelham

One starlit evening not long ago, in a tobacco patch near the little town of Hemingway, S.C., 29 robed and hooded men and women gathered in a circle around a 50-foot black-gum cross that had been wrapped in burlap and soaked in crankcase oil. Solemnly they set the towering shaft ablaze and marched around it singing, as a record player hitched up to a loudspeaker boomed into the darkness the opening strains of 'The Old Rugged Cross.' Suddenly the needle stuck, and over the dark woods surrounding the little field, the speaker repeated over and over the phrase that ends the first line of the song: ". . . and shame"—"and shame"—"and shame."

If the Klansmen who set the cross aflame felt any shame at this use of the symbol of Christian brotherhood to publicize an organization which thrives on racial hatred, they gave no sign of it. There was nothing clandestine about the meeting. On the afternoon of the meeting, in the Masonic Hall in Hemingway, ladies of the Klan sold barbecue, slaw, cake and soda pop, and passed out literature extolling the noble purposes of the order.

At the rally itself, on a flatbed truck

In rural South Carolina, the harangue goes on as the fire dwindles. Men in colors are Klan officials.

continued

None of the Dragons, Titans or Exalted Cyclopses wore masks.

Shelton unpacks his Imperial Wizard's robes from the trunk of his automobile and dresses for a rally in Hemingway, S.C.

decorated with Confederate and American flags, the assembled Dragons, Titans and Exalted Cyclopses of the two Carolinas sat proudly in their emerald, white and crimson robes, waiting for "His Lordship," one Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, Imperial Wizard of the United Klans of America, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., to bring them the true and lively word. None wore a mask. "We want you to see our faces," bellowed Robert Scoggins, the Grand Dragon of South Carolina, to the crowd of some 800 men, women and barefoot children who stood before the speakers' platform in the glare of the burning cross. "We want you to know who we are and what we are doing. We got nothing to hide."

As Scoggins finished his brief welcome, a Klansman dressed in a shining black military helmet, a gray-green uniform, and black paratrooper boots with white laces, swaggered back and forth across the platform, staring stonily at the crowd. He and a tall, slack-jawed companion with captain's bars on his shoulders were the "Security Guard." They were there to silence hecklers. A German reporter from West Berlin looked curiously at these glowering storm troopers. "I have seen such men before," he said.

The strutting guards, the unmasked Klansmen, the public rally—all were evidence of the Klan's bold resurgence both in numbers and in spirit. The revival was furtive at first. In 1954, when the Supreme Court handed down its school decision, the fragments of the old Klan of the 1940's began quietly to regroup. In the upper rooms of old buildings on the side streets of the bigger towns, in cheap motels and highway restaurants, in abandoned barns and farmhouses deep in the woods, the "sacred altars" were set up. On them were placed the American flag, a sword, and a Bible open at the 12th chapter of Romans—St. Paul's eloquent exhortation to Godly conduct. In the glow of an electrically lighted cross, red-necked "Aliens" knelt to mumble the old Klan oath, swearing to "dedicate heart, mind and body to the preservation of Christian civilization," and to carry with them to their graves the secrets of the order. Sometimes identifying their groups as hunting-and-fishing clubs or county-improvement associations, the Klansmen collected arms and manufactured their own ammunition. Under the tutelage of ex-G.I.'s, they practiced judo and karate and crawled through swamps on "maneuvers," getting ready for the inevitable day when the Jews and the Communists would give the signal and the Negroes would rise to destroy the white race in the South.

Passage of the Civil Rights Bill in June of 1964 brought the Klan boldly into the open. All over the South crosses blazed at public rallies. Fierce-eyed preachers, most of them self-ordained, began to shout in public the twisted doctrine they had proclaimed in the secrecy of the Klaverns—that Jesus Christ was not a Jew, that the Pope of Rome was anti-Christ, that the Negro was a beast who must be destroyed. "Oh, God," prayed one, "please put grace and grit into the white race and let us wipe out this black-ape race before it is too late."

The ignorant and frightened men and women who join the Klan claim to be uplifted by this savage doctrine. To them the Klan is a religion, a holy crusade. In North Carolina, a robed Klansman told reporters: "I feel nearer to God at a rally than at any other time. When I put on this robe it's a grand feeling. It's white—as pure as Jesus Christ. The cross burning is not to make people stand in fear. The cross is what Christ died on."

"It's better than going to church," a woman member said.

At Hemingway, after a robed Klan chaplain known as "The Kludd" had prayed long and fervently for the Lord to bless the Klan and all its works, Shelton rose to speak. He is a tall, slender, hollow-cheeked man with dark, lifeless eyes, and even in his robes of royal purple topped by a gilded cape and hood, he looked withdrawn and wary—"like a man who thinks he is about to be shot at," an Alabama newspaperman said.

His voice was toneless, his theme was the same old Klan refrain. Every patriotic white, Anglo-Saxon Protestant must be ready to give his life if need be to save the purity of his race. But there must be no violence. All must be accomplished by peaceful means—by the boycott and the ballot. Occasionally from the crowd came a deep "Amen" and a scattering of applause.

Shelton told a joke. "You know how they fin'ly found them three boys that was buried in that dam near Philadelphia, Mississippi?" he asked. "The Federal Bureau of Integration didn't find them boys. The mailman found them. He walked by there delivering welfare checks, and the nigger reached up to get his." The crowd roared with laughter and delight.

Shelton droned on, paying his disrespects to the Supreme Court, to the traitors who would modify the immigration laws, to "Light Bulb" Johnson and "Bobby Sox" Kennedy and "Martin Luther Coon." He finished, took off his robes, folded them neatly and put them in the back of his car. Then, dressed in a gray suit and dark red tie, he moved about among the crowd, chatting and shaking hands while the loudspeaker played When They Ring Those Golden Bells. Shelton's mood was somber. The presence of so many reporters and cameramen apparently had inhibited him, causing him to tone down his speech. The usual taking of a collection had been omitted, presumably because the sight of the plastic buckets filled with dollar bills coming back up to the platform might give the wrong impression. He seemed to be trying to appeal to a wider audience than the fewer than 1,000 who had come out to hear him. To reporters he was seeking to present the Klan as a peace-loving organization of patriots.

He had brought with him from Tuscaloosa the ancient epic of the silent-movie days, D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation. He hadn't felt it wise to show it, though he finds it his most effective recruiting device, for it extols the glories of the Klan of Reconstruction days, and has for its dramatic climax the Klan's pursuit and punishment of a Negro rapist and murderer. "I killed niggers all night in my sleep after I saw that thing," said a Klansman who had seen the film previously.

By moonrise the flaming cross was sputtering out. The loudspeaker was softly droning Abide With Me. Shelton, his brow furrowed, climbed into his white Pontiac Grand Prix and set out on the long drive to Bastrop, La., and another Klan rally.

Earlier, on the 600-mile drive to South Carolina from his headquarters in Tuscaloosa, Shelton had talked at length with a Post reporter. Weighing his words, he had painted a picture of the Klan as an organization opposed to all lawlessness but determined to save the country from the enemies who would betray it. "I don't hate the nigra," he said. "I feel sorry for him. He's been used as a tool by the forces that are trying to take over this country. And the only thing I see to do is bring the old World War II fleet out of mothballs and ship every one of them back to Africa. That would be a peaceful solution, wouldn't it?"

Shelton had sketchily traced his own career. He was 35 years old, he said. His father was a retired Tuscaloosa grocer and a colonel on Governor Wallace's staff. He had gone to Tuscaloosa High School and then briefly to the University of Alabama, hoping to study law. But there hadn't been enough money, even though while in school he worked the evening shift at the B. F. Goodrich plant, making tires. His granddaddy and his father before him had been Klansmen, but he himself hadn't thought much about the Klan until he went into the Air Force in 1947. They sent him to Germany, and there he saw white German girls going about with Negro soldiers. He couldn't stand the thought of that happening in this country, he said, and when he got out of the service and went back to Goodrich to work, he started looking around for a Klan to join.

"I just happened to stumble on a Klavern meeting," he said, "and there was a man there who claimed to be a preacher, though he said some things that a preacher ought not to say, and I found out later he had never been ordained in any church." Whatever the preacher said, Shelton was not so offended that he abandoned his idea of becoming an active Klansman.

"I decided to join the Klan and work to try to better it," he said. "I didn't go for that violent stuff. It was against my training. I was brought up in a religious atmosphere. My daddy and granddaddy built the first Alberta City Methodist Church. My wife and my mother teach Sunday school there now, and my daddy is a member of the board of stewards."

Shelton, who had been promoted by Goodrich to a sales job that required him to travel the Southeastern States, soon got so engrossed in Klan work that Goodrich fired him. "They told me to quit the Klan or else, and I took the 'or else,'" he said.

He then operated his own tire-recapping business for a few years, but soon his Klan duties became so demanding that he decided to devote his full time to them. Now on salary, he will not say how much that salary is—"It ain't as much as Thurgood Marshall makes." But the United Klans' share of the $10 "klektoken," or initiation fee, and of the $12-a-year dues each Klansman pays, is apparently sufficient to pay Shelton and to maintain a handsome office in a somewhat shabby seven-story structure in downtown Tuscaloosa. It also provides funds for Shelton to travel about 120,000 miles a year, organizing new Klaverns throughout the South; to publish a Klan newspaper called The Fiery Cross; and to pay heavy lawyers' fees when one of his Klansmen goes into court. The United Klans' main income, he says, is from fees and assessments. No money comes from making and selling robes, a racket by which Klan leaders in the old days enriched themselves. "We look for widow ladies in various towns to make them for us," he said. "We are not in the robe business."

Shelton will not reveal the total membership of his organization, though he hints that it runs into "many thousands," with "many thousands more

Before the rally at Hemingway, South Carolina's Grand Dragon Robert Scoggins (left and below) supervises as Klansmen erect cross.

'When I put on this robe it's a grand feeling. It's white as Christ.'

who are sympathetic to us," and he claims to have active Klaverns in 39 states. Federal agents, who keep a close eye on Shelton and have planted informers in most of his Klaverns, know that Shelton is exaggerating the United Klans' strength when he speaks of "many thousands" of members. Reliable estimates place the present active membership at under 5,000, concentrated mainly in Georgia, Alabama, the Carolinas, Tennessee and Louisiana. Even this small membership, however, enables the United Klans to throw its weight around politically, particularly in rural counties, with a power that far exceeds its strength in numbers.

A law-enforcement officer, assigned to keep constant watch on the Klan, explains: "Suppose you have a race for sheriff or county commissioner in some country county where the civil-rights issue is hot. Klansmen will ride in from all over the South to burn a cross and hold a rally. Then they'll sneak around and put up a lot of little stickers—'The Ku Klux Klan is watching you.' The candidates get scared to death they'll lose the Klan vote, so they try to outdo each other in proving what true-blue Americans they are and how strong they are against the Negro. The fear of the Klan colors the whole election campaign, when the truth is the Klan couldn't deliver a hundred votes in the whole county."

Shelton favors this kind of political leverage. "Our weapon is the ballot and the boycott," he says. "You let a man who runs a little store know how you feel about a candidate, he pretty soon gets the idea he better see it the same way or he'll lose a lot of trade. Our women members do a lot of the political work for us. They baby-sit for folks who want to go to the courthouse to register, and they drive people to the polls on election day, and during a campaign they may go from house to house, passing out literature and talking for the candidates the Klan likes. We work down in the grass roots, and in a lot of counties we can elect just about whoever we want to. We don't have to say outright who we want elected, but the word gets around."

In areas where the Klan feels its strength, a Klan leader may campaign openly for a candidate, or the Klan may put up one of its own members. In Atlanta, for example, Calvin Craig, the United Klans' Grand Dragon for Georgia, ran for the state senate and loudly pledged his support to the Goldwater-Miller candidacy—a startling departure from the Klan's traditional antagonism toward Jews and Catholics. Craig lost his senate race in Atlanta, but the smaller cities and the rural counties, where many share the Klan's defiant attitude toward the Civil Rights Act and school desegregation, gave Goldwater a 94,000 majority and put Georgia in the Republican column for the first time in its history.

Far more dangerous than the Klan's power to influence politics by persuasion is its power to intimidate whole communities through acts of terrorism.

Robed Klansmen flank a helmeted member of the United Klans' burly "Security Guard," which deals with troublemakers.

Federal agents use harsh language when they read Shelton's pious utterances about his aversion to lawlessness. Federal agents know that violence in one form or another—from telephoned threats to arson, bombings, beatings and murder—often follows the formation of a strong Klavern.

In early July, 1961, at a meeting in Georgia, Shelton was elected Imperial Wizard of the United Klans, and some independent Georgia Klans which had been relatively inactive became part of that organization. Within a month, according to the files of both the Atlanta police and the Georgia attorney general's office, fired-up Klans were training members in the use of explosives. An ex-Navy frogman was the instructor, and a "training camp" was set up in rural Clayton County near Atlanta.

Before Shelton went into Mississippi early last spring to organize Klaverns there, Klan activity had been largely confined to those counties where an independent organization called the White Knights of the K.K.K. was forming—a group known to federal agents as the most furtive, vicious, and close-mouthed of the Klans. Although it operated in other areas of the state, its activities were concentrated in southwest Mississippi and along the Mississippi River, where it performed with considerable popular approval.

"What you are up against there is a conspiracy of silence on the part of a whole people," one federal investigator said. "Crimes are committed that are never reported in the press, never investigated by the local law. The victims, if they survive, are afraid to file a complaint. In the event an arrest is made and a man is brought to trial, getting a conviction is almost impossible. But what else can you expect in a state where a judge, in the presence of several other men, told a sheriff: 'If you get into a drove of niggers and have to kill one of them, you might as well go on and kill them all. A dead nigger can't talk.'"

In this atmosphere of defiance Shelton easily formed Klaverns in the Natchez and McComb areas.

A rash of bombings of homes, churches, and places of business broke out in Mississippi in the summer of 1964 as college students and other civil-rights volunteers came into the state to assist Negroes in registering to vote. Among the houses bombed was that of Natchez Mayor John Nosser, who had offended Klansmen by promising Negroes equal protection under the law and the right to vote if qualified. As the frequency of the bombings increased, other political leaders were stirred to belated action. After the bombing of the Lexington newspaper office of Hazel Brannon Smith, Pulitzer prize winner and critic of the Klan, Mayor Allen C. Thompson of Jackson became the first Mississippi official to speak out against Klan violence. Though he did not denounce the Klan by name, he came out strongly against terrorism.

"Do not ever deceive yourself into thinking that these bombers, who do their cowardly work at night, will stop with your neighbor," he said. "Tomorrow it will be your home, your business, or even your family." He offered rewards and pledged police action. Two days later, Mississippi's segregationist governor, Paul B. Johnson Jr., announced that he was building up a force of state police to combat the growing violence in McComb and Natchez.

Soon state and county officers, with the cooperation of the FBI, had three men under arrest, charged with the bombing of two homes in McComb. One of them, a 25-year-old railway carman named Paul Dewey Wilson, was caught as he was hauling a small arsenal from his home to a remote farmhouse. In his possession were four high-powered rifles, a pistol, eight wooden clubs, a blackjack, brass knuckles, a hypodermic syringe—and a deputy sheriff's badge. In his pocket was his membership card in United Klans of America, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. It was signed by "Robert M. Shelton, Imperial Wizard, Tuscaloosa, Ala." Wilson also had a black leatherette apron and a black hood, the historic trappings of a Klan executioner.

Though law enforcement agencies have found it easy to penetrate the Klan with paid informers—"They are less clever than the Communists, and easier to infiltrate"—the presence of an informer does not mean that acts of terrorism can be forestalled. In their Klavern meetings the Klansmen are generally as closemouthed with each other as they are with outsiders. The "action groups" within the Klan, known variously as "Holy Terrors," "Knock-Off Squads," and "Killer Squads," range from three to a dozen men. Their identity may be known to other Klansmen—and to the FBI—but they lay their plans for lawless acts outside the Klavern meetings.

"We've learned not to discuss anything in a Klavern we wouldn't discuss on the courthouse square," one Exalted Cyclops told a Post reporter.

Many crimes committed by these terror squads are merely senseless acts of sadism. In Birmingham, for example, a Negro man walking home at night was caught, castrated, and warned that the same thing would happen to any Negro who tried to send his children to white schools. The victim of this mutilation was not married and had never taken part in any civil-rights action.

Occasionally federal agents, through informers, sense a growing restlessness in a Klan and anticipate an outbreak of violence, though they have no means of knowing what form it may take. When, for example, Lemuel Penn, a Negro educator from Washington, D.C., was killed last July while traveling through Athens, Ga., the FBI had only to go to its files and to the Athens police and sheriff's office to come up with the names of a dozen suspects. Both the Athens officers and the federal agents had been watching the Athens Klavern of the United Klans. They knew 80 percent of its members. They knew the location of the pegboard on which the pistol-toting Klansmen hung their weapons before entering the Klavern sanctum. They knew also that certain truculent members of the Klan had been riding about Athens at night carrying sawed-off shotguns, "keeping an eye on the niggers."

Twenty-six days after the killing, a Klansman named James S. Lackey made a confession after only 14 minutes of questioning. He described how he had driven alongside Penn's car while two other Klansmen, Cecil Myers and Joseph Sims, had fired into it with shotguns. At the trial before a jury in rural Madison County, where the killing had taken place, Lackey repudiated his confession, claiming it had been forced from him "under fears and threats." The jury found the accused not guilty.

Shelton's speeches often reflect Klan's warnings of a Communist-inspired Negro uprising.

Almost as discouraging to federal officers was the subsequent disposition of the cases growing out of the McComb bombings. Nine men, including Paul Dewey Wilson, the man with the black mask, pleaded either guilty or nolo contendere to charges they had bombed or conspired to bomb three Negro homes. Circuit-Court Judge W. H. Watkins imposed prison sentences and fines, and then, citing their "youth, good families," and the fact that they were "unduly provoked and undoubtedly ill advised," he suspended all fines and sentences and placed them on probation. All were identified by the FBI as Klansmen, probably belonging to a splinter Klan group at the time of the bombings. To investigators, six had admitted being Ku Klux Klansmen and had implicated the others as Klansmen. One said he belonged to the United Klans.

A month later J. Edgar Hoover, in an uncharacteristic outburst of anger, described this action as "scandalous," denounced "bleeding-heart judges," and charged that "all the lynchings and bombings of homes in the South" are the work of the members of the Ku Klux Klan and claimed the FBI "knows pretty well who they are." Shortly thereafter Mr. Hoover proved that this claim was not mere bombast. On December 4, his agents arrested 21 men, including two peace officers and a preacher, in connection with the killing of three civil-rights workers near Philadelphia, Miss., last June. According to the FBI, the killings were planned and executed by the Klan. J. Edgar Hoover described most as Klan members and sympathizers. Police investigators believe all were affiliated with the White Knights of the K.K.K.

The arrest of the two peace officers, Neshoba County Sheriff Lawrence A. Rainey and his chief deputy, Cecil Price, points up the problem the Department of Justice faces in investigating civil-rights cases in the South. In chasing down bank robbers and car thieves who cross state lines, local officers work hand in hand with FBI agents. In civil-rights matters, particularly when Klansmen are involved, they often not only refuse to cooperate but actually seek to hinder federal agents in tracking down the guilty.

Wherever the agents work, they, of course, soon discover which policemen, sheriffs, deputies and highway patrolmen are in league with the Klan, and the names of these men are immediately reported to higher authority. In Mississippi until recently this was useless. Lately, however, Gov. Paul Johnson has sought to purge his highway patrol of Klansmen, and two cities, Laurel and Meridian, now require that all their employees, including policemen, sign an oath that they belong to no "subversive" organization.

In Alabama, officers have been known to show a solicitude for bombers, arresting them on minor accusations—such as possessing explosives—before the FBI could bring graver charges against them. In Georgia, Klansmen are promptly fired from big city and state police forces. In North Carolina, Wizard

Even in Mississippi, groups of decent citizens are speaking out openly against the Klan.

Shelton has publicly appealed to law officers and other public officials to join his ranks, promising them super-secret new Klaverns in which they would be required to wear no robes, march in no parades, and endure the long Klan ritual only once a month instead of weekly.

Though most North Carolina peace officers have ignored Shelton's blandishments, his success at organizing regular Klaverns in the Tarheel State has startled federal officials. A little more than a year ago the Klan there was dead. It had been an object of derision since 1958, when a sometime preacher named the Reverend "Catfish" Cole attempted to hold a cross-burning in a cornfield near the little town of Maxton, an area heavily inhabited by Lumbee Indians. As the robed preacher began his invocation, there came a wild shouting from the surrounding woods and a band of Lumbees, some in war paint and feathers, swarmed into the clearing firing pistols and shotguns. Led by the Reverend Catfish, the assembled Klansmen hoisted their bed sheets up around their hips and took off through the thorny yaupon scrub, uttering mindless cries of terror. The story made all the papers, and the Klan became a laughingstock.

Today, under the ambitious proselyting of the United Klans' Grand Dragon, J. Robert Jones, onetime sailor, bricklayer and lightning-rod salesman, the Klan has made a fantastic comeback. In a series of articles in the Charlotte Observer, reporters J. K. Batten and Dwayne Walls estimated that the state now has some 25 active Klaverns, with a membership of 2,500 paying members. Batten and Walls, in their reports, vividly depicted a typical Klansman. "He was coarse, unshaven and loud," they wrote. "He chomped an unlighted cigar and profanity came as regular as breathing. Yet for an instant tears streamed down his whiskered cheeks. 'My country is going to hell,' he blurted brokenly. 'I hate to see that. These crooked, corrupt politicians are doing it . . . by raising up the niggers. The white man is God's servant, and the nigger is the white man's servant. That's the way it was meant to be. That's the way it's going to be, by God.'"

They quoted another Klansman, a filling-station operator, "his hands caked with grease, his arms blue with tattoos": "'The Jews have got the B'nai B'rith. The Catholics have got the Knights of Columbus. The niggers have got the N.A.A.C.P. Tell me what in hell the white man's got, besides the Klan? What has the white Protestant American Gentile got except the Klan? It's the poor bastard like me who pays the taxes. He keeps the wheels turning.'"

These vignettes point up the deep angers and frustrations that motivate the rank-and-file Klansman in North Carolina and throughout the South. He is rebelling against his own ignorance, ignorance that restricts him to the hard and poorly paid jobs that are becoming scarcer every day. He is angered by the knowledge that the world is passing him by, that he is sinking lower and lower in the social order. The Negro is his scapegoat, for he knows that so long as the Negro can be kept "in his place," there will be somebody on the social and economic scale who is lower than he. In the Klavern, in his robes, repeating the ancient ritual, he finds the status that is denied him on the outside.

Despite the rush to join its ranks, the Klan in North Carolina so far has proved to be a feckless organization. An unsuccessful attempt was made to prevent volunteer workers from the North from painting a weatherbeaten Negro schoolhouse; an effort to prevent Negroes from integrating a restaurant by squirting them with hoses resulted in the arrest of two Klansmen; and a few crosses have been burned, one on the lawn of the governor's mansion. Otherwise the Tarheel Klansmen have seemed content to meet in their Klaverns and make angry speeches. Even there they do not conduct themselves as seriously as their grimmer brethren to the south. In one Klavern, Batten and Walls reported, initiation rituals are enlivened with a prank. The neophyte is required to watch while a piece of iron is heated white-hot and thrust, sizzling, against a piece of raw meat. The iron is then reheated, the quaking candidate is blindfolded, his trousers are lowered, and a piece of Dry Ice is pressed against his backside. With a piercing scream the victim leaps galvanically while the assembled Knights guffaw.

Attorney James Venable of Atlanta, who is Shelton's prime competitor in the Klan business, would probably look with scorn upon such desecration of the ancient ritual. Venable is head of a group called the National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., and of another that embraces 19 small, independent Klans in Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, Tennessee and North Carolina, and he looks upon himself as the robed prophet and spiritual heir of the original Klan of the 1860's. A florid, blue-eyed man in his middle 50's, his eyes grow moist and his voice breaks when he speaks of how the Klansmen of that day saved the South from carpetbaggers and renegade freedmen. He refers with great nostalgia to the 1920's, when the Klan was at its peak of four million members and was so potent in politics it could elect governors, congressmen and senators in half a dozen states.

Venable, a Klansman since he reached man's estate, was attorney for the United Klans until 1963. He then pulled out, chartered his own National Knights, and is now in competition with his old Wizard. Like Shelton, he professes to abhor violence, and he has been heard to describe some members of the United Klans as a "bunch of wild-eyed sons of bitches." He says that he does not do much recruiting in the South. "We are working in virgin soil," he said. "We are planting the seed in the Midwest and the Far West. They are crying for us outside the South, and we are answering the call." This seems true, for Klan watchers report revival of the order in West Virginia, Indiana, Minnesota, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and California.

Klansmen's daughters Frances Boit and Lynn Spires sit on a truck bed which is decorated with inverted American flags.

Though Venable deplores violence in his affable conversations with reporters, his public utterances, and those of his subordinate leaders, sometimes depart from peaceful themes. Once, when carried away by his own oratory, according to an investigation report, he told a rally at Stone Mountain that a few people, white and black, should be hanged to show that the Klan meant business, and he suggested that standing in a schoolhouse door was no way to stop Negro children from entering a white school; hanging a few Negroes on the school ground would be much more effective. His comment on the Penn murder case was blunt: "It just shows that you won't never convict a white man for killing a Negro who is encroaching on the white people of the South."

Speaking at a National Knights rally in September, 1964, Grand Dragon Charlie Maddox of Savannah, a brusquely outspoken man, told his audience: "We need to do a lot to stop [the liberal legislation of] these national politicians. A boy down in Texas did a lot already, remember?"

It seems obvious that the Klan of the middle 1960's is, as Venable likes to describe it, "the same yesterday, today and forever." It is the same armed underground, the same secret guerrilla force, mocking by its actions the teachings of the Christ it pretends to honor, striking furtively and savagely at the foundations of the democracy it purports to defend. It is potentially more dangerous than the old Klan of the '20's, which was finally destroyed by the venality and corruption of some of its leaders and by the arrogant lawlessness of its vicious hoodlum fringe. Its leaders are not interested primarily in the money, but are grimly dedicated men determined to maintain white supremacy at whatever cost.

Numerically, the Klan still is weak. The best official estimates place the number of active dues-paying Klansmen in the South at fewer than 10,000, with 2,000 in Mississippi, 1,500 each in Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina, 1,000 in Louisiana, 500 each in South Carolina and Tennessee. Loyal to many leaders, operating mainly in their own regions, they are less an organization than the manifestation of a state of mind—the despair of the poor white in a society in which he can find no respected place. They are, in short, an underground movement whose basic weapon is terror.

There are hopeful signs. Organizations of decent citizens, as in McComb, Miss., at last are speaking out openly against the anarchy of the Klan. In many a small Southern city, schools are being integrated without violence. Merchants, ignoring Klan threats, are complying with the Civil-Rights Act, and private citizens, when warned that they must fire a Negro servant, are telling Klan tormentors to go to hell. And here and there a tough sheriff or police chief warns Klan leaders that if Klan gunmen want a showdown fight, his men are ready.

"I've told Shelton if his Klansmen ever try to do anything to me or my family, I'll kill him," said an Alabama police chief. "And if they get me first, I've got some boys in my department who will kill him."

Always in the past the Klan has destroyed itself by its own excesses. Events of the past few months give proof that the modern Klan has already gone far down the road to its own destruction. The recent arrests of Klansmen may result in no convictions and no punishment. But the faces of the Klansmen have been exposed. They have been seen in daylight, in the courts, glowering sullenly or grinning arrogantly at the cameras. They now are recognized, not as folk heroes, but as what they are—the misfits, the bitter rejects of society. It is impossible to believe that the millions of decent, law-abiding, truly religious citizens of the South will long permit their lives to be dominated by such as these. □

In Salisbury, North Carolina, cited by a national magazine as an "All-America City," Klansmen brazenly parade up the sidewalk in a daylight demonstration billed as a show of force.

Photograph by Don Sturkey

Staff Photo—Kirk Wooster

MASKED 'TERROR' GUARDS LIGHT-BULB CROSS NEAR LITHONIA
Photo Snapped During Klan Initiation Ceremony in February

Truth About Klan? Team Seeks Answers

The Ku Klux Klan, which has sought above all else to shroud itself in secrecy, has suddenly become the target of increasing national attention.

Ted Simmons

Bill Shipp

President Lyndon B. Johnson has issued to its members what he called "both an appeal and a warning—get out now." The House Un-American Activities Committee has scheduled an investigation of the Klan.

What is this hooded order, this "Invisible Empire," which thrived as a powerful force of political power and of terror, died and, with the coming of the civil rights movement, shows signs of a definite resurrection?

To answer that question, Constitution reporters Bill Shipp and Ted Simmons nailed down membership figures of the various KKK splinter groups, delved into the Klan's history, and talked to Klan officials themselves.

Their report on the Klan and its activities appears here.

For an in-depth study of a subject vital to all Georgians, read Task Force Report every Monday in the Constitution.

Near-Dead Klans Given New Life By Rights Fight

By BILL SHIPP

"We will not be intimidated by the terrorists of the Ku Klux Klan any more than by the terrorists of the Viet Cong."—President Lyndon B. Johnson.

Membership in the Ku Klux Klan has doubled in the past 15 months.

An estimated 10,000 white men in the nation, including 800 in Georgia, wear the robes of the hooded and masked order and have sworn allegiance to the "Invisible Empire."

In January 1964, "the Klan was flat on its tail," said one longtime observer of KKK activity. "Now it has come alive again. The Civil Rights Act got it going."

14 DIFFERENT GROUPS

There are 14 different Klan organizations. But more than half the active Klan members belong to the United Klans of America, Inc., Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, with headquarters in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Members of the United Klans of America Inc. have been arrested in connection with a number of shootings, beatings, and killings in the past two years. None has been convicted.

The United Klans of America is led by a former tire salesman turned professional Klansman — Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton.

His leader in Georgia is Grand Dragon Calvin Craig of Atlanta, a construction worker and a candidate for the state House of Representatives from Fulton County.

According to Craig, the United Klans of America is only about three years old. It grew out of a merger of the United Klans in Georgia and the Alabama Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

ACTIVE IN ATLANTA AREA

The klan is most active in Georgia in the Metropolitan Atlanta Area. There are six to eight active Klan Klaverns (chapters) in the five-county area, but no Klavern is active inside the city limits of Atlanta.

The Klan also maintains a "training ground" just south of Atlanta, where members sporadically conduct "demolition demonstrations."

These include practice in the use of Molotov cocktails.

The Klan is considered weak in southwest Georgia, usually "terrors" — the Klan word for its membership.

But the Ladies Auxiliary, for a host of reasons, has stirred controversy within the Klan and the ladies have been banned by several klaverns.

Initiation fees vary from $10 to $15, according to whether the initiate is employed or unemployed. Dues range from $2 to $5.

When two Athens Ku Klux Klansmen were brought to trial on a murder charge, the Klan sent out "the call" for all Klansmen to donate $1 each toward defense of their robed brothers. The response was poor.

A widely publicized Klan is the National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan with headquarters in Tucker. Its Imperial Wizard is Atlanta attorney James R. Venable. Its membership totals less than 25.

(One of the 14 Klan organizations — in Mississippi — boasts a total membership of one.)

Some of the other big Klans include the Dixie Klans operating in northwest Georgia and Chattanooga, the 1,000-member United Florida Klan, the Improved Order of U.S. Klans with membership centered in the Atlanta area, White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan (the biggest Klan organization in Mississippi) and the Original Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of Louisiana.

Klan Power Broken by Gov. Arnall

Gov. Ellis Arnall was instrumental in 1946 in splintering the once powerful Knights of the Ku Klux Klan into a hydra-headed host of weak and dying Klan-type organizations.

Arnall ordered suit brought

TASK FORCE report

Weltner's Address: 'This Veil of Fear'

(The following is a speech delivered by Rep. Charles Weltner of Atlanta to the House in which Weltner called for an investigation of the Ku Klux Klan.)

The year 1965 marks the 100th anniversary of the Ku Klux a lawful and generous people. It impairs compliance with the law. It impedes administration of justice.

. . . What shall be done? Shall we in Congress ignore the veil of fear descending upon whole communities?

This Veil of Fear

(The following is a speech delivered by Rep. Charles Weltner of Atlanta to the House in which Weltner called for an investigation of the Ku Klux Klan.)

The year 1965 marks the 100th anniversary of the Ku Klux Klan. In December, a century ago, six young men formed a secret society in Pulaski, Tenn. The weird panoply of the order—along with the rigors of that day—quickly changed the Klan into a vehicle of terror.

Soon excesses compelled its leaders to order it dismembered.

That was in 1869. For almost five decades thereafter, the Ku Klux Klan was but a memory. Then in 1915 a new order arose in Atlanta, based upon old hatreds and fears.

The revived Klan found fertile ground not only in the old Confederacy, but north, east and west alike.

In 1921 the House Committee on Rules considered several resolutions calling for an investigation. Nothing happened. By 1924 membership in this 'Invisible Empire' reached four million. Its influence touched

'A CRITICAL TIME'
Rep. Charles Weltner

courthouses and state houses, national conventions of both major parties and Congress itself.

It grew and prospered on mystery and malice, changing the cross from the symbol of hope to a sign of hate.

For over a quarter century following its rebirth the Klan was a potent factor in American life. But the second world war brought sharp decline to the Invisible Empire.

Once again it slumbered—until the Supreme Court decision of 1954. Since that day, but most significantly during the past two years, Klan manifestations have increased throughout the South.

There are now visible signs of a westward spread.

. . . All this comes at a critical time for the South. We are rising to our full potential. We are struggling for orderly progress. We are turning to real problems and solid opportunities.

"Yet, once again, this madness is in our midst. It impunes a lawful and generous people. It impairs compliance with the law. It impedes administration of justice.

. . . What shall be done? Shall we in Congress ignore the veil of fear descending upon whole communities?

Shall we permit faceless men, under cover of robes and darkness to imperil the liberties of our people?

I believe I speak for a vast majority of Southerners in calling for action. For in doing nothing we will inaugurate a second century for the Ku Klux Klan.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities is charged to investigate 'the extent, character and object of Un-American propaganda activities in the United States.' Honest men may differ on the precise limitation of the word 'un-American,' but surely all agree that activities which by force and violence seek to deprive others of rights guaranteed them by the Constitution are un-American.

The weapons of the Klan are secrecy, rumor and fear. Plain fact and simple truth, amply imparted to the public, are adequate remedies. This committee can provide these remedies by thorough and detailed investigation.

Let us turn upon this invisible empire the light of public scrutiny. Let us examine in full its extent, character and objects. Let us reveal for all to see the men behind the masks.

The boast of the Klan, 'yesterday, today and tomorrow,' is true in part. For the Klan of yesterday is the Klan of today. Its means and methods remain unchanged. It will plague us tomorrow unless we quash it today.

The year 1865 witnessed the birth of the Ku Klux Klan. Let the year 1965 witness its final demise."

From Anno Klan To Klavalier— It's in Kloran

The Kloran is the Ku Klux Klan's book of "secrets," written and copyrighted in 1916 by Col. William Joseph (Doc) Simmons.

(Doc Simmons got the rank of colonel when he commanded a Woodmen of the World drill team. He was founder and first Imperial Wizard of the "new" Klan, organized about 1915.)

Doc Simmons' book and rituals are still used by the Klans, including the left-handed handshake in the Klavern meetings.

Here are a few terms from the Kloran, to aid the reader in understanding the Klan "Karacter," as the Kloran puts it:

"KLAVALIER — The soldier of the Klan (Military Department), from cavalier—a courtly, polite and very courageous and skillful soldier of the 17th and 18th Century."

"ANNO KLAN — In the year of the Klan; written thus: AK."

"A REALM — A sub-division of the Invisible Empire—a state or territory of the United States."

"THE GOVERNMENT of the Invisible Empire is vested with the Imperial Wizard, the Emperor, assisted by his fifteen Genii — the Imperial Officers constituting his official family; the government of a Province is vested with a Great Titan, assisted by his twelve Furies—the Great Officers. . . ."

Staff Photo—Kirk Wooster

'ANYONE TRYING TO KEEP THE STREETS CLEAN . . .'
Georgia Grand Dragon Calvin Craig Reads Klan Newspaper

Can't Condemn Whole Group For One Man, Craig Replies

"Anyone trying to keep the streets clean is going to get a little dirty," said Calvin F. Craig, grand dragon of the Realm of Georgia, United Klans of America, Inc., Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Craig made the statement when asked why his Klan organization, the biggest such hooded order in the South and in Georgia, had been linked to so much recent racial violence.

The grand dragon went on to protest the innocence of his "Terrors" and point out that, despite arrests in connection with killings, shootings and floggings, none of his Klansmen have been convicted in recent years.

"You can't condemn the whole Baptist Church just because a member of the church has been arrested. It's like that with the Klan," Craig said.

Who is this man who calls himself a dragon?

Craig is 37 years old, married and has one daughter. He is a heavy construction equipment operator, an active member of the Baptist Church and a not-quite successful candidate for the Georgia senate in the last election. He is seeking a seat in the Georgia House from Fulton County in the next election.

He says he has been a Klansman five years and became grand dragon about three years ago when the United Klans of America Inc. merged with Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton's Alabama Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

A former merchant mariner, Craig said he joined the Klan mainly to "fight the Communist takeover in this country, that I saw happen in Shanghai, China."

"I witnessed torturous acts in China," says Craig. "I don't want that to happen here."

What about the "torturous acts" laid to the Klan?

"I have never witnessed anything in the Klan that I would be ashamed of before God or man," said Craig.

Craig said he was aware that the Klan is thoroughly infiltrated by FBI informers.

"We gain by their membership," Craig said. "The FBI informer in Atlanta has donated a large percentage of his pay from the FBI back to the klan."

Craig emphasizes that his organization's main theme now is anti-communism. He says the United Klans of America is allied with the right-wing John Birch Society.

Craig equates communism in the United States with the civil rights movement. He also says the movement is responsible for much of he crime in his country.

"It is my opinion that 99 per cent of the niggers arrested for crimes are members of the NAACP, SNCC or other civil rights groups," the grand dragon contends.

The Klan also maintains a "training ground" just south of Atlanta, where members sporadically conduct "demolition demonstrations."

These include practice in the use of Molotov cocktails.

The Klan is considered weak in southwest Georgia, usually labeled the most segregated area of the state.

ISN'T WEALTHY

Unlike some extremist organizations, the Klan is not wealthy. Even its leaders admit there are no Fat Cats willing to come through with big donations to aid the Klan in its anti-Negro, anti-Catholic, anti-Jew, anti-foreign born causes.

The Klans maintain within their organization security units, aimed at keeping out "alien" informers and keeping Klan discipline.

These groups are variously known as the Security Patrol, the KBI (Klan Bureau of Investigation), and The Enforcers.

Their uniforms consist of white crash helmets, flashlights and sidearms.

CARRY SIDEARMS

In Georgia, it is the custom of Klansmen to purchase pistol toters' permits which allow them to carry sidearms.

Despite the number of Klan organizations, all depend upon the Kloran, the secret book of the old outlawed Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, for their rituals, initiations and "lectures."

The Kloran requires an elaborate ritualistic opening and closing for Klavern meetings. But such meetings of the new Klans often are without any formalities and often degenerate into little more than race-baiting bull sessions.

The United Klans have organized a Ladies Auxiliary, made up mainly of wives of

Gov. Arnall

Gov. Ellis Arnall was instrumental in 1946 in splintering the once powerful Knights of the Ku Klux Klan into a hydra-headed host of weak and dying Klan-type organizations.

Arnall ordered suit brought against the Klan, seeking to dissolve its charter on the ground that the organization carried on illegal activities.

After nearly a year of delaying tactics, the Klan surrendered its charter rather than go on public trial.

Dan Duke, fiery assistant attorney general with a long record of fighting the Klan, was appointed by Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook to handle the state's case.

In August 1946, Duke filed suit in Fulton County superior court charging that the Klan had violated its charter.

The voluminous suit outlined the organization and plans of the Klan and charged the hooded order with act after act of violence.

Floggings were carried out regularly by a special Klan terror squad, the suit charged.

Most of those flogged were white persons, some for being philandering husbands and some for being labor union organizers.

Duke's suit said the Klan was illegally chartered "since the order has engaged in promoting Nazi and Fascist aims, actions irreconcilable with American Constitutional concepts. . . ."

On June 13, 1947, the Klan threw in its charter without a fight after the state agreed to amend its suit to the single charge that the Klan, chartered as a benevolent organization, was operating for a profit.

That was the end of the old Knights. And for a while, it was the virtual end of Ku Kluxery in Georgia.

Klan Lawyer Venable Remembers Its Heyday in 20s

By TED SIMMONS

"I've been in the Klan since 1924, since I was a boy, you know. I knew all the imperial wizards, except Gen. Nathan Forrest, and was good friends to all of them.

"At one time we had four or five million members. We were in every state in the union. We owned a lot of property . . . we built several hospitals, for the needy.

"But in the election of 1928, we took in everybody who had $10 . . . you know, to beat Al Smith, because he was a Catholic. That was a mistake. Then the leadership got to playing too much politics . . . they got too careless, and got involved in some scandals . . ."

Thus James R. Venable, the paradoxical Atlanta attorney known as the "lawyer for the Ku Klux," described what he considers the disintegration of the once powerful "Invisible Empire" of the Ku Klux Klan.

Venable, soft-spoken and shy-appearing in private conversation but a fiery, red-faced, fist shaking orator, sat at the cluttered desk in his office across the street from the Fulton County courthouse. On the wall at his back hung a profile of Jesus Christ.

His manner was animated as he talked of the past glories of the Klan. It also was wistful, and understandably so. The Klan with which Venable is now associated, National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., has a total of 25 members.

Venable avoids talking about specific numbers. "We've got members, but we're very careful who we take. We try to take people who won't embarrass us . . . high type people," he said.

"We want people who recognize the fact that the only salvation . . . the only way we can win this race war is the ballot box and the boycott. We don't tolerate this violence."

A few years ago Venable was associated with the United Klans of America, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., in which the dominant figures are Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton of Alabama, and Georgia Grand Dragon Calvin Craig. Then a split occurred.

The report then was that Venable did not want the Klan actively associated with the John Birch Society, because the latter has some Negro members and that Shelton and Craig felt otherwise.

Venable indicates only that he feels some actions of the Shelton-Craig organization are "damn foolish," but says he holds no ill feelings for Shelton and Craig and has represented some of their members in court since the split, without a fee.

This latter is a practice which Venable says has "cost me hundreds of dollars," as have other of his Klan activities such as printing Klan material and hosting meetings at his Stone Mountain home.

"I never have got a nickel out of the Klan. It's cost me hundreds of dollars," he said. "But I feel like I owe it to my race . . . to my children.

As Venable sees it, the sole purpose of the KKK is "to keep this country owned and operated by the white race . . . because niggers are inferior to white people, regardless of education."

"The nigger will always be inferior . . . he's got that animal nature in him. They had, still have, the richest nation (in natural resources) in the world, and still never have been able to [illegible] it."

But, he said, he is not "prejudiced."

"I try to be fair-minded," he said. "I know they can't help what some of them do, and neither can I help what some of these Klansmen do.

"The bad thing about this race war we're having now . . . it's got to where a good nigger won't be able to get justice in the South because of these outside agitators."

Venable counts among his clients a number of Negroes. He once went to Louisiana to defend a group of Black Muslims because, he said, the Muslims could find no one else who would take the case.

He also once represented an alleged Communist here. "One of the biggest criminal lawyers in Atlanta gave me the case, and I split the fee with him," he said.

Venable sees nothing unusual in this. "The law is the law," he said. "I'd represent Martin Luther King if he paid me enough. I'd represent Khrushchev."

Since the split with Shelton and Craig, most of Venable's Klan activity is limited to his role as "lawyer for the Ku Klux" and as "chairman of the National Klan Association," he says.

"I travel around as a kind of good-will ambassador, trying to get them all (the various klans) together. This friction. . .that's why we're having trouble."

As for the pending investigation of the KKK by the House Un[illegible] Committee, Venable says: "It's history repeating itself. There was a Klan yesterday, there's one today, and there will be one tomorrow."

RALPH McGILL

At Best, a Small Exodus

President Johnson, following the night killing of an unarmed, unoffending woman in Alabama, has called on all decent persons to abandon membership and support of the KKK. If there is an exodus, Mr. President, it can at best be small.

The record is old — but consistent.

In January, 1869, the Imperial Wizard, Nathan Bedford Forrest, ordered the Ku Klux Klan disbanded. It had, he said, become perverted in many localities. The decent people were leaving it. The Klan had become a refuge for rascals.

Alabama Klansman Ryland Randolph, cyclops of the Tuscaloosa Klavern in 1869, strongly supported Wizard Forrest. The Ku Klux Klan, he said, had fallen "into low and violent hands."

The "low and violent" paid scant attention to Wizard Forrest, one of the major heroes of the Confederacy and a cavalry leader whose legend continues into our present.

The 1920s

"Revived" in the 1920s as an insurance and money-making scheme, the KKK worked its way into politics, subverted some courts and the processes of law. The "take" was fat. As an old Klansman of that time told me, "I have seen big drawers full of money at the

Turn to Page 20, Column 4

McGILL

Continued from Page 1

Imperial headquarters (in Atlanta) and on nights when the top boys got drunk and happy they'd just help themselves." The Klan spread out of the South into the border states and on into Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and New Jersey. Everywhere it went it took corruption, violence and lawlessness.

The total of criminal and corrupt Klan acts in the 1920s into the present fills many volumes. In Indiana, in the 1920s, David Stephenson, grand dragon, a drunkard and a corruptionist, repeatedly raped a young woman who was a state employe. She took poison and died. Stephenson went to prison. There, angry because his old Klan friends had decided to leave him in so they could cut up the gravy, released his files. They caused a major scandal in political and official life in Indiana.

There were major crimes—and small, pitiful ones.

In an Atlanta suburb of East Point, in March, 1940, a frail barber, who somehow had offended the Klan, was beaten to death at night and his body left in a field. (The big brave men of the Klan like to operate by night and usually at odds of eight or more to one. In Alabama, for example, four are charged with the murder of one defenseless woman.)

The writer recalls having a call from the wife of a Klan leader in the early 1940s. She was in tears. "Is there anything that can be done to help my husband," she said. "He was not a bad man. He was a good husband and father. But, now men come to our home who frighten me. They are brutal, hard-looking men. They praise my husband. They flatter him. He somehow feels big in this position. I know only harm can come of it. Can something be done to wake him." (Harm and sorrow did come of it.)

FBI Reports

In more recent months the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has reported that law enforcement officers in some counties in the South are involved in Klan violence. There were Klan connections with the murder of three men in Mississippi last summer. There were Klan connections with the bombings and burnings of more than 100 churches.

Alabama Klans contributed, investigating officers believe, to the dynamite murder of Sunday school children in Birmingham and to other violence in that state.

Last fall, in the pre-election weeks when the Klan was loud in its support of Gov. Wallace for President, Alabama's dragon, Robert Creel, was quoted as saying that Gov. Wallace and Sen. Goldwater could do only so much by themselves. "They need our help," said Creel.

Continuing, Creel was quoted as telling a rural Klan group that the Klan represented a majority of the people of Alabama and hated "niggerism, Catholicism, Judaism and all other isms."

There can't be much of an exodus, Mr. President.

ARTICLES ON THE RADICAL RIGHT

1. Wilson, Joseph and Edward Harris, "Hucksters of Hate-Nazi Style," Progressive, June 1964.

2. Cook, Fred J., "Radio Right-Hate Clubs of the Air," The Nation, May 25, 1964.

4. Billy James Hargis's March (1964) Newsletter.

5. News from National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee

6. Friedman, Saul, "The Tussle in Texas," The Nation, February 3, 1964.

7. Marine, Gene, "New Hope of the Far Rights" January 27, 1964 (California)

8. McMillan, George, "The Klan Scourges Old St. Augustine," Life, June, 26, 1964.

9. Cleghorn, Reese, "The Segs", Esquire, January 1964.

10. Long, Margaret, "The Imperial Wizard Explains the Klan," New York Times Magazine, July 5, 1964.

11. McMillan, George, "The Birmingham Church Bomber," Saturday Evening Post, June 6, 1964.

Memo from MONTEZ G. ALBRIGHT

References:

James Graham Cook, The Segregationists
Appleton, Century, Crofts, 1963

David Wesley, Hate Groups & the Un American Activities Committee
April 1961, revised 1962 25¢
from: Emergency Civil Liberties Comm.
421 7th Ave., N.Y. 1, N.Y.

Daniel Bell (ed) The Radical Right
Doubleday & Co., 1963
Collection of essays, in perspective & depth

21 Labor

Labor Union Research Departments

By Solomon Barkin,
Textile Workers Union of America,
New York, N. Y.

Reprinted from Vol. 19, No. 8, February, 1941, issue of the PERSONNEL JOURNAL
Official Publication of the Personnel Research Federation, 60 East 42nd St., New York, N. Y.

Unions are Relying Increasingly upon the Collection and Analysis of Accurate Data for Their Daily Decisions and the Development of Their Long-term Policies. This Reflects the Fundamental Conviction of the New Unionism that Industrial Relations should be Rationalized.

Labor Union Research Departments

By Solomon Barkin,
Textile Workers Union of America,
New York, N. Y.

Research is a necessary tool of contemporary unionism. Effective operation of a modern trade union demands the use of technicians and personnel specially trained in economics, management, engineering, publicity and law to advise its officers and leaders, and also to help in administering unions. A well trained staff is indispensable to the successful use of current trade union techniques and the realization of their goals.

The acceptance and use of these services have epitomized the new trends in unionism represented by the large industrial unions. As the labor movement has adopted more and more of its new characteristics it has accepted these services and made them an integral part of the organization. Union leaders have become aware of their value and have gained an appreciation of their spheres of usefulness.

Demanded by Industrial Workers

The new unionism stems from the upsurge in organization in 1933 and is being crystallized in the large industrial unions formed since that date. The form, attitude, and aspirations of the new unionism are seeping into most unions, and becoming the common property of the American trade union movement. It is an answer to the demand of the large mass of industrial workers in the basic industries for unions which respond to their practical and pressing needs.

Built to reflect the needs of workers employed in nationally competitive industries, the new unionism has, as we see it, five important traits.

Five Aspects of Present Unionism

FIRST of all, it is required to cope with giant impersonal corporations which control directly or, through, diverse financial channels, many plants distributed throughout the country; these corporations often enjoy monopolistic positions, and employ highly refined management techniques with extensive personnel and welfare programs.

Secondly, the strategy of the new unions is built upon an appeal to all workers, skilled, semi-skilled and unskilled, and therefore the industrial union is its characteristic form of organization.

Thirdly, the newly organized workers recognize that American industry is dynamic and mobile, that new industries and regions arise rapidly to replace older ones, and that therefore American union standards will be best protected by organizing all unorganized workers in every industry and region.

Fourthly, these workers want unions which would couple economic action with extensive national legislation to assure them economic security and protect their unions.

Fifthly, the new unionism believes that unions should assume industrial leadership to prevent competition at the expense of labor and domination of labor by monopolistic industries and in time should secure the right to parcipate in the direction and planning of industry.

These new characteristics reflect an expansion of purpose and a new militancy which necessitates a specialized staff equipped to assist those handling these many challenges. In the skilled craft unions established for local industries, individual leaders were able to encompass the facts of the industry through their own personal contacts, and deal with the problems in terms of this experience. But the new organizations, too large for such simple procedures, require more precise and more profound, as well as prompter, information, analysis and understanding to cope with their problems. To secure these materials, trade unions have turned to specialized personnel who, because of their training and insight, knowledge of, and allegiance to, the labor movement, could aid in fulfilling these wider needs.

Work of Union Research Departments

THIS paper will deal primarily with the functions of those people who staff that section of the union generally known as the "research department." While their services vary from union to union, they have an inherent generic similarity. The activities of the research department of the Textile Workers Union of America will serve to illustrate the specific content of their services.

Research staffs composed primarily of economists and socially minded engineers, were established to act in an advisory capacity to union officers, but the variety of trade union activities has made it important also to utilize the research personnel in other capacities. To perform these services, the research staff usually assembles six different types of data which are of direct interest and value both to the leaders and membership of the organization.

The first relates to each company's financial, corporate, industrial, personnel and labor experience. The second consists of information on wages, workload and labor costs. The third grouping includes data on the economic characteristics and operations of the industry and its many subdivisions. The fourth outlines the major connections of each member of management. The fifth deals with material about the communities in which the mills are located. Finally, the files consist of reports about employer policies and practices, and collective bargaining experience in other industries.

Economic Surveys Made

THESE factual resources furnish the basis for varied services. Economic surveys are constantly in preparation. There are summaries of economic conditions, measures of business activity, forecasts of future conditions, analyses of different economic and market situations within the respective subdivisions, investigations into financial results of an industry's operations, evaluations of the ability of individual companies and industries to increase wages, and descriptions of sources of economic instability of industrial sectors and the remedies for these conditions. The movement of industry or business from one branch to another or from one region to another or from one plant to another is constantly reviewed.

Interindustry competition requires attention since complaints of narrowing markets frequently foreshadow "cut-throat" competition. Technological changes provoke inquiries into the extent of dislocation, methods of protection, alternative employments and compensation. With defense problems arising, the union must more than ever before be able to identify "ghost" towns, and depressed areas, and locate available labor supply and productivity capacity.

Planning Organizing Campaigns

IN THE following paragraphs, we shall discuss several customary uses of these data. Since the industrial units which are being organized are huge in size and intimately interrelated and since each has its own background in unionism, it is becoming increasingly imperative to plan each organizing campaign carefully and completely. Materials must be available to the organizer for his use. The research departments have made available to organizers in such cases information about the specific community, its population, its mores and its institutions. Insofar as workers in the mill differ from those of the general community, their characteristics are defined. If there had been previous efforts toward unionism, these are traced as are strikes, charges of discrimination and governmental action respecting labor laws. The mills, their financial set-up, personnel and other available data on their operations are reported.

Sometimes Advise Against Organizing

FREQUENTLY, it is necessary to caution against all organizational work because of the weak financial position of the company or because of the imminence of other acts such as moving to other localities. The company's attitude and relation toward unions of course is also stated. In the event that a mill's wages are low, special data are furnished to bring that point home. Information on complaints respecting wages and working conditions, or probable sore-spots are of course given to the organizer. With these materials, the job of organizing is considerably facilitated.

As all industrial relations are being increasingly founded on joint consideration of the relevant facts, unions are more than ever before in need of accurate data and thorough factual preparation to negotiate with management. Its own efforts in this connection must be particularly intensive as management frequently refuses to disclose its data unless compelled to do so by the overwhelming force of the union's case. Unfortunately, labor generally has no access to corporate financial statements or to reports on operations or costs. The existence of such secrecy inspires suspicion and prevents true collective bargaining. The union must now secure its materials from outside sources.

Prepare Analyses of Costs

THE research departments therefore carry the burden of preparing analyses for negotiators on the company's costs, degree of efficiency, financial condition, profitability and prospects. The negotiators must have data on sources for wage increases and adequate analysis of comparative wages, production and costs so that they may be fully guided in the formulation of their demands, deliberations and final settlement. In many instances, it is necessary to define the economic limitations on increases as well as the price adjustments which might be required. The company's economic and market advantages must be assayed. Unions are endeavoring to guide their policies and strategy by the facts of each situation.

Companies financially capable of adopting liberal provisions are frequently reluctant to take the lead. In such instances unions have successfully employed studies of precedents for their proposals. Frequency analyses have been made of agreements to establish the extent of provisions for vacations with pay, for a minimum number of hours of guaranteed pay for reporting to work, or for separation allowances for persons displaced by technological changes, or for the sharing by workers of savings due to increased man-hour productivity. Intensive surveys have been made of specific companies and of entire industries with respect to personnel practices, labor policies, work load and wage conditions to establish uniform competitive standards.

Controlling Technological Changes

ANOTHER function of the research staff is to develop techniques for handling special problems. In the textile industry, probably the most serious question has been that of workload. The Textile Workers Union of America has faced this problem and has experimentally developed a method of guaranteeing workers effective protection against the onrush of technological change. It has insisted that changes be made only after their submission and approval by the union. Unnecessary and improper changes have been vetoed. Where technical alterations are made, the pace has been controlled. The workers now have job guarantees and higher wages. For those who have been displaced, dismissal wages have been obtained. Other types of provisions have also been developed. Entire techniques have been evolved for comating overwork. Similarly special controls are being formulated for regulating incentive wage systems and employer time-study techniques.

Merit rating systems which are formalizing the many qualifications to straight seniority systems require investigations of personnel practice, and of the work forces to determine the probable effects of suggested modification.

Similarly, labor unions are demanding direct participation in plant safety and health work to prevent anti-union activities and to assure effective protection. They require factual materials for these activities. The research department has aided in formulating the objectives, defining and applying the techniques, and supervising the administration of, and the experience under, these arrangements so that improvements may be made. Advice is given concerning these problems to assure adequate contractual provisions.

Rehabilitation of Plants and Industries

AN EVER expanding field of service performed by unions in which research departments play an important role is the rehabilitation of both individual plants and industries. Industrial unions want to create and maintain sound industries. Without such a condition there can be no security for their members' employment and no opportunities for improving standards or maintaining high earnings and good work conditions. Labor cooperation with individual companies in their managerial procedures is becoming more general as management is learning that such assistance results in greater efficiency and the elimination of much waste.

Specific agreements have been arranged in the textile industry covering this kind of cooperation providing for the protection of the union and for labor to share in the ultimate savings. The results have been generally favorable to all concerned. The research department is called in to guide local committees as well as furnish them with much of the material necessary for their work. Since such investigations reach into marketing problems, types of manufacture, and surveys of alternative production methods and machinery, many phases of the investigation are carried on completely by the department. This kind of union assistance has, for the most part, been superior to that rendered by outside consulting services since the final changes under union-management cooperation plans are usually effected with greater understanding by the worker. These forms of cooperation have of course not been limited to such formal arrangements or extensive investigations.

Moreover, there are entire branches in the textile industry which require stabilization. Several of these are in the process of study. The classic types of assistance for rehabilitation of entire industries are to be found in the apparel industries. Many of the latter are based on advice furnished by technicians and research men who have studied these industries and rendered their reports for guidance.

Adjustment of Grievances

In the actual administration of agreements, the research departments may play an important role. Grievances relating to technical questions which are not settled locally are referred to this department for review. They are frequently able to formulate otherwise vague complaints, identify sources of trouble, review grievance machinery and offer suggestions which facilitate adjustments. Plants with time studies, complicated wage incentive plans, merit rating systems, hazardous and unhealthful employment conditions, wage penalty provisions, substandard wage levels, burden some work loads or excessive rates of change in equipment are constant sources of problems which require the department's aid.

In plants where the union participates in time studies, union representatives have to be trained to supervise and criticize the work effectively. Union wage and negotiating committees must be taught the methods of handling technical issues and critically reviewing management's techniques. These groups need information on comparative conditions and advice on methods of evaluating employer's proposals or measuring units. The training problem becomes a particularly severe one in places where there are complicated wage incentive plans which are enforced by large clerical and professional staffs often exceeding five percent of the total number of employees. A very complete grievance and shop steward system must be established at such mills and each one of these persons must be adequately acquainted with their duties.

Relation to Consulting Engineers

THE employment by textile management of consulting engineers has opened up a new series of issues which research departments are helping to resolve. Unions have found it necessary to deal with these salesmanlike, self-confident and often uncompromising persons. Some of them make proposals without thorough study of local conditions and defend their recommendations with mysterious "confidential comparative information," which they refuse to identify or submit to verification or analysis.

The research department has assisted local unions in reviewing the engineers' proposals and in formulating union counter-recommendations. Through a concerted effort in all instances where such engineers are being employed, the research department is attempting to identify these as employer proposals and to make them as much subject to collective bargaining as any other employer request. It is hoped that franker consideration of verifiable facts will facilitate collective bargaining and replace present secretive habits.

Supply Data for Arbitrations

ANOTHER significant field of service has been that rendered during arbitration proceedings. As in all phases of negotiations, management is preparing itself more adequately for all its relations with unions. Most employers who have adequate personnel and engineering departments are usually well supplied with data for such hearings. It is therefore more than ever necessary for unions to present a complete statement of facts and arguments. As arbitrators are as yet most frequently chosen for individual disputes, the presentation must be particularly complete and explicit.

In most instances, arbitrators rely on the data furnished by both parties in dispute rather than on their own independent studies. Research departments are most often required to aid in arbitrations involving questions of wages, working conditions and work assignment. Surveys are made and offered in such instances on economic, financial, price, industrial and similar questions.

Training and Checking Organizers

NO LESS essential is the general duty of the research department to coordinate, systematize and test the policies, procedures and strategies employed by unions. Just as management has organized its personnel practices in the so-called science of personnel management, so the research departments are modestly creating a similar body of knowledge for the trade union movement. Labor organizers and officials have had to operate on the basis of direct experience and word of mouth instruction. Much of the information they secured they have had individually to test for themselves. Research departments are now collecting this experience and preparing manuals, guides and checklists which shorten the preparatory period, assure more complete instruction and sharpen the insight of labor leaders. Organizers are being instructed in the union's facilities and services of governmental agencies.

The same effort to apply the principles of preparation, research and judgment on the basis of facts is being widely applied to many types of union activities. Conferences of union members or organizers are being directed by well conceived programs. Union practices such as dues collection, grievance machinery, and administrative forces are now repeatedly investigated to assure the officers that they are efficient and realistic. Union policies are being subjected to similar scrutiny. Solutions for such important problems as wage stabilization are investigated prior to their final formulation. Studies in the experience of other unions precede actual recommendations. The American labor movement is trying to achieve its final goals with all of the tools which it can employ, and it is learning to use the tool of research to this end.

Interests Identified with National Welfare

THE trade union movement is fast becoming the most important progressive force in our nation. Its interests are not provincial; they are identical with the nation's welfare. The attitude of mind of the labor leader focuses his attention upon public welfare and general industrial and economic problems rather than upon the narrow interests of an individual concern. They, therefore, are familiar with industry's problems and those of the country. These, they have realized, must be dealt with to improve the workers' lot. As an example, we may refer to unions' efforts to stabilize constructively the more competitive industries through voluntary industrial controls intended to uproot infested areas. In developing policy and programs in these fields, union leaders have looked to the research departments for much of the basic data. They keep apprized of trends and developments as well as all possible sources of trouble.

Legislative Action

LEGISLATIVE action is becoming an expanding part of the trade unions' constructive program. They realize that the government's compulsory powers are necessary to remedy and to improve labor's economic position. The American trade union movement was in the vanguard for wage and hour, social security, public works, relief, housing and labor relations laws. Even more than in the formulation of these original demands, the research staffs are playing their part in following the administration of these laws and reviewing and formulating necessary amendments. In connection with the wage and hour law, appearances are made before industry committees to argue the merits of union wage proposals and before the administrator to recommend specific limitations on learners or other definitions. Exemptions and complaints of violation are also part of the work of such departments. Social security experience is a constant concern since these staffs handle many problems and must answer many queries. The progress and effect of National Labor Relations Board decisions are being recorded, studied and appraised.

Contacting Government Agencies

AN IMPORTANT function of the research department which frequently far transcends in importance the above specific duties is that of reviewing the activities and keeping in close touch with all governmental agencies whether local, state or federal, which are administering labor laws or collecting data bearing on labor so that the union's views and reactions may be fully known and appreciated. Aid and advice is given governmental agencies making investigations in unionized industries. Studies are examined and reviewed; techniques are carefully scrutinized; subjects for inquiry are proposed.

With these resources for information, it becomes the duty of the research staffs to keep the union's membership informed of progress in various fields. For this purpose, regular monthly and semi-monthly publications are issued dealing with industrial conditions, labor developments and union events. Special reports and publications are issued from time to time.

Public Relations Work

EFFORTS are also made to acquaint other groups in the community with labor's purposes, policies and activities. Trade union research staffs have stimulated many students and scholars to investigate specific fields of labor conditions and union activity. Inquiries of all kinds from government and public agencies, as well as individuals, are constantly answered. Unions want general understanding and appreciation for their work for it is dedicated to the welfare of the great mass of Americans.

A trade union research department is engaged in the vast variety of activities which occupy the modern trade union. Its purpose is not to make decisions on policy or strategy but rather to offer a tested body of facts and information, and studied counsel. Its value is growing as the activities of trade unions are extending themselves into more complicated and larger national industries; are concerned with more fundamental managerial, financial and industrial problems; as the experience with, and knowledge of, collective bargaining is widening; as formal arbitration machinery for the resolution of differences is multiplying; and as contacts with governmental agencies and the public are increasing.

Fact Finding Agencies

UNIONS are relying increasingly upon the collection and analysis of accurate data for their daily decisions and the development of their long-term policies. The ready recognition of the importance of facts by the new unionism reflects its fundamental conviction that industrial relations should be rationalized. The problems of management and labor should be resolved by joint study of the relevant facts involved in each dispute.

The stability of industries in which collective bargaining has become an established fact reflects this effort to rationalize industrial relations. The research departments of modern trade unions are aiding unions in finding the facts, in formulating and documenting their statements, in developing and reviewing their policies and practices, in increasing their effectiveness in dealing with many current economic, industrial and managerial problems, and in establishing more rational industrial relations and more effective administration of labor contracts and labor law.

Reprinted for private circulation from
THE JOURNAL OF POLITICAL ECONOMY, Vol. LI, No. 5, October, 1943 PRINTED IN THE U.S.A.

THE NEGRO AUTOMOBILE WORKER[1]

LLOYD H. BAILER[2]

IN JUNE, 1943, Detroit, the center of automobile manufacturing and now a main artery of wartime production, witnessed one of the most serious race riots in the nation's history. But even before the riot many of the industry's employers both in Detroit and in subsidiary automobile centers had come to consider tension between white and Negro workers as one of the greatest single threats not only to peaceful industrial relations but also to the demands of continuous production.[3] Indeed, since 1941, racial tension has been manifested in a series of strikes by white employees at the plants of such concerns as Packard, Hudson, Chrysler, and Timken-Detroit Axle. In view of the fact that the Negro wage-earner has been an integral part of the industry's labor force for over a quarter of a century, the question naturally arises as to why he has become a new focal point of industrial strife. The present article seeks to throw light on this question. In doing so, however, it is necessary to describe in some detail the industrial status of the Negro automobile worker during the period preceding the conversion of the industry to war production.

[1] The writer wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to Professor Abram L. Harris, Howard University, who read the manuscript and offered several valuable suggestions.

[2] In addition to being a member of the Department of Economics at Howard University, the author is serving as a labor economist in the War Production Board. The views he expresses are his personal opinions.

[3] See, e.g., Iron Age, CLI (1943), 86.

I. NEGRO LABOR ENTERS THE INDUSTRY

In 1910 there were 105,758 gainful[4] workers in the automobile industry. Of these only 569—less than 1 per cent—were Negroes. Negro workers first entered the industry in significant numbers during and immediately following World War I. Induced by the accelerated war and post-war demand for labor, their entrance coincided with the influx of southern workers, generally, to Detroit, Pontiac, Lansing, Flint, Saginaw, Toledo, and South Bend—the centers of automobile production. Although the number of Negroes increased significantly, it still was a relatively small fraction of the total number of southern migrants who found employment in the industry. And the fact that from the beginning of the industry's major expansion Negroes were greatly outnumbered by southern whites was to exert an important bearing on the relation of Negro workers to the industry and to the automobile unions.

Although actual employment naturally fluctuated widely from year to year, the number of workers—white and Negro—normally attached to the industry was stabilized by 1930 and remained fairly constant until wartime conversion was completed. Thus, of the 640,474 gainful automobile workers in 1930, 25,895—roughly 4 per cent—were Negroes. Ten years later Negroes accounted for 23,015—again approximately 4 per cent—of the 617,132 gainful workers in the industry. The labor force in 1940 was predominantly male. White females comprised just under 10 per cent of all white workers. But Negro females numbered only 264, or slightly over 1 per cent of the male Negro gainful workers.[5]

[4] "Gainful" is used by the Bureau of the Census to indicate actual employment plus those out of work but normally employed.

II. THE DISTRIBUTION OF NEGRO WORKERS

At first blush it would appear that the employment of Negroes should occasion no grave problem, since they are of small numerical importance. But Negro automobile workers have been highly concentrated geographically, plant-wise, and by departments and occupations. This concentration has made them, at least in the short run, an indispensable part of the labor force. Moreover, it has established a particular pattern of racial employment—a pattern that assumed crucial importance when the industry converted to war production.

TABLE 1*

TEN LARGEST EMPLOYERS OF NEGRO AUTOMOBILE LABOR—PRECONVERSION PERIOD

Company	Wage-Earners
	All	Negro	Per Cent Negro
Ford Motor Co.†	90,000	11,000	12.22
General Motors Corp.‡	100,000	2,500	2.50
Chrysler Corp.†	50,000	2,000	4.00
Briggs Manufacturing Corp.†	14,000	1,300	9.29
Midland Steel Products Co.	4,100	1,250	30.49
Bohn Aluminum and Brass Corp.	2,798	668	23.87
Packard Motor Car Co.	16,000	600	3.75
Kelsey-Hayes Corp.	3,050	365	11.97
Murray Corp. of America	7,000	350	5.00
Hudson Motor Car Co.	12,200	225	1.84

* Source: Company personnel departments and Labor Division, Office of Production Management.

† Michigan establishments only.

‡ Michigan and Indiana automobile plants only.

With respect to geographic distribution, Negro workers have been unduly concentrated in Michigan, and more particularly in the Detroit area. In 1940 Michigan accounted for 60 per cent of the white workers as compared with 83 per cent of the Negro labor force. Probably 70 per cent of all Negroes in the industry were employed in the Detroit metropolitan area alone. On the other hand, only 34 of the 19,152 automobile workers in Wisconsin (which ranks fifth in the industry from the standpoint of employment) were Negroes. Three factors appear to explain this geographical concentration: (1) the rate of industrial expansion, and thus the labor shortage, was higher in Michigan than elsewhere; (2) the occupations in which Negroes have been used are to a large extent confined to that state; and (3) the attitudes toward Negro employment in automobile plants have been more unfavorable in other sections of the country. Of these three factors, the first two are of most importance.

The bulk of the Negro labor force has been employed by a few firms in the industry and, in the case of the "Big Three" (Ford, General Motors, and Chrysler), in a few plants of the parent-concern. Table 1 presents normal employment data for the period 1937–41 for the ten largest employers of Negro workers. The most striking feature of these data is that Ford employed more than four times as many Negroes as any other concern, though it normally ranked third in the production of finished vehicles and second in volume of employment. In fact, nearly half of all Negroes in the industry were employed by this concern. On the other hand, the proportion of Negroes to total employment was higher at Midland Steel and Bohn, largely because these concerns are engaged primarily in foundry operations.

[5] U.S. Decennial Census. These figures include both those workers actually employed at the time of enumeration and those unemployed but normally attached to the industry. Thus the 1940 figures represent actual employment plus "experienced persons seeking work." Previous censuses made no such breakdown.

The concentration of Negroes in particular plants of the major companies was even more striking. Fully 99 per cent of all Ford Negro employees were found in the Rouge plant in Dearborn in 1937. The bulk of the General Motors Negro employees worked in Buick plant 70 in Flint (there are several Buick plants in that city), the Pontiac foundry in Pontiac (where there are five major Pontiac plants), and in two of the several Chevrolet plants—Chevrolet Forge, Spring, and Bumper in Detroit and Chevrolet Grey-Iron Foundry in Saginaw. The majority of Chrysler's Negro employees worked at the main Dodge plant in Hamtramck (a Detroit suburb), site of the chief Chrysler foundry.[6]

The concentration of Negroes in particular plants and departments resulted primarily from the types of occupations in which these workers were used. Negroes were largely confined to the most undesirable jobs in the industry. Most of them were unskilled. A small minority performed semiskilled and even skilled operations, but the latter were almost invariably hot, noisy, dirty, dusty, hazardous, or required exceptional physical exertion. This pattern has been only slightly altered since the beginning of war production.

The most recent industry-wide occupational tabulation is provided by the 1930 census.[7] These data show clearly that Negroes were concentrated at the bottom of the occupational ladder. Nearly three-fourths of them were found in unskilled capacities as against one-fourth of the whites. Approximately one-half of the white employees but only one-eighth of the Negroes were white-collar or skilled workers. Were Ford employment eliminated from these figures, the Negro's concentration in the lower occupational classifications would have appeared much greater, for his occupational distribution in that concern (where nearly half of the Negro automobile workers were found) has been much broader than in the rest of the industry.

These statistics do not tell the whole story, however, for jobs within the same classification as to skill vary greatly in their desirability. Outside of the coreroom nearly all foundry jobs are unpleasant, yet a substantial portion of them are semiskilled and skilled. The same holds true for the heat-treat and sanding and paint operations. Yet most of the semiskilled and skilled Negro workers were found in such departments, where they were confined to the most hazardous or otherwise undesirable occupations—such jobs, for example, as shear-operator, heater, sprayman, chipper, rough-snag-grinder, and sand-blaster. Likewise, Negro unskilled workers filled the more undesirable jobs in that broad occupational category. In brief, Negroes were not only concentrated in occupations requiring less skill but were also attached to the worst jobs within each occupational classification. The sole exception to this general characterization was the Ford Rouge plant—though here, as described below, the difference was largely one of degree.

The pre-war position of Negroes in Chrysler plants may be taken as typical of those plants where Negroes were used in substantial numbers. In March, 1940, 51 per cent of the approximately two thousand Negro employees of Chrysler were classed as unskilled (production helpers, janitors, common laborers, etc.);

[6] Derived from data obtained from the companies in question.

[7] Occupational data by industry for 1940 were not available at the time of this writing.

30 per cent as foundry workers; 5 per cent as paint-department employees (chiefly sanders and sprayers); and 14 per cent were classified in "miscellaneous occupations."[8] All of these employees were found in the Chrysler Michigan plants, no Negro workers being employed in the company's Indiana and California establishments. In fact, most of the relatively few Negro automobile workers found in all assembly and parts plants located outside the Michigan-Ohio-Indiana region were janitors, porters, material handlers, and other unskilled employees.

The number of Negroes in supervisory positions (exclusive of the Ford Rouge plant) was negligible. Only six Negro foremen were found in nineteen motor-vehicle and twenty-one body and parts companies surveyed in the spring of 1940.[9] The number of straw bosses was somewhat larger. In every case Negro foremen and straw bosses supervised all-Negro crews.

In all Ford establishments save the River Rouge plant in Dearborn the occupational status of Negro wage-earners was similar to that prevailing in the industry generally. In the Rouge plant, however, their distribution by occupation was much broader. Table 2 presents a tabulation of Ford Rouge hourly-rate employees by race, major division, production, and nonproduction, as of October, 1937. It will be noted that the relatively new tool and die and airplane-motor buildings are not included. Each of the divisions shown here contained a related group of operations. The foundry and foundry machine shop divisions are self-explanatory. Operations conducted in the other divisions were as follows: motor building—manufacture and assembly of various motor parts and final automobile motor assembly; "B" building—manufacture and assembly of bodies and various chassis parts and final assembly; spring and upset—sundry

TABLE 2*

DISTRIBUTION OF NEGRO EMPLOYEES IN THE FORD ROUGE PLANT, OCTOBER, 1937

Division	Production			Nonproduction			Total
	All	Negro	Per Cent Negro	All	Negro	Per Cent Negro	All	Negro	Per Cent Negro
Foundry	8,980	4,199	46.76	3,274	460	14.05	12,254	4,659	38.02
Foundry machine shop	3,524	609	17.28	428	7	1.64	3,952	616	15.59
Motor building	11,723	580	4.95	2,854	174	6.10	14,577	754	5.17
"B" building	5,671	243	4.29	3,797	321	8.45	9,468	564	5.96
Spring and upset building	3,842	500	13.01	1,642	74	4.51	5,484	574	10.47
Pressed steel building	4,754	375	7.89	2,292	180	7.85	7,046	555	7.88
Rolling mill and open hearth	5,510	889	16.13	2,683	293	10.92	8,193	1,182	14.43
Toolrooms	.....	.....	.....	5,131	51	0.99	5,131	51	0.99
Construction	.....	.....	.....	3,515	232	6.60	3,515	232	6.60
Miscellaneous	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	14,476	638	4.41
Total†	44,004	7,395	16.81	25,616	1,792	6.99	84,096	9,825	11.68

* Source: Ford Rouge pay-roll department.

† As the ratio of production to nonproduction jobs in the "miscellaneous" category is unknown, the corresponding ratio for total figures may be slightly in error.

[8] Derived from data supplied by the Chrysler Corp.

[9] Field investigation and correspondence.

machining operations; pressed steel—fabrication of steel stampings; rolling mill and open hearth—two buildings which comprise the Rouge iron and steel plant; construction—various building and furnace construction operations performed throughout the plant; miscellaneous—remaining sections of the Rouge establishment, among them being the glass plant.[10]

It is seen that Negroes were used in every major department in the plant. Moreover, since the Rouge establishment was the most nearly self-contained plant in the industry, this is tantamount to stating that they performed practically every operation related to automobile manufacturing. An examination of more detailed occupational data, which cannot be presented here, would also show that Negroes were engaged in every occupation in the plant.

It was nevertheless true that Negro wage-earners were disproportionately concentrated in the less desirable occupations and divisions. Thus they constituted nearly half of the production workers and over one-third of all workers in the foundry, but less than 1 per cent of the tool and die makers. In the most disagreeable jobs the proportion of Negro workers was over 50 per cent, as exemplified by the following percentages on Negro proportion of total employment: shakeout, 56.97; molding, 62.62; reels, 55.97; melting, 51.86; and chipping, 51.06.[11]

Thus, at Ford's, as in the rest of the industry, Negroes were employed in greatest numbers in those jobs and in those sections where the general nature of the work was least desirable. Yet the Rouge plant was the only instance in the industry in which Negro workers were used in every occupation. In addition, the number of Negro foremen in the plant, though small in relation to the volume of Negro employment, exceeded the total for the rest of the industry. The relatively superior occupational status, as well as aggregate employment, traditionally enjoyed by Negroes at Rouge helps to explain their strikebreaking role during the April, 1941, strike and the difficulty experienced by the automobile unions in organizing Negro workers.

III. THE NEGRO-WHITE WAGE DIFFERENTIAL

In two or three plants race differentials for the same work existed, wherein for pay-roll purposes Negro employees were given classifications lower than warranted by the job actually performed.[12] But such instances have been disappearing. The Negro-white income differential has not been as large as might be surmised from a study of the Negro's occupational status. With few exceptions, the industry's policy has been "equal pay for equal work."

No race breakdown of hourly wages in the industry has ever been made, but data on annual earnings by race for 1939 are available. In that year the average annual income of white and Negro employees (including salaried workers) amounted to $1,291 and $1,092, respectively. This race differential ($209) was smaller than in any other manufacturing activity except the leather industry. Moreover, Negro automobile workers' average annual earnings exceeded the 1939 average income for all workers in all manufacturing industries

[10] For a more complete description of the Rouge plant organization see Hartley W. Barclay, Ford Production Methods (New York, 1936).

[11] Data obtained from Ford Rouge pay-roll department.

[12] Glen E. Carlson, "The Negro in the Industries of Detroit" (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan unpublished doctoral diss., 1929), p. 139; interviews, Negro workers and U.A.W.–C.I.O. officials, Detroit, February 24, 1940.

($975), exceeded the average for all white manufacturing employees ($1,002), and were nearly twice the corresponding figure for all Negro manufacturing employees.[13] The race differential for wage-earners was in reality less than $209, since the inclusion of salaried employees (among whom almost no Negroes were found) overstated the income of white wage-earners. It appears from field investigation that the race differential in average hourly rates has always been greater than in the case of annual earnings, principally because Negroes have been more heavily represented in maintenance work (such as janitorial duties) and in continuous operations such as milling, rolling, and blast-furnace operation—primarily at the Ford Rouge plant, where employment is steadier during the year.

The comparatively small race differential in income has been due to several factors. Negro workers have been unduly concentrated in Michigan, where wages are higher than elsewhere in the industry, and in the large concerns, which pay wages above the industry average even within Michigan. Moreover, as in most high-wage industries, there has been a high concentration of hourly earnings about the average in automobile manufacturing, and this is only slightly less true of annual earnings. Likewise, minimum rates have consistently been comparatively high.[14] Finally, the most disagreeable jobs (and hence those in which Negroes were found in greatest numbers) frequently pay wages above the plant average. Examples are iron-melting, iron-pouring, and the knockout (a foundry operation).

IV. PERSONNEL POLICIES

While the industry's general policy has been to use Negroes only in the poorest jobs, there have been notable deviations from this policy. The deviations exist as between regions, among firms in the same region, and even among particular plants of the same concern in the same region. In the Detroit area, for example, during 1940 Negroes were used at one Chevrolet plant in occupations from which they were barred in another Chevrolet establishment one block distant. Briggs (a body manufacturer) has been a large employer of Negro labor, yet the Fisher Body plants of General Motors have been well known for their "lily-white" policy.[15] Other examples of divergent Negro employment practices could be given. In many instances mere accident accounted for the origin of these policies—for example, the employment in past of a personnel director unalterably opposed to the use of Negroes in any capacity. With the passage of time such a policy becomes established as traditional in the plant.

Neither the complete refusal to employ Negroes nor their confinement to the lower occupations has borne any relationship to a supposed difference in the efficiency of white and Negro workers. All of the industry's major employers of Negro labor report that Negro employees have proved, in general, as capable as white workers. Some few have expressed doubt that the Negro could perform highly skilled operations satisfactorily, but at the Ford Rouge plant, the only establishment where a significant number of skilled Negroes

[13] U.S. Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, Employment and Wages of Covered Workers, 1939 (1941), pp. 51, 55, 59. Earnings in excess of $3,000 per year in the service of a particular employer are excluded from these figures. These data are based upon a 20 per cent sample.

[14] "Wage Structure of the Motor-Vehicle Industry, Part I," Monthly Labor Review, LIV (February, 1942), 295–96, 301; "Part II," ibid., LIV (March, 1942), 740–41, 749.

[15] Field investigation, December, 1939, through March, 1940.

have been employed, officials profess to see no race difference in this respect.[16] It may be noted, however, that prior to conversion highly skilled positions were not of great importance from the standpoint of the volume of employment, since over 25 per cent of the occupations in the pre-war industry required no experience and only 10 per cent demanded more than one year of training or experience.[17]

V. THE PROBLEM OF UPGRADING NEGRO WORKERS

White workers came to accept the employment of Negroes en bloc in certain sections of particular establishments, such as in the foundry, as more or less normal and not seriously in conflict with the traditional conception of the Negro's place in industry. Upgrading within the area defined for Negro workers could hardly be considered a threat to the white man's status. But the increased employment of Negroes during wartime and the necessity of advancing them to positions above this status in the occupational scale have tended to diffuse them within a few plants. This has disturbed the pattern of employment and has thus occasioned race friction.

The tendency for race friction to develop upon the rise of Negroes to higher occupations was apparent long before the outbreak of the present war. As a rule, promotions for Negroes outside their traditional sphere of employment hardly existed. There were isolated instances in which Negro workers were upgraded to better jobs. But in most such cases white employees in the higher occupation or department displayed such intense animosity that the Negro worker was either withdrawn or quit voluntarily. Tools mysteriously disappeared, a Negro was pushed into a machine, or other "accidents" occurred. In many plants the mere rumor that Negroes were to be upgraded was sufficient to create animosity.

Of the distinguishable groups among workers in Michigan the southern white and the Polish appeared to exhibit the highest degree of race feeling. This situation is at least partially explained by the fact that these two groups were both relatively recent entrants into the automobile labor market, felt the least secure, and came into the most direct contact with Negroes in the competition for jobs. The following statement of a white Packard worker (who was also a minor official of the union local) typifies many reports of reaction to Negro upgrading before the war:

> About 40 per cent of the workers here are Polish. There are also a lot of southern whites. Both of them are very prejudiced. . . . . The rumor got out not long ago that Negroes were going to start working in the trim department—where I work. Most of the men there are southern whites. They said, "I'll be goddamned if I'm going to work with a goddamn black nigger."[18]

At about the same time a Packard official stated in an interview:

> White and colored get along all right in the foundry because the average white worker doesn't want a foundry job anyway. White foundry workers are foreigners. . . . . Sometimes we've been able to work a few colored into other departments. . . . . But you've got to do it gradually. . . . . The southern whites resent the colored fellows most. . . . . We employ a large number of Poles here. The younger generation of Poles seems to hate the colored almost as much as the southern whites. The Poles got so fed up with being called "Polacks" when they first came to this country that now they're trying to take it out on the Negroes.[19]

[16] Field investigation and correspondence.

[17] Estimates of the Automobile Manufacturers Association based upon a study of the U.S. Employment Service, Job Specifications for the Automobile Manufacturing Industry (1935).

[18] Interview, Detroit, February 24, 1940.

[19] Interview, Detroit, March 7, 1940.

In contrast to the general reaction to Negro upgrading in the industry, it is interesting to note that race tension on this issue has never developed at the Ford Rouge plant. Since 1920 the Rouge management has followed a definite policy of employing Negroes in all capacities, and it has been well understood that demonstrations by white workers over Negro employment and upgrading would result in dismissal. Since no definite racial occupational pattern had been established, Negro upgrading did not challenge the status quo.

The upgrading of Negroes became a crucial issue within the automobile unions soon after the organization of the industry. Negro workers were slow to participate in the automobile labor movement. This was due partly to their awareness of the latent antagonism of certain sections of white automobile labor but also to the fear that incurring management's displeasure might produce a further deterioration in their already inferior occupational status. Perhaps most important was the Negro's skepticism of trade-unions in general. The fact that some labor organizations excluded Negroes from membership, either officially or by tacit agreement, while still others confined them to membership in controlled auxiliaries,[20] made Negro automobile workers reluctant to join the automobile unions. This was in spite of the fact that the United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers–C.I.O. (U.A.W.–C.I.O.) from the very beginning accepted Negroes equally with white workers.[21]

The skepticism and sometimes hostility of Negroes to unions accounted for their absence during the wave of sitdown strikes in 1936–37. Some Negroes cooperated with Ford adherents who attacked unionists during the so-called "Battle of the Overpass" at the Ford Rouge plant in May, 1937. They comprised a majority of the workers who engaged in an abortive back-to-work movement at the Dodge main plant during the Chrysler strike in November, 1939, and participated as strikebreakers during the Ford Rouge strike in April, 1941.

Yet largely due to the vigorous organizational drive of the U.A.W.–C.I.O., the membership and general union participation of Negro workers have steadily increased. A 1940 survey of 110 U.A.W.–C.I.O. locals, comprising approximately 66 per cent of the total union membership, disclosed, for example, that 55.3 per cent of the Negroes in the plants covered, as compared with 76.7 per cent of the white workers, held union membership. At the present time Negro workers are probably as highly organized as white workers, since the Ford union-shop agreement of 1941 absorbed approximately 50 per cent of the Negroes in the industry. It seems unlikely that the picture has changed substantially in the intervening two years. On the other hand, Negro membership in the U.A.W.–A.F.L. is still relatively smaller than among white workers.

Negro participation in the affairs of the union locals has not been as great as membership figures would indicate, however. A substantial proportion of all automobile union members do not carry union participation beyond the stage of paying dues, and this seems more true

[20] See Herbert R. Northrup, "Organized Labor and Negro Workers," Journal of Political Economy, Vol. LI, No. 3 (June, 1943).

[21] Unless otherwise noted, subsequent reference to automobile unions concerns the U.A.W.–C.I.O., the dominant trade-union in the industry. The position of Negro workers in the United Automobile Workers–A.F.L. (U.A.W.–A.F.L.) is substantially the same. Negro membership in the independent automobile unions is virtually nonexistent.

of Negroes than of white automobile workers. Yet Negro workers have become increasingly integrated in the union movement in the face of continued discrimination by white workers in certain union locals; and even in the strikes referred to above, in which some Negroes allied themselves with management, others were found co-operating with the union.

Had organized labor been able to lower the barriers confronting the upgrading of Negro workers, a 100 per cent Negro union participation would probably have been assured. Many Negroes in the industry expected that the institution of seniority clauses in collective agreements would automatically insure equal promotion opportunities. In fact, this expectation was largely responsible for the union's moderate success with Negro employees during the early organizing period. But in the main these hopes did not materialize. Whereas layoffs and recall are administered primarily on the basis of straight seniority, promotions depend on both seniority and ability. Some contracts merely state that both criteria shall be considered, without indicating the relative importance of each. Others use the provision found in the 1939 Chrysler (U.A.W.–C.I.O.) agreement, which declares that promotions "are based primarily upon merit and ability, but when all things are equal the employe having the greatest seniority will receive the preference."

Under this arrangement Negro workers were almost entirely overlooked in the upgrading process. Where Negroes were concerned the term "ability" was construed as acceptability to management and to white workers in the new occupation or department. Numerous cases of alleged discrimination were carried to the union, but union officials, conscious of management's traditional Negro employment policy and aware of the racial antagonism of many of their own members, usually side-stepped the issue. As a matter of fact, refusal to face squarely issues of racial discrimination has been more prevalent among officials of union locals than among the national leadership. Local officials are more directly dependent upon the political support of their members and have thus been more responsive to the racial feelings of the white membership.

An aggressive position on the promotion question has been made even more difficult by the rise of racial bigotry and demagoguery in Michigan, particularly in the Detroit area, during the past ten years. The depression during the last decade affected Michigan automobile centers more severely than most urban communities, and the consequent intensified struggle for jobs produced a fertile field for the sowing of discord. As a result the Negro became a convenient scapegoat for such organizations as the Ku Klux Klan, the Black Legion, and other groups that began to flourish after 1931. For several years Detroit was even a hotbed of pro-Nazi activity.[22] The presence of a substantial southern white element—and the Poles to only a slightly less extent—with its transplanted racial mores came into natural conflict with the growing Negro group that had left the South largely to escape the status to which it had been confined there.[23] This underlying friction

[22] See Thomas Sancton, "The Race Riots," New Republic, LI (1943), 9–10.

[23] A March, 1943, analysis of the wage-record files of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission disclosed that, of 292,000 workers who had originally obtained their social security numbers in other states, 101,000 (approximately 35 per cent) were from southern states. Of these, 60 per cent came from four states—Tennessee, Kentucky, Texas, and Arkansas. Most of these migrants are believed to have arrived since 1940, obtaining employment primarily in the Detroit area. These figures, of thus contributed to the success of local subversive groups and produced a state of racial tension. In Detroit, where this tension was most acute, it was reflected in minor racial clashes in municipal schools, in public conveyances, and in Negro allegations of police brutality. Only a year before the June, 1943, outbreak in Detroit there occurred a riot involving white opposition to Negro occupation of Sojourner Truth Homes, a federal housing project.[24]

It was not surprising that in this atmosphere the union found it difficult vigorously to enforce the upgrading of Negro workers. Yet in several plants Negro workers were able to advance in small numbers before the war period. At Kelsey-Hayes, Murray, and Buick a few Negroes were upgraded before conversion. In the Ford Rouge plant where Negro employees had always shared in promotions (though to a less degree than whites), the upgrading of them continued after consummation of the U.A.W.–C.I.O. agreement in June, 1941. But outside of the Rouge plant promotions were rare. Most of the advance was probably due to union support, but the gains were far less than would have occurred had equal promotion opportunities been granted.

VI. CONVERSION TO WAR PRODUCTION

The cessation of civilian automobile output and conversion to war production placed Negro workers in an extremely critical situation. The sudden shift to the manufacture of war goods involved a larger proportion of skilled operations, such as machining and skilled assembly, and a somewhat smaller proportion of certain types of "rough" work characteristic of most foundry operations. This required considerable transfer and upgrading, particularly in the case of the Negro workers who were most heavily represented in departments whose relative importance had diminished.

The Negro's share in the job transfers and upgrading arising out of the conversion of existing plants and the opening of new establishments (such as the Chrysler Tank Arsenal) that took place during 1941 was extremely small. At the close of that year, for example, only 170 of the 5,000 employees in the Chrysler tank plant were Negroes and all were janitors.[25] The Briggs management of the new airframe subassembly plant placed a few Negro workers in unskilled positions. But it refused to employ them in skilled and semiskilled occupations and admitted them to the company's training school only after strong protests were made by Negro citizens and the union local. The first Negro graduates of the training school were placed in jobs below their skill.[26] Similar situations prevailed throughout the industry. Yet there were some notable exceptions. At the new Ford Rouge airplane-motor plant Negroes were employed in all capacities—skilled, semiskilled, and unskilled. Also at the Murray airframe subassembly plant a substantial number were placed in the better jobs.[27]

The agreement of September 17, 1941, concluded by the Office of Production Management between the automobile manufacturers and the unions provided for industry-wide seniority on transfers and gave priority on war-production jobs to workers already in the industry.[28] course, do not include thousands of recent migrants who had no previous jobs or were formerly in non-covered occupations.

[24] New York Times, March 1–3, 1942.

[25] Data supplied by Labor Division, Office of Production Management.

[26] Interviews, Detroit, July 10–18, 1941.

[27] Ibid.

[28] This agreement was amended on June 18, 1942.

With the complete cessation of civilian vehicle production early in 1942 this agreement forced management to arrange for the orderly transfer of thousands of employees to war work. As already indicated, this compelled the transfer of large numbers of Negroes to totally different types of jobs and necessarily involved upgrading in numerous instances, particularly in view of the high seniority of many Negro workers.

The policy described above was put into operation slowly and piecemeal as it concerned Negro workers. Because of this, Negro employees and organizations interested in Negro welfare became increasingly restive. Viewing the problem as serious, the U.A.W.–C.I.O. executive board, after an investigation, adopted late in September, 1941, a resolution which follows in part: "The sharp curtailment in automobile production further intensifies the problem regarding racial discrimination and if such discriminating acts are not stopped it will mean almost total unemployment of Negro union members." The board established an interracial committee to investigate questions of employment discrimination and directed the union locals to take similar action.[29]

Meanwhile, small numbers of Negroes were being transferred or upgraded to semiskilled or skilled war-production jobs which previously had been held exclusively by white workers. This was stimulated by the insistence of Negroes, top union officials, and representatives of the federal government that Executive Order 8802, promulgated June 25, 1941, for the purpose of prohibiting employment discrimination in government departments and war plants, should be observed.[30]

[29] The committee was abolished in July, 1943.

[30] This order has been amended by Executive Order 9346, issued May 27, 1943.

White employees finding themselves working with Negroes for the first time were frequently antagonistic. Considerable opposition developed in Flint General Motors plants over this issue, while in the Detroit area numerous strikes, some of them severe, occurred. Among these were two at Packard (November, 1941, and June, 1943), four at Chrysler (February and June, 1942), two at Timken-Detroit Axle (July, 1942), and one at Hudson Naval Ordnance (June, 1942). General outbursts of race feeling in automobile centers coincided with those occurring in the plants. The most violent was the Detroit race riot in June, 1943. Less severe outbursts occurred in Saginaw and other automobile centers.

In each of these strikes over Negro employment and upgrading the U.A.W.–C.I.O. national leadership gave its official support to the Negro workers and co-operated with representatives of government agencies in insisting upon the repression of discriminatory actions by many of the white workers. But in numerous instances the union local leadership, while disclaiming sympathy with white strikers, failed to show the aggressiveness exhibited by the national officers.

In spite of the opposition of prejudiced elements among white labor, the transfer of regular Negro employees to war work was largely completed by the middle of 1942. The hiring of new Negro workers has also progressed to such an extent that Negro employment in the industry is now substantially higher than the normal peacetime level. A U.A.W.–C.I.O. survey conducted in April, 1943, covering 389 individual establishments (which included a few plants outside the industry) tabulated 676,275 workers, of whom 54,398 (8 per cent) were Negroes. The forty-one General Motors plants covered employed 7,156 Negroes out of 146,617 workers. Negro employees comprised 4.9 per cent of the total and were found in thirty of the forty-one plants. Of eighteen Ford plants covered, with a total pay roll of 138,626 wage-earners, nine plants employed 17,656 Negroes, 12.7 per cent of the total labor force. The study covered fifteen Chrysler plants employing 58,538 workers. Twelve of these establishments employed a total of 4,909 Negroes, 10.3 per cent of the entire labor force. An analysis of available records shows, however, that the increase in Negro employment has been confined primarily to the traditionally large employers of Negro labor. Little progress has been made thus far in eliminating artificial hiring restrictions in those establishments that have never used Negro workers in any capacity.[31]

The upgrading of Negro workers in accordance with their seniority and ability, and the hiring of trained Negroes in occupations for which they are qualified, have not registered as much improvement as the volume of Negro employment. The occupational distribution of Negro employees is unquestionably superior to the situation prevailing prior to the war, yet many Negroes are still working in positions which do not fully utilize their skill.

The wider utilization of female workers has contributed to the increased racial tension in automobile plants. It was noted earlier that the industry employed relatively few women during peacetime. Two problems have arisen with the rapid increase of female employment. The Negro woman worker found the door to employment almost completely closed when the industry first began to seek female labor.[32] Even Ford was slow to hire Negro women. Though the Willow Run personnel office began employing white women in the spring of 1942 it was not until December, 1942, that Negro women were hired, and then only in small numbers.[33] A similar situation prevailed at most of the other concerns. During the latter part of 1942 Kelsey-Hayes, Murray, and Briggs employed a few Negro women, but, on the whole, barriers to their employment have been far greater than those facing white females or even Negro males.

The U.A.W.–C.I.O. survey referred to above disclosed that only 74 of 280 individual establishments in the industry using female labor employed Negro women, who accounted for 3 per cent of the total female employment. General Motors employed 407 Negro women, 1.1 per cent of total female employment, and these women were found in only thirteen of the twenty-seven plants using female labor. Only seven of the fifteen Chrysler plants employing female workers used Negro women, but they accounted for 10.4 per cent of the total female labor force. The proportion of Negro women to total female employment in Ford establishments (five of the eight Ford plants using female labor employed Negro women) was 3.6 per cent. Approximately two-thirds of these Negro women were employed at the Rouge plant.[34] While a substantial number of Negroes have been employed at the Willow Run bomber plant, such employment is still far more restricted that at the Rouge establishment, particularly in the case of Negro female labor.

[31] Results of this survey made available by the U.A.W.–C.I.O. research department.

[32] The few Negro women employed prior to the war were used almost exclusively as janitresses or in other menial capacities.

[33] Michigan Chronicle, December 12, 1942.

[34] U.A.W.–C.I.O. research department.

A growing number of Negro women are being used in production jobs, but the union survey revealed that a majority are still employed in such capacities as janitresses and matrons. A few have recently been used as government inspectors. Although total Negro female employment has been rising, artificial hiring restrictions continue to prevent full use of the available supply of Negro females. In spite of the acute labor shortage in the Detroit area the United States Employment Service estimated that in June, 1943, there were 28,000 Negro women currently available for war work, the largest neglected source of labor already resident in the area.[35] Stated a Michigan U.S.E.S. release of April 9, 1943, on labor-market developments in the Detroit area: "Although employers [the majority of whom are automobile concerns] do not show discrimination against non-whites [in job orders] it is still difficult to place them in jobs other than those at unskilled levels. This is particularly true of non-white women." Yet the utilization of Negro women has gone further in the Detroit area than in other automobile centers.

The second problem accompanying the introduction of female labor concerns the relations of white women workers to Negro men. The increased employment of male Negro workers in the more desirable positions and the rise in white female employment have brought the two groups into contact. Resentment among white workers, male and female, over white women working in close proximity to Negro males has become a potent factor in creating race tension in the workshop.[36]

[35] Statement of War Manpower Commission area director for Detroit.

[36] This was one of the major grievances advanced by white workers, especially by white women, during the Packard strike in June, 1943.

VII. CONCLUSION

It is apparent that the answer to the question posed in the introduction to this paper lies in the fact that the exigencies of war production produced an accelerated change in the Negro's traditional position in the automobile industry. Rather than a portent of a deterioration in this already inferior status, racial strife in specific plants and in automobile manufacturing communities generally is to a large degree the result of the feeling that the superior status of the white worker is challenged by Negroes. But in the eyes of white automobile labor this challenge has not been confined to industry. The Negro's historically inferior economic status has been linked with a subordinate civic and social position. And white workers have tended to look upon Negro progress away from this subordinate position as a bid for social equality. The factor of social status has been as responsible for racial outbreaks in automobile plants as the issue of economic or material advancement.

This view has been reinforced by a change in the Negro's position in the community as a whole. The change has been most noticeable in the Detroit area, where most of the plants employing Negro labor are located. Thus, Detroit has received the bulk of the recent Negro migration to automobile centers, and Negroes already in the community have manifested the most marked improvement in economic status. Negro automobile workers and the Negro business and professional class whose economic position has improved correspondingly have moved in large numbers to middle-class white neighborhoods, while their former living quarters have been occupied by incoming Negro job-seekers. With more money to spend, Negroes who seldom left the slum areas for amusement have been patronizing downtown theaters and restaurants. They have been driving better cars, are better dressed. A more aggressive attitude has become evident among most Negroes in the community.

Large sections of the white community have viewed these developments with misgivings. There has thus arisen a rather widespread demand for Negro segregation—in the plant and in the community. White Packard strikers repeatedly disclaimed any opposition to Negro upgrading but urged the segregation of Negroes in particular departments.[37] According to one observer, shop stewards in several Chrysler plants have made the same demand.[38] Such an arrangement could only result in a permanently inferior industrial position for Negro automobile workers. Similar proposals have been made by white groups with respect to housing and establishments catering to the general public.

Dismal as the situation appears from the foregoing analysis, the problem of integrating Negroes into industry, while admittedly difficult, need not necessarily involve group conflict and work stoppages. If trade-union leadership could inculcate in white and Negro workers a spirit of fair play and if at the same time management and the union could be induced to work together in eradicating the sources of friction, the problem would lose much of its gravity. Recent experience in the Briggs plants justifies this statement.

Historically, Negro employees at Briggs were largely confined to the paint department (where they worked as sanders and sprayers) and to unskilled occupations, such as janitor work, trucking, and material handling. In 1942, however, the company revamped its employment policy with a view to integrating male and female Negro workers throughout its operations. Foremen and other supervisors were instructed in the management's nondiscrimination policy and are held accountable for violations within their jurisdiction. Moreover, management and the union local leadership work in close co-operation. The union local educates its membership in the necessity for practicing real democracy, and shop stewards are directed to see that the policy is carried out in the shop. Several weeks before a Negro worker is introduced into an all-white department the employees there are notified. Any prospective friction is settled before the Negro is brought in. Likewise, Negro applicants are carefully but impartially selected by means of performance tests and interviews (one of the personnel officials is a Negro, though he is not confined to handling Negro applicants). Upon graduating from the company training school Negroes are properly impressed with the importance of their trail-blazing work in the plant.

This carefully designed program has yielded dividends, for in recent months several hundred Negroes have been hired into semiskilled and skilled positions in the company's plants without race friction.[39] This performance is particularly outstanding because of the rigid racial-occupational pattern that had prevailed at Briggs for over twenty years. A few other plants have turned in similar—though less notable—performances. No insuperable barriers appear to prevent the rest of the industry from following in this path.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

[37] See Detroit Free Press, June 4, 1943.

[38] Interview, Washington, D.C., July 13, 1943.

[39] See New York Times, April 11, 1943.

"Colored Soldiers may be Good Enough to Risk Their Lives In Battle for Their Country. They Are Not Good Enough To Operate A Philadelphia Street Car."

The New York Times

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1944

BEHIND PHILADELPHIA'S CRISIS

The Philadelphia rapid-transit strike continues in defiance of the United States Army. The ugly situation revealed by the strike remains. In the background there may have been an inter-union struggle, with James McMenamin's "general emergency committee" trying to undermine the Transport Workers Union. But Mr. McMenamin resorted to a weapon which the TWU and the parent CIO have specifically abjured. He called in race prejudice. He and his followers are willing to paralyze a city of two million people, to cut war production, to impede war shipments—and for what purpose? Not for more pay. Not for better working conditions. No, in his own words, to "get a written guarantee that there will be no further hiring of colored operators and no further instruction of the colored operators now in training." In Mr. McMenamin's opinion colored soldiers may be good enough to risk their lives in battle for their country. They are not good enough to operate a Philadelphia street car.

Mr. McMenamin and his followers have refused to call off their strike after the Federal Government has taken over and after the Army has announced that it will operate the Philadelphia rapid-transit system with or without their aid. They are now under threat of legal penalties. The suspicion has been voiced that persons hostile to the war purposes of the United States had something to do with stirring up this trouble. But why should this sinister achievement have been possible? One can't believe that six thousand rapid-transit workers deliberately set out to make a mockery of collective bargaining, to stir up racial conflict, to weaken the fighting fronts, prolong the war and lengthen the American casualty lists.

They cannot have had these things in mind. Let us say that some, perhaps a good many, went out because they were afraid not to—afraid of violence, afraid of being abused, afraid of being considered disloyal to their fellows. There must remain a good many others, the dominant element, who struck because their minds were distorted by a mean and ignorant prejudice. We all know that there are organized groups in this country whose leaders fatten on such prejudice. They are trying to destroy American democracy from within just as earnestly as the Nazis and Japanese are trying to destroy it from without. Their poor dupes in Philadelphia seem to have learned little during the past four days. Nevertheless one must hope and believe, also, that there will be no weakening on the basic issue of equal opportunity in employment, without regard to race or creed. This is a case where compromise would be indecent.

NOV 19
...ional Council

Fascism

THEY STILL CARRY ON!

NATIVE FASCISTS:

how to spot them and stop them

TEXT BY U. S. WAR DEPARTMENT

WHY

G. M. WORKERS ARE ON STRIKE

MICHIGAN CITIZENS COMMITTEE

Howell Van Auken, State Chairman

Patrick S. Nertney, Detroit Chairman

Dorothy K. Roosevelt, Exec. Director

809 HAMMOND BLDG., DETROIT 26, MICH.

G. M. PREPARES FOR STRIKE

CHICAGO TRIBUNE, OCTOBER 23, 1945

CIO Rejects Work Week of 45 Hours

REPORTERS BANNED AT GM WAGE TALKS

NEW YORK TIMES, OCTOBER 20, 1945

Detroit Fre

SPORTS

MICH., WEDNESDAY, NOVEM

.GM Seeks t

Entry of C

Corporation Sug of Wage Meeting

G. M. REJECTS C. I. O. OFFERS

CHICAGO TRIBUNE, NOVEMBER 24, 1945

BRANDS PLAN DEMAND FOR 'ABDICATION'

Proposal to Boost Pay Withdrawn

METRO FINAL

COLD
Partly Cloudy
Continued Cold
Sun rises 7:33 · sets 4:56
DETROIT TEMPERATURES

The Detroit Free Press

On Guard for Over a Century

Vol. 115—No. 204

Five Cents

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1945

GM TURNS DOWN ARBITRATION

HOME

THE CHICAGO SUN

READ THE TRUTH

THREE CENTS

Tel. ANDover 4800

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1945

VOL. 4—No. 356

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. COPYRIGHT 1945 BY FIELD ENTERPRISES INC.

G.M. VETOES UNION PLAN

G.M. VETOES UNION PLAN

GM Won't Bargain

DETROIT TIMES
Only Detroit Newspaper Carrying Scripps-Howard Service and United Press
Detroit 31, Mich., Tuesday, Nov. 27, 1945 5 Cents

COMPLETE WANT ADS
8 STAR
MARKETS, PAGE 18

THE CHICAGO SUN
HOME
THREE CENTS
Tel. ANDover 4800
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1945
VOL. 4—No. 239

READ THE TRUTH

Gen. Motors Bars New Wage Parleys

The Detroit Free Press
On Guard for Over a Century
CITY EDITION
Five Cents
Vol. 115—No. 208
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1945

SNOW

GM SNUBS U.S. CONCILIATION

The Detroit News
City Edition
RACES, PAGE 24
32 PAGES C FIVE CENTS
THE HOME NEWSPAPER FOR MORE THAN 72 YEARS
A Politically Independent Publication, Not Affiliated With Any Group of Newspapers
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1945, 73rd Year, No. 96

THE WEATHER

PEACE TALKS BEGIN; GM TAKES NO PART

CITY EDITION

PHILADELPHIA RECORD

NO. 26,924 — TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1945. — THREE CENTS

UAW OFFERS WAGE ARBITRATION TO AVERT GENERAL MOTORS STRIKE

---

etroit Free Press

SPORTS — CLASSIFIED

MICH., WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1945 — 13

GM Seeks to Delay Entry of Conciliators

Corporation Suggests U.S. Stay Out of Wage Meeting; UAW Protests

---

ETRO FINAL

TION

COLD

Partly Cloudy
Continued Cold

DETROIT TEMPERATURES

The Detroit Free Press

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1945 — On Guard for Over a Century — Vol. 115—No. 204 — Five Cents — CITY EDITION

GM REFUSES TO ARBITRATE; U.S. CALLS PEACE PARLEY

UAW WILL FIGHT AUTO PRICE RISE

DETROIT FREE PRESS, NOVEMBER 3, 1945

THE WEATHER

Cloudy and continued cold. Tuesday cloudy and warmer with occasional rain.

(U. S. Weather Bureau Forecast)

Buy VICTORY Bonds and Stamps

The Detroit News

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1945, 73rd Year, No. 96

THE HOME NEWSPAPER FOR MORE THAN 72 YEARS

Largest Trading Area Circulation, Weekday and Sunday, of Any Michigan Newspaper

City Edition

RACES, PAGE 10

28 PAGES — C — FIVE CENTS

GM MUM ON NEW TALKS

PRICE RISE

DETROIT FREE PRESS, NOVEMBER 3, 1945

THE WEATHER
Cloudy and continued cool. Tuesday cloudy and warmer with scattered rain.
(U. S. Weather Bureau Forecast)
Buy VICTORY Bonds and Stamps

The Detroit News

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1945, 73rd Year, No. 96

THE HOME NEWSPAPER FOR MORE THAN 72 YEARS

Largest Trading Area Circulation, Weekday and Sunday, of Any Michigan Newspaper

City Edition
RACES, PAGE 10
32 PAGES C FIVE CENTS

GM MUM ON NEW TALKS

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

VOL. 71—NO. 171—PART ONE

ST. LOUIS, TUESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 27, 1945—3 SECTIONS—22 PAGES.

FIVE CENTS

GM REFUSES TO RESUME PAY PARLEY

RAIN
Cloudy with Rain and Moderate Winds
DETROIT TEMPERATURES

The Detroit Free Press

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1945

On Guard for Over a Century

Vol. 115—No. 207

Five Cents

METRO FINAL

GM TURNS DOWN NEW TALKS

SNOW
Light rain changing to snow, little change in temperature
DETROIT TEMPERATURES

The Detroit Free Press

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1945

On Guard for Over a Century

Vol. 115—No. 208

Five Cents

METRO FINAL

PEACE TALKS TO OPEN WITH GM ON SIDELINE

REPORT OF NATIONAL CITIZENS COMMITTEE ON G.M.-U.A.W.-C.I.O. DISPUTE

The Michigan Citizens Committee believes that the issues involved in the General Motors-UAW strike are of vital public concern. In order that these issues may be more widely discussed and understood, the Michigan Citizens Committee has published this report of a committee of distinguished Americans who studied the verbatim record of collective bargaining negotiations between the union and the corporation.

45 outstanding citizens were invited to Detroit by the UAW to examine the complete transcript of negotiations. In spite of short notice, 14 of those invited met in Detroit December 4 and 5, constituted themselves as a National Citizens Committee on the GM-UAW-CIO dispute, elected their own officers and conducted their own investigation. The report on this page is the complete text of their findings.

Because of the importance to the whole country of the issues involved in the current work stoppages in the General Motors Corporation, we were glad to accept the invitation of the UAW-CIO to examine the transcript of its negotiations and to inquire into the problems raised thereby. We have also sought and received from the Corporation materials setting forth more fully its position. C. E. Wilson, President of the General Motors Corporation, H. W. Anderson, Vice President, R. J. Thomas, President of the UAW-CIO and Walter P. Reuther, Vice President, were invited in person to present further information to the Committee. Mr. Thomas' office informed the Committee that he was out of the city. Mr. Reuther appeared and answered questions put to him by the Committee. The Corporation did not respond to the invitation.

The Committee has read the 739 page record of the negotiations between the Corporation and the Union and has sought all available information on both sides of the controversy.

Our review of this very complex and strategic industrial controversy leads us to believe that the public should be more fully apprised of certain facts. The members of this Committee have reached a number of conclusions which they hope may contribute to the public understanding of the controversy and to the measures necessary for effecting a just and prompt settlement of the issues. We have neither been asked, nor have we sought, to serve as conciliators or otherwise to usurp the functions of the active government agencies in this matter. But in view of the apparent stalemate in negotiations and mounting losses from the continuing stoppages, we deem it proper to express our opinion on the issues.

As background for consideration of the issues, we here present a summary of the contentions of each side of the controversy.

THE CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

For the Union:—

The controversy arose over the Unions proposal of a 30% wage increase under the terms of its existing contract with the Corporation. Part of this increase, it urged, should be allocated to an equali-high levels of profit is an essential element in the American economic system.

The Corporation submitted general figures to contradict the Union's estimates, but declined to furnish the detailed components on which these general figures were based on the ground that this was not a proper subject of inquiry for the Union.

The Corporation's representatives constantly urged the Union to eliminate questions of prices and profits and to confine the collective bargaining to the wage issue. It denied that the effects of wage increases on profitability was a proper subject for negotiations with the Union and refused to make any wage increase offer tied to an agreement not to raise prices. Prices, like profits, it urged, are the Corporation's, not the Union's business. It characterized the Union's effort to bargain on these matters as unwarranted invasions of management's province. It also introduced material which suggested that unionism in America should be reduced in the scope of its bargaining power.

The Corporation also offered counter-proposals of (1) Six percent wage increases along with a change in the wage and hours law to make 45 hours the standard work week in place of the present 40 hour provision; (2) wage increases sufficient to make up for the cost of living increases since 1941 of about 10%. Both proposals were to be free of any stipulation as to prices.

The Corporation rejected the Union's proposal for arbitration on the ground that the terms of the proposal would represent an "abdication" by management.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CITIZENS COMMITTEE . . . . . .

1. After reading the transcript of the negotiations between General Motors and the UAW-CIO, we believe it would be a contribution to public understanding of the dispute if the transcript were published.

2. The Committee was impressed by the serious and statesmanlike approach of the representatives of the Union as shown in the transcript of the negotiations. If President Truman and his advisors had had access to the Union's 30% demand was subject to reconsideration if and when management proved the 30% wage increase was impossible without a raise in prices.

7. Considerable data from the General Motors Corporation and U. S. Government reports were submitted by the Union in support of its contention that the Corporation can afford a substantial wage increase without raising prices. Outside of a flat denial supported by figures based upon sources not open to the Union, to this Committee or to the public, no convincing evidence has been

THE CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

For the Union:—

The controversy arose over the Unions proposal of a 30% wage increase under the terms of its existing contract with the Corporation. Part of this increase, it urged, should be allocated to an equalization fund to make wage rates more uniform throughout the Corporation, part to a social security fund and the balance to a blanket increase in all hourly wage rates. The Union asked this wage increase to make up for reductions in take-home pay resulting from shorter hours and downgrading of workers, and to advance the general purchasing power necessary to support full employment.

A cardinal point in the Union's proposal was that this increase be granted without any increase in the prices of General Motors' products. It submitted much data in support of its contention that the Corporation can afford such raises, while keeping present prices, and still earn high profits. Increased volume of output, tax reductions, new equipment and higher labor productivity were analyzed in detail. Union estimates suggested that price reductions might even be possible if volume is as high as recently predicted by the President of General Motors.

The Union constantly reiterated its willingness to reconsider its 30% proposal if the "arithmetic" of the Corporation's financial condition showed such a wage boost would necessitate price relief or undue profit cuts. It refused to eliminate from the negotiations the consideration of the effects of its wage demands on prices and profits and requested Corporation data to show what these effects would be. It elaborated an argument for stable prices and rising purchasing power as necessary to the health of the highly productive American economy.

In the final stages, the Union offered to refer the issues to arbitration for a binding decision, after rejecting the Corporation's counter proposals (noted hereafter) on the ground: (1) that the first proposal (that the work week be increased from 40 to 45 hours) would contravene federal legal standards for hours of work and would increase unemployment, and (2) that the second (an offer of a wage increase of 10%) was predicated on the Corporation's plan to seek higher prices to meet the added wage cost. It asked for the Corporation's answer within 24 hours to the proposal of the arbitration principle.

FOR THE CORPORATION:—

For the Corporation:—

The Corporation rejected the proposal of the Union for a 30% increase in wages, stating that this would bring a general increase in costs that would necessitate a 30% rise in prices and lead to inflation. It derided the Union's computation of Corporation profits, expected costs, volume of production and labor productivity. It emphasized the value of low prices and the key role of high production levels in achieving them and argued that the possibility of

2. The Committee was impressed by the serious and statesmanlike approach of the representatives of the Union as shown in the transcript of the negotiations. If President Truman and his advisors had had access to this record, we believe they would have been in a position to insist more firmly on the full use of the collective bargaining process before suggesting intervention of the government. We believe that the full possibilities of collective bargaining have not yet been exhausted, and that it is not too late to renew the efforts toward a voluntary settlement. We urge that the two parties immediately resume negotiations.

3. The Union's request to participate in a determination of the wage issue on the basis of full knowledge of the basic wage-price-profit relations is not a "taking over" of management. This request is based on a principle widely approved by responsible leaders of business, labor and government. Although the setting of actual prices remains a managerical function, at a time when there is a threat of inflation, the level of prices becomes a matter of legitimate public concern.

4. If collective bargaining fails to result in a settlement, we recommend that any fact-finding commission appointed by the President be authorized and directed to determine what increase in wages can be given on the basis of the Corporation's ability to pay without increase in prices. The Corporation's ability to meet a wage increase is a sound factor in the determination of wages, both in good times and bad.

5. From the record it is clear that the Union in its refusal to accept a wage increase that involves price increase has lifted the whole matter of collective bargaining to a new high level by insisting that the advancement of Labor's interest shall not be made at the expense of the public. The Union has shown a sense of social responsibility that indicates its growing maturity and is certainly to be commended. The public has a vital interest in holding the line of present prices against inflation.

6. Because of confusion in the public mind, the Committee wishes to emphasize that the record of the proceedings clearly shows that the Union's proposition was not "30% or else". The transcript repeatedly shows that can afford a substantial wage increase without raising prices. Outside of a flat denial supported by figures based upon sources not open to the Union, to this Committee or to the public, no convincing evidence has been submitted by the Corporation to show that the Union's wage proposal cannot be met.

8. While future profits cannot be computed with absolute certainty, it is common practice to base the prospects of them upon experience and estimated volume and costs. The Union is asking that wages be projected in such a forecast as other cost factors and profits are projected. It is the concensus of the Committee that the Union is making a legitimate claim in asking that wages be negotiated in terms of future expectations.

9. With regard to the Union's 24 hour ultimatum on the acceptance of arbitration, the public should be reminded that the ultimatum was on the question of the willingness of the Corporation to arbitrate and not on the basic wage demands, which would have required longer consideration.

10. The Committee reviewed carefully the Union's supporting argument for the maintenance of take-home pay. It was based on the thesis that purchasing power must be commensurate with production. The Committee agrees with this principle of wages since without adequate purchasing power to buy the products of industry there can be neither full employment nor general prosperity.

MEMBERS OF NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, Pastor, Central Methodist Church, Detroit, Michigan, Chairman.

Professor Harry A. Overstreet, Professor Emeritus, College of the City of New York, formerly Head of Dept. of Philosophy and Psychology. Vice Chairman.

Mrs. J. Birdsall Calkins, National President, YWCA, New York City, Secretary.

Professor Ernest W. Burgess, Professor of Sociology, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois.

Rabbi Leon Fram, Temple Israel, Detroit, Michigan.

Robert E. Garrigan, Assistant Director, New Council of American Business, Washington, D. C.

John B. Hanna, Church Counsellor of the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches in the U.S.A., New York City.

Leon Henderson, Research Institute of America, Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Dorothy S. McAllister, National Consumers League, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Frank W. McCulloch, Director, James Mullenbach Industrial Institute, Chicago, Illinois.

Mrs. Bonaro W. Overstreet, Author, Lecturer, New York City.

Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, DD, LLD, Bishop of Episcopal Diocese of Missouri.

Mrs. M. E. Tilly, Secretary, Christian Social Relations, Woman's Society of Christian Service, Southeastern Jurisdiction, the Methodist Church, Atlanta, Georgia.

Walter White, Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, New York City.

December 6, 1945

Printed in U. S. A. 43

NATIONAL CONSUMERS LEAGUE

For Fair Labor Standards

An Organization Through Which Informed Citizens Unite to:

- investigate conditions
- stimulate public opinion
- promote progressive legislation

"We have broken a path perhaps, but there are mountains to climb, great roads to be opened up—no rest for us yet, we must keep on." Florence Kelley

"We have broken a path—"

The names of those who founded the League in 1899 and all who have given it leadership are written large on the rolls of economic and social progress. Secretary of the Consumers League from 1899 to 1932 was Mrs. Florence Kelley, described by Newton D. Baker as the most brilliant woman America ever produced. Mr. Baker was president of the League for many years. Its other presidents have included John Graham Brooks, John Winant, John H. Commons, Josephine Roche and Dr. Alice Hamilton.

• • • •

The National Consumers League introduced to the United States the idea of minimum wage laws as a means of putting floors under wages, particularly for unorganized, unskilled workers. The legal defense of these laws before the Supreme Court was historic. Facts concerning the cost of living and current rates of pay in many fields were gathered by the League and embodied in a series of briefs which stressed the benefits to health, efficiency and general welfare arising from enlightened labor statutes.

• • • •

As a natural sequel, the League helped to secure passage of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act. It has opposed any weakening of the Act, either by legislation or by crippled enforcement, and is actively working for substantial improvement in the law.

• • • •

As labor saving machinery and greater efficiency in production is developed, shorter working hours for working men and women become possible. But experience shows that the possibility is not realized without some struggle. The hours that can be exacted from workers in exchange for a living wage have been gradually shortened since the advent of the Industrial Revolution by the persistent efforts of labor unions, while production has been increased. However, women workers are not 100 per cent organized and long hours have persisted in many fields in which women predominate, necessitating bulwarks against exploitation. The League's briefs in support of hours' laws for women were based on research showing the consequences to the individual and to the community of long hours and industrial strains, particularly for women. There are now but four States in the Union which have no statutory regulations of women's work days.

• • • •

In 1904, when few States had awakened to the prevalence of child labor, the Consumers League issued the first handbook showing the inadequacy or total lack of child labor laws in many States. It also published the first model child labor law and fostered the organization of the National Child Labor Committee. The idea of the Federal Children's Bureau, conceived by Lillian D. Wald and Mrs. Kelley, was first promoted by the National

Weeds Among the Flowers

Consumers League and, in 1912, largely through its efforts, the bill establishing the Bureau was passed by Congress.

• • • •

Industrial home work has been the subject of investigation and attack by the Consumers League for nearly half a century. The tenement work-shop has been scotched to a marked degree by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

• • • •

It was through the League, particularly in New Jersey, that the terrible hazards of radium painting became known and subjected to new safety standards.

"But there are mountains to climb—"

Full and productive employment, with use of our entire industrial power, in peace as well as in war, is essential to the economic welfare of all Americans. The National Consumers League believes this challenge is the greatest this country has ever faced. An economy of full production is the only one under which a democracy can flourish. We have seen in our time how failure to achieve it is attended by the poverty and economic insecurity which breeds dictators and wars.

• • • •

"With full employment and full production, we can have a complete and adequate social security system at a modest cost," Senator Wagner pointed out in the U. S. Senate, adding, "If we do not achieve full employment, it is all the more important that we have a complete and adequate social security program."

The United States has accepted the principle of social security for old age and unemployment as evidenced in the platforms of both political parties, but we have planned too meagerly. Not only have millions of people been left out, such as agricultural workers, small business men, employees of non-profit agencies, seamen, etc., but most of our State unemployment compensation laws are inadequate, providing too little insurance for too short a time. Moreover, the demands for sound health insurance measures and more adequate facilities for public health are becoming more insistent.

• • • •

Full employment does not mean the employment of children, particularly in factories. The Consumers League supports the recommendation of the Children's Bureau that the State child-labor laws be so amended that no child under 16 be employed during school hours, and no child under that age be allowed to work in a manufacturing or mechanical plant at any time.

At present thirty-three States have a lower minimum; in fact, in twenty-eight States the minimum is 14 years.

• • • •

Full employment at a living wage is necessary for the economic stability of the country. Over twenty million wage earners in the United States are unprotected by Federal minimum wage laws. Whole fields of employment, such as retail stores and the service trades, are not covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act. Twenty-two States have no minimum wage laws and those in many other States cover only women or have not been used nor enforced to the limit of their provisions. In periods of scanty employment, competition forces the pay of the unskilled worker below the cost of living, jeopardizes the wages of the skilled, and produces a dangerous downward spiral which draws into its vortex the entire public.

• • • •

America itself is faced by a flood of its own displaced citizens, in the form of migrant workers. The number of farm migrants alone is estimated from 700,000 to a million and a half. We must solve a whole battery of social and economic problems if these rootless thousands are not to become second-class citizens. The National Consumers League is urging that a vigorous attack be made, both on the Federal and the State level, so that recruiting be rid of its present abuses; housing and camps be responsibly managed with due regard to the sanitation and safety of the entire community; medical care and education be assured migrants; the benefits of social security, fair labor standards, and labor legislation be applicable to them, and that settlement laws be revised so the migrants are not deprived of their rights as citizens.

• • • •

The Consumers League vigorously supports both Federal and State legislation providing that men and women receive equal pay for equal work. Six States now have such laws and national legislation is needed.

But the Consumers League is unalterably opposed to the so-called "Equal Rights Amendment" which would "eliminate all discrimination under the law between the sexes." It is convinced that this would be a tragic step backward because it would throw into constitutional jeopardy all the Federal and State wage and hours laws applying to women, and laws prohibiting the employment of women in hazardous occupations. Furthermore, it would deprive wives and mothers of needed support and so endanger family relationships.

"Great roads to be opened up—"

Low standards reflect themselves as a contagion, spreading to all classes and persons. Not only the economic welfare of our nation, but the peace we have won, is dependent upon the well-being of the great working majority of our people.

At San Francisco, when the people of the United Nations determined "to promote social progress and better standards of life," they recognized that the impoverished may become the prey of dictators and make war in the hope of improving intolerable conditions. By embodying in the Charter the organization of an Economic and Social Council, the international organization indicated that it was ready to go further than phrase-making on these fundamental concerns.

America, rich in resource, invention and industrial organization, must lead the way in demonstrating that human freedom is compatible with economic security. It is not a task to be left to labor alone. All groups rise or fall together in the fabric of our economy.

"A new challenge is offered to the people of America to establish along with political democracy an opportunity through productive employment to earn an income sufficient for the basic needs of food, clothing, shelter, health, recreation and cultural pursuits, and assurance to every individual of whatever race of an equal and unsegregated opportunity for worship, protection in time of unemployment, illness or need, and full political and civil rights." *

* From the Statement of The Commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"—We must keep on."

THE NATIONAL CONSUMERS LEAGUE
For Fair Labor Standards

Alice Hamilton, M. D., President

Elizabeth S. Magee, General Secretary — Hyman Schroeder, Treasurer

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Everett Moore Baker, Chairman — John Howland Lathrop, Vice Chairman

Beulah Amidon
Mrs. John B. Andrews
Mrs. W. Russell Bowie
Mrs. Henry White Cannon
Grace L. Coyle
Grace B. Drake
Walter Frank
Alice P. Gannett
Mrs. Frederick Goff
Pauline Goldmark
Carter Goodrich
Marvin C. Harrison
Mrs. Elinore M. Herrick
Florence M. Kelley
Nicholas Kelley
Florina Lasker
Mrs. Thomas McAllister
Mrs. Louise Leonard McLaren
Mrs. Emily Marconnier
Mrs. Francis D. Pollak
Josephine Roche
Hyman Schroeder
Louise Stitt
Mrs. Florence Wyckoff

STATE CONSUMERS LEAGUES

The Consumers League of:

Connecticut, 36 Pearl St., Hartford, Conn.
Delaware, care of Delaware Hardware Co., Wilmington, Del.
Kentucky, Louisville Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
Massachusetts, 31-A Mount Vernon St., Boston, Mass.
Michigan, 222 Louise Ave., Highland Park, Detroit, Mich.
New Jersey, 790 Broad St., Newark, N. J.
New York, 170 Fifth Ave., New York City, N. Y.
Ohio, 348 Engineers Bldg., Cleveland 14, Ohio.
Rhode Island, 109 Washington St., Providence, R. I.

Issued Winter 1945 by

The National Consumers League

348 Engineers Building — Cleveland 14, Ohio

Telephone: GRamercy 7-3987

ADOLPH HELD, Chairman
JOSEPH BASKIN, Secretary
DAVID DUBINSKY, Treasurer
JACOB PAT, Executive Secretary

Executive Committee
CHAS. S. ZIMMERMAN, Chairman
J. BRESLAW
N. CHANIN
B. GEBINER
I. H. GOLDBERG
P. L. GOLDMAN
A. MILLER
I. M. MINKOFF
E. SCHWARTZMAN
W. WOLPERT

IRVING SALERT, Director

LABOR REPORTS

ISSUED IN THE INTERESTS OF AMERICAN ORGANIZED LABOR

175 EAST BROADWAY NEW YORK 2, N. Y.

JULY 1946 VOLUME III NO. 15

IN THIS ISSUE

Page

Labor's Role in Race Relations
By: Emil Rieve, President
Textile Workers Union of America 2-3

Labor on Guard 4-5

July Items of Importance 6-7

The Ku Klux Klan: An Association of Stooges
By: Elliott Carlton 8-9

Cartoon - Look Out! Danger Ahead! 9

LABOR'S ROLE IN RACE RELATIONS

By: Emil Rieve, President of the Textile Workers Union of America

In the fight against discrimination and for tolerance and a functioning democracy in all spheres of American life, the trade union movement has a tremendous responsibility and potential.

We are all aware of the varied national, racial and religious composition of the American working population. We have learned, from the tragic experiences of Europe under fascism, that attacks upon the security and freedom of any segment of a population undermine the rights and freedoms of the entire society; and we of the trade union movement are particularly aware that in a nation where attacks upon minorities are given sanction, free trade unions, free churches, and free schools cannot long endure.

What, then, are the responsibilities of trade unionists who would root out the ugly sore of bias and discrimination?

We must jealously guard the traditions and practice of free collective bargaining, the essence of industrial democracy. We must practice democracy in the day-to-day operations of our organizations. We must throw our full weight behind the political fight for wider democracy.

If it is necessary for the Congress to pass a law stating that it shall be the policy of our government to enforce what already has been written into our Constitution - the right of every American to equal opportunity regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin - we must fight for that law.

If it is possible through legislation to widen the economic, political and social benefits of the people, to give them full employment, better housing, more nearly adequate education and medical care, higher minimum wages and reasonable prices, we must fight for these laws.

If the representatives of our democracy fail either to be representatives or to be democratic, we must replace them with men of tolerance who hear the voice of the people and take heed.

I am proud to say that the members of the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, are aware of the restrictions now placed upon the practice of real democracy and tolerance and of the possibilities, through political action, of removing these restrictions.

At the recent national convention of TWUA-CIO, the full weight of the organization was placed behind such measures as the bill for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, legislation to abolish the poll tax as a requirement for voting, and a wide variety of health, housing, education and social welfare bills now before Congress.

A permanent FEPC will not automatically guarantee equal opportunities in employment. Ideal conditions of health, education and economic opportunity will not automatically create a climate of complete understanding and tolerance or erase the problems and sufferings of the Jewish people, the Negro people, or any other minority group. Prejudice is blind. Its roots strike deep in the hearts of the stubbornly ignorant. But I firmly believe that the broad social and economic legislation for which trade unionists can and should work will go far to reduce discrimination to widen the opportunity of all our people.

* * * * * * * * * * *

LABOR ON GUARD!

DEMAREST REMOVED FROM OFFICE

(L.R.) NEW YORK Horace A. Demarest, New York State Deputy Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, who was one of the incorporators of Alpha Pi Sigma, a fraternity which later blossomed forth as The Knights and Women of the Ku Klux Klan, was removed from office on May 6th, by direction of the president of the State Tax Commission. The request for Demarest's removal was made by Attorney General Nathaniel L. Goldstein, who has started proceedings to revoke the Klan's charter. The Attorney General stated that "he was unfit to hold public office," that his conduct under questioning had been evasive, and thus he had violated the "spirit of the recognized rules of conduct expected of public officials."

* * * * * * * * *

"YOUTH" MEETING IN DETROIT

Detroit, Mich. (L.R.) A Gerald L. K. Smith rally, under the auspices of Christian Youth for America, was held at Detroit's Fort Shelby Hotel on April 29th. The total absence of youth in the composition of the audience of some 500 was notable. The meeting was heavily picketed by labor elements, with over 300 police on hand to maintain order.

Lorence (Larry) Asman was chairman and sponsor of the meeting. Opening the meeting with an invocation, he promptly launched into a violent anti-Semitic tirade. He was followed by Donald Lohbeck who pictured himself as a martyr because of his conviction for comtempt of court in connection with the A.W. Terminiello trial in Chicago. Lohbeck told the meeting that "the Jews are a scourge, and must be dealt with, for if we don't hang together now, we shall hang separately." Hearty "amens!" from the audience punctuated these and similar statements. His address was interrupted by the entrance of Gerald Smith who was greeted by the crowd with a standing ovation.

Smith treated the audience to his rabble-rousing routine covering such subjects as his conviction for contempt, disturbances at several of his previous meetings, A. W. Terminiello's suspension and his own forthcoming Nationalist Congress at St. Louis on May 27th and 28th.

* * * * * * * * * *

KISTER GROUP MEETS

CHICAGO, ILL. (L.R.) The Christian Veterans of America held a meeting at Kimbal Hall, Chicago, on April 24th, approximately 250 persons attending. Frederick Kister, who was recently convicted of contempt of court, presided.

Kister gave the group one of his "book reviews," which he uses as springboards for his anti-Semitic sentiments. He said that the Jews were responsible for the murder of 300,000 in Spain; that out of 388 Communists who assembled in Petrograd to form the first Soviet government, 265 were Jews; and that the chaotic conditions prevailing in Germany in 1932 were caused by Jews.

Elizabeth Dilling, the other speaker of the evening, supplemented Kister's remarks by discussing "the Jewish problem in Spain."

* * * * * * * * *

ANDERSON PLEADS GUILTY

CHICAGO, ILL. (L.R.) Charles Anderson, Jr., recently defeated anti-Semitic candidate for Congress in the Chicago primaries, pleaded guilty on May 7th, in Chicago's Felony Court, to the crime of assault with a deadly weapon. The charge arose out of Anderson's shooting a fifteen year old boy whom he surprised in a prank on his automobile.

The Judge, William V. Daly, ordered a Behavior Clinic examination for Anderson, stating that he wished to see whether the defendant had "a cog or two loose upstairs." On May 17th Anderson was placed on two years' probation by Judge Daly.

* * * * * * * * *

MEETING OF COMMITTEE FOR AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (L.R.) Jeremiah Stokes of Salt Lake City, leader of the Pro-American Vigilantes, a group engaged in the publication of anti-Semitic literature, was the principal speaker at a meeting of the Committee for American Independence, held in Chicago, on April 26th. The chairman was Earl Southard. Among those present were William J. Grace, Charles Anderson and Frederick Kister.

* * * * * * * * *

JULY ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE

RUTGERS LABOR INSTITUTE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J. (L.R.) The 16th Annual Institute of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, held as usual in cooperation with Rutgers University, met in New Brunswick on June 5 to 8. The general topic was "Labor's Part in Building a New World."

Despite mid-summer weather, an average of 200 delegates participated vigorously in as many as 7 discussions daily. Two forums were broadcast. Topics included Labor Management Cooperation, Labor Legislation, International Affairs, the Labor Veteran, a showing of film strips on combating intolerance prepared by the Jewish Labor Committee, and almost every current problem of importance to Labor.

John D. Connors of the Workers Education Bureau and the State Federation's planning Committee merit plaudits for the valuable program of this pioneer Labor Institute.

* * * * * * * * * *

BISHOP O'HARA ABOLISHES NEGRO CHURCHES IN BUFFALO DIOCESE.

BUFFALO, N. Y. (L.R.) The Catholics of the United States have in recent years taken the lead in fighting racisms and advancing programs calculated to promote better inter-racial understanding, thus making a large contribution not only to American civilization but to world peace. Perhaps more than any other denomination, certainly as much, the Catholics have waged an earnest campaign to wipe out racial intolerance and to build up in its place a spirit of brotherly love between men of all races and nationalities. As a result of this program membership in the Catholic Church in the United States has increased tremendously.

Especially impressive is the inroad the Catholic faith has made among the Negro people of this country now represented as 300,000 converts. Much of this increase is doubtless due to the Catholic approach to the race problem in America during the past few years. Racial discrimination has diminished more and more in the Catholic Church and its doors have been opened wider to welcome Negro converts. Catholic leaders have manifested a keen desire to attract Negroes to the faith in all sections of the country, including the Southern states where the customs of most white people run counter to the true principles of the Christian religion.

* * * * * * * * * *

JULY ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE

TERMINIELLO FINED $100; SMITH SENTENCED TO 60 DAYS.

CHICAGO, ILL. (L.R.) After a hectic court appearance marked by the sentencing of his colleague, Gerald L. K. Smith, on a contempt charge, the suspended priest, Arthur W. Terminiello, was found guilty of disorderly conduct by a Municipal Court jury in Chicago and was fined $100. Terminiello's lawyer, Maximilian St. George - long identified as legal counsel for anti-Semitic individuals - has moved for a new trial.

The charge against Terminiello grew out of disorders which broke out at a G. L. K. Smith rally in Chicago the night of Feb. 7. The trials of Smith and Frederick Kister, anti-Semitic leader of the "Christian Veterans of America," have been deferred until Terminiello's appeal is heard.

The courtroom was crowded with many Smith followers, members of such organizations as "We the Mothers Mobilize" and Kister's "Christian Veterans." Smith's contempt sentence of 60 days was pronounced after he distributed circulars in the hall outside the courtroom assailing "hysterical Jews", "agitators", and "communists." Commented Judge John V. McCormick in sentencing Smith:

"If the conduct of you and your associates in and toward an American court of law affords a test of your attitude toward other American institutions, then it behooves Americans to look squarely at this philosophy which confronts them!"

* * * * * * * * * *

BISHOP TOOLEN STATES VIEWS ON ARTHUR W. TERMINIELLO, FASCIST EX-PRIEST.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. (L.R.) Replying to a recent inquiry by a citizen of Mobile, Alabama, the Rt. Rev. T. J. Toolen, Bishop of the Diocese of Mobile, splendidly expressed his sentiments concerning the suspended priest, Arthur W. Terminiello, rabid Jew-baiter and aide of Gerald L. K. Smith, and concerning Terminiello's anti-Semitic publication, the "Christian Crusader." Bishop Toolen said in part: "We are very much disturbed about this, but there is nothing that I can personally do. I have gone as far as I can and he is no longer under my jurisdiction, but is on his own, so I have no authority over him nor can I do anything about it.

"I am not afraid that Terminiello will undermine the record of the Catholic Church, as he has been suspended and is not a Catholic in good standing. The people in this section of the country well understand that, so he cannot do much harm from a Catholic viewpoint."

* * * * * * * * * *

THE KU KLUX KLAN: AN ASSOCIATION OF STOOGES

By: Elliott Carlton,
LABOR REPORTS Columnist

Times have changed.

It used to be that, if you looked inside a pillow case, you'd find a pillow - but now the chances are more than fair that you'll find some ugly guy's head. Still, some similarity does exist, for both pillows and heads are often stuffed with one thing or another.

That's true, of course - but the head that you find inside a pillow case is not stuffed with brains. Of that you can be sure.

* * * * * * * * * *

How can a guy who goes around with a pillow case over his head be said to have a brain? No matter how ugly the guy is, it simply doesn't make sense.

Especially is this true when one considers that most of these dummies live in the warmer sections of our country. And, to top it all off, these dopes spend a lot of their time around bon-fires!

* * * * * * * * * * *

But the Kluxers were short changed in other parts of their anatomy, too. They not only lack brains; they don't seem to have hearts, either!

Think it over: No one with a heart could possibly formulate a program based on hatred. No one with a heart could find so much evil within himself that he is literally forced to run counter to everything that is characteristic of the American tradition: freedom of religion, freedom of speech, the right of trial by jury - the firm belief that neither religion nor color should deprive a person of equality of opportunity.

* * * * * * * * * *

No brains, no hearts - is it any wonder that the Ku Kluxers are also stooges? Right now they're stooges for a few racketeers who are clipping them for ten spots or so for the privilege of going around with pillow cases on their heads.

Guys that dumb can be dangerous. The danger does exist, for instance, that the organizing drive now being launched by an awakened labor movement will stir the feudal barons into mobilizing the pillow case boys for their own anti-union purposes.

* * * * * * * * * *

So union men everywhere have a job to do.

We've got to show the unorganized that the attempt to divide workingmen along the lines of color, religion, creed or national origin is based on the old idea of divide and rule.

It's an idea gotten up by those who believe more in profits than they do in human beings.

It may well be the idea of selfish employers and they will not hesitate to use the Kluxers to spread their poison.

* * * * * * * * * *

But workingmen possess a really great advantage.

Workingmen have learned that a man is a workingman because he knows how to work with his hands and his brains - and that is why we care nothing at all about a guy's ancestry or relgion.

After all, the first Christian, who gave us the Golden Rule, was born a Jew.

HE WAS ALSO A CARPENTER.

---

21 - Labor
also pub/church & social action

RECEIVED
SEP 16 1946
Southern Regional Council

"CHRISTIAN LABOR RELATIONS"

Sermon Preached by

R. Edward Dowdy

Associate Minister

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

Washington, D. C.

Sunday Morning, September 1, 1946

"CHRISTIAN LABOR RELATIONS"

The first picture of God in the Bible is that of the Creator, the Divine Workman. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. On one of the significant occasions in his ministry Jesus is reported to have said thus, "My Father worketh even unto now, and I work." Is it not significant that the highest revelation of God came to us incarnate in the human form of a carpenter?

Tomorrow is Labor Day. One wonders what that Carpenter of Galilee would be saying were he standing in this pulpit today or were he standing in any one of the thousands of pulpits that represent his message to the world of this day. I was very much interested the other day when studying in the library of the National Labor Relations Board to discover along side a volume that was labeled "History of American Working Class," a black bound volume labeled "Holy Bible." I think this is no accident, for all of the interests of the American working class are exactly the interests that lie within that Holy Book.

Yet, for the most part, the Church this day will be silent even as it has in the long past because it has been by-passed or has lost its courage and daring to speak on this important issue. When I discussed with the librarian in that National Labor Relations Board library the material that I was seeking for this sermon, she seemed a little bit surprised, and asked the pointed question, "Are you proposing that the church begin to interfere in the labor problem"? To which I replied, "Not at all, it is my firm conviction that if the church had been on the job, if Christians had been sharing as they ought to share in the total life of the community, there would be many fewer labor problems than there are today."

When the industrial revolution brought to Western civilization the machine age and all of its attendant evils, it was the Church and the forces of religion that rose up together in order to protect women and children from the exploitation of unscrupulous employers. In his volume, "Labor and Tomorrow's World," Bishop Oxenham of the Methodist Church points out the contrast between the position of his church in the early beginning of the labor movement and its present position. If you will exchange the word "Baptist" for Methodist I think it would be equally as true for us.

Said he, "Methodism has become increasingly respectable, it has become wealthy, it is in grave danger of spending the strength of its mighty forces for the purpose of maintaining its amazing organization. Methodism came from the coal pits of Britain, from the poor of the great industrial cities, from the laborers in the field. We dare not forget the pits from which we were dug, nor the rocks from which we were hewn. Methodism has never been, and please God, never will be, a class institution, but it must not in its day of institutional success become separated from the workers of the world.

"In the beginning of the labor movement it was the Methodist local preacher who became an outstanding leader. It was in large measure due to the contribution of Methodism that the British labor movement has refused the revolutionary tactics of the Communist and the destructive doctrine of class war. The preaching of the early Methodist was heard upon the Sunday, but the man who preached was at work on Monday. They saw in him the doctrine he really believed. They found them good, because he was good. They chose him to represent them and he representing them, also represented his Lord.

"It was for such reasons that the British laborers when parading continental streets carried the banners that surprised the workers of Europe; banners that spoke of God as Father and Christ as Saviour. Is it too much to believe that the day may come when we may find the labor movement of America carrying banners in Labor Day parades that speak also of God the Father, and of Christ his Son, and what will be much more significant, of practices in the economic life that are fit to be called Christian?"

With this bit of historical background from a Methodist Bishop, does it not seem a little bit strange all the recent storm and furor that occurred in a neighboring state when a Methodist minister was appointed to act as a Chaplain to labor. You would have thought that something revolutionary had been proposed and that it was entirely unheard of for the Christian Church to be interested in the affairs of working men. So today I choose to speak with you about "Christian Labor Relations," hoping that I may speak simply enough and plainly enough as not to be misunderstood, but with such clarity as to point the way for Christian participation in our world so that in fact we may rightly represent the Christ whose name we bear.

In a college textbook of 1905 entitled, "Labor Problems" by Adams and Sumner I found a statement that might well characterize one of our major difficulties even to this moment. Said they, "We believe that the gravest differences of opinion about the labor problem are caused by the failure to view the problem broadly. The labor problem is greater than the problem of trade unionism, far more important than the problem of industrial peace." This is true, even in our day. But if you ask the man on the street to give you his opinion about the American labor situation, he is very likely to say to you something about either a present, past or pending strike.

Suppose I should have asked you your opinion about labor on those mornings when you were walking to work during this past year when the Capital Transit workers were out on strike? I probably would have gotten a great deal of comment about the inconvenience to you and about the right to strike in a public utility, but it was only on a second thought that any of us considered the more basic, the broader and the moral problems that were involved. Because there are moral problems involved in our labor policy, I am suggesting this day that we speak about them in light of the standards of Jesus.

The first Christian axiom with reference to labor is this: Labor is more than a commodity. This is exactly contrary to the belief and practice of so many in our world. There are many who say that labor is a commodity, it is to be bought like any other commodity in the open market and the price you pay is determined by the law of supply and demand. Now it is precisely this pagan standard which has brought us so much industrial chaos in the last ten or fifteen years. The Christian standard which proclaims that labor is not a commodity means that the work done by human beings cannot be divorced from their personal needs and rights. Recall that parable of Jesus when an employer paid the same wages to the man who had been working just an hour as he did to the one who had been fortunate enough to have been employed for the whole day. He was not paying for the work done, but in view of the equal needs of the men and their families.

Man hours are not to be bought as one would buy scrap iron or coal. Jesus said, "One is your master and all ye are brethren." The Christian ideals that all men are brothers and children of a common Father, God, is not abrogated in the industrial world. This concept has only slowly become a part of Christian practice. Social change always comes slowly. You will recall that it was a long time after the coming of Jesus of Nazareth who proclaimed that all men are brothers, that Christians gave up slavery. In the middle ages it was also this Christian concept of brotherhood that helped to undermine serfdom, a modified form of slavery. In our own day, where you will find industrial relationships at their best you will discover that men, whether employers, managers, foremen or day laborers, are conceived as co-workers.

A corollary to this axiom that labor is not a commodity is that there are certain rights which the laborer has, among which are the rights to organize and to bargain collectively. At times Christians have been in the vanguard striving to make this right a reality. At other times they have frustrated any attempt for workers to exercise this right.

I can point to you a community in a neighboring state where workers in a certain factory were receiving far less than an adequate wage, while the personal owners of that factory were reporting millions of dollars of income every year. When the pastor of the local Baptist Church began to be interested in the rights of his members, asking for the privilege of their being organized and bargaining with the employer, the employer became exceedingly hostile to this interference into what he called "his own private business."

About that time there appeared in the community one of the Pentacostal sects and the employer saw in the coming of this new religious group an opportunity to further his own ends. So upon the promise that they would preach only a jolly, happy gospel and never touch upon any moral issues that might concern industry, he footed the entire bill of constructing a handsome meeting place for this Pentacostal sect. He believed that religion ought to be a sort of opiate, that it ought to make people content with indecent housing, that it ought to make them satisfied to take home pay checks that would not pay next week's grocery bill. This good employer thought of himself, and indeed was thought of by the whole community, as an outstanding Christian man. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The exercise of this right of organization and bargaining also includes the responsibilities of such a right. Here I think organized labor has failed, in some degree, to live up to what ought to be expected of it. To be sure, just as there are employers who violate their sacred responsibilities, so there are unions that equally violate their sacred responsibilities.

This leads me to the second Christian axiom. Labor-management relationships are the mutual responsibilities of both labor and management. If these mutual responsibilities are to be exercised properly, then there are two or three things which must be done. The first is, there must be good faith; that is, that an honest effort is made both by labor and by management to make the agreements work which have been mutually accepted. If either party by its neglect or by its wilfull guidance allows the relationship to break down so that work stoppage becomes inevitable, then that is a violation of this Christian standard. Work stoppage which brings unemployment is not just an economic phenomenon, it is also a moral evil. Unemployment breaks hearts, destroys homes, unbalances minds and visits upon innocent children the same kind of privation that war itself, the greatest of evils, brings.

During the year 1944 which is the most recent year for which the total compilation is now available, there were some 4,616 strikes in which 3,069,300 workers were involved in a work loss of 24,360,000 man days. These statistics compiled by the Bureau of National Affairs in no way reflect the suffering, the anxiety, and the fear that was in the homes of those three million workers; nor the privations for lack of milk and cod liver oil and the essentials for a child's life reflected in the loss of income for 24 million man days. Although nearly 25% of these strikes brought substantial gains to the workers, in 51% of the cases, the workers went back to work pending the final decision. This seems to indicate to me that had the relationship been on a higher plane of good faith, the work stoppages and the consequent loss of time might have been avoided with equally as good results to the workers and to the employers alike.

You will be interested to note that in 60% of the work stoppages involving 72% of the workers and 81% of the total idle time, solutions were brought by Government. Indeed this seems to be one of the areas where people look to Government for solutions in each case. That is why the librarian was concerned about my interest in the matter, for she was a little bit afraid that perhaps I was going to propose that the church go into the labor relations field. Would you not agree that the church is already in the labor relations field: that if its activities were more successful there would be fewer occasions of violence and fewer occasions of work stoppages? For if men and women of good will, whether they be employers or employees, sat down together with the mind that was in Christ Jesus there would be little occasion for violence and little occasion for suffering.

The second thing that needs to be considered in the mutual responsibility of labor and management is that there must be continuous communication. The industries with the highest record of peace are those with machinery always in operation for contact between management and labor. Difficulty always arises out of failure to understand one another, whether it be in the case of a man with his secretary in an office or the great industrialist and a hundred thousand men in the plant.

The third essential in this Christian understanding is that there be respect for the re- ciprocal function each for the other. I doubt that the owner of an industry can ever put himself in the place of the men and women who tend the machines. And it is equally difficult for the worker to intelligently say what he would do were he the employer. But if each respects the functions and contributions of the other, there will be peace. Not a peace that is but an armed truce, but that peace which passeth all human understanding because each, motivated by the spirit of the same living Christ, will work together not only for the mutual advantage of each, but for the welfare of all humanity, as well.

There is yet another aspect to this area of Christian labor relations that I should like to touch on briefly. Not only have Christians an obligation one to another, but they also have an obligation to the whole world. Not only is the Christian concerned about an adequate standard of living for his own family, nor the maintenance of a certain level of culture in his own land; but we are indeed world citizens, and what affects us affects every human being in the whole world, and conversely what affects every human being in the world affects us. When we receive products from abroad like coffee and tea and rice and rubber, we cannot be concerned only to ask what price are we paying for it now. But the Christian must also ask "what wages were paid to the men and women by whose sweat the original product was produced?"

A recent Reuters report from Brazil indicates how deeply involved each of us is in the problems of labor the world around. According to this account, the Brazilian government used American money to dispatch 50,000 workers to the jungles of the Amazon in search of rubber during the war, and only 3,000 have returned. When the Brazilian authorities were interrogated in Parliament, the government admitted the facts, but refused to comment on them. Members of Parliament declare, however, that the entire 50,000 were abandoned to their fate in the fever ridden marshes of the upper Amazon. They charged that the large majority have perished from tropical disease and that the survivors are trying to find their way home in the face of insuperable difficulties. If this is only half the truth, it demands immediate action by the United States. The fact that we sought the rubber and paid for the costs of getting it out of the jungle posed on us an inescapable moral obligation to do all in our power to guard the welfare of those 50,000 workers. Simple justice and decency require that we, once and for all see, that human beings are not yet reduced to the level of surplus war machinery which can be abandoned at will.

A recent revision reveals that only 18,000 were sent into the jungle; but 17,000 failed to return. The United States sunk $300,000,000 in the project and received little rubber. I am prepared to go further than the "Christian Century" which reports this incident, because I believe that every single one of us who during the war were clamoring for tires for our automobiles, urging that rubber be found from whatever sources were available, we too, share in the responsibility for this awful atrocity. Our desire for full employment and adequate wages for the American worker and a just return for the employer and the holders of stock must now be met with equal concern for our brethren around the world.

If we fail to progressively inject the standards of Jesus into our industrial order, the consequences are most discouraging. On one hand lies the picture of increased industrial chaos with strike following strike, with everyone believing that a contract is no more secure than the moment may demand, that an agreement may be broken when it is expedient, that labor-management relations will forever be on the level of a dog and cat fight. The other alternative is that, as many people now fear, Communism will offer more to the workers of the world than our democratic way of life. Whether this threat be real or not, the fear of it is shared by many folk.

What if the Communist should seem more interested in the worker, than the Christian whose Lord said, "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." What if the Communist manifest more of racial brotherhood, then we in whose holy writ it is recorded that all men are created in the image of God, and in another place that God has made of one all the nations that dwell on the face of the earth.

To these two alternate ways, the way of industrial chaos and the way offered by Communism, there is yet a third and Christian way. It is essentially the way of Christian brotherhood which is no different in this area of industrial relations than it is in any other realm of life. I think Jesus would simplify it by saying as he did when asked what was the great commandment, after saying that the first of all was to love God supremely, he then went on to say, "a second like unto it, thou shall love thy neighbor as thy-self."

If someone should ask him in this day, "And who, sir, is my neighbor"? He might well coin another parable, not unlike the parable of the Good Samaritan, but this time instead of a single man, beaten and left half dead along the Jericho road, Jesus could easily picture the entire human family, laborers, employers, managers, stockholders alike, equally frustrated and beaten and discouraged along the road of life and each one needing equally the love, the compassion, and the help of each other. Industrial peace, prosperity and hope for the world today and tomorrow can be brought about only when men and women learn to behave in their relationship one toward the other in the same spirit of Christ. One is our Lord and Master and all we are brethren.

Georgia Workers Education Service
353 COURTLAND ST., N. E. WALNUT 1961
Atlanta 3, Georgia

September 5, 1946

Mr. Henry W. Chandler
Atlanta Federation of Trades
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Brother Chandler:

Enclosed is a descriptive pamphlet announcing the inauguration of Georgia Workers Education Service.

This program is receiving the wholehearted support and cooperation of the Georgia labor movement.

If you have an education committee in your local union, will you please refer this communication to them for action. If you do not have a special committee, please have your local officers go over this material, or better yet, have the union set up a committee for this purpose.

The facilities offered by this program will bring many benefits to our membership. The service is rendered without discrimination. We should see that all who desire to participate have an opportunity to do so.

Workers education is becoming more and more meaningful to the labor movement. In this complex world, if our members are to keep up with the times we must continue to study and learn. New responsibilities bring new challenges.

This is a call to all members to get behind this movement and make the Georgia workers education program a real success.

Fraternally yours,

E. L. Abercrombie
George L. Googe
Thomas W. Culpepper
Carmen Lucia
Artie White

314 I.P.E.U.

Education Plan Announced For

for meetings and special events. It will help put on local radio programs.

The policy and program of the Georgia Workers Education Service is governed by an Executive Committee consisting of:

E. L. Abercrombie

George L. Googe

Thomas W. Culpepper

Carmen Lucia

Artie White

314 I.P.E.U.

Education Plan Announced For Georgia Workers

A unique educational service in Georgia has been announced by Frank McCallister, Director of the Georgia Workers Educational Service, with headquarters in Atlanta at 353 Courtland Street, N. E., across from the Atlanta Dental College. The Georgia Workers Education Service is an association of representatives of the public, American Federation of Labor, and the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

It is financed by labor organizations, committees, and foundations interested in the field of adult education. The service is made available to interested groups any place in the State at no cost.

As the sponsoring groups see the purpose of the Georgia Workers Education Service, it is:

To bring about more effective functioning of trade union members within their respective organizations and communities.

To develop a more intelligent appreciation of the common interests of organized labor and the community as a whole.

To promote better human relations within the union movement and between the unions and the general public.

The Service offers to help interested groups plan educational programs for their members to suit the interests of the particular groups. That might cover such things as discussion groups, forums, institutes, conferences, public speaking classes, how to take part in meetings, the how and why of collective bargaining. It will furnish teachers for such groups.

For the less problem-minded, the Service will help set up hobby clubs for dabblers in the arts and crafts, singing groups, dramatic clubs. It will send out program leaders to conduct parties with games for kids and grown-ups.

Mr. McCallister has scoured the country for experienced program leaders in the field of adult and workers' education and by September expects to have his staff complete. The Service will also run a circulating library of books and films and will supply movies for meetings and special events. It will help put on local radio programs.

The policy and program of the Georgia Workers Education Service is governed by an Executive Committee consisting of:

E. L. Abercrombie, Southern Representative, Laundry Workers International Union, AFL.

William H. Crawford, District Director, United Steelworkers of America, CIO.

Thomas W. Culpepper, President, Atlanta Division Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL.

Kenneth Douty, Georgia Direc-

(Continued on Page Two)

(Continued from Page One)

tor, Textile Workers Union of America, CIO.

Charles H. Gillman, Regional Director, CIO.

George L. Googe, Southern Representative, AFL.

Carmen Lucia, Vice President, United Hatters, Cap, & Millinery Workers International Union, AFL.

George S. Mitchell, Director of Veterans Services, Southern Regional Council.

James Moore, President, Atlanta Local, United Transport Service Employees of America, CIO.

Ira De A. Reid, Professor of Sociology, Atlanta University.

Thomas J. Starling, Southern Regional Director, International Union of Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, CIO.

Paul L. Styles, Regional Director, National Labor Relations Board.

Artie White, Atlanta Representative, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL.

An Advisory Council to the Executive Committee includes:

Elizabeth Bowles, Director, Industrial Dept., YWCA.

Harris P. Dawson, Jr., Regional Director, Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor.

Grace Towns Hamilton, Executive Secretary, Atlanta Urban League.

C. L. Harper, Executive Secretary, Georgia Teachers and Education Association.

Joseph Jacobs, Director, Labor Service Bureau.

M. J. Merlin, Secretary of Local Branch, Jewish Labor Committee and Workmen's Circle.

Henry J. Meyer, Chairman fourth Region, Wage Stabilization Board.

Frederic Meyers, Regional Director, Labor Bureau of Middle West.

Walter Paschall, News Editor, WSB.

Harold L. Trigg, Assoc. Director, Southern Regional Council.

In addition to the Executive Committee and the Advisory Council, Georgia Workers Education Service is to have the assistance of a Consultative Committee composed of the leading national figures in workers' education.

The present staff includes:

Frank McCallister: 38, Director. Mr. McCallister has been very active with labor problems throughout the southern region for many years. He served as Executive Secretary of the Southern Workers Defense League, a non-partisan agency to investigate violations of labor's civil rights, until he accepted a post as labor member of the Fourth Regional War Labor Board. While on the War Labor Board, he also served on a panel of the National War Labor Board which resolved an important dispute involving the southern textile industry. He served on the southern Cotton Textile Commission, which was set up to administer the War Labor Board ruling. At the annual meeting in Birmingham this spring of the Southeastern Division of the American Association for Adult Education, Mr. McCallister was elected to the Executive Committee.

Herman Erickson: 41, Field Program Leader. Mr. Erickson received his M. A. degree from the University of Minnesota, and has taught in high school in Wisconsin, in the Workers Service Program in Minneapolis, and has served as director of the St. Paul Labor College.

Doris W. Naiman: 25, Field Program Leader. Mrs. Naiman attended Agnes Scott College in Decatur, and received her A. B. from the University of North Carolina. She has taught in the Atlanta Public Schools and has been active in educational and recreational work for various public service and labor organizations.

Ruth Warren: 32, Office Secretary. A native of Illinois, Miss Warren worked for the U. S. Department of State as a member of the Embassy staff in Rio de Janeiro before coming with GWES.

Rebecca Boorstein: 26, Stenographer. A graduate of the University of Georgia in 1940, Miss Boorstein was recently honorably discharged from the WAC after two and a half years service, and has worked for the Georgia Department of Labor, the Social Security Board, and the U. S. Department of State.

Joining the staff in September will be Mrs. Olive M. Haskins, who is at present teaching Workers Education in the Extension Division, University of Michigan. She is now President of the Michigan League of Women Voters. Her husband formerly taught at Mercer University and Mrs. Haskins was connected with the Georgia Public School system.

A Labor Extension Service for Wage and Salary Earners

To Equip Labor with Knowledge and with Training in Its Use

Extension of Remarks of

Hon. Elbert D. Thomas

of Utah

in the Senate of the United States

Thursday, June 5, 1947

Not printed at Government expense

United States Government Printing Office, Washington : 1947

747395—21391

(Not printed at Government expense)

Congressional Record

United States of America

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Labor Extension Service

REMARKS

OF

HON. RAY J. MADDEN

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 16, 1947

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have this day introduced a bill to broaden and develop the extension system as established by the act of May 8, 1914, and acts supplemental thereto. This bill will aid in extending useful and practical information among the wage earners of the United States and increase the resources and facilities available to them. It will establish a labor extension service in the Department of Labor, administered by the Secretary of Labor. It will greatly aid the creative capacities of workers who, together with farmers, comprise the Nation's basic productive assets.

I wish to extend for the benefit of the Members, a few questions and answers which will simply and concisely reveal the contents of this legislation.

Question. What is the labor extension service bill?

Answer. A bill to establish for wage and salary earners a publicly supported Labor Extension Service in the United States Department of Labor.

Question. How would the service operate?

Answer. Through a cooperative plan between the Department of Labor, colleges and universities in the States and local groups of wage and salary earners requesting this service.

Question. What kind of services?

Answer. Classes and discussion groups for wage and salary earners who need to know more about their everyday problems in industry and in their communities. Institutes and forums, motion pictures, library services, research projects, help with the conferences and exhibits. Under this plan, workers would be able to secure teachers in labor history, labor economics, collective bargaining, labor journalism, labor-management relations and civic and community programs.

Question. How did the plan start?

Answer. This plan has been discussed by labor organizations and other interested groups for the past 10 years. The National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education was formed a year ago to frame such a bill and organize support for it. On the committee are officers of a number of international labor unions, education and research directors, persons from labor education agencies, and from interested colleges and universities. The committee serves as a clearing house through which all groups concerned may cooperate for this legislation.

LOCAL PLANNING

Question. How can a local union get labor extension service?

Answer. By having an education committee which—

First. Decides what services are needed.

Second. Draws up a request for these services and confers with the nearest college or university which is cooperating with the State labor extension board making sure that the local requests are forwarded to this board.

Question. Will such services benefit organized workers only?

Answer. No. Any group of workers may apply for these services.

STATE BOARDS

Question. Who will be responsible for the labor extension service in each State?

Answer. A State labor extension board, consisting of at least 9 and not more than 15 members, working in cooperation with approved institutions.

Question. Who will appoint this board?

Answer. The Governor of the State will choose the majority from a panel submitted by bona fide labor organizations State-wide in scope. The other members will include the head of the State labor department or industrial commission, representatives of institutions participating in the program, someone whose main work is in adult education, and, where possible, someone from the field of workers' education.

Question. What will be the duties of the State Labor Extension Board?

Answer. The Board will:

First. Receive the local requests.

Second. Approve the services given by cooperating universities and colleges.

Third. Make sure that funds are spent without discrimination of race, color, creed, sex or national origin.

Fourth. Submit plans and reports to the United States Secretary of Labor.

Question. How will the cooperating institutions be selected?

Answer. First. The State boards, following local requests from groups of workers, will determine which institutions will develop and offer services for which these funds may be allocated.

Second. Standards set up by the Department of Labor for these services will have to be met by these institutions.

Third. Through local extension centers conveniently located and through the use of union halls, wage and salary earners in every part of a State may be serviced.

FEDERAL OFFICE

Question. Where and how will the labor-extension service be set up?

Answer. In the United States Department of Labor, under a director of labor extension directly responsible to the Secretary of Labor and appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Question. Will the director have advisers?

Answer. Yes. The bill provides for a National Labor Extension Council of 15 members "to advise the Secretary of Labor and the Director in formulating general policies."

Question. Who will serve on such a council?

Answer. A majority will be chosen by the Secretary of Labor from a panel submitted by bona fide labor organizations national in scope. The other members will be appointed by the Secretary of Labor from cooperating institutions conducting labor-extension services, from workers' education organizations, research agencies operating in the field of social science, and someone whose chief interest is adult education.

FUNDS

Question. How much money is needed for this service?

Answer. The bill provides for an initial sum to be determined by the Senate Labor and Welfare Committee for the first year; doubled the second; tripled the third year and each year afterward.

Question. How will the money be divided?

Answer. Every State meeting the necessary requirements will receive funds based on the number of wage and salary earners in that State compared with the total number in the United States.

Question. Will these services be entirely paid for by Federal funds?

Answer. No; Federal funds will cover three-fourths of the cost; one-fourth will be provided locally.

Question. How will this contribution be raised?

Answer. It may be provided by the State Legislature, by cooperating institutions, by local groups from their own budgets, by moderate fees, or by contributions, such as rent of space, equipment, light, heat, or janitor service.

SERVICES LONG OVERDUE

Question. Is there a precedent in Government for this service?

Answer. The Morrill Act of 1862 and other acts of Congress provide agricultural extension services for families of 6,000,000 farm operators, costing in Federal funds $23,500,000 a year. This is the first bill to provide a labor-extension service for 50,000,000 wage and salary workers.

759882—22423

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1947

(Not printed at Government expense)

United States of America

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Labor Education Extension Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOR C. TOLLEFSON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 16, 1947

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following statement explaining H. R. 4078, known as the Labor Education Extension Act, which I introduced in the House of Representatives July 2, 1947:

This bill is a constructive piece of labor legislation. It has the united and wholehearted support of all labor organizations. This is what labor says:

AFL: "Such a service would give workers the material and tools with which to meet their educational needs."

CIO: "All affiliated international unions, councils, and local industrial unions are urged to support this program by resolution, publicity, financial assistance, and communications to their respective Members of Congress, and cooperate with the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education toward this end."

Railroad labor: "Our association endorses the principle and objectives of this proposed legislation."

Through this bill labor is asking for better access to and more training in the use of the modern tools of facts and reason. This will promote orderly collective bargaining and peaceful industrial relations. It will likewise promote wider and wiser exercise of the rights and responsibilities of citizenship in the community, State, and Nation.

HOW THE SERVICE WOULD WORK

The bill would extend to some 42,000,000 wage and salary earners a program similar to that carried on by the Agricultural Extension Service for families of 6,000,000 farm operators.

Instruction would be provided at times and places and in forms convenient for wage and salary earners.

Teachers would be drawn from institutions of higher learning cooperating in the program.

Requests by groups of workers for classes would be worked out with these institutions and presented to State boards for approval.

Approved requests would be incorporated in a State plan and budget to be presented to the Secretary of Labor. Upon approval, he would request the Secretary of the Treasury to release from funds earmarked for the several States, payments to the cooperating institutions.

Sums deemed by Congress to be adequate to meet the demands for this service are to be appropriated and in each instance matched by at least 25 percent from sources within the State.

WHAT IS ASKED FOR BY WORKERS

This list is based on specific requests from workers, reported by universities, unions, and teachers of labor education classes.

Basic courses: Economic problems of American industry; economics of individual industries; labor legislation and law; social security; collective bargaining; history of the labor movement (related to economic and political history); consumers' problems; current national and international events; health and safety; government; community programs; public relations.

Tool subjects: Parliamentary law; public speaking; shop steward training; time and motion studies; grievance procedures; publicity workshop; radio workshop; writing; techniques of workers' education.

Other services: Research projects; exhibits, pictorial material; conferences; library services; moving pictures; occasional speakers.

NEED FOR THE BILL

Typical reports from universities conducting labor extension programs:

Wisconsin: "Winter off campus service is needed. Field staff should be placed immediately in 9 cities to serve 35 cities and towns in those areas. Estimated teaching staff needed is forty-four. Summer and winter institutes on campus are in demand. Training for union leadership requested. Research and preparation of printed material for union use and more audio-visual material are needed immediately."

State College, Pennsylvania, 1946: "Provided a week's summer training on its campus for 400 steelworkers. Is repeating this program for 1947. Textile and hosiery workers and many other unions are planning similar institutes. AFL, CIO, and railway organizations are making inquiries about educational services. At request of steelworkers, extension classes in union halls were undertaken, autumn 1946. More than 75 locals requested classes in contract administration, grievance and adjustment procedures, and related subjects leading to improved industrial relations. Penn State lacks resources to meet more than a fraction of these growing demands."

Chicago: "Because of lack of staff we reached less than 5 percent of the union members who want to attend classes. Requests for case materials have come from 60 leading universities. Five international unions have asked for text materials. None of these requests can be adequately filled unless we have assistance in the form of grants."

Michigan: "Classes held in 300 union halls, 21 college or university campuses in 43 cities. We believe there is tremendous need for extension of more informal types of educational programs through additional personnel in areas of: (a) community services; (b) socio-economic problems (national and international); (c) local and State government.

"More printed and visual materials are needed. The training program for people from other institutions and unions engaged in labor education should be started. Except for the year 1944–45 we have not dared carry on any kind of promotional program because with an inadequate budget we cannot extend our services beyond trying to care for the most pressing requests."

Rhode Island State College: "Classes requested by workers: Trends in labor legislation, mediation and arbitration, methods of handling grievances, railway labor legislation, introduction to principles of stewardship. Requests from local unions and other groups are increasing but cannot be met with present resources.

"At present more than 75 colleges and universities are conducting some type of labor extension service.

"As the above reports show, they cannot begin to meet the need that exists. Many of them are aware of the need of a pooling of experience and information so that improvements in teaching methods and materials worked out in one institution may be immediately available to all."

THE LEGISLATIVE BASIS FOR THE BILL

"A bill to broaden the cooperative extension system as established in the act of July 2, 1862, the act of August 30, 1890, and acts supplemental thereto, by providing for cooperative extension work between colleges receiving the benefits of these acts and other qualified colleges, universities, and research agencies, and the United States Department of Labor

"Be it enacted, etc., That in order to broaden and further develop the cooperative extension system as established by the act of July 2, 1862, the act of August 30, 1890, and acts supplemental thereto, and to aid in diffusing useful and practical information among the wage earners of the United States and increase the resources and facilities available to them, there shall be established in cooperation with colleges receiving the benefits of the aforementioned acts and other colleges, universities, and research agencies as designated in the several States a Labor Extension Service in the Department of Labor, administered by the Secretary of Labor.

"It is declared to be the policy of the Congress that the purposes of this program shall be to enable the Secretary of Labor, in accordance with his duty to promote the welfare of wage earners, through a program for the dissemination of useful knowledge to provide a means by which the Nation may conserve the creative capacities of workers, who, together with farmers, comprise the Nation's basic productive asset."

755335—21894

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1947

GEORGIA WORKERS EDUCATION SERVICE

MANAGEMENT-LABOR COOPERATION IN CUTTING COSTS

A Statement by the Labor Committee on National Policy of the
National Planning Association

August 8, 1947

Our economic efficiency as a nation depends basically upon our productivity. Our national productivity is particularly important at this time because the economy is entering a period of critical readjustment of prices and costs. Fortunately for sound policy, virtually all serious discussions of costs have been in terms of productivity rather than in terms of wages.

All parties to production and distribution--labor as greatly as any--have a stake in rising productivity. For rising productivity is the principal source of our economic progress and increasing wellbeing. Workers increasingly realize that high wages are made possible and continuation of their rising trend can be insured only by the high and increasing productive efficiency of our economy; businessmen increasingly realize that the answer to shrinking profits lies not in wage cutting, but in the increase of productivity.

Productivity is simply the measure of how efficiently we Americans are combining our labor, our equipment, and all our other resources in the business of production and distribution. Not only improved personal efficiency of workers, but better management, better relations between labor and management, better machines, new products and new industries, better organization and methods, better information and broader research, better transportation and communication, and many other factors contribute to the increase of productivity.

At the very heart of the matter, moreover, as our wartime experience demonstrated, lie human attitudes. Machines have a standard efficiency, but the efficiency of the human beings, whether managers or workmen, using those machines and developing new ones, is powerfully affected by the goal they have before them. We must seek to make the peacetime goals of our economy as real, as important, as morally compelling as were its wartime goals.

For many years the American economy has forged steadily ahead in productivity at a pace outstripping that achieved anywhere else on earth. Over the past fifty years this progress has averaged, in manufacturing, about three percent a year. During the war this rise was obscured by many factors which seriously affected the statistical measurements. There is recent evidence, however, that a strong upturn in productivity is now under way, one which may well equal or even exceed the striking increase which followed the first war. It is not too well known that, starting in 1920, the second year after the end of hostilities, productivity in manufacturing increased ten percent a year for three successive years.

Our concern today must be to reinforce the current rise and to carry it forward. Government can provide effective aid through policies that head off depression and give business and labor freedom from fear of bankruptcy and unemployment--freedom therefore from constraint to protect markets and jobs by restrictive practices. Labor can make effective contributions--as our experience in the war demonstrated--if the setting is provided and management genuinely seeks labor's participation. But it is management that must lead the way in achieving increased productivity. This is indeed management's job; questions of efficiency lie at the very core of managing a business.

Even though the initiative lies with management, labor's contribution to increased efficiency can be extremely significant. But unless labor's cooperation is actively enlisted, maximum progress cannot be hoped for. Let management set the stage, explain the goals, and join with labor to agree on rules that are fair, and the way will be open for management to receive powerful labor support and follow-through.

The ending of hostilities ushered in a period during which attention was focused primarily on the problems of reconverting our resources to peacetime production. With reconversion now behind us, both management and labor can serve the general welfare and their own best interests by considering how to go about applying the lessons of war production to the problem of increasing our peacetime productivity.

Wherever unions find it possible to take the initiative in making operations more productive--and where past experience indicates that management will welcome such initiative--we urge that they do so. As indicated, however, we are convinced that the first step must in general come from management.

We urge managements everywhere in American industry to invite the unions they deal with to sit down with them and explore how to eliminate inefficiency in production and distribution. We are confident that such invitations, issued in good faith, will evoke a surprisingly satisfactory response from the unions. Our confidence, we may add, is not based on theory, but is rooted in concrete examples of successful teamwork between management and unions.

There are, as everyone knows, many types of restrictions on production. Some of these have been highlighted by official inquiries. Others, particularly those on the part of labor, have become bywords by reason of widespread publicity given them. It is easy for pot and kettle to call each other black. Management and labor must, however, work together to remove the soot wherever it may be found.

We have called for teamwork between management and labor in improving operations generally. We especially stress the need for such teamwork in overcoming restrictive practices. Teamwork is needed because the restrictive practices of management and of labor so frequently go in pairs. In some cases, the insecurity of markets has led management to restrict output and this in turn has forced workers to adopt restrictions designed to protect their jobs. In other cases workers may have been prompter than management to recognize the threat of insecurity and management's practices may have followed rather than preceded labor's.

We stress insecurity of markets and jobs because we are convinced that this is the root cause of restrictive practices. It follows that, to the extent this insecurity is the result of the swings of the business cycle, a complete solution must include effective policies, public as well as private, to insure a sustained high level of production and employment.

The methods which management and labor should follow in cooperating to raise productivity will of course vary from industry to industry and from plant to plant. We should draw on the large body of experience which has developed over the years, before as well as during the war. How far, for example, the labor-management production committees of the war period should be reestablished, and with what modifications, must be determined individually. The same holds for the reinstitution of the training programs, which also were so unfortunately abandoned when hostilities ended. Training can always increase productivity, but today, when happily there is no supply of idle manpower to draw upon to expand total output, it is of especial importance.

There are, however, three general principles that must be recognized in any campaign for increased productivity:

(1) The first of these is that workers must have assurance that the cards are not being stacked against them. They must have no ground to feel that the cost accounts are being loaded with dubious items. Suspicion on this score--no matter how petty the questioned items may be in dollar terms--must be avoided. Many of the practices with which labor is charged are also petty; and, without regard to the importance of either, workers are prone to regard the one as justifying the other.

(2) The second principle is that the passing on of the benefits of increased productivity must be equitable and reasonably clear and certain. As we have said, productivity grows from many sources and neither management nor labor nor stockholders nor the consuming public has an exclusive claim to its benefits. Workers want higher productivity to mean higher wages and lower prices. They want management and stockholders to get their fair shares, too. But they are not interested in stepping up productivity if the entire benefits that result are to go to increase profits which may already be ample. This should be elementary common sense, but it is all too frequently ignored in discussions of industrial efficiency.

(3) Finally, if our national productivity is to benefit to the maximum, any program to increase it must be put in terms that carry a basic appeal to every participant in production. Pecuniary incentives have their place, but they do not and--as men live not by bread alone--they cannot evoke our deepest and fullest, indeed our happiest, efforts. The efforts that we put forth in war were not the desperate efforts of a frightened people. They were the determined efforts of a people who were united by a common vision. That is what we must have in time of peace as well, if we are to demonstrate our full strength, our full capacity for growth.

The United States stands today a giant among the nations of the earth. We are strong and we have the responsibilities that the strong cannot escape. Our national strength lies in our national productivity. If we are to remain strong and if we are to share our strength in binding up the wounds of the rest of the world, and helping it to regain a sound foundation for peace and prosperity, we must not neglect that source. This is a challenge that must not go unanswered. We know it is in the American people--American labor, American management, and American agriculture--to answer it as ringingly and as decisively as they answered the challenge of war. We found our answer then in the teamwork of production and it is in the teamwork of production that we must find it today.

Signers of the Statement are:

CLINTON S. GOLDEN (Chairman)
Solebury, Pennsylvania

MARION H. HEDGES (Vice-Chairman)
Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers

SOLOMON BARKIN
Director of Research
Textile Workers Union of America

J. A. BROWNLOW
Secretary-Treasurer, Metal Trades Department, AFL

L. S. BUCKMASTER
President, United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers of America, CIO

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO

NELSON H. CRUIKSHANK
Dir., Social Insurance Activities, AFL

KATHERINE POLLAK ELLICKSON
Asst. Director Research, CIO

FRANK FENTON
Director of Organization, AFL

H. W. FRASER
President, Order of Railway
Conductors of America

SANDER GENIS
Vice-President, Amalgamated Clothing
Workers of America

CARL HOLDERMAN
President, N. J. State Council, CIO

DAVID KAPLAN
Chief Economist, Intl. Brotherhood of Teamsters

A. F. KOJETINSKY
District Director, United Steelworkers of America, CIO

ROBERT K. LAMB
National Legislative Representative
United Steelworkers of America

JULIUS LUHRSEN
American Train Dispatchers' Association
Railroad Retirement Board

A. E. LYON
Executive Secretary, Railway Labor
Executives Association

JAMES L. McDEVITT
President, Pennsylvania Federation of Labor

WILLIAM MITCH
President, District 20,
United Mine Workers of America

ROBERT OLIVER
Texas State Director
CIO Organizing Committee

ERIC PETERSON
General Secretary-Treasurer
Intl. Association of Machinists

WALTER REUTHER
President, United Auto Workers of America, CIO

EMIL RIEVE
President, Textile Workers Union of America

SAMUEL E. ROPER
United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices, Plumbing & Pipe Fitting,
U. S. & Canada

BORIS SHISHKIN
Economist, AFL

TED F. SILVEY
Congress of Industrial Organizations

LAZARE TEPER
Intl. Ladies Garment Workers Union

FLORENCE C. THORNE
Director of Research, AFL

WILLARD S. TOWNSEND
Intl. President, United Transport
Service Employees of America, CIO

RAYMOND WALSH
c/o Station WMCA

EDWARD H. WEYLER
Secretary-Treasurer, Kentucky
Federation of Labor

ARNOLD S. ZANDER
Intl. Pres., American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees

MAX ZARITSKY
President, United Hatters, Cap
and Millinery Workers Intl. Union

SAMPLE COPY

RECEIVED SEP 11 1947 Southern Regional Council

Please note the change in the subscription rate. See the announcement on page 3 of this issue. Your special attention is drawn also to the article "The Peoples of America Series" and the [illegible] tisement on the page opposite it. . . .

TRENDS & TIDES — A Paper of Information and Opinion

Editor-Publisher: LOUIS ADAMIC
Address: MILFORD, NEW JERSEY

$2 a year — to any address in the world
$5 for 3 years — or 3 one-year subs

VOL. 3, NO. 3 July-September, 1947 50c a copy

WILL AMERICAN LABOR, TOO, LEARN ONLY THE HARD WAY?

The cartoon reproduced here is as true and significant today as it was when Boardman Robinson drew it a generation ago. It tells at a glance much of the recent Capital-Labor story in the U.S., climaxed by the Taft-Hartley law.

Note the brass-knuckles on Capital's hard and ready fists while Labor's hands are bare and down. But it was Labor itself that, in the 1946 congressional election, helped to give Capital those brass-knuckles. If the democratic process in the U.S. is to continue, and evolve, this fact must soon begin to penetrate into millions of American heads—especially those of workers. And we must begin to ask questions like these: Is American Labor like labor nearly everywhere else? Is it like nearly all the rest of humanity? Will it . . . can it learn only the hard way?

In the Roosevelt period, Labor leadership and the rank-and-file relied too much on one extraordinary politician to advance and protect its immediate interests. Relying too much on him, Labor failed to equip itself with the necessary political intelligence and character to prepare it for the Truman period—a period marked by perfidy on the highest levels and by political-economic developments which historians a few decades hence are likely to regard as criminal from the patriotic true-American or human point of view, as opposed to the currently dominant vested-interest point of view.

— By Boardman Robinson

In the absence of firm political sagacity, program and character, during the summer and autumn of '46, too many union leaders and rank-and-file workers fell easy victims to the anti-Soviet, anti-Communist, anti-New Deal, anti-FDR, anti-economic-controls, and even anti-Labor propaganda drives of the NAM and related big-business organizations, and of the Baruchs, Hoovers, Dulleses, Spellmans, Hearsts and McCormicks, aided by the Trumans, Byrneses, Vandenbergs, Deweys, Tafts, Hartleys, Rankins and Thomases. Too many AFL and CIO folk, intimidated or confused by this propaganda, were turned into NAM-fools, and in Nov. they voted Republican or, in disgust, abstained from voting at all. This was a main factor in creating the reactionary 80th Congress with its large Republican majority, which found ready allies in the Southern Democrats and in Harry Truman, who (as Harold Ickes has pointed out) wanted the Taft-Hartley fascist monstrosity to become law but, true to his Pendergast beginnings and looking to '48, vetoed it with typical insincerity, certain that Congress would override the veto.

Urgent Need of Labor Education

The '46 election and the Taft-Hartley law constitute an all-important lesson for Labor. Not only Labor's but the country's future depends greatly on whether Labor can take this lesson to heart and turn it over in its mind.

There is an urgent need for Labor to acquire a steadfast, unmistakably progressive political point of view and start a nation-wide educational movement which, repudiating once and for all the old "unionism pure and simple," will concern itself not only with domestic social, economic and political affairs but also, perhaps at first specially, with foreign policy; which will spread beyond organized workers to reach out for the wide masses of the American people now floundering in a morass of NAM lies and distortions; which will aim to frustrate the open and secret trends toward fascism and war on the part of vested interests, the military, and the Catholic Hierarchy; which will proceed on the idea that such enlightened, selfishly intelligent capitalists as Cyrus Eaton and Robert Young* are exceptional and no factor in capitalist

*Cyrus Eaton's article on Capital-Labor relations in the April '47 Univ. of Chicago Law Review and Robert Young's piece on U.S. foreign policy in the March 8, 1947, Saturday Review of Literature are worth some trouble to get hold of.—L. A.

George S.Mitchell
63 Auburn A enue,N.E.
Atlanta 3,Georgia

RECEIVED
OCT 7 1947
Southern Regional Council

Economic Justice

BULLETIN OF THE NATIONAL RELIGION AND LABOR FOUNDATION

Vol. XVI, No. 1 | 106 Carmel Street, New Haven 11, Conn. | 9 | September, 1947

New Haven Building Trades Council Takes Churches to Task for Employing Non-Union Labor

Open Letter to Council of Churches Cites Cases and Asks for Meeting to Discuss Issues

In a letter to the New Haven Council of Churches made public August 16th, the New Haven Building Trades Council asked for a meeting between the Executive Committee of the Council of Churches and of the Building Trades Council "to settle the issue of the relation between New Haven's churches and organized labor."

The letter charged that Center Church (Congregational) and Trinity Church (Episcopal) two of the richest churches in the city, had awarded painting contracts to open shop contractors. "This has been done," the letter asserts, "despite the fact that we had been led to believe that the churches support organized labor."

"Frankly, we see a paradox between sermons which favor recognition of the right of working men to collective bargaining; and practices by some churches which ignore this right.

"As a basis or discussion, may we point out that we have been told that both Center Church and Trinity Church are using non-union labor because the bids presented by the open-shop contractors were lower than those offered by union contractors? Our answer to this is: Of course the open-shop contractors have lower bids. They do not pay the prevailing or union rate, and thus are able to underbid union contractors. In effect, this means that the churches which use open-shop contractors have their work done by men who receive sub-standard wages. We doubt that religion favors this policy.

"One of the basic reasons for the existence of organized labor is to insure decent wages and working conditions for working people. When churches ignore the unions, they go counter to many of the basic principles of religion."

The letter was signed by Saul Kreas, President, and Bernard Gilbride, Secretary.

CHURCH COUNCIL SEEKS FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH LABOR

There are evidences that the New Haven Council of Churches is seeking to establish friendly relations with organized labor. One is that the Council has urged its members, in a letter, to give consideration to their labor relations. Another is that the ministers of the principal churches involved held a long conference with a representative of the Foundation to discuss the issues as they affect the churches.

The text of the letter:

"We have been instructed by the Executive Committee to inform you that serious labor difficulties have arisen with some of our churches, which are attempting major and minor repairs, or building projects this summer.

"Therefore, to avoid any unnecessary inconvenience, or delay, because of labor disputes, we suggest:

1. "That contracts entered into by management and labor should be carefully studied in order to assure both employer and employee, fair and proper treatment.
2. "That you acquaint yourself with the rules of the labor union involved.
3. "That in no case should you employ union and non-union labor at the same time.
4. "We trust that this reminder may spare you and your Church the embarrassment suffered by some of our Churches recently because these matters were not given thoughtful consideration."

(Continued on Page 6, Col. 1)

Catholic Bishop Supports Employment of Organized Labor

The Catholic position on the responsibility of priests to employ union labor only in the construction and repair of church buildings is clearly stated. In reply to a letter from Bernard Gilbride, Secretary-Treasurer of the New Haven Building Trades Council, asking his cooperation, Bishop Henry J. O'Brien, Diocese of Hartford, wrote the following:

My dear Mr. Gilbride:

I am grateful for your kind letter of July 1st in which you ask me to use any influence with the pastors of the New Haven area so that they will insist upon union work in constructing and repairing church buildings.

For many years the Bishops of Hartford have taken every opportunity to remind the priests of the diocese that it is entirely in keeping with the spirit of the Papal Encyclicals to insist upon the employment of union workers. I am always glad to do what I can to further the cause of the unions which have done so much to improve the conditions of the workingman.

You may depend upon my support wherever and whenever it may be useful to you.

I wish to assure you specifically that I will bring this matter to the attention of the New Haven pastors at the earliest possible opportunity.

"Wishing you every success, I am,

Sincerely,
HENRY J. O'BRIEN,
Bishop of Hartford.

ECONOMIC JUSTICE

Published by the

NATIONAL RELIGION AND LABOR FOUNDATION

Subscription Rate $1.00 per year.

Editor: Willard Uphaus

Published monthly except July and August.

Entered as second class matter April 8, 1935, at the post office at New Haven, Conn., under the Act of March 3, 1879.

RLF Events

Fall meeting of the General Executive Board at the Parkside Hotel in New York, Monday morning, Septemer 22d.

This is to be followed by a special luncheon at the Parkside at which some twenty representatives of the social action departments of denominations and International unions will join with Board members in a discussion of the program of the RLF's Fifteenth Anniversary Conference to be held toward the end of the year.

The General Executive Board of the United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum and Plastic Workers of America, CIO, has asked the RLF to set up a luncheon meeting of representatives of the International and of the Boston clergy at the time of the union's convention in that city, September 15-19. The clergymen will be the guests of the union.

In a few days the call will be issued for the Annual Conference of the Interseminary Division of the Foundation to be held in Boston October 13-18. The conference, following the practice of a number of years, will be held at the time and place of the National CIO Convention to permit theological students to attend sessions of the convention and to meet and hear labor representatives at its own sessions.

Boston Area RLF members will assist in locating speaking engagements in churches and synagogues for CIO officers and delegates while the convention is on.

Judgment Must Begin In The House Of The Lord

By WILLARD UPHAUS

This article is taken in modified form with permission, from the Fall 1945 issue of "Prophetic Religion," official quarterly of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen, because it bears upon the front page news in this number of "Economic Justice."

The Federal Council of Churches in America has, since 1912, stood for the right of collective bargaining and decent working conditions, and the constituent bodies in the Council have generally done likewise. Today this declaration is usually construed to refer to workers in all major industries, such as steel, autos, mines, railroads, and the like, and not to big businesses operated by denominations themselves, such as hospitals, colleges and universities, theological seminaries and printing establishments. And the right to organize is interpreted usually to say to the worker, "You have the right to take all the risks, suffer intimidation, discrimination or discharge, even physical violence, while we stand by and watch what happens." Institutions of religion ordinarily do not consider themselves under obligation to provide funds and personnel to help workers win their rights.

Many religious bodies have failed deplorably to put their own economic houses in order. This applies both to the local church and to the denominational organizations. For example, church janitors are probably among the worst paid workers in the country. The policy often is to employ someone on part-time, who needs to supplement a meagre income.

Or janitors may be older persons disqualified for work in regular industry. These attendants rarely know anything about unions and they are not covered by Social Security legislation. Because of their loyalty to the church, they often take it on the chin. Too often there is no thought-out employee policy with respect to hours and wages, sickness, vacation, or adequate care upon retirement.

One pastor known to the writer who serves a large congregation in an eastern city has taken the matter of the ideals of his denomination to heart and with the full consent of his people worked out a retirement scheme for his janitor, organist and office secretary.

A point at which the local minister and the church board often fall down is in the matter of printing. I have hundreds of letters from ministers in my files, but very, very few letterheads bear the union label. The temptation is still strong to shop around to get the lowest price, regardless of the pay and working conditions in the print shop. Religious leaders and laymen rarely have any feeling for the long, hard struggle of the Allied Printing Trades to turn unhealthy sweatshops into decent places to work. Every failure of churchmen to recognize this is a distinctly anti-social act, for patronizing unorganized printers is a constant threat to hard-won standards.

Churches too often fail to employ union labor when they build or repair. One pastor with whom I talked shrugged his shoulders and said, "I am in charge of the spiritual affairs of the congregation, and have nothing to do with material matters." In the same city another minister, serving a large and conservative congregation, held a different view. The interior of the church was to be redecorated. He knew his committee was tight financially and anti-labor. He took the problem to the business agent of the Painters' Union. The latter was sympathetic and persuaded his local to contribute in labor the difference between what scab work and union work would cost. Thus a compromise was effected in which the church honored the union and union members contributed to a worthy cause.

ISSUE DRAMATIZED IN NEW HAVEN

This situation is being dramatized in New Haven today. The Building Trades Council has just made public a letter assailing a number of the leading Protestant churches in the city for letting non-union contracts for some major repairs on their buildings. The charge is true. Through inadvertence, open hostility, or for reasons satisfactory to them, church committees have permitted this to happen. Officers of the Council of Churches and the ministers concerned are taking steps to prevent the recurrence of similar mistakes. As I move from one group to another in an effort to resolve the conflict in terms of justice to labor, I am once more impressed with the wide gulf between, a gulf created by fear, prejudice, misunderstanding and misinformation, vested interests, and varying conceptions of what constitutes the social responsibility of the church. Through the National RLF informal conferences are being arranged to clear the air.

The failure of denominational boards and educational institutions of religion is much more serious, in a way, than the infractions of the local church. We look to them to set a better example.

Another point at which judgment should begin is in the matter of denominational printing. The most dramatic case in point today is the moral and financial support a few leading denominations have given to union-busting by spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on church school and other religious literature at the R. R. Donnelley and Sons Lakeside Press in Chicago.

This failure to implement the creed on collective bargaining is not regional, but nation-wide. Our attention has been drawn recently to the fact that the huge printing establishment of the Methodist Church located in Nashville, Tenn., is unorganized. It does an immense and profitable business, printing not only general church literature but volumes written by church men whose books have much to say about Christian ideals.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

My experience is that theological seminaries are greatly at fault. Here is where the prospective minister should be getting some demonstration of the economic implementation of his Christian ideals, as well as grades and a degree for his ability to store up knowledge. Many administrators dread the very thought of dealing with a union. There is something abhorrent and upsetting about the whole business. It is easy for them to rationalize that unions are led by racketeers, that the officers are corrupt, or that Communists are in control. Another illusion which they sometimes try to hide behind is "that fine family spirit" that is said to characterize their particular institutions. "We get along congenially here. Any worker can bring his grievances to me. The union would spoil all this."

REMEDIES SUGGESTED

There are at least three approaches to a solution. First, administrators and faculties of theological seminaries must re-think the content and method of theological education. This reconsideration will mean more than adding a course in Social Ethics, with a passing reference to labor. It will take more than such a concession, grudgingly given by those who guard the old classical subjects. To recall an expression of Professor George Coe, this would be like adding a side vestibule of freedom to a cathedral of conformity. Just to add a label to a printed document (to esthetic souls it looks too much like a bug) seems such a silly bit of ceremony, until the act is related to a full understanding of the historic role of labor in society. Surely this whole area of life deserves a logical and proportionate place in an educational set-up in keeping with the times. There is not a daily paper or a weekly journal worthy of attention whose headlines do not regularly shout at the reader about labor, social unrest, unemployment, cutbacks, reconversion, AFL, CIO, NLRB, NAM, C. of C., cartels, monopolies, and what have you, and yet hundreds of seminary students go out almost completely unaware of the issues. Having no historical and economic ground on which to base their judgments they fall for misrepresentation and often wilt at the first suggestion of a conservative layman that they had better stick to the Gospel and preach what will bring peace and quiet to the soul. These students have never been fully convinced that Christianity has an economic responsibility, both for the ends of life and the methods of realizing the goals. A revised curriculum will see that their studies are broadened and that they will have personal contact with the leaders and members of the labor movement, which, I believe, has done more than any other movement to put an economic floor under the common man and to erect a social structure in which religious freedom can survive.

In the second place, Christian Boards of education, owe the young people and adults in the local church school lessons more replete with situations and suggestions out of contemporary labor and industrial life. Thoughts and activities that encourage social enterprise should replace thoughts and activities that seek to restore forms of economic life which are gone beyond recall. Religious education still needs to develop the materials and methods for an educational process that is continuous from childhood to adulthood. It is not enough to spend money and scholarship on a few specialized courses that the few intellectually curious and more radical spirits select. Editors must take the responsibility of putting what is needed into the heart of the regular curriculum, with the thought of "transforming the enormous inherited routine of the church into a free and self-changing activity."

Finally, an inseparable part of the total program is that of leadership training and creative group action in the local church. By and large, our present church school teachers are not prepared to handle the kind of materials we have in mind. Very often the materials now prepared have an excellence not appreciated and utilized. Teachers are still schooled in the idea that children's minds are empty receptacles into which religious teaching is poured. Many of them would be terribly shocked if their pupils took seriously much of the Sunday morning discussion about race, labor and economics. It is permissible to believe in justice to Negroes on Sunday morning, but just see what happens when a Negro family wants to purchase the house three doors from the church. It is rarely assumed that the class is to bring back a report on successive Sundays, about some social building or transformation for which they are responsible. The tacit understanding is that they had better not rile the brethren or challenge the political and economic institutions of the community.

Here again the chief responsibility falls upon the local minister, and his response is generally in keeping with what he has been taught as right and proper in the seminary. Through him there is a possibility of developing an educational program that will relate love and conduct, and persistently follow through on the implications of Christian teaching for the church and the community.

RELIGION and LABOR NEWS

By John G. Ramsay

GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA

The Greensboro R–L Fellowship has held two meetings. The first was held in May, when the Burlington Joint Board, Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, was the host. Bruno Rantane, TWUA Manager welcomed the guests and all took part in get-acquainted remarks. Rantane in extending an invitation to labor to participate in R–L discussion said, "This dinner is not sponsored by any one group, and will be entirely a 'dutch treat.' With the hysterical statements made about labor it was the thought of a few of us in labor that it wouldn't be a bad idea to meet with various groups influential in our community to have a frank discussion about what labor really is and what it is out to do. In view of the legislation passed in our state and the nation, all of us are conscious of the great amount of misunderstanding we have to clear up."

It would really take a society editor to give you the details of the luncheon. Mrs. Ruth Gettinger, Public Relations Representative of the N.C. CIO Organizing Committee arranged the luncheon with finess, flowers, name cards and all.

The second meeting was held in June at the YWCA. The chairman was Dr. Clyde Darsie, Pastor, Elm Street Christian Church and President, Greensboro Ministerial Association.

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA

The Baton Rouge Religion and Labor Fellowship is an action group. It has been meeting monthly for the past eight months. It held one public forum, and is planning another for September.

This Fellowship, at its June meeting, sent the following telegram to Sen. Allen J. Ellender and had a representative committee sign it. The telegram:

"The members of the Baton Rouge Religion-Labor Fellowship, consisting of leaders in Protestant and Catholic churches and in various labor organizations earnestly urge your sustaining President's veto of Taft-Hartley bill."

The signing committee: E. T. Prothro, Secretary, Msgr. L. A. Cailouet, Dr. Philip Werlein (Episcopal), Dr. John Melton (Presbyterian), Rev. W. E. Trice (Methodist), Harry Cochran (Oil Workers Union), Bruce Millen (CIO Organizing Committee), Ed. Bourg (AFL), Sec'y, State Federation of Labor, Cyril Dominguez (Gulf States Utilities), Independent Union, Marshall Sharp (Telephone Workers).

Spartanburg, South Carolina, Baptist Church Condemns Acquittal of Greenville Lynchers

On June 1st the Saxon Baptist Church, of which John B. Isom is pastor, adopted in conference a resolution condemning the acquittal of 28 men charged with lynching Willie Earle and advocating a Federal anti-lynch law. The text of the resolution is:

WHEREAS, A jury of twelve men serving in a South Carolina Court, convening in Greenville, S. C., have recently acquitted 28 men charged with lynching Willie Earle, and

WHEREAS, A large number of those acquitted were, according to their own signed admissions, guilty, and

WHEREAS, This flagrant disregard for their sworn duty and the established law of the land, coupled with the obviously prejudiced and biased application of the penalties provided by the law constitutes a travesty upon justice that should not be condoned or tolerated by any right thinking people, and

WHEREAS, The right of every citizen to a fair and speedy trial before a jury of his peers is an inherent, and a constitutional, right of every citizen without regard of race, creed, or color, and

WHEREAS, It is evident from the history of the case in question and other related cases that this objective is not likely to be attained at any early date unless State legislation is supplemented by Federal legislation; therefore, be it

Resolved:

1. That we go on record as advocating a Federal anti-lynch law as an aid in protecting all citizens and as an instrument for meting out proper punishment to all who undertake to be a law unto themselves.

2. That we give the press a copy of this resolution, and that a copy of it be sent to our Congressman and our Senators with a request that they use their influence to have enacted a Federal anti-lynch bill.

"We have no R–L Group yet in Spartanburg. A start has been made with a few clergymen, and one of these is Reverend Isom. The action of his church is quite a contrast to the following reply I received from the Spartanburg Ministerial Association, when I requested an opportunity to speak to it. Here is the reply of the secretary:

"I was instructed as secretary to let you know that the ministers and churches are interested in the religious welfare of all people and they may be called upon for spiritual leadership at any time.

"On the other hand, it has been the continuous policy of the Association to take no part in political disputes or controversial subjects between labor and management as it is the duty of the church to serve both wherever they may be found. For that reason, the ministers do not wish to take any part for or against organizing unions and for that reason cannot extend an invitation to speak to them upon the subject mentioned.

ROCK HILL, SOUTH CAROLINA

A new Religion and Labor Fellowship was formulated in Rock Hill, S. C., at a luncheon July 21st, in which the Textile Workers of America, CIO, entertained an inter-faith and inter-union group.

This was an outgrowth of action taken by the Rock Hill Ministerial Association when I had the privilege to speak to them in June. A motion was unanimously passed to the effect that the ministers would accept an invitation from management.

The arrangements for this luncheon were also made by Mrs. Gettinger. Don McKee, TWUA Representative of Rock Hill chaired the meeting. Dr. Gregg, Pastor ot fhe First Presbyterian Church, gave the invocation.

The usual round of introductions and comments of each individual present brought out that the local union officers are used to making testimonies in their churches. Some of these are:

"I have been saved and love to tell people about that. Organized labor is to help and not hurt anyone. It helps management. We need a balance of power."

"If the labor movement interfered with my Christianity I could not be a part to it."

The CIO has improved my ability to serve my fellowmen. We should have a right to say what is an honest day's work and an honest day's pay."

These were third shift workers. All R–L Groups should make an effort to have the local union leaders at their meetings as well as the full time labor representatives.

Nancy Blaine — TWUA — was selected as the secretary and the program committee consists of Father Maurice Shean; Mr. Seagel, President, AFL Musicians Union, Rev. Stokes, Pastor, Methodist Church, and Don McKeen, TWUA-CIO.

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA

The New Orleans Group was started in June, 1946, by a small group I met during my first visit here. They were Fred C. Pieper, Director, Louisiana CIO Organizing Committee; Dr. R. F. Buck, Evangelical and Reformed Church, President, New Orleans Ministerial Union; Rev. George W. Damerion, Methodist; and Fathers O'Connel and Drolet of the Catholic Church. This group is an inter-racial, inter-faith, inter-union group.

Marjorie Grier, Secretary, reports for New Orleans:

"The Church and Labor Committee in New Orleans is interfaith, interunion, and inter-racial. Jewish rabbis, Catholic priests, Protestant ministers three YWCA secretaries and representatives from CIO, AFL and The Southern Federation of Telephone Workers make up its membership.

"Once a month the group meets for lunch at the YWCA after which there is a discussion on some topic of interest to the members. Among the topics already discussed are "The Churches' Attitudes Toward Labor," "The Toledo Plan and Its Implications for New Orleans," "Anti-labor Legislation Pending in Congress," etc.

"Not long after the Committee had its beginning, the initial enthusiasm began to wear off, and a few luncheons were skipped because of lack of interest.

"A special meeting was called to discuss ways and means of reviving interest. At this meeting, a planning committee was set up to act for a four-month period at the end of which time, each member of the committee will choose a successor. The duties of the committee are to plan and carry out the luncheon programs for four successive months. The subjects to be discussed, however, are presented in advance to the whole group for approval, and members of the group are asked for suggestions as to subjects. A membership committee was also set up, and one person delegated to send out the notices and make the necessary arrangements for luncheon reservations. Meetings are now held regularly and interest has grown.

"Thus far, the group has been purely a discussion and fellowship group, and its main accomplishment has been to give the representatives of the different church and labor organizations an opportunity to get acquainted with each other's viewpoints and attitudes. However, the possibility of some social action by the group arising out of the discussions is not remote and has been suggested by some of the members. Attendance averages about 15 members and includes a nucleus which attends regularly and shows a great deal of interest in the committee."

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT

Using as its theme, "Religion's Message to Labor," the Greater New Haven Religion and Labor Council put on a thirty-minute Labor Day broadcast on WNHC.

Rev. Robert Fichter, Pastor, Summerfield Methodist Church, gave the invocation: Professor Robert C. Dentan, of Berkeley Divinity School, spoke on "The Bible and Labor;" Rabbi Leon Spitz of Congregation Keser Israel, on "Labor and the Synagogue," Secretary Willard Uphaus made a statement about the National R–L Foundation and indicated how the New Haven branch implements the aim of church-labor cooperation.

ACTION IN CANADA

Rev. E. Harold Toye, Executive Secretary, The Religion-Labour Foundation of Toronto and Ontario, reports progress across the line.

In a letter to the National RLF he writes: I am in the process of setting up units in a number of larger industrial centers. We have succeeded in Hamilton, Niagara Falls, Sarnia, and things are proceeding nicely in London, Brantford and Kitchener. Our Provincial Conference is due this fall. Certainly we are winning the confidence of labour groups. We have received the official endorsation of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

The Toronto Conference of the United Church gave us their official blessing in June and recommended that a special session of each of the 10 Presbyteries plan a session this year to deal with the problem of Industrial Evangelism and that the pulpits of the conference be opened to the RLF."

CONNECTICUT RLF MEETS IN HARTFORD

Rabbi Spitz Calls for Three-Fold Program

RABBI SPITZ

"The threefold job before the Religion and Labor Foundation is for clergymen to educate labor unions in religion, for labor leaders to present their problems to the groups that comprise organized religion, and for the two groups to present a united front in educating the public in the ways of liberalism," said Rabbi Leon Spitz of New Haven, in addressing a Connecticut conference of the RLF in Hartford on July 1.

"What we need most to insure the success of the movement," the Rabbi continued, "is to secure perhaps fewer outstanding citizens but more men and women of the upstanding type, to stand up for a greater and more courageous spirit of liberalism in the time of postwar reaction and witch hunting."

Other speakers presented their views on the relation of the church and labor at the present time. Harold Senior, Organizer and Publicity Director for the Connecticut CIO declared that the Taft-Hartley bill is anti-religious, since it strikes at fundamental liberties." "Labor should have had the universal support of the church in opposing the bill. Too few clergymen were active." Mr. Senior pointed out that each side has a tendency to criticize the other without adequate information or exchange of views. He encouraged labor representatives to attend church, and to assist the church in such practical ways as helping in membership drives and fund-raising.

Charles C. Haas, Norwalk hat manufacturer, said that "the basic principles of unions are as fine as one could want from a religious point of view" As a representative of management he constantly encouraged business associates to understand this, he said. When the Wagner Act came in, he called in the workers and told them that all had to join in making the law of the land effective.

"Ministers, by and large, will not go to bat for labor and jeopardize their jobs," declared the Rev. J. George Butler, Minister, Park Methodist Church, Hartford. In proving this point, Mr. Butler cited some experiences he had had. The speaker strongly urged labor leaders to to become active in the church." Bore from within and become members of the official board," he advised.

"Formal church attendance on the part of labor is not to be expected until bread and butter problems are solved," asserted Harold Strauch, representative of the Connecticut Federation of Labor. "Labor is more interested in economic security." Mr. Strauch expressed the belief that more of the initiative must come from the clergy side.

Following the address, National Executive Secretary Willard Uphaus led in a discussion on practical steps to be taken to effect cooperation. Among the points brought out were:

1. Exchange of speakers; 2. Labor ought to support its friends in the churches, when they get into trouble; 3. Churchmen and labor representatives should alert rural parsons to what is going on. Rural areas send disproportionate representation to state legislature.

4. Labor should publicize church activities. 5. Effort should be made to clear conflicts in calendars. 6. Clergymen should be more aggressive in approaching local union leaders; 7. Investigate the possibility of a united demonstration on Labor Day Sunday; 8, Exchange literature freely.

CHURCH - LABOR ACTION FOR JUSTICE

ECONOMIC JUSTICE here offers a few suggestions for study and action many of which have been tried successfully on the local level. With the rising tide of reaction, dramatized by the enactment of the Taft-Hartley bill and similar punitive state legislation, by witch hunts, by profits and living costs at an all-time high, and by a fizzling GOP Congress, it is more imperative than ever that we stand shoulder to shoulder in resisting encroachment upon our democratic liberties.

The National office is eager to serve as a clearing house for the exchange and interpretation of experiences in local R — L groups, whether in cities or seminaries. Will secretaries please send reports to John G. Ramsay (79½ Poplar Street N.W., Atlanta 3, Ga.) or to the editor?

WHAT CAN CHURCHMEN AND LABOR REPRESENTATIVES DO FOR ONE ANOTHER?

I.

Churchmen

Make a serious effort to know personally as many labor leaders as possible.

Watch the local papers for news about labor leaders, especially in relation to particular labor-management problems in the city.

Secure, through the national headquarters of the AFL, CIO and Brotherhoods, or through local unions, samples of the constitution and by-laws of labor, and make them the basis of discussion.

Invite representatives of labor to address various groups in your congregation.

If you are in a city of sufficient size, where central labor bodies exist, become informed about their make-up, purpose and activities. Invite a spokesman for labor to address the Ministers Association or Council of Churches' meeting.

Exchange fraternal delegates on a permanent basis.

See that an Industrial Relations Committee of Ministers' Assn., Council of Churches, or Interfaith Committee is formed and functions constantly. Have permanent labor members on this committee.

Labor Representatives

Make a serious effort to know personally as many clergymen as possible.

Watch the local papers for news about pastoral changes and send greetings to new arrivals.

Secure through the headquarters of the faiths and denominations or through the local clergy, recent pronouncements on labor. Distribute copies at union meetings.

Invite a clergyman to address your union meeting.

If you are in a city of sufficient size, where a Ministers' Association, Council of Churches or Interfaith Committee exists, get in touch with the chairman of the organization and invite him to send a speaker to a meeting of central labor body, or local union.

Exchange fraternal delegates on a permanent basis.

It would be in order to have standing Public Relations Committee as part of Central Labor organization or local union, with special reference to the churches.

(Continued on Page 7, Cols. 2-3)

NEW HAVEN CHURCHES

(Continued from Page 1, Col. 2)

On September 4th, the Rev. Dr. Frank M. Swaffield, President of the New Haven Council of Churches, held an informal conference with local church leaders to discuss the misunderstandings between local churches and the Building Trades Council, which arose when non-union contracts had been let by Calvary Baptist Church, Center Church and Trinity Episcopal Church and some other local churches.

Those attending besides Dr. Swaffield were the Rev. C. Lawson Willard, Jr., Rector of Trinity Church, the Rev. Dr. David N. Beach and the Rev. Howard Worth of Center Church, the Rev. Dr. John L. Gregory, Executive Secretary of the New Haven Council of Churches and Dr. Willard Uphaus, Executive Secretary of the National Religion and Labor Foundation, who was invited to be present to explain the point of view of the Building Trades Council.

It is anticipated that a small informal conference will soon take place between representatives of the churches involved and the unions in an effort to find a solution to the issues that have been raised.

Money For Peace, Not For Compulsory Military Training

Dr. Donald DuShane, Secretary of the National Commission for the Defense of Democracy Through Education of the National Education Association, while testifying before the House Military Affairs Committee on November 28, 1945, said:

"The cost of compulsory military training, as estimated by the War Department under the May bill, will be from $1,750,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. It is probable that these estimates are low as they do not include refresher courses and payments to the reserve force of which the military training system is a part. Those refresher courses and payments have been intimated by officials of the War Department before this committee. It may well be assumed that the costs when the system is fully in operation will approximate $3,000,000,000 annually.

"To members of this war Congress, $3,000,000,000 may not be overwhelming as it is to me, yet I ask your indulgence while I attempt to show some of the social betterments that could be obtained with this sum of money, and which I believe would add much more to our national defense than would military conscription.

(Continued on next page, Col. 1)

Civil Liberties Taking a Beating, Say ACLU

Increasing Hostility to Labor

The American Civil Liberties Union report, a pamphlet entitled In Times of Challenges, describes an atmosphere increasingly hostile to the liberties of labor, the political left and many minorities; a general retreat to nationalism, militarism and defense of the status quo."

The year's major blows to civil liberties are listed thus:

¶ Four lynchings with one notorious aquittal of 28 confessed lynchers at Greensville, S. C.

¶ The Taft-Hartley Law.

¶ Approval by the Supreme Court of the use of public school funds for religious schools.

¶ A decision of the high court extending the legality of searches without warrants.

¶ The President's order for dangerously vague" loyalty tests of Federal employees.

¶ The continued witch-hunting crusade" of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

"Excitement, bordering on hysteria, characterized the public approach to any issue related to Communism," the report said of the year.: "In such an atmosphere of militant conservatism it was inevitable that practically all forces seeking reform should be blocked, and that even established liberties associated with them should be attacked."

With $3,000,000,000 a year it would be possible:

1. To construct a 10-room modern school building in every county in the United States each year;
2. To construct a $50,000 library in every county in the United States each year;
3. To construct annually a $150,000 hospital in each county;
4. To employ 10 full-time school and public health doctors and 10 full-time school and public health nurses in every county in the country;
5. To purchase 10 new modern school busses in each county in the United States each year;
6. To maintain one psychiatric and behavior clinic in every county in the United States;
7. To provide 10 full-time recreation and juvenile guidance workers in every county in the United States;
8. To bring all schools of the country up to a reasonable standard of efficiency and by that I mean with an expenditure of $300 to raise the level of our poorer schools;
9. To provide free education for the 3 million children under 18 who are now not attending school keeping every child in the county in school until 18 years of age;
10. To meet the pay roll of one junior college with 10 instructors in every county in the United States;
11. To provide all the expenses of a three-year post graduate course for 10,000 selected students and scientists each year;
12. To pay the full maintenance and tuition at college or technical school for one year of the 9,000,000 boys who would be conscripted under this May bill;
13. To erect a three-quarter-million-dollar trade and technical school in each congressional district each year.

"This would leave an unexpended balance of $15,300,000 annually. If in the second and subsequent years additional busses, hospitals, and libraries are not needed in each county, and a second technical school were not needed in each congressional district, the cost would be reduced to less than two billion dollars a year.

"While there are various possible plans of spending $3,000,000,000 annually for the social improvement of the United States, the above proposals indicate methods by which our national welfare and defense could be tremendously improved for the same amount that would be wasted at the present time on compulsory military training."

CHURCH-LABOR ACTION FOR JUSTICE—(Continued)

Churches

The Industrial Relations Committee of community organized religion should work out a form of procedure for reaching agreements with the building trades for the repair and construction of churches.

The local pastor should make the most of Labor Day Sunday. Plan a special service, and invite unions to be present. Labor now has organizers who make splendid addresses.

Preach a series of sermons on the social creed of your church or synagogue, stressing its position on organized labor.

Set up literature display and lending library in your church or synagogue. Be well supplied with books and pamphlets on labor and related questions. Feature "The Book of the Week" in the Sunday morning bulletin.

In many communities Councils of Churches conduct fall training institutes for officers and teachers in church schools. Include lectures and a course on the church and labor.

Let both the Church and Labor make an effort to clear schedules of conflict, so that there may be reciprocity in attending meetings.

Make special mention in the Sunday morning bulletins of labor events of community importance.

Let the Social Service Committee of the local church set up a special supper meeting at which members of the congregation become personally acquainted with union officials. This might be an annual event.

Labor

Let Building Trades Council be on lookout for all announcements about the repair or construction of churches and synagogues.

See that representatives of the different faiths take part in Labor Day programs. One city made a great success of Labor Day Sunday. A joint religious service was held Sunday morning in the University Stadium. A number of churches gave up their regular services, and labor called off all Monday programs.

Labor representatives have a responsibility to the church and synagogue. Let them join and help build the kind of religious institution that will best serve the cause of working people and the community.

Set up reading table or reading room in union offices and labor temples. Secure the help of the right religious leaders in selecting materials union members will read.

Form an inter-union committee to sponsor city-wide programs of workers' education. Make the maximum use of religious leaders who are prepared to teach public speaking, parliamentary law, labor economics, etc.

Let both Labor and the Church make an effort to clear schedules of conflict, so that there may be reciprocity in attending meetings.

Local union and central labor periodicals should give prominence to religious activities that bear on labor, excerpts from sermons, etc.

Unions and central labor bodies might arrange an outing for clergymen and church officials, with entertaining program for the families.

II.

WHAT CAN THE CHURCHES AND LABOR DO TOGETHER FOR THE COMMUNITY—LOCAL, NATIONAL, WORLD?

1. Form a permanent Religion and Labor Fellowship or Council that meets regularly and coordinate a complete program, including activities listed under Section 1.

2. There are many dangerous organizations in this country actively fomenting racism and anti-Semitism. They are led by demagagues skilled in the techniques of misleading the people. Our answer is an organized relationship in which the members of various faiths and races work together to get at the roots of friction. Fear and insecurity are at the bottom of much racism.

3. Bring nationally known leaders to address community-wide forums and town meetings. General areas of interest:

Security and Freedom
Wages, Prices and Profits
The 1948 Campaign
Licking the Causes of Depression
Production and Distribution
More TVA's for America
Effect of Monopoly on Our Economic Life
The United Nations and World Peace

(Contined on Page 8)

CHURCH-LABOR ACTION FOR JUSTICE—(Continued)

4. Work for a community Religion and Labor Week-end in addition to the regular Labor Day. Labor Day is poorly timed, especially from the viewpoint of the churches, when the attendance is small.

5. Ask your local radio stations for time. Stations are required under the regulations of the Federal Communications Commission to devote some time to community service. Get personally acquainted with radio station offcials. Appoint a committee to write scripts or secure suitable recording.

6. Under the auspices of a joint committee set up courses in workers education and church-labor cooperation.

7. Defend and support clergymen or labor leaders who lose their jobs or otherwise suffer because of their action in behalf of justice.

8. Set up a Speakers' Bureau that will arrange appointments for labor leaders at religious gatherings and for clergymen or laymen at labor meetings.

9. When industrial conflict situations arise in the community, let the R — L Fellowship be the first to ascertain the facts and seek settlements on the basis of justice to management, labor and the community.

10. June 23rd was the beginning of a new era for all Americans who cherish free collective bargaining and civil liberties. The Taft-Hartley Act is not only unworkable, as viewed by impartial experts on labor-management relations, but it dramatizes social retrogression. Our best defense is a mighty offense. We have a date with 1948. All must join hands in electing a Congress that will repeal this Act. Some eighty Congressmen, many of whom are anti-labor, were elected in 1946 on a five per cent margin.

III.

PROJECTS FOR STUDY AND ACTION

1. Equitable taxation.

2. Flood control and soil conservation.

3. A nationally integrated and socially owned power system, built along the lines of the TVA.

4. Social ownership and democratic control of all monopolies affecting the general welfare.

5. Guaranteed annual wage.

6. The national health S 1320, HR 3548.

7. Attack on the present profit and price structure on all fronts (a) revealing the facts and figures; (b) consumer organization; (c) support of super co-op markets, etc.

8. Expanding social security to cover all the people.

9. Housing. Secure enactment of Taft-Wagner-Ellender bills.

10. Lift the minimum wage. S 1404, HR 3764.

11. Extend hand of mercy to displaced persons. HR 2910 permits entry of 400,000 homeless Eurpeans into U.S. under unused immigration quotas.

12. The extension of labor education. S 1320 introduced by Senators Morse and Thomas (Utah).

13. Extend organization to the unorganized with a new vigor, not only to give individual workers and their families a decent livelihood, but to improve the balance in our economy and escape depression.

14. General campaign of education on our foreign policy. Save America from imperialism that leads to war. Develop international-mindedness.

SECRETARY UPHAUS ATTENDS LABOR CONVENTION

Extends RLF Greetings to OWIU

"The labor movement has, historically, been the one great organized pressure for justice and right in our economic relations. It is the chief ally of free and vital religion in achieving the humanitarian aims of both. We have a joint responsbility today to save our domestic economy from collapse, with all the attendant miseries, and our world from war," said Secretary Willard Uphaus in extending the greetings of the National Religion and Labor Foundation to the Eighteenth National Convention of the CIO Oil Workers International Union, meeting in Kansas City, August 11-15. The speaker praised the OWIU for its remarkable achievements so far in organizing workers in one of the toughest industries in the country.

At the conclusion of Dr. Uphaus' remarks, a delegate from Wellsville, N. Y., brought a slip of paper to the platform listing the ministers in his town and expressing the wish that the Foundation send them materials and try to get them to be more cooperative. President O. A. Knight strongly recommended that other delegates do the same Copies of the Foundation's leaflet, They Had Unions in Those Days, Too," were distributed among the delegates.

AFT TOO

Secretary Uphaus attended the Thirtieth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Teachers, held in Boston, August 18-22. As a delegate representing AFT Local No. 204 in New Haven, he served on the Committee on Social and Economic Trends. Among the resolutions the committee framed, and succeeded in getting through the convention, were those calling for:

A national integrated public power system, set up along the lines of the TVA.

Continued civilian control of atomic energy development.

Support of the Department of Justice drive to prosecute the participants in restraint of trade agreements which fix prices and restrict output.

Support and encouragement of Rochdale cooperatives.

Repeal of all special laws restricting the rights of teachers and other public employees to employ practices and methods permitted to other groups of non-public employees, such as denying them the right to strike.

Extension, of federal rent controls to March 1, 1950.

Coming !

The issues raised at the Oil Workers' Convention and the American Federation of Teachers' Convention, with their implications for the churches, will be treated more fully in the October issue of ECONOMIC JUSTICE. Mrs. Mabel M. Wier, Assistant Research Director for the OWIU and the unions RLF representative, will contribute an article. The authors for the AFT article will be Herrock Roth, vice-president of the Denver Federation of Teachers, and George A. Cavender, member of the executive committee of Colorado Federation of Teachers.

An announcement will be made of the winners in the National Prize Winning Contest on the subject, "The Contributions of Trade Unionism to Democracy."

Mr. George S. Mitchell
63 Auburn Ave. N. E.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

RECEIVED
NOV 4 1947
Southern Regional Council

21-Labor

Economic Justice

BULLETIN OF THE NATIONAL RELIGION AND LABOR FOUNDATION

Vol. XVI, No. 2 | 106 Carmel Street, New Haven 11, Conn. | 9 | October, 1947

Putting a Ball and Chain on Labor Unions

By ALVA W. TAYLOR

This is the fifth of six statements being prepared by Dr. Taylor for the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen. Dr. Taylor, nationally known churchman and life-long friend of Labor, lives in Nashville, Tenn. He is a teacher, lecturer, author and arbitrator.

The Taft-Hartley Bill is now law. It puts a ball and chain on labor unionism. Senator Murray declares that "it strips labor of many of its essential rights" and wonders if it can be carried out in free America; then he adds that "in Italy, in Germany, and elsewhere anti-labor legislation was the prelude to fascism." Progressive young Mayor Humphry of Minneapolis declares that "it strikes at the heart of our democracy and free enterprise system." A leading business man's journal says it "will be hell for labor, purgatory for business, and a paradise for lawyers."

President Truman's veto message, written after study and consultation with several keen expert minds is perhaps the best analysis of the law and its evils obtainable. As the average reader of newspapers has not seen it, we undertake to give here the most pungent quotations from it.

Mr. Truman denounced the bill from the standpoints of both principle and workability and said, "The Bill, taken as a whole would reverse the whole direction of our national labor policy, inject the government into private economic affairs of an unprecedented scale, and conflict with important principles of our democratic society. It would contribute neither to industrial peace nor to economic stability and progress. It would be a dangerous stride in the direction of a totally managed economy. It contains seeds of discord which would plague the nation for years to come." (Now that the bill is law, substitute "will" for "would" in the above quotation.)

Alva W. Taylor

He declared it to be "completely contrary to the national policy of economic freedom" by making the government "an unwarranted participant at every bargaining table." He expects it to "encourage distrust, suspicion, and arbitrary attitudes" at the bargaining table by inviting management and labor to "engage in costly, time-consuming litigation, embittering both parties." He expects it to nullify many existing employer-employee agreements, to involve the National Labor Relations Board, established to promote labor's rights and collective bargaining, "into a maze of pitfalls and complex procedures," and "so greatly increase the backlog of unsettled cases that the parties might be driven in despair from peaceful procedures to economic force." He calls it a "pattern of inequality" instead of, as it claims, equalizing management and labor. He believes that "the highly complex and burdensome requirements on labor organizations" will probably result in compelling labor to "strike or take other direct action." (It requires that every union official from the least in the local to the highest in the international—i.e., thousands in the large unions—must sign a declaration that he is not a communist, and that all union offices, local, district, regional, craft, national, and international, shall have submitted complete reports before even a local union is legitimized.)

It is, he declares, "a clear threat to the successful working of our democratic society." ". . . This bill would (will) go far toward weakening our trade union movement, . . . far toward destroying our national unity, . . . develop a class bias for political action, . . . injecting political considerations into normal economic decisions . . .," rejecting "the informed wisdom of those experienced in labor relations." It burdens NLRB with "an unworkable administrative structure, . . . straitjackets the Board by a series of special restrictions unknown to any other similar government agency, . . . authorizes inequitable injunctions," and, on the whole, "one could hardly devise" a worse method of preventing strikes. "Its provisions would (will) cause more strikes, not fewer." It contains "seeds of discord which would (will) plague the nation for years to come."

It "would (will) remove the settlement of differences from the bargaining table to courts of law. . . . We cannot create mutual respect and confidence by legislative fiat. . . . Cooperation cannot be achieved by force of law." It will "discourage the growing willingness of unions to include no-strike provisions in bargaining agreements . . . and a labor organization signing such an agreement would (will) expose itself to suit for contract violation if any of its members engage in an unauthorized wildcat strike."

The law bans the closed shop and makes the union shop so difficult to obtain, even when the employer favors it, "that union security and responsibility would (will) be largely cancelled," will "limit the freedom of employers and employees to establish and maintain welfare funds, . . . can be used to prohibit agreements on safety provisions, rest period rules, and many other legitimate practices." There is a possible construction of some clauses that may cause employers to regret that their National Association of Manufacturers could not more effectually

(Continued on page 6, col. 1)

21, Labor

Labor Is Necessary

By ROY COCHRANE

WORK is the transference of energy, say the physics books. Labor is more than this. It cannot be measured in kilowatts or horsepower. Manpower cannot be calculated with interchangeable units. Labor of all kinds involves thought, response, purpose, goals, needs and satisfaction, none of which is measured by erg, dyne, watt, volt, or coulomb.

As we move into the development of atom-power, we cannot assume that labor is to be replaced by dumb energy. We cannot dream of a push-button world unless we agree that everybody will have a share in getting the button ready to push.

Miners beneath the earth must tear out metal for the button and its machinery to be made of. Atom power may reduce their hours of work and may make mining more enjoyable. But it cannot do away with mining skills. There will be something to mine for a long time. When the exploration of the earth's interior begins in earnest, mining will be different, but miners will still be needed, atom or no atom. And a miner is a man who knows how to mine.

A Million Different Skills

A million different skills are required to produce our present civilization. Labor is the application of these skills. The skills are practiced by people in more than 10,000 occupations. These again can be summarized in 10 social-economic groups. You do not have to read a list of 1,000,000 skills nor even the 17,452 occupational titles described by the government. Ten social-economic groups are enough to show the diversity of talent required to keep the world going.

The following are ten social-economic levels. The list cannot be exact because there is great overlapping of these categories, but it will serve to suggest the tremendous differences of skill and of preparation needed by our civilization.[1]

[1] Edwards, Alba M. Comparative Occupation Statistics for the United States 1870-1940, Sixteenth Census, 1940, Population, Government Printing Office, 1943, $1.50, p. 175 ff.

★ Roy Cochrane is Director of Guidance and Counseling, Vallejo Unified School District, 801 Nebraska Street, Vallejo, California. He is a member of Phi Delta Kappa.

Laborers
Service Workers
Operatives
Craftsmen
Clerical Workers
Salesmen
Managers
Proprietors Professionals

The skills of the laborer are so readily learned that professors usually refer to these people as unskilled. Certain qualities and traits, however, are necessary for the successful continuance in a job as a laborer. The laborer must have a high monotony resistance coefficient. That is, he must be able to do repetitive work without distress, and he must follow simple directions without insisting upon more detailed instructions.

A misplaced person who does not have this ability may be assigned a task and when the foreman leaves, he may think of ten different ways the task could be accomplished. He may run after the foreman and try to find out just which way is expected in that particular company. This disqualifies him as a laborer. The foreman has other things to tend to and in good time will let the laborer know in no uncertain terms if he did the job the wrong way.

Service workers must have skills and attitudes different from the other groups. The classification is pretty wide, embracing activities all the way from crime detection to shoe polishing. In almost all kinds of service work, the man works with the attitudes of his employer, the customer, or others, more than is required in most of the jobs of most of the other groups. The service worker is typically sensitive to the other person's feelings and skilled in satisfying them.

The operative is typically the assembly-line factory worker. Here again routine and monotony must be faced day after day and the temperament that can stand these things will last well in these jobs.

Phi Delta Kappan Nov. 1947, Vol. XXIX, No. 3

Craftsmen are distinguished from other manual workers by the pride they take in the special skills traditional to the particular craft. Either by an apprenticeship, school training, or informal helping work, these crafts are learned to the point where interchangeability has become impossible between crafts. The locomotive engineer could no more do the work of the plumber than could the doctor or the lawyer. The tailor and the baker could not change jobs without long re-learning periods. If one craftsman cannot replace another, how is either one to be replaced by unconscious atomic energy?

The Clerical Worker

Clerical workers keep the wheels of business running. It is hard to imagine how atomic power will ever do away with the clerical worker. Technological improvements, to be sure, are changing this field from day to day, but they cannot replace the duties necessary for the routine transaction of all business. The phone call has replaced the confidential messenger, but calls, appointments, contacts, contracts, memoranda, and directives remain unchanged.

Salesmen, sometimes called creators of jobs, are by no means replaceable by brute power, unless it be power wielded by a ruthless dictator.

The managerial group may be tremendously expanded by atomic power, as it has already expanded due to other technological progress. It takes more brain power to keep the greater horsepower under control, but managers deal with men.

The proprietary group, which ranges from the farmer who owns a few acres to the controller of vast industrial empires, cannot find any hope of relaxation in the progress of power methods. Greater risks than ever before are now involved in putting a product on the market, and risk is the basis of this occupation. Adventure into what the public will buy means danger to his capital and livelihood, but gauging this risk is his job.

The professional workers will be more in demand than ever before. One could hardly mention a profession that will not require more workers. Take, for example, lawyers. Technological progress gives rise to jurisdictional disputes which constantly challenge the old foundations of law. More and better work will be demanded in this group.

To Make Houses

In order to get the picture a little more concretely before us, let us consider the starting of a new project. Let us suppose at the outset that we have an unlimited supply of atomic power. We will need first of all a purpose to use this power. So let us take as a purpose the manufacture of houses. We will need then a proprietor to supply the capital and exercise enough control to see that the purpose is carried out, and the capital conserved, or perhaps increased. We will need a managerial staff to figure out how houses are to be manufactured, to figure out how a factory is to be obtained, and how each necessary process is to be arranged. Since the outer shell of factory-made houses will perhaps be molded of some insulating plastic, we would need chemists to design and operate the production of this insulation and the waterproofing that goes on it. If the insulation is a fiber product, paper makers may be required. These men go by such romantic names as Digester Operator, Soda Cooker, and Sulfite Cooker and they know how to do things that are mysterious to every other craft or business. Actually a Lime Cooker might be the craftsman needed since ordinary straw, pressure cooked with ordinary lime, produces acceptable wallboard.

But to get back to the professional field, artists or architects will be needed to work out the finished shape of the product. It must be narrow enough to be transported by rail, yet convenient and attractive enough to satisfy the customer. The practical limitations of a 10 x 50 foot flat car for delivery require a complete revaluation of the functions of housing and furnishing. The need for meticulous planning is enormous, but beauty and convenience must get prime consideration.

Statisticians will be needed to figure out how many of the houses can be sold and in which direction they should be shipped, and lawyers will be needed to advise on the possibilities of circumventing obsolete housing laws which were never designed to face the problems of factory-built houses.

We would need salesmen. Perhaps we would have the houses sold by real estate agents throughout the country, thus cutting down on the far greater mark-up usual for the household appliances which would surely be part of the package. Instead of a sales cost of 20 per cent or 30 per cent on a refrigerator, stove, radio and washer, we would include these items in the total price and let the real estate salesman sell the furnished house for his usual 5 per cent commission.

We would again need lawyers. We would need them to find out whether selling a complete house would be a monopoly, since we would want to avoid violating laws originally provided for entirely different contingencies.

Long before we got this far on the project, we would have to have clerical workers of various types, and so far we have only mentioned the "white collar" contingent.

The Skills Change?

Anyone who has seen the smooth working of a coating machine knows that it is much better than messy spraying or brush painting. But even the parts that can be coated by machine need the technical skills of the painter. The best painters, really skilled ones, spend considerable time preparing paints—getting them ready for less-skilled painters to apply. The coating machine whether atom-powered or not will require some different skills, but it will still require painters to do the work.

Then we will need labor leaders to figure out which craft has the right to the process of rolling smooth coats of varnish on a floor. Would painters thereby infringe the rights of the printing industry which traditionally has worked with rubber rollers?

Though we build the shell of porous plastic or matter wood fiber and mold it in a huge mold, we do not dispense with carpenters. Doors and widdows must be fitted with carpenterial skill. Long ago carpenters used to make mortise-and-tenonned doors by hand. This process is still carried on in some countries, but is not characteristic of America. Newer carpentry skills will be needed, but many of the old ones will remain. It is certain that economic reasons will require that parts of the new structure be made of wood and that this wood be put together correctly. It cannot be done by undirected atomic-power. Carpenters must also transport the house from the flat-car and put foundation forms in place for another craft, the cement finishers, to fill. In the delivery process the carpenter will be assisted by truck drivers and laborers, each with specified tasks to perform, for which brain and brawn are needed regardless of available atom-power.

The Big Cost

The chief bar to education in any country is the cost involved. . . .

The base rate of pay for a laborer in the Chicago steel district is one dollar an hour. This means $2,000 a year, or, with some overtime, $2,400 a year. A college-age young man, foregoing college, can expect to earn an equal amount. Four years of work would mean nearly $10,000. That is the first and big cost of college: the only additional cost is the total sum of tuition.—George D. Stoddard.

Then and Now

The first day of an apprentice carpenter 25 years ago was spent running a hand saw in a miter box. The carpenters fixed up this miter box for the boy and showed him how to work the saw in the slot. He asked why a buzz saw was not used to do this work. The men said that if a buzz saw were used on the job, higher insurance would have to be paid on every man working on the project. A safe saw had not been invented.

Twenty-five years later when this man began to teach boys their first carpentry lessons, he had a power cut-off saw for them to use which did the same job with far greater precision and speed. It was almost as safe, particularly if the workers were properly instructed in the use of the safety precautions necessary to this new instrument.

Atom-power in the rough may be dangerous for many years; but even when it has been controlled so that its use is safe, the craft skills in changed form will still be needed. In fact new managerial occupations, crafts, and labor jobs will be added.

Operatives to carry on the routine assembly processes will be indispensable, and service workers also. Our house-factory will need a cleaning man to shine up the knocker on the front door for the delight of the customer.

Historians can look through all the history books they wish and count the rise and fall of civilization after civilization but nowhere will they find any society in which common labor is not an important factor. Nor will the dreams of the past give us any clue as to how common labor is to be dispensed with (if such an eventuality be considered desirable). Education may be able to render every man fit for jobs of greater complexity, but it does not thereby dispense with the need for laborers. Even if it indoctrinates all boys against this level (and unfortunately it often does this) the need for laborers will remain. Invent all the ditch-digging machines you wish—some ditches still must be dug by hand. Devise conveyor belts and package lifters without end—some items will remain to be shifted by hand.

Many Skills Are Required

Thus we have seen that in order to start any new project a great many skills are required. We can imagine a time when power will be as free as water in a spigot, but we cannot realistically picture a time in which this power will satisfy all the needs our imaginations can dream up unless it is guided by tens of thousands of different kinds of workers with millions of different skills. The complexity of modern life is easily keeping pace with the technological improvements which would supply our needs. This trend undoubtedly will continue. We will be able to think up new wants faster than we will be able to supply them.

The purpose and direction of these wants require a good sense of moral values. Writers who are partial to their own state of life may view a stratified society as ideal and give little thought to the convenience and welfare of those who do not belong to the top class. Such writers should not guide our moral values.

The dead hand of the past clutches our growing youth. Two-thirds of them aspire to the jobs and social positions now occupied by the most favored twentieth of the population. There is something unequal about these fractions. It would take fancy mathematics to squeeze anything like two-thirds into a twentieth; 69 per cent into 5 per cent.[2]

All guidance workers are faced with the problems of reorienting students into reasonable life-goals. Sometimes teachers have set up the dreams of the past as life's only ideal. The class reacts by jamming itself towards vocations in which there is little room.

Students must be taught that all labor is the honorable and necessary application of skill.

If schools and colleges are to teach a larger segment of the yearly crop of youth, it follows that they must offer a larger segment of civilization's skills.

Craft skills, clerical skills, sales skills—yes, and even some common laboring skills—must be offered in parallel with managerial and professional training.

[2] The figures are from Cochrane, Roy, "Daydream Curricula," Sierra Educational News, November, 1946.

The Question in Alcohol Research

By DEETS PICKETT

Science has by no means as yet said the last word as to the mystery of alcohol and the human body and mind; it has perhaps said only the first words concerning it.

We know many things about ingestion of alcohol; muscular output decreases 10 per cent, perception decreases 7-10 per cent, finger movements and dexterity decrease 9-60 per cent, within an hour after taking one to three ounces of alcohol.

It has been suggested that alcohol interferes with the transmission of nerve impulses at the junction between the nerve cells, which do not connect directly with each other but by means of tiny fibrils at the end of the nerve fibers. The gap between them is the synapse and the nerve impulse must jump across to complete a circuit. Alcohol may operate here to cause first, a lack of coordination and later, fumbling inefficiency.

There is also the theory that because of the affinity between alcohol and fats, the lipoids or tiny fat globules in the cell substance and the brain cells, absorb alcohol as they seem to absorb all other drugs having a narcotic effect, and thus the functioning is affected. These are reasonable hypotheses, but unproven.

There is abundant evidence of the overt, psychological behavior which results from the consumption of alcohol. Reaction time, perception, and the various reflexes are all affected, as shown for example by the over 200 researches in the Laboratory of Applied Physiology at Yale University. There is no lack of evidence that the changes actually occur; what we lack is information as to the mechanism of the changes produced by alcohol.—From Some Notes on the Alcohol Problem, published by the Board of Temperance, 100 Maryland Avenue, N.E., Washington 2, D. C., pages 14-15.

(Not printed at Government expense)

Congressional Record

United States of America

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

DECLASSIFIED

Amendment to Fair Labor Standards Act Relating to Minimum Wage

SPEECH

OF

HON. ELBERT D. THOMAS

OF UTAH

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, January 26, 1948

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill dealing with the subject of the minimum wage, and I ask unanimous consent that I may make a brief explanatory statement of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the Senator may proceed.

The bill (S. 2062) to provide for the amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. McGRATH, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MYERS, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. WAGNER), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, in introducing this bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act, I am not merely carrying out a routine legislative function. The Fair Labor Standards Act is a cornerstone of the social legislation for which Americans have fought for generations, and it occupies a special place in our history.

The principle behind the wage-hour law was stated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in his message to the Congress on May 24, 1937. He said:

> A self-supporting and self-respecting democracy can plead no justification for the existence of child labor, no economic reason for chiseling workers' wages, or stretching workers' hours.

When, Congress, almost 10 years ago, enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act, the representatives of all the people agreed for the first time in our history that there would be at least a bare minimum which a man must be paid for his work. They defined a general maximum working week and provided that work in excess of that maximum receive special compensation.

Today, the act is still on the books, but its purpose has been to a great degree negated. The passage of years, a war, and resulting inflation have combined to render the 40-cent minimum completely meaningless. Those 40 cents today will buy barely half as much food as they did when the law was passed. And over half of our working population is still excluded from the benefits of the act.

The time is long overdue for action to change this law from a historical landmark to a living reality. Wage-hour legislation was originally conceived as a continuous and expanding process. Standards set up were to be extended and improved to match the growth of the Nation. President Roosevelt said, and the Congress then agreed, that we must "take further action to extend the frontiers of social progress" for the benefit of those "who toil in factory and on farm." And it was recognized that the rudimentary standards set up in the act were but a first step.

We have hesitated and we have allowed the minimum wage to be slashed by inflation. To maintain the wage-hour law we must again make it meaningful. In the amendments I am introducing, I have sought to take the next steps in the continuous process by which we will approach not merely bare minimum standards but fair standards.

The bill I am proposing would amend the Fair Labor Standards Act in a number of principal respects:

First. It would raise the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour 120 days after its enactment. It would again put into operation the procedure of the original act whereby industry committees composed of industry, labor, and the public may raise the wage to $1 an hour where this is found feasible. The special procedure for determining wages in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are not changed.

Second. It would broaden the coverage of the minimum wage and overtime provisions by extending these provisions to workers engaged in any activity affecting interstate or foreign commerce. The exemption for employees in retail selling and servicing enterprises is narrowed so that it would not apply to employees in chain stores or department stores. Seamen are granted protection under both the wage-and-hour provisions. Industries processing agricultural or horticultural commodities or fish are covered by the minimum wage and overtime provisions. Both the seasonal industry exemption and the unworkable area-of-production exemption provisions have been deleted. Employees of motor carriers are covered by the overtime-pay provisions, unless, at the time the work was performed, the Interstate Commerce Commission had set qualifications and maximum hours of service for the covered occupation. The newspaper exemption is the same as in the present act. The telephone-operator exemption is removed so that switchboard operators of all exchanges will be covered by the minimum-wage and overtime provisions. The agriculture exemption is narrowed so that workers on large, industrialized farms—those regularly employing eight or more, not including the children of the farmer—will have the protection of the wage provisions of the act.

Third. It would abolish the exploitation of children in industry and industrialized agriculture. It would do this by directly prohibiting the employment of children in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce and by narrowing the agricultural exemption to the child-labor provisions so that this exemption would not apply to children in industrialized agriculture; that is, to children employed on farms with more than eight employees. I deem it a matter of national shame that we have for so long permitted the narrow coverage of section 12 in the present act to limit the so-called prohibition of child labor to service performed in and about plants producing goods for interstate commerce. By interpretation this has been held to exclude from protection of the act thousands of minors who need and are entitled to such protection. Now the weakest and most necessitous wage earners will be given protection equivalent to the protection which has, for 10 years, been given adults under this act.

Fourth. The definition of "wage" in section 3 (m) is changed to exclude the cost of food and lodging in the calculation of minimum wages for seamen and dining-car employees. This amendment is necessary in order to assure an adequate minimum wage for a group of employees who have no choice in the acceptance of certain subsistence facilities.

I recommend these amendments with the same pride and spirit which I felt when I came before this body years ago in recommending the original Fair Labor Standards Act. It is with a full understanding and thankfulness for the good that has come for the thousands and thousands of people who have benefited by this act that I urge this body to give serious consideration to these proposals which would take us another step toward assuring a secure and full life for our millions of working people.

777937—24002

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1948

Economic Survey of the South

Article No. 22—THE LABOR SITUATION IN THE TEXTILE - APPPAREL INDUSTRIES

By HARRY E. RESSEGUIE
Chief, Washington Bureau
Fairchild Publications

When one studies the labor situation in the textile-apparel industries of the South, one is immediately struck with two significant facts:

1. The relatively small percentage of employes in these industries who are working under union agreements or contracts, and

2. The number of unions which are contending for members in the same industries.

To these possibly should be added a third: That none of the unions contending for the cotton-textile industry (which would be the great prize if it could be organized) is making any great effort to organize new plants at the moment, having adopted the philosophy that an inflationary period is a poor one in which to attempt new gains in an industry as admittedly hard to organize as cotton textiles.

The latter is the explanation of the seeming failure of "Operation Dixie" (and the competitive American Federation of Labor drive) in the cotton textile industry.

Although they are among the oldest industries in the South and more effort has been expended by unions in efforts to organize them over a longer period of years than has been spent on any other, the textile-apparel industries have been far less rewarding to the unions than have many others. Although it is seldom realized, the degree of union organization as a whole is considerable, as was pointed out in Article No. 12 of this series, which dealt with the general labor situation in the South. Many of the new industries, such as oil and pulp and paper, are almost completely organized, while many others are from 60 to 75 per cent organized.

The textile-apparel industries and the lumber industry, two of the South's oldest, have always lagged behind, from the union standpoint—and still do.

REASONS FOR LAG.

Part of this is due to the stubborn resistance which unions have met from management in these fields, but an objective analysis of the situation leads one to the conclusion that, in the textile-apparel industries, at least

America. The latter currently has the status of an independent union, while John L. Lewis makes up his mind whether he will rejoin the AFL for the third time or the CIO for the second, or start a new national federation of his own.

In the cotton textile industry, there are currently only two unions operating. These are the TWUA-CIO and the UTWA-AFL.

In the hosiery field, there are again three unions. These are the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, a one-time subsidiary of the TWUA which recently secured a divorce from that union by the expedient of non-payment of dues after having failed to come to an amicable understanding with the TWUA leadership concerning its ambitions to stand on its own feet; the hosiery branch of the UTW, and the United Construction Workers.

In other branches of the knit goods industry in the South—knitted underwear and knitted outerwear—the ILGWU is generally regarded as having an inside track, although in specific instances it has had competition from both apparel and textile unions affiliated with the CIO and from the United Construction Workers.

In the cotton garment industry, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, CIO; the United Garment Workers of America, AFL; the United Construction Workers of America, UMW, and the ILGWU all are active to

Directors of Unions' Southern Drives

GEORGE BALDANZI
Textile Workers' Union America, CIO

NICK COLLINS
United Textile Workers of America, AFL

GLADYS DICKASON
Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO

this industry in the South were still, in September and October of last year, earning less than 65 cents an hour, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America had succeeded in establishing a 65-cent minimum for its own members in the region, as well as in other parts of the country. The Amalgamated, however, has been less successful than the textile unions in forcing its own wage scales on the unorganized section of the industry.

In the individual branches of the textile-apparel industry, the situation in the South is as follows:

THE TEXTILE INDUSTRIES

Of all the workers in the textile industries in the South (probably between 575,000 and 600,000), less than 25 per cent are organized.

This covers workers in the cotton textile industry, the woolen and worsted industry, and the rayon weaving industry. The majority, about 560,000, are in the capitalize such a situation never have coincided.

There have been a number of occasions on which such spontaneous demands for unionization have swept through Southern mill villages. The most recent were in 1929 and 1934.

In both instances the existing unions muffed their opportunity.

The 1929 flare-up resulted in the debacles of Gastonia and Marion. The 1934 situation, featured by "flying squadrons" of mill workers who traveled in auto caravans from plant to plant shutting off the power and bringing out the workers to join the trek to the next plant, was called off by the United Textile Workers after 22 days on the basis of four recommendations made by a board of inquiry appointed by President Roosevelt.

These recommendations were: (1) That a new textile labor relations board (under the National Recovery Administration) be ap-the strongest organizing staffs the South ever has seen.

This is particularly true of the Textile Workers' Union, which, as an affiliate of the CIO, has the support of that federation's organizing staff throughout the region. Thus, the TWU not only has complete State organizations in every Southern textile State but can call on the CIO organizing staff in the State for support. In fact, it is the CIO organizing crews which seem to do most of the new organization work in the textile field at the moment. The same is true on a lesser scale of the UTW, which, of course, has the backing of the AFL Southern regional staff.

Therefore, the unions are in better shape to capitalize upon a spontaneous demand for organization among Southern textile workers than ever before, should such a wave of emotion again sweep the region.

Until it does, however, most unless leaders will privately admit and the lumber industry, two of the South's oldest, have always lagged behind, from the union standpoint—and still do.

REASONS FOR LAG.

Part of this is due to the stubborn resistance which unions have met from management in these fields, but an objective analysis of the situation leads one to the conclusion that, in the textile-apparel industries, at least, the unions themselves must bear much of the responsibility for their lack of progress.

One of the reasons apparently is that the unions contending for the textile-apparel industries in the South spend as much or more time fighting each other as they do in endeavoring to extend the general field of unionization.

In this policy, of course, the Internationals and other branches actually represented in the South only reflect the situation at the federation level, where the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the American Federation of Labor and the United Mine Workers are constantly at one another's throats.

In the textile-apparel industry in the South, however, the situation is even more competitive because, in addition to the two main national federations (AFL and CIO) and the UMW, there are two additional contenders for the adherence of the workers.

These are the independent unions or, as labor leaders term them "the company unions", and, the greatest of them all, the inchoate mass of Southern workers in the textile-apparel industries who are represented on National Labor Relations Board representation ballots—and only on NLRB representation ballots—by the significant phrase: "No Union".

A mere listing of the unions active in the respective branches of the textile-apparel industry in the region is sufficient to emphasize the foregoing statements. (In this listing, the independent and "no union" groups will not be repeated for each industry. It can be assumed they are each a factor in almost every situation, the extent of which will be discussed in the summaries for each industry.)

THE VARIOUS UNIONS

In the rayon industry (which is organized to a greater degree than any other branch of the textile-apparel industry in the South), three unions contend for the honor of representing the employees.

They are the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO; the United Textile Workers of America, AFL, and the United Construction Workers, a subsidiary of the United Mine Workers of America. It has had competition from both apparel and textile unions affiliated with the CIO and from the United Construction Workers.

In the cotton garment industry, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, CIO; the United Garment Workers of America, AFL; the United Construction Workers of America, UMW, and the ILGWU all are active to varying degrees — sufficient, at least, to confuse the average employe of these industries who does not carry a history of the American trade union movement in his head.

In the woolen and worsted industry, the textile dyeing and finishing industry and the rayon weaving industry the contenders are the same as in the cotton textile industry.

In the shoe industry one finds the United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, and the Boot and Shoe workers Union, AFL.

These overlapping efforts of dual unions are confusing to students of the labor movement themselves, to say nothing of the Southern worker — or for that matter the managements of Southern mills and factories. It is entirely conceivable that some employers who might otherwise be willing to deal with a single strong union in his industry might be deterred by the complexity of the situation in which he could be involved by doing so.

THE UNION'S JOB

However, it is possible that the textile-apparel unions should be credited with doing a qualitative, if not a quantitative, job in the South. If they have not signed up a large part of their potential membership in the region, they have, on the other hand, consistently obtained wage increases for their members, and, by playing a good American game of bluff, have forced the non-union employers in the South to adopt the same increases.

The cotton-textile industry in the South, for instance, entered the war with a 40 cent minimum wage and the last increase secured under the auspices of the War Labor Board set the minimum hourly wage at 55 cents. From that point up to the present 87-cent minimum, the increases have first been won by collective bargaining in the unionized mills and reflected by the unorganized employers, or the latter have endeavored to beat the unionized mills to the punch while they still were negotiating with the union.

In the cotton garment industry (the largest of the apparel industries in the South), although 58 per cent of all employees of Iowa.

THE TEXTILE INDUSTRIES

Of all the workers in the textile industries in the South (probably between 575,000 and 600,000), less than 25 per cent are organized.

This covers workers in the cotton textile industry, the woolen and worsted industry, and the rayon weaving industry. The majority, about 360,000, are in the cotton textile industry.

Probably 20 per cent of the total has been organized by the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO; the remainder by the United Textile Workers of America, AFL.

This is all that organized labor has to show for 50 years of intermittent organizing work in the Southern textile industry. Practically all of the current union membership has been secured since the Wagner Act was held constitutional by the Supreme Court in 1937.

Considering the determined opposition which unions have had to meet in the textile field, the present position of the unions is probably better than it would appear from a simply numerical viewpoint. It may be significant, however, that, except for one or two "strong points" in the Deep South, the union membership is principally concentrated along the Northern rim of the Southern textile region, in Southern Virginia and in Northern North Carolina.

Both the TWU and the UTW have won their present positions without a general region-wide strike.

Efforts of the TWU in the region date from March 1937, when its predecessor, the Textile Workers Organizing Committee was formed under Sidney Hillman and with the blessing and financial support of the Amalgamated in agreement with the United Textile Workers, then affiliated with the CIO.

In 1939, a group of locals of the UTW was reinvested with the charter of that union by the AFL and in the same year the Textile Workers Union began functioning under its present name and officers. When rechartered in 1939 by the AFL, the UTW had only 1,500 members, so that whatever it has at present has been won since that time.

Relatively small as is the union membership in Southern textile industries today, it is probably the greatest heretofore attained.

One of the reasons for this is that the spontaneous desire of the Southern textile workers for organization and the ability of whatever unions happened to be functioning in the Southern textile industry at the moment to the power and bringing out the workers to join the trek to the next plant, was called off by the United Textile Workers after 22 days on the basis of four recommendations made by a board of inquiry appointed by President Roosevelt.

These recommendations were: (1) That a new textile labor relations board (under the National Recovery Administration) be appointed; (2) that the Federal Trade Commission investigate the ability of the industry to support a higher wage structure; (3) that the cotton, wool and silk codes be amended to permit the functioning of a special committee to regulate the stretch-out; (4) that a study be made by the U. S. Department of Labor or occupational wage rates in the industry.

"This greatest of all textile strikes (about 170,000 textile workers in the South were out at the peak) brought few tangible or immediate gains to the workers," says the Bureau of Labor Statistics in its study of unionism in the South entitled "Labor in the South." "The companies did not recognize the union, wages remained unchanged, and, as it turned out, the new labor board was no more effective than the old in protecting the rights of the workers to organize and bargain collectively. The use of the 'stretch-out' was apparently tempered. The workers themselves interpreted the result as a defeat. Many were refused employment at the end of the strike and union membership declined sharply during the months that followed."

UNION PROGRESS

Since the 1934 strike failure brought the total of major defeats for labor unions in the Southern textile industry to a score or more, to say nothing of minor engagements which also were lost, the organizing campaigns which began for TWU in 1937 (when Mr. Hillman was chief of the Textile Workers' Organizing Committee), and for the UTW in 1939, are the more remarkable because the Southern textile worker had become thoroughly disillusioned about unions and union leaders.

Therefore, while the unions have made few major gains in the Southern textile industry since 1941, they have held on to practically all of the membership and contracts which they had achieved by that date, and have added to both in a small way. They also have negotiated a number of wage increases in the organized mills, which have also been put into effect by most of the unorganized mills. These, from one point of view, are major accomplishments.

The unions also have built up the UTW, which, of course, has the backing of the AFL Southern regional staff.

Therefore, the unions are in better shape to capitalize upon a spontaneous demand for organization among Southern textile workers than ever before, should such a wave of emotion again sweep the region.

Until it does, however, most union leaders will privately admit that they have little hope of making any further gains in the Southern textile industry comparable to those made between 1937 and 1941.

In the meantime, they feel they can afford to play a waiting game, concentrating their efforts upon narrowing or eliminating the wage differential between the Southern mills and those of the North, which they have whittled down to about 8 cents an hour.

TIME NOT RIPE

There is nearly full employment in the Southern textile industry at the moment, many mills are working from five to eight hours overtime each week, and earnings of Southern textile workers are the highest in history. Under such conditions, workers with so slight an industrial background as that of the average cotton textile worker can see little need for a union. Having come to understand the psychology of the Southern textile worker, this is a situation that the union leaders tacitly accept as inevitable.

However, with this situation existing, observers familiar with the background of labor unionism in the Southern textile industry are hesitant about writing off "Operation Dixie" (and the corresponding AFL organizing drive) as a failure. The organizing machinery of the TWU and the supporting CIO has not yet been tested.

It is true that the TWU has lost several strikes at individual mills, but it has frankly admitted defeat in these instances and sent its members back to work rather than risk more by calling out workers in other mills in a sympathy strike. It also is true that TWU seriously threatened to strike against the unionized mills last November when it seemed for a short time that its demands for a wage increase might not be granted. But there was never much chance that it would not reach an agreement at most of the mills, and in the one instance where it seemed as though a strike might materialize (in fact, the union had called it for the next morning), the union leaders receded on one of the most important non-wage issues of the strike at 3 a.m. (with the strike call set for 6 a.m.).

As a consequence, the Cone

Continued on Page Five

Southern Series

ALABAMA • ARKANSAS • FLORIDA • GEORGIA • KENTUCKY • LOUISIANA • MISSISSIPPI • NORTH CAROLINA • OKLAHOMA • SOUTH CAROLINA • TENNESSEE • TEXAS • VIRGINIA

Directors of Unions' Southern Drives

A. D. LEWIS
United Construction Workers

JOHN MARTIN
International Ladies' Garment Workers of America, AFL

HERBERT W. PAYNE
Textile Workers' Union of America, CIO

Continued from Page Four

Mills at Greensboro are said to have the only TWU contract in the South, which does not exempt the union from suit under that provision of the Taft-Hartley Act which makes a union liable for a violation of the contract.

This was the issue rather than the question of the 9 per cent wage increase, which brought the Cone Mills to the verge of a strike during the first week of November last year.

The management maintains that it agreed to the wage increase as soon as the first mill (Dan River Mills) settled. However, it was adamant against signing a contract absolving the union from responsibility for wildcat strikes unless it received in return authority to discipline the strikers. The union must either take the responsibility for wildcat strikes or allow management to take it, the latter insisted. The final compromise, reached only a short time before the strike deadline of 6 a.m. omits all reference to the subject, but since the union is not specifically released from such reized and non-union mills in the South. It is a situation which the union directors of public relations seem to have neglected to publicize to their own advantage. An advertising agency would snap it up quickly as the basis for a great sales presentation.

The unionized mills have not won this increased efficiency without effort. The vice-president in charge of manufacturing in one unionized mill said that, when he took over his present job five or six years ago, his preliminary studies convinced him that there was a slack of at least a third in the then existing work loads in the mill. Since the annual wage bill of this mill then was about 5 million dollars annually, and is now about 9 million dollars, this inefficiency was costing the mill a pretty penny.

Most of it has since been eliminated. More will be eliminated in the future.

Practically all of the unionized mills have had strikes as a result of readjustments of their work loads. Most of these have been unauthorized walkouts from the he turned to display it to the man and found that the worker was nearly at the other end of the spinning room and going fast. Calling the worker back, the executive inquired why he had walked away.

"I'm quitting," was the reply. "You know how to do this job much better than I do, so you'd better do it yourself."

Not all textile workers are that independent, of course, but most of them are sufficiently so to resent immediately anything which they consider an imposition, as a heavier work load, and most executives of unionized mills are free to admit that the substantial adjustments in work loads which they have been able to make in recent years have been possible only with the assistance of the union. (One executive of a unionized mill, on the other hand, said that the union had fought every work load adjustment that had been made.)

Therefore, the next crisis in the Southern textile industry may come when the demand for cotton textiles has slumped off and 25 contracts and 20,000 members in the South. By 1943, the number of contracts in the South had grown to 60 and the membership to 52,000. At the end of 1947, TWU claimed 157 contracts in the South and a membership of 120,000. Both contracts and membership presumably covered the rayon as well as the cotton, woolen and rayon weaving industries.

In 1939, when it was rechartered by the AFL, the United Textile Workers had only 1,500 members nationally. It now claims 35,000 members in the South alone includng presumably, as in TWU's case, its membership in the rayon field.

If the progress of TWU or UTW were measured by the results of the current Southern organizing drives alone, it would not be impressive, but, as has been pointed out, there are specific reasons why that is probably not a valid criterion.

ORGANIZING DRIVES.

At the end of the first year of "Operation Dixie" last summer, the CIO claimed only 39 additional textile mills as a result, and admitted to having lost elections at 18 others, although claiming to have won in six of these when a second election was held.

AFL, in a report covering the first year of its own Southern organizing drive, issued about Aug. 1, claimed to have won elections in eight textile mills, and to have obtained from 6,000 to 7,000 new members.

Winning an NLRB election, however, is not the same thing as obtaining a contract, as both unions know all too well, and there is a whole list of cases before NLRB in which mills have refused to bargain collectively with a textile union, even though that union had won a representation election in their plant and the company had been cited by NLRB at least once for failure to bargain.

Some cases involving a situation in which an employer consistently refused to bargain with a duly certified union have dragged on for years.

Two cases now in Federal Courts in the South should go a long way toward determining whether an employer actually can be made to bargain with a union certified to represent his workers a subsidiary of the United Mine Workers of America, headed by Denny Lewis, a brother of the big boss, John L.

In addition there are independent unions and the great amorphous "No Union" group

TWUA has blanket national agreements with the American Viscose Corp. and with Industrial Rayon Corp. covering all of these firm's plants. Consequently, this union has the American Viscose plants at Front Royal and Roanoke, Va., and its cellophane plant at Fredericksburg, Va., as well as Industrial's one Southern plant at Covington, Va.

TWUA also has the Rome (Ga.) plant of the Celanese Corp. of America and of some of the Celanese weaving and knitting plants in Virginia.

Collectively, its agreements in these plants therefore make TWUA the representative for about 10,000 rayon and allied workers in the South.

United Textile Workers of America, AFL, has organized the plants of the American Bemberg Corp. and of the North American Rayon Corp at Elizabethton, Tenn., and of American Enka Corp. at Asheville, N. C. It came within about 400 votes last November of losing control of the Bemberg and North American plants to TWUA in a closely contested NLRB election.

These agreements (renewed in December, 1947, for a two-year period at all three plants) make UTW also the representative of about 10,000 Southern rayon workers — 6,000 at Elizabethton and 4,000 at Asheville.

United Construction Workers' main stronghold in the South at the moment is the Narrows (Va.) plant of the Celanese Corp. of America, which employs more than 4,500. UCW has also organized the Hopewell (Va.) weaving plant of Celanese (another old Tubize plant), which has about 750 employes.

UCW, therefore, represents about 5,300 rayon and allied employes in the South.

The du Pont rayon plants, and that of the Tennessee Eastman Corp. are as yet unorganized by any of the major international unions.

union must either take the responsibility for wildcat strikes or allow management to take it, the latter insisted. The final compromise, reached only a short time before the strike deadline of 6 a.m. omits all reference to the subject, but since the union is not specifically released from such responsibility, the management considers it is responsible, and could, presumably, therefore be sued under the Taft-Hartley Act for any damages resulting from wildcat strikes.

STRIKE AVOIDANCE

The TWU, as the largest union in the Southern textile field, is obviously anxious, therefore, to avoid not only a general textile strike in the South until there is again a spontaneous demand on the part of textile workers for organization but also to avoid a strike over a non-wage issue in any of the mills with which it is under agreement.

When can another such spontaneous demand on the part of the Southern textile workers be expected?

The answer to this is to be found in the quotation of the Bureau of Labor Statistics concerning the 1934 strike.

BLS says, correctly: "The use of the 'stretch-out' was apparently tempered."

In fact, since 1934 use of the stretch-out has been tempered to such a degree in the unorganized milsl in the South that, in many of them, the adjustment of work loads to the newer and faster machinery has not progressed beyond the point at which it stood at that date. On the other hand, this process has gone steadily forward in the unionized mills, in most cases with the cooperation of the union.

It is the unionized mills in the South that have the stretch-out today, therefore, rather than the unorganized ones.

One of the heads of a unionized mill says that at the time his weavers were operating 32 looms each on denims, the top executive of a non-unionized mill located deeper in the South used to kid him about signing up with the union because the weavers in the non-union mill operated 38 looms each on the same type of fabric.

Today, however, weavers at the unionized mill operate 54 looms, while those at the non-union mill still operate only 38 looms.

UNIONS AND WORK LOADS

This situation can be duplicated by contrasting work loads in many other departments of the union-

Most of it has since been eliminated. More will be eliminated in the future.

Practically all of the unionized mills have had strikes as a result of readjustments of their work loads. Most of these have been unauthorized walkouts from the department which was under adjustment at the moment, and have not been supported by the union. These are soon settled, or if the workers do not care to return to the higher workloads, they are replaced, with the union supporting the management.

In a few instances, however, such as that at the Erwin Mills in Durham, there have been strikes against the principle of the higher workloads which have been supported by the union. In every instance, however, these have been lost, and the principle is now well established in the unionized mills.

One mill executive who operates a chain of mills, some of which are organized and others unorganized, says that he makes all of his workload adjustments in his organized mills first. After the higher workload is established here, he has no trouble in securing acceptance for it in the unorganized plants.

This is possible because the union helps in maintaining discipline and in forcing acceptance of the new workloads. The battery hands in this mill were recently stepped up from 60 to 100 looms each. A wildcat strike followed, but the union supported the management. Only half of the battery hands returned to work, but they returned to the new workload. The places of the others were filled by new workers. But the new workload was established.

Unorganized mills hesitate to make similar drastic adjustments in the workloads of their employes for fear of a strike, it is said; a fear which probably is well founded, since if strikes occur in unionized mills under such circumstances, they would be inevitable in a like situation in an unorganized plant.

WORKER INDEPENDENCE

The independence of the Southern textile worker is traditional.

One mill executive tells a story which well illustrates it. Walking through the mill one day he noticed a new spinner was very awkward in knotting the broken ends. Having come up the hard way in the mill himself, he thought he would help the man by showing him how the job should be done.

When he had finished the knot, ized mill, on the other hand, said that the union had fought every work load adjustment that had been made.)

Therefore, the next crisis in the Southern textile industry may come when the demand for cotton textiles has slumped off and when the competition of the unionized mills has compelled the unorganized mills (the major portion of the industry) to make comparable adjustments in their own work loads.

If, as many observers feel will be the case, that situation is followed by wildcat strikes and by a spontaneous demand for organization on the part of the workers in the non-union mills, "Operation Dixie" will receive its first real test. Until then, it is premature to write it off as a failure.

SPHERES OF INFLUENCE

In the meantime, while waiting for a break, the textile unions, in addition to building what seems to be a permanent organization and membership in the South for the first time, have gradually extended their spheres of influence and have been instrumental in the phenomenal increase in wages that has taken place in the South in the past ten years.

It hardly seems possible that, in 1938, the statutory minimum wage in the cotton textile industry was only 25 cents an hour. The first wage order under the Wage-Hour Act increasing this was made in 1939 and established a 32½ cent minimum. In July 1941, the wage-hour administrator again ordered an increase to 37½ cents an hour and the industry voluntarily then adopted the statutory 40 cent minimum.

Representatives of employer associations maintain that the minimum in the South never could have gone above this point had it not been for the war. The final War Labor Board award, however, made in February 1946, brought the minimum only to 55 cents an hour. The increase to 87 cents an hour minimum in the South since that time has been the result of negotiations between the unions and the management of the unionized mills, establishing a pattern which has been followed by the non-unionized mills.

During this period, both major textile unions have consistently increased the number of union contracts and their membership in the South.

In October 1937, the Textile Workers' Organizing Committee (predecessor of TWU) had only refused to bargain with a duly certified union have dragged on for years.

Two cases now in Federal Courts in the South should go a long way toward determining whether an employer actually can be made to bargain with a union certified to represent his workers under the Wagner Act, as that law is amended by the Taft-Hartley Act.

On the plea of the CIO Textile Workers Union, the Federal Court at Greensboro, N. C., recently enjoined the Amazon Cotton Mills of Thomasville, N. C., from committing an unfair labor practice by refusing to bargain with the TWUA. This seems definitely to be one round for the unions.

In Virginia, the NLRB is pressing for action in the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States to compel the Craddock-Terry Shoe Co. of Lynchburg to bargain with the CIO United Shoe Workers. The union in this case won bargaining rights some time ago, but the company has consistently refused to bargain and has refused an NLRB directive that it do so. The case gains added interest from the fact that NLRB recently revived it when the shoe union complied with the non-Communist affidavit provision of the Taft-Hartley law after having dropped prosecution when the union at first failed to comply.

THE RAYON INDUSTRY

The rayon industry has the highest degree of union organization, and pays the highest wage rate of any of the textile industries in the South.

It also illustrates best the internecine battle between major international unions for control of this obvious prize package, which now has close to 50,000 employes in the South and is getting bigger every year.

Three major union organizations are perched on the back fence of the Southern rayon industry, arching their backs and making hissing noises at one another—and at the management of unorganized plants. The last thing any of them wants to be is a "tame cat" for management, although each realizes that it must share management's problems if it is to succeed in its ambitions.

Consequently, there is a high degree of cooperation between unions and management in Southern rayon plants.

The three unions are, as previously noted, the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO; the United Textile Workers, AFL, and the United Construction Workers,

UCW, therefore, represents about 5,300 rayon and allied employes in the South.

The du Pont rayon plants, and that of the Tennessee Eastman Corp. are as yet unorganized by any of the major international unions.

DU PONT COMPANY UNION

In each of the du Pont plants, however, there is an independent union of du Pont employes, and these unions are, in turn, organized into a du Pont Workers Council, which meets once a month to consider problems common to employes and management

However, TWUA is edging in on du Pont.

It has thus far won representation only at minor units comprising about 800 workers, or less than 6 per cent of du Pont's possibly 14,000 employes in the South.

These are the Old Hickory Chemical Co. at Old Hickory, Tenn., jointly owned by du Pont and Stauffer Chemical Co. and the cellophane unit at Old Hickory. The first of these employs about 200 workers, the cellophane units about 600. The last election at the Old Hickory cellophane plant gave TWUA 456 votes, the Independent Cellophane Workers Association 202 votes, with 14 for "No Union" and one challenged.

This was the second election TWUA had won at this plant. It was arranged by NLRB when the independent union challenged TWUA's continued representation upon the expiration of its first contract with du Pont.

TWUA also claims an increasing membership in the Old Hickory rayon plant itself, and both the local union and CIO State headquarters in Nashville are working hard to increase this to a point

Continued on Page Six

NEW FREE BOOKLET

'TEXTILE TOPICS' VOL. 5

reprinting 12 radio broadcasts by prominent textile guest experts. Clip this ad and write to:

J.W. Valentine Co., Inc.
Textile Selling Agents
40 Worth Street • New York 13, N. Y.

Southern Series

ALABAMA • ARKANSAS • FLORIDA • GEORGIA • KENTUCKY • LOUISIANA • MISSISSIPPI • NORTH CAROLINA • OKLAHOMA • SOUTH CAROLINA • TENNESSEE • TEXAS • VIRGINIA

Continued from Page Five

where an NLRB election can be demanded.

However, in little more than a year, TWUA has lost elections at three other du Pont plants. In December, 1946, it lost an NLRB election at the du Pont rayon plant at Richmond, Va. In this election, the United Construction Workers occupied the show position, while TWUA placed. The winner was the Ampthill Rayon Workers, the independent organization.

In June, 1947, TWUA lost an election at the Waynesboro, Va., acetate rayon plant of du Pont to the Independent United Workers, 1,433 to 513. In the same month it also lost an election at the Richmond cellophane unit to the Transparent Film Workers Union, 401 to 246. United Construction Workers did not contest this one.

PERSONNEL POLICIES

The Tennessee Eastman plant at Kingsport, Tenn., remains entirely unorganized, although all the major international unions have endeavored at one time or another to organize it. The United Construction Workers is reported to be most active at the moment.

One of the probable reasons for Tennessee Eastman remaining unorganized is its advanced personnel policies, patterned after those of the parent company, Eastman Kodak Co., which has enabled that firm to keep its Rochester (N. Y.) plants unorganized during its entire business life.

Part of this personnel policy is the "wage dividend" or bonus, the amount of which is determined annually by the directors or the company in March. In the case of employes who have worked for the company a number of years, this amounts to a considerable sum, the distribution of which is obviously within the power of the directors to discontinue at their pleasure.

Du Pont's advanced personnel policies also have had much to do with keeping its plants unorganized. Du Pont has published a little booklet which it distributes to visitors at its Waynesboro plant, which says in part:

"When an individual enters the employ of the du Pont Co., he is entering a kind of cooperative en-caused by hydrogen sulphide and carbon bisulphide fumes, the company established a medical department and spent several million dollars to improve ventilating systems in churn and spinning rooms.

The company, of course, says that it inaugurated these enlightened policies; TWUA claims that it won them.

Wherever the credit is due, however, the fact that they were in existence probably helped TWUA to defeat the United Construction Workers the last time that union challenged it at the American Viscose plants, in July, 1946. In that NLRB election, TWUA secured 9,000 votes to 1,700 for UCW.

The new blanket contract signed last summer between TWUA and Industrial Rayon Corp. also provided for fringe benefits estimated to be equal to 6 cents an hour in increased wages. These included liberalized hospitalization and sick benefits, revised holiday and vacation schedules. The contract provided for a $2,000 insurance for all eligible employes, both male and female, hospitalization to a maximum of $8 a day for employes and their dependents, readjusted paid vacations to give three weeks annually to employes of 15 years or more service, two weeks for employes with five or more years and one week for employes with between one and five years of service.

The new contract negotiated in December by the United Textile Workers at the plants of American Bemberg Co., North American Rayon Co., also provided for a "life insurance and hospitalization package for all employes to be paid for by the company," plus six paid holidays and other perquisites.

Du Pont apparently pays more liberal shift differentials than the unions have been able to negotiate with the managements of other Southern rayon plants, however, since at Old Hickory (and presumably at its other plants as well) workers on the second shift get a 10 per cent differential over first shift rates, while those on the third shift receive a 20 per cent differential.

At most plants, the second shift differential is 5 per cent an hour and that for the third 10 per cent an hour. At the Bemberg and which TWUA has been able to establish in the South, as the site of its new Celriver plant. TWUA has organized five of the 10 textile and finishing plants in Rock Hill, and Celanese expects, of course, that as soon as Celriver has started to operate, TWUA will ask for an election. TWUA expects so, too, and expects to win it; has been making plans to do so for the past year.

However, Celanese will not hand TWUA a contract at this plant, since its general policy is against company wide agreements and it expresses itself as being equally as well satisfied with the United Construction Workers at its Celco plant, Narrows, Va., as with TWUA at Cumberland, Md., and Rome, Ga. (Incidentally, TWUA renewed its contract at the Celanese Cumberland plant last June only after a 29-day strike. It participated in the first NLRB election at Celco in 1941, when both it and UCW lost to "No Union." TWUA ran a bad third. At the next NLRB election at this plant, in 1943, when UCW won control, TWUA did not participate.

At Rock Hill, therefore, while TWUA has the advantage, it certainly will have to compete with UCW before it wins this plant, and probably with the UTW and "No Union" as will, since there is a strong non-union movement at some of the unorganized textile plants in Rock Hill.

United Textile Workers likewise expects that it will be handed a contract at American Enka's new rayon plant at Morristown, Tenn., and will probably have the inside edge there because some of its members are being transferred from Asheville to that plant as instructors. However, it probably will be disappointed in its expectations of receiving a contract without an NLRB election, since the management says that any union securing representation at the plant will have to win it. To do so, UTW is certain to have to compete with both UCW and TWUA.

"No union" is on every NLRB ballot.

The new du Pont nylon plant just outside of Chattanooga is also in an area in which a number of unions are active, but, since no international union has yet succeeded in organizing any of the wage scales and fringe concessions in all plants. From the union's point of view, conducting the election on a company-wide basis enables it to take advantage of its strength in some plants to hold control of all, whereas, if the elections were on a plant by plant basis, it might lose one or more to another union.

That the company-wide policy also places greater responsibility on the union, particularly at a new plant, also is obvious, since the employes at such a plant, walking into the highest paid textile jobs in the South with all of the additional perquisites, are prone to take all of these hard-won gains for granted and as their right. The result is little interest in the union, poor attendance at union meetings and consequent lack of union discipline which makes it difficult for the union to carry out its obligations to management.

Such conditions impose additional burdens on union leadership.

At Front Royal, Va., for instance, TWUA, which has over a 100 shop stewards at the American Viscose plant, holds a joint meeting of these stewards and of the company's foreman each Monday morning with the union's business agent and the personnel manager of the plant as co-chairmen, for the purpose of studying the union's new shop stewards manual. This is based on the last agreement between the company and the union, negotiated Aug. 20, 1947. Principles involved in recent disputes between workers and management are discussed at these meetings, and suggestions as to how such disagreements can be avoided in the future are advanced by both sides.

The meetings have been mutually helpful, it is said.

RAYON PLANT CHANGES

Rayon plants are in a continual state of physical change. Some of this is due to plant expansion. Du Pont's Waynesboro acetate plant, for instance, is now 20 times larger than when it opened in 1929 so that it must have been involved in an almost continual expansion. A good share of the physical changes at the various plants is due to technological improvements in the process of rayerable number of workers, as no doubt have the almost automatic processes for the production of staple fiber developed at the Nitro and Front Royal plants of American Viscose and in Celanese's staple fiber plant at Celco.

What is true of these most modern plants is true of all other rayon plants to a lesser degree.

(The fact that, at both viscose and acetate plants, the engineering departments, which include maintenance workers, are the largest departments in the plants, is significant of the importance of technological change in the rayon industry.)

Consequently, an important part of any contract between a rayon company and a union is that which deals with the manner in which such technological changes shall be handled for the protection of the workers.

TWUA appears to have developed the standard clause covering technological changes in its various agreements with American Viscose, Industrial and Celanese. (UCW is said to have picked up the same clause when it negotiated its first agreement with Celanese at Celco, but apparently it has alolwed this clause to remain static since then, because, under the UCW contract, three years' employment is required to entitle the workers to the provisions of the technological change article calling for job transfer to other employment or severance pay, whereas TWUA had, in some of its contracts at least, reduced this required employment period to 60 days.)

A technological change is defined in the TWUA contract as follows:

"A technological change is defined as a change in plant, process, equipment or method of operation diminishing the total number of employes having sixty (60) days or more service required to operate the department or departments affected by the change.

"An increase in productivity of employes diminishing the total number of employes having sixty (60) days or more service required to operate a given department will be considered a technological change.

"The term shall not include layoffs caused by denier changes pleasure.

Du Pont's advanced personnel policies also have had much to do with keeping its plants unorganized. Du Pont has published a little booklet which it distributes to visitors at its Waynesboro plant, which says in part:

"When an individual enters the employ of the du Pont Co., he is entering a kind of cooperative enterprise. In return for his labor, skill and intelligence he contributes to this undertaking, he receives fair treatment, good wages, an opportunity for advancement and a reasonable measure of security during his service with the du Pont Co."

Thus introduced, the booklet goes on to describe various plans covering safety and health, group accident and health insurance, group life insurance, paid vacations, service pins (a white gold pin with four diamonds after 25 years) a lay-off notice plan, disability wage plan, a pension and retirement plan, etc.

While, collectively, these features represent a liberal policy, it apparently does not give the du Pont worker much more than employees of some of the other rayon producers secure through the joint medium of their union agreements and additional personnel plans of the various firms.

Celanese Corp. of America, for instance, in addition to lay-off and other subjects covered in its union agreements with TWUA and the United Construction Workers, also has group insurance plans for both its salaried and hourly employees, and on July 1, 1947, inaugurated a retirement income plan for its employes, to which both employes and management contribute.

UNIONS AND BENEFITS

American Viscose Corp. stated recently that it spends $4,500,000 annually for sickness, accident and medical benefits, life insurance, vacation pay, retirement pay, etc., amounting to about $250 a year for each worker. The American Viscose-TWUA contract contains several model clauses, such as retirement on part pay for employes over 65, hospitalization and surgical insurance for workers and their wives, full time pay for time lost because of "fume eyes" or sore hands resulting from handling chemicals, etc.

As a result of workers' complaints of dizziness, black spots before the eyes, stomach disorders and other ailments, a plant survey of the Viscose plants was made by Dr. Alice Hamilton of the United States Department of Labor and, after her report had indicated these were probably other Southern rayon plants, however, since at Old Hickory (and presumably at its other plants as well) workers on the second shift get a 10 per cent differential over first shift rates, while those on the third shift receive a 20 per cent differential.

At most plants, the second shift differential is 5 per cent an hour and that for the third 10 per cent an hour. At the Bemberg and North American plants, it is only 3 and 5 cents an hour, respectively.

Since in rayon plants the shifts are rotated among all employes (in contrast to the custom of "freezing" an employe to a specified shift which prevails in the cotton textile industry), these higher differentials in the du Pont plants are probably an important factor in continuing the adherence of the employes to the independent unions.

With the intense competition among unions for the honor and emoluments of representing employes at existing rayon plants in the South, it is evident that there will be a battle royal for control of the two rayon plants and the new nylon plant, all of which will come into production during 1948.

CELANESE AND TWUA

Since all of its other plants are organized, Celanese Corp. of America had no hesitation about picking Rock Hill, S. C., one of the advanced "strong points" the plant will have to win it, to do so, UTW is certain to have to compete with both UCW and TWUA.

"No union" is on every NLRB ballot.

The new du Pont nylon plant just outside of Chattanooga is also in an area in which a number of unions are active, but, since no international union has yet succeeded in organizing any of the major du Pont plants in the South the workers at this plant probably will be represented by an independant union for some time. (The UMW's District 50 represents workers at du Pont's big Belle, W. Va. plant; but that is not in the South as this series defines the South.)

COMPANY-WIDE PACTS

The Celanese policy against company-wide agreements is interesting in view of the fact that that two other major rayon producers, American Viscose and Industrial Rayon, both have company-wide agreements with TWUA.

There are, apparently, arguments both for and against such a policy, as it affects both the employer and the union.

It apparently simplifies contract negotiations for the company, since agreements covering all of its plants can be negotiated at one time with one set of union representatives, rather than separately with two or more groups. It also insures uniformity of Rayon plants are in a continual state of physical change. Some of this is due to plant expansion. Du Pont's Waynesboro acetate plant, for instance, is now 20 times larger than when it opened in 1929 so that it must have been involved in an almost continual expansion. A good share of the physical changes at the various plants is due to technological improvements in the process of rayon manufacture, as might be expected in an industry which spends as much for research as does the rayon industry.

These technological changes, since they usually reduce the manpower required in the production of a pound of rayon, are an important factor in labor-management relations in rayon plants.

The continuous spinning process used by American Viscose at its Front Royal plant is said to reduce the numbers of workers required in spinning and subsequent operations from 30 to 50 per cent.

The automatic process which Celanese has developed in its manufacture of cellulose acetate at its Celco plant and the substitution of automatic handling of the acetate "dope" for the old individual batch loading process in the preliminary spinning processes (which are now being installed at the Ancell plant at Cumberland, Md., as well) are said to have eliminated a considerable number of workers.

Directors of Unions' Southern Drives

ROY R. LAWRENCE
Textile Workers' Union of America, CIO

JOHN J. McCOY
American Federation of Hosiery Workers

FRANK ROSENBLUM
Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO

quired to operate the department or departments affected by the change.

"An increase in productivity of employes diminishing the total number of employes having sixty (60) days or more service required to operate a given department will be considered a technological change.

"The term shall not include layoffs caused by denier changes, variations in customers' requirements, shutdowns for plant repairs, curtailment of production, or temporary or seasonal interruptions of work."

In all, seven pages of the agreement are required to cover all of the details of the understandings which have been arrived at between the company and the union to protect employes displaced by technological changes.

JOB TRANSFERS

These include transfer to other jobs, if such are open, and the worker is qualified to fill them, or, in the event that no other employment is available for him, a severance pay of one week's pay for each full year of the employe's past continuous service with the company.

While such technological changes as the installation of continuous spinning could mean the displacement of from a third to one-half of the production department workers in a given plant, the fact that production has never been able to keep pace with demand since the development of this process has thus far prevented any such wholesale reduction.

Workers, naturally, are hopeful that, as technological improvements reduce the number of man-hours required to produce a pound of rayon, the capacity of the plants will be increased so that present employment may be maintained.

However, the decline in labor costs of rayon production has been considerable since 1939 and still is continuing. In his report to the Pace Committee on rayon production Robert B. Evans of the Southern Regional Research Laboratory said on this subject:

"Between 1939 and 1945, the pounds of rayon produced nearly doubled while the number of man-hours worked in the rayon and allied industries increased by only 28 per cent. From these facts, it might be concluded that there has been a huge increase in the productivity of labor in the rayon industry during these years. Most of the increase, however, was in staple rayon and in heavier denier yarn for tires, which

Continued on Page Seven

Southern Series

ALABAMA • ARKANSAS • FLORIDA • GEORGIA • KENTUCKY • LOUISIANA • MISSISSIPPI • NORTH CAROLINA • OKLAHOMA • SOUTH CAROLIN A • TENNESSEE • TEXAS • VIRGINIA

Continued from Page Six

do not require as much labor as fine continuous filament yarns . . . the estimated output per man-hour increased 36 per cent from 1939 to 1942 but thereafter declined. In the first six months of 1946 it was estimated to be 27 per cent above the 1939 level."

Because payrolls of rayon companies increased beginning with 1941 much more rapidly than either man-hours worked or production, the unit labor cost was estimated to be 33 per cent higher in November 1946 than in 1939, Mr. Evans said, and about 41 per cent higher than in 1941 and 1942. However, he points out:

"The declining trend in labor costs during 1939-1941 was mainly brought about by installation of more efficient, labor-saving processing equipment. Existing methods for washing, desulphurizing and bleaching rayon yarn in skein form were replaced in some plants by a more highly mechanized process for handling the rayon yarn in cake form. In other plants, the continuous spinning process, eliminating all manual handling of the rayon yarn prior to coning or inspection, was installed. Manufacture of staple fiber has been highly mechanized since its introduction but the plants completed just before the war were the most advanced in this regard."

Although wages in the rayon industry still were advancing through 1947, the labor saving adjustments described by Mr. Evans as featuring the 1939-1941 period have been resumed and great technological advances have been made in all processes of rayon manufacture, which will probably result in a continued reduction of labor costs.

THE APPAREL INDUSTRIES

Approximately 125,000 workers are employed in the apparel industries in the South, of whom not more than 20 per cent are organized, notwithstanding the fact that four unions have carried on vigorous organizing campaigns among them for years.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, for instance, has been active in the South since 1933. It has constantly broadened its field of operations and its number of organizers. It now claims from 20,000 to 25,000 members in the South.

The United Garment Workers

During the war, employment in the apparel trades in the South reached a peak of 135,000 or more. It had dropped back to 129,000 by 1946, and is believed to have been stabilized at about the above figure during the past year, which has seen the closing down of a number of plants which were active during the war, and short time for others. This is an increase of 35,000, or 29 per cent, over prewar employment.

Of the groups listed above, union membership probably is greatest in the dress shirt and nightwear group of the cotton garment industry, since many firms in the South which fall into this category are branch plants of the big nationally-known shirt manufacturers, such as Cluett Peabody & Co., Manhattan Shirt Co. and Phillips, Jones & Co. This group probably is about 50 per cent organized. It represents about 30 per cent of the total national employment in this category.

Of the 12,300 employed in the cotton work shirt group — about 79 per cent of the national employment—not more than 10 per cent are unionized.

Of the nearly 25,000 in the cotton work pants group — 70 per cent of the national total—possibly 15 per cent are organized.

Of the 8,000 plus in the overalls and industrial garments group—38 per cent of the national total, not more than 10 per cent are organized.

Of the 31,000 to 32,000 employed in other branches of the apparel industries in the South — men's wool clothing, men's summer clothing, men's and women's sportswear, lingerie, women's dresses, men's neckwear, etc. — again it is doubtful if more than 10 per cent are organized.

Resistance to Unions

The comparatively small totals of organized workers in the groups listed above reflects not any lack of energy on the part of most of the unions in the field or their organizers, but the bitter-end resistance which union efforts have met in their organizing campaigns in the South, particularly in Tennessee, Alabama and Texas, and the amazing complications—legal, War Labor Board, National Labor Relations Board and inter-union—in which some of the individual cases have become involved.

In some instances, such as that with headquarters in Dallas and Fort Worth have scattered branch plants about the State in a number of small towns, has presented a serious problem for the Amalgamated, too, but here the union appears to have made greater progress than in other parts of the South.

It has organized most of the branch plants of the Haggar Co. and of Conro Mfg. Co., two of the largest of the Texas firms, and a number of the individual plants as well.

Notwithstanding a resistance to union organization in the Southern apparel industry which is only mildly implied in the foregoing summary, the directors of the Amalgamated's Southern drive do not appear to be downhearted.

"Organizing the South is tough, but no tougher than any of our past organizing drives," they say. "We experienced the same difficulty when we organized the shirt industry in Pennsylvania and the men's clothing industry, before and after the first World War. Since our real drive in the South began in 1937, we have organized shops and have active membership at present in every Southern State, excepting only Arkansas and Oklahoma."

One of the reasons for such success as the Amalgamated has had in the South is that it has built a staff of organizers who are themselves Southerners. Gladys Dickason, a vice-president of the union and assistant director of the Southern drive, is a Southerner, as is practically every one of the organizers working in the region.

One of the major accomplishments of the Amalgamated in the South has been to wipe out the North-South wage differential, in so far as the plants which it has organized are concerned. It has established a 65-cents-an-hour minimum wage in all organized shops in the cotton garment industry, no matter where they may be located.

That is one of the reasons why the Bureau of Labor Statistics has found that the differentials in average hourly earnings between workers in union and non-union plants amount to about 26 per cent in the over-all industry, 13 per cent in work pants, 20 per lored suits and coats by men's tailors (a type of garment over which the ILGWU claims jurisdiction), the two organizations do not appear to get into each other's hair to any extent in the South; possibly because the ILGWU has such a limited operation there.

The stubborn resistance of the Southern apparel manufacturers to the unization of their employes, and the determination of the union in this effort, has caused the campaign to be waged on many a front, including that of public relations. Because of this a reporter investigating the labor situation in the Southern apparel industry encounters many queer stories.

One current at the moment is that the apparel manufacturers in Tennessee (and possibly other States) are trying to build up a large reservoir of semi-trained labor in the area by stepping up the turnover in their plants.

Union organizers maintain that, in some plants in the State, a new employe is seldom retained more than 10 weeks or three months or just about long enough to become proficient in her job. They have two explanations for this practice, assuming it exists. One is that the rapid turn over makes it harder for the union to organize the plant; the other is that, when such organization inevitably occurs (as the organizers believe it will) and a strike follows, there will be enough semi-trained workers in the area so that the management can replace the strikers without difficulty.

Analysis of the geographical distribution of ILGWU's Southern locals indicates that that union, apparently, is having as much difficulty in organizing the manufacturers of women's apparel in the South as the Amalgamated is having in its own field. There are growing women's apparel markets in Dallas, Atlanta, Miami and a few other scattered centers, and a children's wear market of considerable size in San Antonio.

However, the ILGWU claims only 271 members in Miami, none in Dallas, none in Atlanta, and none in San Antonio. Most of its members are in scattered individual plants throughout the region, the largest numbers being employed in knit underwear factories in Knoxville and Chattanooga.

However, notwithstanding the comparatively small number of or-tion Workers, a subsidiary of the United Mine Workers, has recently made some overtures to workers in the seamless hosiery industry, which centers around High Point, N. C. Apparently the UCW does not as yet have representation in any hosiery plant in the South, however.

While exact figures of the Southern membership of the two principal unions in the Southern hosiery industry are not available, it is probably that the American Federation of Hosiery Workers has 80 per cent or more of the total.

Last November, when 6,500 workers in 11 seamless and full-fashioned hosiery plants received a wage increase, it was announced that, while the United Textile Workers represented only 500 boarders, the only organized workers in the 11 plants, the entire group, nevertheless, had accepted as an industry pattern the agreement reached between UTW's representative, John Pollard, and the Guilford Hosiery Mills, one of the 11 plants.

UNDERWEAR WORKERS

In the knit underwear industry, which employs about 12,000 workers in the South, the percentage of unionization will again run about 25 per cent.

Here, also, at least three unions are in the field. TWUA and the United Textile Workers are two of them, largely for the reason that a number of knit underwear plants in the South also operate cotton mills for the purpose of spinning their own yarn.

In some instances where the yarn mill has been organized, however, the union has not been able to extend its organization to the underwear plant itself. The P. H. Hanes Knitting Co. at Winston-Salem, N. C., is an instance of this situation, since TWUA reprepresents the employes of the yarn mill but not those of the underwear plant itself.

International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, AFL, not generally regarded as operating in the knit underwear field, has organized one of the largest plants in that field in the South. Appalachian Mills of Knoxville, Tenn., which has employed as many as 1,200 workers. In January, 1946, relations were so cordial between the ILGWU and the management of the mill that the union gave

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, for instance, has been active in the South since 1933. It has constantly broadened its field of operations and its number of organizers. It now claims from 20,000 to 25,000 members in the South.

The United Garment Workers of America, AFL, probably has seniority among all apparel trades unions in the South—and has least to show for it. UGW's activities in the South date back at least 50 years; Samuel Gompers once spent a year in the South as a UGW organizer during the only interregnum in his career as president of the AFL, from the time of its founding to his death. Its exact Southern membership is not available, but it is inconsiderable.

The United Construction Workers of America, a subsidiary of the United Mine Workers, is active in certain sections of the South, especially in Tennessee and Kentucky, which adjoins coal-mining regions. UCW's exact membership is not available, either, but, in the apparel industries, it is, like that of the UGW, inconsiderable.

The fourth union in the field is the International Ladies Garment Workers of America, AFL, which on Jan. 1, 1947, had a membership in the South of 5,353, or about 1½ per cent of its total national membership of 367,062. The report on the AFL's first year of its Southern drive, as of Aug. 31, 1947, indicated that the ILGWU had secured about 2,000 new members during that period, most of which presumably had been added since the January, 1947, report had been prepared.

The ILGWU probably has, therefore, about 7,000 members in the South at present. The relative smallness of this group reflects, to a considerable extent, the embryonic status of the women's apparel industry in the South.

Employment in the Southern apparel industries breaks down as follows:

Cotton Garment Industry
Overalls and industrial garments	8,100
Cotton work pants	24,650
Cotton work shirts	12,300
Dress shirts and nightwear	16,700
Total		61,700
Men's wool and summer clothing, sportswear, dresses, coats and suits, neckwear, etc.		63,300
Total		125,000

paigns in the South, particularly in Tennessee, Alabama and Texas, and the amazing complications—legal, War Labor Board, National Labor Relations Board and inter-union—in which some of the individual cases have become involved.

In some instances, such as that of Salant & Salant, Inc., with seven or eight plants in Tennessee alone, the Amalgamated has been endeavoring to organize the various plants for ten years, and has had an involved Salant & Salant case before the National Labor Relations Board for five years.

In fact, so far as the Amalgamated is concerned, Tennessee rather than Kentucky might well warrant the name "the dark and bloody ground" which the Indians bestowed on the latter State, since it has been compelled to wage constant battle there not only with strong, well-financed employers there such as Salant & Salant, the Henry I. Siegel Co., the Washington Mfg. Co. and others, each with a chain of small-town plants, but also the United Construction Workers as well.

Some of the battles in the latter class have actually been bloody affrays. In 1943, for instance, two Amalgamated organizers, Franz Daniel and Ed Blair, were shot at and beaten in the union's office at Lafollette, Tenn., and the Amalgamated accused the UCW of this attack. There have been other cases when Amalgamated pickets claimed to have been driven from the picket lines by UCW members.

DIFFICULT GOING

Another location which has given the Amalgamated much trouble in its Southern drive is Andalusia, Ala., where three firms under the same ownership—Alabama Textile Products Co., Andala Manufacturing Co. and S. & B. Mfg. Co.—have stubbornly resisted its organizational efforts. In 1947, the Amalgamated lost a strike at these plants. It has since lost two NLRB elections there.

New Orleans, where a number of manufacturers of men's summer clothing, pants, neckwear, etc., are concentrated, also has been a nut that the Amalgamated has thus far found impossible to crack. Notwithstanding the considerable number of potential members which it has in that market, it has thus far organized only the city's laundry workers.

Texas, where cotton garment and sportswear manufacturers

That is one of the reasons why the Bureau of Labor Statistics has found that the differentials in average hourly earnings between workers in union and non-union plants amount to about 26 per cent in the over-all industry, 13 per cent in work pants, 20 per cent in work shirts and 23 per cent in dress shirts. In the Southeast, cutters in union cotton work pants factories were receiving 87 cents an hour in April, 1945, while similar workers in non-union plants in the same area were receiving only 69 cents an hour. Pressers in unionized dress shirt factories in the Southeast at the same time received 75 cents an hour in comparison with 58 cents an hour in non-union plants.

INTER-UNION CONFLICT

Internecine warfare is, as has been indicated, a serious problem in the Southern organizing drives in the apparel industry. Only where the UCW-ACW forces are involved, however, is this warfare featured by violence.

The Amalgamated accuses the United Garment Workers of accepting "tame cat" contracts from firms which it has itself failed to organize and there is much verbal battling between these two organizations, but no bloody heads. And, although the Amalgamated and the ILGWU have been squabbling for years in the men's clothing markets of the country over the making of women's tai-none in San Antonio. Most of its members are in scattered individual plants throughout the region, the largest numbers being employed in knit underwear factories in Knoxville and Chattanooga.

ANTHONY VALENTE
United Textile Workers of America, AFL

However, notwithstanding the comparatively small number of organized workers in the Southern apparel industries, the same situation prevails as in the textile industries. The dominant unions have competent organizing staffs in the field (which could be supplemented to any required degree if necessary) and are building permanent membership even in places where they have met their worst defeats, as in Andalusia, Ala.

They are, therefore, in a position to capitalize on any situation which might be favorable to them. The situation in the apparel industries is not as clear cut as in the textile industries, and it is, therefore, not as easy to determine just what might bring about such a favorable situation, but it might be a wage reduction which would give the apparel trades unions their postwar opportunity for large scale organizing efforts, as the readjustment of work loads in the textile industry may do in that field.

HOSIERY AND KNIT GOODS

Of the 85,000 or more workers in the hosiery and knit goods industries in the South, it is probable that not more than 25 per cent are members of a union—although six or more unions compete for the honor of representing them.

The highest degree of organization probably has been reached in the full-fashioned hosiery field, which employs about 28,000 workers and is at least 25 per cent—possibly 30 per cent—organized.

Both the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, formerly a subsidiary of the Textile Workers' Union of America, CIO, but now divorced for non-payment of dues and striving for independent CIO affiliation, and the hosiery branch of the United Textile Workers, AFL, have contracts and members in the full-fashioned hosiery field.

Both of these unions also operate in the seamless hosiery industry, which has a considerably larger number of workers in the South than has the full-fashioned end of the industry—about 44,000—although a smaller percentage of them are organized. Most estimates agree that the seamless hosiery industry in the South is not more than 18 per cent organized.

In addition, the United Construc-ized one of the largest plants in that field in the South, Appalachian Mills of Knoxville, Tenn., which has employed as many as 1,200 workers. In January, 1946, relations were so cordial between the ILGWU and the management of the mill that the union gave a dinner in honor of W. A. Brownlee, the mill president.

ILGWU also is the dominant union in the knit outerwear industry in the South, which is of miniscule proportions, probably employing no more than 2,000 workers in all. However, this industry probably will grow in the future, and, since it is a field in which ILGWU is strong in the Middle Atlantic and Great Lakes States where the knit outerwear industry is now concentrated, the ILGWU seems the logical labor organization to sign up the new plants as they move into the South.

THE SHOE INDUSTRY

The shoe (and leather) industry is a growing one in the South, even though at the moment it is a small one compared with such dominating industries as cotton textiles and rayon.

It is growing both through the expansion of indigenous firms and through the establishment of branch plants in the South by firms with headquarters in other sections of the country.

Of the 16,000 to 20,000 workers in the shoe industry in the South, possibly 30 per cent are organized. Most of these men and women belong to the United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, although the AFL union, the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, also has some representation in the region. There appears to be less conflict between the two shoe workers' unions, however, than between some of the overlapping unions in the textile and apparel fields.

The CIO union has been endeavoring to organize the Craddock-Terry Co. of Lynchburg, Va., since 1942 without success, although it has won representation of the firm's workers in an NLRB election. The firm has consistently refused to bargain with the union, however, and the NLRB is now seeking to compel such action through the courts.

During the past year, the CIO union has succeeded in establishing new locals at some of the Arkansas locations at which International Shoe Co. of St. Louis and other St. Louis shoe manufacturers have been establishing branch plants at a rapid pace for the past two or three years.

21-Labor File

WORLD of LABOR
LPA
UNIONS AND UNION ACTIVITIES

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES

A News Service from Washington for Trade Union Papers
1706 G Street, N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Vol. IV, No. 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

UAW-GM Talks Go On In Shadow Of Chrysler Strike

Detroit (LPA) - The auto wage picture showed no signs of clearing last week as 76,000 Chrysler workers continued their strike and 225,000 General Motors employes filed a strike notice with the State Mediation Board. The United Auto Workers-CIO intensified their bargaining sessions with GM in an effort to avert a strike May 28 when the GM contracts expire.

Action from the bosses' side came when John S. Bugas, vice-president of the Ford Motor Co. proposed that the auto workers accept wage cuts to accomplish an objective of "public security." UAW Ford Director Ken Bannon replied that "Ford workers will be happy to withdraw their demands for increases in hourly wage rates at the Ford Motor Co. if that company will successfully exert its influence on the rest of American industrial management and upon Congress to effect a substantial rollback in the cost of living."

"If the Ford Motor Company were really concerned about the public security," said Bannon, "It would not have recently and unjustifiably increased the prices of one line of its cars $315 to $420. It certainly can't blame labor cost on that increase because there have been no increases in labor cost."

Governor Kim Sigler ordered state police to the Highland Park plant of Chrysler when there was a fight on the picket line last week. The police have had nothing to do, however, because UAW has made clear its policy of letting non-striking office workers pass the lines. Meanwhile, the state's Attorney General, Eugene F. Black, ordered that UAW officers be prosecuted under the Bonine-Tripp law for walking out without having the Michigan State Mediation Board conduct a strike vote. The union immediately appealed to Circuit Judge Theodore J. Richter who granted an injunction preventing the attorney general from such action until there can be a hearing on UAW's claim that the law is unconstitutional.

The general council of Ford Local 600 has voted $125,000 for support of the strikers, declaring that "the fight of the Chrysler workers is a fight for a cost of living wage increase not only for themselves but for all organized labor."

In a statement about "why Chrysler workers are on strike" UAW listed as No. 1 the fact that "Chrysler management asked for it." In line with the attitude of the steel and electrical industries, the company made no attempt to negotiate from Feb. 27 to May 12, the date the strike began.

"The strike of the Chrysler workers," the statement points out, "is the fight of the whole American people against monopolistic corporate power that would rob wage-earners of adequate purchasing power. Such draining off of extortionate profits at the top would insure a depression in which independent businessmen, farmers and professional people would lose markets for their goods and services and again, as in 1929-1933, join unemployed wage-earners in breadlines and on relief rolls. The strike of the Chrysler workers is a fight to prevent American so-called free enterprise from committing suicide by a conspiracy to starve its own customers."

Chrysler workers are asking 30¢ an hour to meet the unprecedented high cost of living. GM workers are asking 25¢ an hour, 10¢ of which would go to a health and welfare insurance program.

-LPA-

Coal Talks
Break Down

Washington (LPA) - Negotiations for a new contract for the nation's 350,000 bituminous coal miners broke down last week when coal owners insisted on seating Joseph E. Moody, southern mine owners' spokesman over the objections of United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis.

Lewis said that he was willing to bargain with Moody as representative of the 14 separate southern coal associations which sent him to the conference, but he won't accept the idea of one man speaking for all of them at one. The UMW leader pointed out that the 14 groups signed the 1947 contract individually, and their present scheme seems to be forming "a holding company."

Other mine owner spokesmen have written the UMW asking a resumption of the conferences and asserting that under the rules no one bloc can veto the signing of a contract between the union and those associations who wish to sign.

Union delegates to the bargaining session noted however a remarkable unity among the operators over the question of Moody's status.

Lewis himself placed responsibility for the outcome of the negotiations on US Steel President Benjamin Fairless, George Humphrey of the M. A. Hanna Co. and James D. Francis of the Island Creek Coal Co.

The business newspaper, the NY Journal of Commerce, expressed last week the hunch that a lot of people have had for some time--that "big steel" which owns 30 coal mines will try to block a wage boost for the miners.

Referring to Fairless' recent refusal to talk wages with the United Steelworkers-CIO the Journal of Commerce asks: "How can Steel say 'no' to the CIO and 'yes' to Lewis?"

President Lewis and other miners' leaders said last week that a strike in the coal fields would be "tragic" but refused to comment on whether or not they considered a work stoppage likely.

The bituminous conference didn't reach the point of the union's presenting its demands to the employers, and so far they have not been revealed. They are, however, believed to include wage increases, more employer contribution to the welfare and pension funds, a shorter work week and some changes in working rules.

In the courts last week the government made an effort to untie the shackles it put on the miners during the unofficial stoppage in March which result from the operator's reluctance to put the 1947 welfare plan into operation.

Assistant Attorney General H. Graham Morison, the man who pushed the Taft-Hartley injunction case against the UMW, asked Judge T. Alan Goldsborough, who last month fined the union $1,420,000 on criminal contempt of court charges, to drop the civil charges against the union.

He suggested too that the 80-day anti-strike injunction be lifted, since the dispute during which it was issued is settled.

Goldsborough agreed to dismiss the contempt action but is insisting that the government prepare a formal brief on the injunction problem and prove that the pension problem has been settled.

-LPA-

- -

NOTE TO EDITORS: Repeat from Midweek Issue, May 18

- -

CIO Oil Union Wins
17½¢ For Biggest
'48 Nat'l Pay Boost

Fort Worth, Tex. (LPA) - Big business hasn't held the line against wage boosts in 1948, so far as the 9000 employes of Sinclair's production, refining and pipeline operations are concerned.

Last week, a 17½¢ an hour raise was negotiated with Sinclair by the Oil Workers Int'l Union-CIO. OWIU President O. A. Knight announced that similar terms are being pressed in negotiations with other oil companies.

(MORE)

The pay boost, the union asserts, is "the largest increase won in the third round by any union in a nation-wide contract." Nearly all of the union's major contracts are now open or will be opened within the next few weeks.

"Faces are red," the OWIU reports, in the circles of Standard Oil's "independent" union. After urging from the company, which was racing to beat the Sinclair settlement, the Standard union in two days of negotiations humbly asked for 12¢ an hour--and "won" it. The 12¢ raise was in pay envelopes before it was made public in Baton Rouge, La. Now, OWIU reports serious dissatisfaction over the 5½¢ difference won by the Sinclair workers' genuine union over the Standard puppet union.

-LPA-

- -

NOTE TO EDITORS: Last three paragraphs repeat from Midweek Issue, May 18

- -

AFL Demands Inquiry-- Di Giorgio Strike Head
Shot At Union Meeting

Washington (LPA) - Governor Earl Warren of California has ordered a "complete investigation" of the shooting which injured President James Price of Local 218, Nat'l Farm Labor Union, while he was presiding at a meeting of the union's strike committee. The union is on strike at the Di Giorgio Corp. ranch near Bakersfield, Calif.

Monday night, a meeting of the eight-member strike committee of Local 218, Nat'l Farm Labor Union-AFL, was held in the cottage residence of one of the union members. Suddenly five shots were fired thru a window. President James Price was shot thru the head, and is in Kern County Hospital. The other men and women escaped injury as four bullets went wild.

"It was obviously an attempt at assassination," Gov. Warren asserted. "Such diabolical acts call for the full force of the law being brought to bear against those who are responsible for them. I have therefore requested the attorney general to make a complete investigation of the crime and to assist the sheriff and district attorney in every way possible, and report the results of the investigation to me."

The Nat'l Farm Labor Union has offered a $1000 reward for information leading to arrest and conviction of the would-be murderer. NFLU President H. L. Mitchell asserts "it was a planned job done by hired thugs," and lists three groups "quite capable of an attempt to assassinate leaders of our organization." The three he names are; management of the Di Giorgio Corp., the Associated Farmers of California, Inc., and "Communist agents of the CP controlled Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers Union-CIO."

Earlier, AFL President William Green had wired Warren: "In the name of justice, I respectfully urge you to order an immediate investigation into the shooting."

"I am informed that Price was presiding at a peaceful meeting of the strike committee inside the private cottage of one of the union members in Arvin," the AFL president reported, "when five shots were fired into the room. One bullet struck the local union leader in the head.

"This brutal assault climaxing the cruel and fascist methods used to break the Di Giorgio strike is too grave a matter for local police to handle. I earnestly call upon you to supersede them with an investigation by state law enforcement agencies. This investigation should encompass not only the shooting but all the oppressive and intimidating efforts to break this strike which have flouted justice and the law."

The 1100 Di Giorgio strikers have held firm for eight months in a strike aimed to win union recognition. The giant corporation--which grows and distributes grapes, wine, asparagus and other produce over the entire country--has been backed up by Associated Farmers because it is considered the opening wedge in the AFL drive to unionize the workers who plight was described in The Grapes of Wrath, novel by John Steinbeck.

-LPA-

CIO Public Workers
Split On Red Issue

Atlantic City (LPA) - The federal employes division of the United Public Workers-CIO split wide-open this week when UPW's "left-wing" leadership retained control of the union. A seceding group, claiming to represent nearly 10,000 of UPWA's 86,000 reported members, said that it supports national CIO policy. It expects to find "a new home" in the CIO, and organize those thousands of government employes who want effective unionism but will not follow the "left-wing" leadership of UPWA's President Abram Flaxer.

Co-chairmen of the new union, which as the anti-Communist caucus was known as the Build the Union Committee, are William Mirengoff and Morton Lifton. Mirengoff is a US Employment Service economist, Lifton a Justice Dep't lawyer. Both are World War II veterans.

They said: "The major organizational task of the new group will be directed towards bringing into the fold of the labor movement, into the CIO, the hundreds of thousands of unorganized workers who have a pressing need for effective trade union representation who are not in sympathy with left-wing policies of UPWA."

Immediate issue at the convention was how to meet the threat of the Keefe rider to federal agencies' appropriations bill. Both groups agreed in wholehearted opposition to the measure which would prevent the payment of salaries to members of unions whose officers have not signed the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits. But BUC maintains that if the rider is passed the officers must sign to protect the rank-and-file members' jobs. President Flaxer would not agree to do so, limiting himself to the statement that "the union will see to it that your jobs will be protected."

Behind the dispute was the conviction of the BUC that the Flaxer administration is pro-Communist. The no formal endorsement was accorded Henry Wallace's presidential campaign, sympathy with it was expressed by the Flaxer majority forces. Similarly, the no resolution attacking the Marshall plan for European recovery was discussed, Flaxer was bitterly critical of President Truman's foreign policies in his convention speeches.

When the convention opened UPWA claimed 86,000 members. Only 23,000 of these are federal employes, the rest being state and city government workers. About half of the federal workers in UPWA are native workers in the Panama Canal Zone. Altho the anti-administration forces had only seven delegates out of the 400 at the convention they claim to represent close to 10,000 members. Several anti-administration locals are suspended by the international and were not represented on the floor.

BUC supporters assert that they have discussed their problems with "right wing" leaders in the CIO, and that they don't expect much difficulty in securing affiliation with any of several CIO unions.

Anti-administration forces are believed stronger among the federal employes division of UPWA than among its local government sections. At least one strong state government unit, in Michigan, however, has repudiated Flaxer's leadership.

The vast bulk of the delegates enthusiastically reelected Flaxer and other incumbent officers, while abolishing several vice-presidential posts. Budget problems were said to explain the reduction in posts.

In addition to all-out opposition to the Keefe rider the UPWA's program includes a $3000 minimum wage for government employes, and opposition to the Hatch Act which bars them from participating in politics.

Principal speaker at the convention was President Albert Fitzgerald of the United Electrical Workers-CIO who accused CIO President Philip Murray and other CIO leaders of betraying the interests of labor by opposing the candidacy of Henry Wallace UPWA's Flaxer like Fitzgerald is a member of the Wallace Committee.

Fitzgerald also attacked CIO's support of the European recovery program. But he hastened to add that UE will stay in the CIO "and fight to keep it a progressive body."

He denied Murray's charge that the Communist Party set up the Wallace movement. "I had a lot to do with getting Henry Wallace to run for President, and I've never been to a Communist meeting in my life," Fitzgerald said.

NOTE TO EDITORS: You may want to use this as a box with either the previous story or the Fur Workers' story.

- -

UE Local Asks
Head To Quit

Springfield, Mass. (LPA) - While United Electrical Workers-CIO President Albert Fitzgerald in Atlantic City was asserting that he played a part in getting Henry Wallace to run for president, UE Local 202 demanded that he resign his union job.

The Springfield local said that Fitzgerald should either quit the Wallace movement which is "spreading chaos in the American labor movement" and advancing the interests of "an unfriendly foreign power" or resign the presidency of UE. In the local's judgment the Wallace party is "Communist controlled."

Lee Benoit, local business agent, said that the motion was adopted at a full membership meeting. Fitzgerald last week attacked CIO President Philip Murray, and reiterated his loyalty to the Wallace campaign at the conventions, in Atlantic City, of two "left wing" CIO unions, the Int'l Fur & Leather Workers, and the United Public Workers.

-LPA-

Typos' Election
Upholding Battle Against T-H Law

Indianapolis (LPA) - Victory by a wide margin for President Woodruff Randolph and his slate was reported here this week at headquarters of the Int'l Typographical Union on the basis of incomplete, unofficial returns.

The election contest was one of the hottest ever waged in the union. Randolph's policies and methods in fighting the Taft-Hartley Act, including the strikes under his regime, constituted one of the big issues in the contest.

The ITU leader's foes, backed by the "Independent Party" in the union, strongly denounced Randolph's policies, and promised a regime of "peace, harmony and order," while Randolph's supporters, endorsed by the "Progressive Party," campaigned on the basis of a "vote of confidence" for the present policies.

Returns from a substantial number of locals showed Randolph to be rolling up a three-to-two majority over John R. Evans, Washington, in the race for the presidency. Evans is a vice president of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101 in the nation's capital.

Evans won out by a two-to-one margin in the Columbia local, but Randolph came through with smashing majorities in New York and Chicago. In the Windy City, where the printers have been on strike since last November, the vote for Randolph was 2,843 to 868.

Meanwhile, the IUT's battle with publishers and printing industry owners for maximum protection against the shackles of the Taft-Hartley Act were marked by these major developments:

1- Local 16 in Chicago rejected a "final" contract proposed by the city's newspaper publishers--which included a $9 weekly wage increase--on the ground that various provisions of the proposed agreement do "not conform with ITU laws."

2- A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner, Arthur Leff, finally completed hearings on the American Newspaper Publishers' Association's "unfair labor practice" charges against the union. The hearings--cut off from time to time by recesses--had dragged on for six months.

3- The "Big Six" local in New York framed a new contract proposal to the city's newspaper publishers to replace an earlier one which the international executive board of the union had rejected as conflicting with ITU laws. This time, the local asked for a $15-a-week wage increase, in lieu of a previous tentative agreement on $9; for jurisdiction over varitype machines and similar processes used to by-pass composing rooms, and for various other additional safeguards.

-LPA-

CIT Launches Inter-American Radio Show

Washington (LPA) - The Inter-American Confederation of Workers (CIT) last week launched a continent-wide radio program for the workers of South America. CIT, formed in Peru last January, is represented in this country by Secretary-Treasurer George Meany of the AFL and Bert Jewell of the Railway Labor Executives Ass'n as well as AFL's Latin American representative, Serafino Romualdi. The organization was vigorously opposed and is continually attacked by Fascists and Communists alike.

Opening the radio series, CIT President Bernardo Ibanez of Chile declared, "Our program of action includes the fight for planned social guarantees to protect the working classes thruout their lives, when they are sick, when they are injured, when they are in need, when they are unable to work, and when they die, because social guarantees are newly come to America and because in the majority of our nations where they already exist, they are imperfect and insufficient.

"Our program includes the commitment to fight for a technical, social and human solution for theproblem of the land and its exploitation. We want the millions of rural folk to benefit inour continent by civilization and culture, and for this reason we propose an agrarian reform which will permit the farmers to enjoy the benefits of technical progress in the cultivation of the land.

"Finally, we will fight to have the workers of America group together for the realization of a just, democratic and permanent peace for the peoples of the world.

"In general terms, these are the ideas which will guide the work of the Confederacion Inter-Americana de Trabajadores in its fight for social justice, social progress and the welfare of the people. On explaining them once more to all of our friends and companions, we invite them to fight with us in the realization of these high ideals."

The executive board of CIT holds its first meeting in San Francisco June 12 to map its plans for achieving some of the goals of the inter-American labor movement. Headquarters of the confederation are in Santiago, Chile.

-LPA-

UAW Wins Tractor Plant After Commies Pump For 'No Union'

Peoria, Ill. (LPA) - A UAW-CIO victory at the giant Caterpillar Tractor plant here ended one of the oddest union election campaigns on record. A weird twist of the NLRB representation election found the Communist-dominated Farm Equipment Workers-CIO whooping it up for a "no union" vote while the Caterpillar Company was spending thousands of dollars urging the workers to vote for a union, any union on the ballot.

More than 17,000 workers had been on strike at the plant since April 8, when FE called a walkout in an effort to force the company to negotiate a new contract and a wage increase. At that point, an NLRB election was called with three unions competing on the ballot: Int'l Association of Machinists-unaffiliated, United Auto Workers-AFL and United Auto Workers-CIO. FE, ruled off the ballot for its failure to comply with the Taft-Hartley Act, campaigned openly for "no union."

The election was held May 12 and UAW-AFL came out with the most votes but without a majority. FE called off its strike, the plant was reopened, and a run-off election was ordered. Results of the runoff: UAW-CIO 7702, UAW-AFL 5644. Said Caterpillar president Louis B. Neumiller, "We look forward to a new era of labor-management relationship."

Roy Reuther heads the bargaining committee which immediately began negotiations to bring Caterpillar wages up to those in the rest of the industry. FE, badly burned, has called off its plans for strikes in 12 International Harvester plants in Illinois, Kentucky, New York and Indiana.

-LPA-

NOTE TO EDITORS: First seven paragraphs repeat from Midweek Issue, May 18

'Get Out Of Way'
Wallace Told By
Hatters' Union

New York (LPA) - To match up the political strength of organized labor with the economic strength of the unions will require more vigorous measures than are now being taken, President Max Zaritsky advised the national convention here this week of the Hat, Cap & Millinery Workers Int'l Union-AFL.

While calling for independent labor political action, along the lines of New York's Liberal Party, Zaritsky severely criticized presidential aspirant Henry Wallace's claim to speak for labor. "Wallace talks labor and acts Communist," Zaritsky told the delegates. "Unless he withdraws from his present adventure, labor and liberals will condemn him as an agent of betrayal and disruption of their cause."

Mayors of New York and Newark, N.J., greeted the delegates. Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York was introduced by Zaritsky as a man "destined to serve the people beyond the boundaries of New York." A similar enthusiastic reception greeted New York's mayor at the convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO in Atlantic City last week.

Mayor Vincent J. Murphy of Newark, himself an AFL building trades official, told delegates that residents of his state "bow their heads in shame" because of their spokesman in Congress, Fred Hartley.

Zaritsky, reporting on conditions in the millinery industry, pointed out to delegates that the high cost of living had gravely affected sales of hats. The rising prices have thus hurt the union members two ways--by reducing the purchasing power of their wages, and by cutting the volume of work.

World trade policies directly affect the headwear industry, the union head reported. Since the war's end, he said, there has been a revival of imports of hats and hat materials, which will become even stronger when the new trade agreements are approved by Congress. Conceding that such trade is very necessary to world economic stability, Zaritsky nevertheless proposed several safeguards.

Denial of trade treaty benefits to countries behind the Iron Curtain, where forced labor is used, is proposed by the union. The union has already protested with the State Dep't imports from Czechoslovakia on this ground.

Delegates to the convention heard a lengthy discussion of the Mundt-Nixon anti-Communist bill Liberal Party Chairman Adolph A. Berle, and the union's counsel, Louis Waldman. Emphasizing that he spoke as an individual, Berle said: "I feel the bill is not ripe yet and needs some serious improvements, but I will be everlastingly damned if I don't see why we shouldn't have a pure food and drug bill for politics as well as we do for food. What goes into people's heads is just as important as what goes into their stomachs."

The two speakers indicated these changes which they'd like to see incorporated in the Mundt-Nixon bill: opportunity for those accused of being Communists to have an impartial hearing before a board; a statute of limitations protecting persons who leave the CP; a clearer definition of Communism in terms of "subservience to a foreign political group and not ideology."

AFL President William Green called for political action to defeat the supporters of the Taft-Hartley law, which already, he maintained, is "breaking apart at the seams." He urged the government to lift the embargo on arms to the new Jewish state of Israel.

-LPA-

'Stalin Endorses Wallace'--Hoffmann

Philadelphia (LPA) - The exchange of correspondence between Russian Premier Stalin and third party candidate Henry Wallace brought comment last week from President Sal B. Hoffmann of the Upholsterers Int'l Union-AFL. "The courtship in the newspapers between Joe and Henry has reached a whirlwind finish with Wallace clasped to the bosom of the man who rules the greatest slave state in the history of the world," Hoffmann remarked. He compared a Wallace administration dealing with Stalin with the situation that would prevail if the unions dropped their anti-Taft-Hartley campaign, but secured the right to name management's representatives at the bargaining table.

-LPA-

Two-Months Meat Strike Is Over

Chicago (LPA) - After two months of bitter industrial warfare the strike of 100,000 members of the United Packinghouse Workers-CIO is over. Workers are returning to their jobs in plants of all the "big four" and several score of independent packinghouses except those of Wilson & Co.

Settlement was finally agreed to on the basis of a 9¢ an hour pay boost, retroactive to March 16, when the strike began, retention of all seniority rights by strikers, and arbitration on the rehiring of strikers accused of unlawful action during the heated dispute.

Wilson & Co. refused to agree to the third stipulation, reserving to itself the right to judge the cases of all it thinks fought too hard, and the strike against Wilson continues.

The companies offered 9¢ prior to the outbreak of the strike and have uniformly refused to bargain in good faith on the basis of the union's brief explaining its 29¢ an hour demand. A Presidential fact finding board set up when the strike began conceded the reasonableness of the union's case, but even this did not budge the profit-swollen packing industry in its determination to hold wage raises to a minimum.

Repeated efforts by the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service to reach a settlement broke down on the basis of corporation resistance.

From the start the "big four" and their satellites were resolved to use the strike to weaken if not break the union. Strike breakers were recruited. No genuine bargaining was forthcoming. Friendly local magistrates were successfully appealed to for anti-picketing injunctions.

Thruout the country local government officials allied themselves with the packers against UPW. Literally scores of injunctions were issued. In Kansas City police beat up 110 strikers, and for weeks the US Justice Dep't ignored CIO President Philip Murray's demand for an investigation.

But as the strike was ending a subcommittee of the House Labor Committee, headed by the insanely anti-union Rep. Clare Hoffman (R.,Mich.) arrived in Chicago to investigate strike violence. The subcommittee was created in the midst of the public outcry against the Kansas City police brutality. But by the time Hoffman got moving he had turned it into an investigation of picket line incidents.

In two states--Iowa and Minnesota--Nat'l Guard units, complete with tanks and local brasshats were called out against the packinghouse workers. It is the first case of national guard interference since before World War II.

The justice of the strikers' case was attested to by both Catholic and Protestant religious leaders. But the combined weight of meat combine and subservient local authorities was too much for the strikers whose families have to eat.

By holding their lines firm, however, they beat the company's attempt to destroy their union.

-LPA-

European Transportation Recovery Planned By ITF

London (LPA) - The March meeting in London of all trade unions anxious to assist in the success of the European recovery program was followed last month by a special conference of the Int'l Transportworkers Federation. Held in Luxemburg, its purpose was to secure a maximum of cooperation among seamen, railway workers and longshoremen in their efforts to make the Marshall plan work.

Over 80 democratic unions of transportworkers are affiliated with the ITF. Bert Jewell, the international representative of the Railway Labor Executives Ass'n. is the American member of ITF's board.

The transportworkers spokesmen unanimously recorded their gratitude for "the openhandedness of the American government which has offered economic help on a hitherto unheard of scale." But the success of the program depends primarily upon two things, the trade unionists pointed out: "the support given to it by the workers in the participating countries," and "a large measure of economic integration of Europe."

(MORE)

In their own field, the transport workers are not satisfied with progress towards inter-European cooperation. "Since the end of the war no significant progress has been made in the organization of European transport to further the economic integration of Europe."

Better connections with neglected areas, standardization of equipment, a repair program, planned development of power facilities used in transportation, and voluntary movement of labor to overcome shortages of skilled men are necessary, the ITF pointed out. It called upon its constituent unions to "press strongly for a democratically constituted European Transport Authority."

The ITF leaders voiced their determination to do all in their power to aid democratic forces in the labor movement throughout the world, noting ITF's failure to work out an understanding with the World Federation of Trade Unions whereby ITF might affiliate with WFTU without losing its autonomy. Material aid was pledged to new non-Communist CGT-FO in France.

Bert Jewell reported on the formation of the Confederation of Inter-American Trade Unions (CIT), and the ITF voted to send Trifon Gomez, a member of its executive committee and leader of the outlawed Spanish trade unions, to Latin America to secure participation by its transport unions in ITF.

Another resolution called upon the British and American authorities in Germany to cease diverting traffic in andout of their zones from its traditional routes thru Dutch and Belgian ports.

-LPA-

- -

NOTE TO EDITORS: For other phone wages information, see story on fact-finders in AUTW dispute, Unions & Govt. section

- -

Phone Unions Okay Three-Year Contract

Washington (LPA) - Four more divisions of Communications Workers of America-unaffiliated last week approved contracts providing for fringe improvements, running for three years, with two possible reopenings for wages. No immediate across-the-board wage increases were won from the Bell system companies.

Following rapidly on the settlement won by traffic employes in the District of Columbia, came similar contracts in Virginia for all departments, Wisconsin for traffic and plant workers, for Illinois traffic workers. In Illinois, 2300 of the 11,000 operators won raises ranging from $1 to $5 thru reclassification of their present jobs.

In Washington, the 3000 traffic workers approved a contract which provides for reopening of the wage provisions at any time during the next 12 months by either company or union, and cancellation at the end of the first year if no agreement is reached on wages. If agreement is reached, the contract will continue in force, but may be reopened on wages again at the end of another 12 months.

-LPA

Hosiery Union Still Aids PAC

New York (LPA) - More than 200 delegates to the 36th annual convention of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers were urged by Vice President Alfred Hoffman to cooperate with the CIO Political Action Committee.

"The most drastic wave of reaction against unionism" in US history is predicted by Hoffman in the year ahead, and the hosiery unionists were urged to combat this on the political front.

The AFHW, formerly a part of the Textile Workers Union of America, was dropped by the parent union earlier this month, as a result of a dispute over per capita payments.

-LPA-

Economists Say Steel Capacity Must Increase

Washington (LPA) - CIO President Philip Murray's contention that our steel producing capacity must be expanded sharply received support from a group of the nation's leading economists last week. A report issued by Our Economy, Inc., on whose board are Robert R. Nathan, Leon Henderson, Isador Lubin, Lauchlin Currie and Randolph Paul, explains that increased ingot production is needed not only to meet defense and foreign policy requirements, but also to insure full employment and a rising standard of living when these programs are completed.

Nearly a year ago, the report recalls, United Auto Workers-CIO President Walter Reuther pointed out that from six to seven million cars and trucks can be marketed annually, but because of the shortage of steel only five million are being produced. Shortages in oil, housing, railroad equipment, as well as automobiles can be traced to the lack of sufficient steel.

All in all, steel using industries could produce 15% more if there was enough basic steel. The higher rate of productivity that would result from ample stocks of steel, and more regular employment for the industry's labor force, would mean that more production of durable goods wouldn't require shifting substantial numbers of workers into them from other industries.

Strikes are not, despite the claims of some industrialists, responsible for the steel shortage. Since the end of the war average peace-time use of existing capacity has been maintained, the report points out.

Nor should we be impressed by the industry's claim that the shortage is a temporary one. This will prove true only if there is a depression. Per capita consumption of steel has steadily increased since 1900, when it was 300 pounds per American. By 1941 the rate was 1200 per person, and the demand in 1947 was for 1300, but production fell about 130 short of meeting that need.

"Big steel" says that in 1960 we'll only need 62,000,000 tons of steel per year. Presuming a population of 162,000,000 then, the per capita average consumption will have declined to the 1929 level.

The Commerce Dep't has estimated that in 1950 we'll need 98,000,000 tons, and the former New Deal economists think that by 1960 our requirements will be almost double "big steel's" figure. They point out that if "big steel" is right on the question of how much of its product we'll be using there will be about 14,000,000 people unemployed in 1960.

But, as the report comments, "It seems unreasonable to assume that we are nearing the point where we will have satisfied the demand for an increasing total of consumer durable goods. Many families in America have never had a car, a telephone, a washing machine, modern sanitary facilities, or decent housing. We have a long way to go before we can consider production only for replacement purposes.

"Certainly the next ten years of steel demand will be high if we want to maintain full employment and gradually increase and extend the standard of living for our citizens."

The steel industry is fearful of a repetition of the 1929 depression, when production averaged 40% of capacity, and sometimes only 20%. It has adopted "a philosophy of controlled scarcity," and during the war and since has refused to expand basic production facilities. So the government had to spend a billion dollars to "induce" the industry to expand production 10,000,000 tons in the war years.

One industry claim that must be conceded is that the cost of expanding capacity is high. But steel profits have been high too, and new facilities may be more efficient than present equipment, and so result in a higher profit rate once in operation.

About 1,000,000 tons of steel are required to increase capacity 5,000,000 tons. But with no end of the shortage in sight among both civilian and informed government officials the feeling is growing that the long-run benefits of expansion more than justify the diversion of some steel to plant construction now.

Governmental action--either thru providing incentives to the reluctant industry or direct investment by the government--are required to get the steel we need, the report concludes. "Our capacity to produce steel will not be increased sufficiently to meet our needs within the next few years if the expansion of facilities is left to the decision of the steel companies."

Fur Workers For Wallace

Atlantic City (LPA) - The Int'l Fur & Leather Workers-CIO last week declared itself firmly in the Wallace for President camp. Only a handful of delegates to the convention of the traditionally left-wing controlled union objected to the departure from national CIO policy.

Its president, Ben Gold, and vice-president, Irving Potash, are both members of the Communist Party National Committee. Both are, of course, enthusiastic supporters of Henry Wallace this year.

Gold told delegates that he did not believe reports that CIO President Philip Murray plans to drive the "left wing" unions out of the CIO. For the time being, at least, he quelled rumors that the Communist-led unions intend to bolt.

Albert Fitzgerald, president of the United Electrical Workers-CIO, largest of the left-wing unions, who denies any personal connection with the CP, denounced CIO President Philip Murray, United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther, and Textile Workers President Emil Rieve for their support of the Marshall plan for European recovery and their refusal to endorse the Wallace campaign.

Based originally on the luxury fur industry in Manhattan, where Gold took the lead in rebuilding a badly beaten union in the 1930's, the Fur Workers now have 100,000 members including four locals of animal trappers in Louisiana, and a solid bargaining position in the industry.

UNIONS and GOVERNMENT
LPA
LABOR & ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES

A News Service from Washington for Trade Union Papers
1706 G Street, N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Vol. IV No. 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

Rail Talks Suspended
Industry Refuses Good Faith Bargaining Offers

Washington (LPA) - As their lawyers prepared to fight a long-term anti-strike injunction, last week the chiefs of three embattled railway unions terminated another round in their fight to make rail management bargain in good faith.

Following the nominal seizure of the railroads by the Army, a federal court issued a temporary anti-strike order against the Engineers', the Firemen's and the Switchmen's Unions. The brotherhoods immediately stated that they would obey the court order, altho they doubt its legality.

Then they settled down to another long drawn out series of meetings with railroad managers.

But again the industry refused to bargain in good faith. Concession after concession was offered by the union leaders--combinations of downward revisions of demands. Not a single counter offer was forthcoming from the employers.

Finally their reply was: "You know the emergency board report; take it or leave it."

This is the report that the unions rejected before issuing their strike notices. As the three presidents, Alvanley Johnston of the Engineers, David Robertson of the Firemen, and A. J. Glover of the Switchmen, remarked in their press conference after the phoney negotiations were over: "That is not bargaining, and it is obvious that at no time during the four days did management have any intention of bargaining either in spirit or in fact."

This week Judge T. Alan Goldsborough, the man the miners know so well, will hear the unions and the government contest the legality of the government's request for a long-term injunction against a rail strike.

It is the hope of this injunction, the rail labor chiefs believe, that stiffens management in its refusal to bargain. They charge that the employers "are determined that the voluntary spirit of the Railway Labor Act shall be converted into compulsion."

Management's recalcitrance has not been limited to the wage issue. It has stood just as firm against union demands for changes in working rules.

The emergency board report called for a 15½¢ wage increase, and denied most of the working rules changes the unions have asked for.

These rules have a dull, technical sound to the average citizen. But to railway workers they mean the difference between equal pay for men doing similar work, and inequitable differences between groups of employes. Sometimes they mean the difference between an engineman's sleeping in a decent bed, or working a schedule which forces him to spend his sleeping hours in a freight engine.

It was men who don't understand these rules who wrote the government report the union leaders point out.

-LPA-

State Anti-Labor
Laws Win At NLRB

Washington (LPA) - The NLRB will not conduct union shop elections in any of the 13 states which prohibit union security contracts, the board decided last week. In a three to two decision the board interpreted Section 14b of the Taft-Hartley law as a barrier to its holding union shop polls in those states, mostly in the south, even when employers are agreeable to the ballot's being conducted.

Section 14b of the 1947 union-baiting law says: "Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any state or territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by state or territorial law."

Board members Gray, Murdock, and Reynolds think that this constitutes a barrier against the board's conducting elections to determine the attitude of workers in interstate commerce towards the union shop. Chairman Herzog and member Houston point out that their position amounts to saying that Congress delegated its power to the individual states making a state offense also a federal offense.

A trick point in the case was the fact that involved was a food store chain--Giant Food Shopping Centers--operating stores in Virginia where there is a local law against the closed shop and in Washington D. C. where union security contracts are permitted. The Washington and Virginia shops have constituted a single bargaining unit.

The majority ruled that the unit for general collective bargaining representation and for union security contracts need not be identical. So, the Retail Clerks-AFL will have to work out two contracts, where one has done the job before.

In another decision handed down this week the board refused to conduct collective bargaining representative elections for the Retail Clerks and the Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen-AFL in a 13-store chain in Texas. It is said that the company is not in interstate commerce.

-LPA-

- -
NOTE TO EDITORS: Repeat from Midweek Issue, May 18
- -

Anti-Union Speeches
Sanctioned By NLRB

Washington (LPA) - Reversing a decision of the Wagner Act days, the NLRB last week ruled that it is not an unfair labor practice for an employer to compel workers to listen to anti-union harangues on the eve of a collective bargaining agent election.

The section of the Taft-Hartley law guaranteeing "free speech" to employers was cited by the board as its reason for reversing the previous ban on compulsory attendance at anti-union "pep talks."

The Babcock and Wilcox Co. of Augusta, Ga., "invited" all its employes to listen to the opinions of plant superintendent Carl Claus shortly before the holding of an NLRB vote. Endeavoring to organize the plant was the United Stone & Allied Products Workers-CIO.

In his first speech to the workers, Claus, while attacking the union, asserted that the workers were perfectly free to vote for it and that the company would not hold pro-union votes against them. But his later addresses omitted these reassurances.

A trial examiner ruled that forcing the employes to listed to these speeches on the eve of the election, plus less formal efforts of other supervisors to discourage the workers from voting union constituted coercion.

But citing the Taft-Hartley provision, and the remarks on employers' free speech in Congress when the 1947 anti-union law was being debated, the board overruled him.

-LPA-

NOTE TO EDITORS: First eight paragraphs are repeated from Midweek Issue, May 18.

Taft-Hartley Test
On Way To Courts

Washington (LPA) - The NLRB last week rejected the United Steelworkers-CIO's challenge of the constitutionality of the non-Communist affidavit section of the Taft-Hartley law. The road for a clear-cut test of the issue in the Federal courts is now open.

Next round will be fought in the federal circuit court in Chicago.

The case is based upon an April NLRB decision in which the board instructed the Inland Steel Co. to bargain with the union on pension programs--conditional upon USA's filing the Communist disclaimers.

CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg asked the board to make its order unconditional. USA has "complied with all those provisions of the act which are not illegal or unconstitutional," the union's brief said.

USA told the board that CIO President Philip Murray and other steelworkers' officers had not filed the non-Communist oaths "for the sole reason that the provisions of Section 9h are illegal, unconstitutional and void." They interfere with unions' exercising the basic freedoms guaranteed in the Bill of Rights, the Steelworkers maintain.

Financial data also required by the Taft-Hartley law from unions using the NLRB has already been submitted by the Steelworkers' international union and the locals of Inland Steel employes. So the test is confined to the non-Communist affidavit section.

Last week's convention of the USA in Boston authorized the union's executive board to decide whether or not to file the affidavits. The 41-man committee decided to press the test case on the Taft-Hartley section which had already been initiated by Goldberg.

No question of Communist tendencies among the Steelworkers' representatives is involved. The convention voted overwhelmingly to make it impossible for a Communist to obtain union office. USA's action is based upon its firm conviction that this part of the 1947 labor-baiting act is unconstitutional.

Meanwhile, the Nat'l Maritime Union-CIO, whose case against the non-Communist section of T-H was rejected by a special three-man federal court, has appealed to the US Supreme Court.

Last week NMU asked the highest court to declare the section unconstitutional, and to issue an injunction preventing the NLRB from conducting an election in the shipping industry without the NMU on the ballot. The sailor's union is also questioning the validity of the requirement that unions file financial data.

-LPA-

Unions Don't Have To Pay Non-Strikers

Washington (LPA) - An NLRB trial examiner said this week that unions don't have to pay non-strikers for wages lost because pickets kept them away from their jobs.

General Counsel Robert Denham's office had said that workers kept off the job against their wishes by mass picketing, or threats by pickets, should be reimbursed by the union. It is similar he said to the case of the boss' having to pay back wages to a man fired illegally.

But examiner William F. Scharnikow pointed out that while a worker discharged for union activity has no way to get his wages back without legal assistance non-strikers kept out of a plant by pickets "may immediately secure entrance to the plant with protection from the police."

The case arose out of a strike against a Cumberland, Md., plant by the United Furniture Workers-CIO.

(MORE)

Sharnikow found, however, that the strikers, with knowledge of their local and the UFW, threatened non-strikers, and forcibly prevented them from crossing the picket line. He said that the union must be held responsible for this, and ordered it to "cease and desist."

-LPA-

Employers Can't Force NLRB Votes

Washington (LPA) - The NLRB ruled in several cases last week that if a union does not claim to represent workers in a particular plant the employer cannot force the calling of a collective bargaining election.

Key case was the one brought by the Ny-Lint Tool & Manufacturing Co. in an attempt to prove that the Int'l Association of Machinists doesn't represent all its employes. IAM told the board that it doesn't claim the right to be exclusive bargaining agent in the Ny-Lint plant. Therefore NLRB ruled that no election is necessary.

Board member Reynolds dissented. He recognized that the ruling destroys one of the hopes of the Taft-Hartleyites--that by giving employers as well as unions the right to petition for elections the unions might have to submit to a ballot at an unfavorable time. Under the law the union is not then allowed to call for another vote for a year.

-LPA-

Unions Pull Out Of Citizenship Meeting
Featuring Richberg

Washington (LPA) - The pious words about good citizenship uttered by speaker after speaker at the third Nat'l Conference on Citizenship, held here last week, were twice broken by sharp dissents by spokesmen for organized labor.

Although AFL President William Green and CIO President Philip Murray were both on one of the three "front" committees listed in the Conference program, neither was adequately consulted on plans for the sessions, union officials say.

CIO delegates pulled out before sessions began, because of the "unrepresentative and prejudiced composition of the program." They said it was "totally lacking in representation from labor and other democratic groups whose record in the fight for progressive social legislation is second to none."

The choice of Donald Richberg, anti-labor lawyer who also has vigorously opposed FEPC legislation, as final speaker was attacked both by the CIO and the AFL.

AFL Legislative Representative Lewis Hines found Richberg's speech too much to stomach. He demanded the floor after the session, and the 700 delegates heard him charge that "Mr. Richberg collaborates with labor's enemies on the Hill, and I object to his having this opportunity to circulate propaganda against organized labor."

Richberg had told the Conference referring to so-called union monopolies, that "The abuses of this labor power by many labor leaders in recent years, the recklessness with which the entire public interest has been sacrificed, even in time of war, to advance the private interests of well-organized minorities, have made it plain that the dominance of the general welfare must be re-established by law."

Only last week, Richberg testified in favor of stricter curbs on unions before the House Labor Committee.

The conference was sponsored jointly by the Justice Dep't and the Nat'l Education Association.

-LPA-

Fact Finders Named
By Truman To Report
On Long Lines Fight

Washington (LPA) - The three members of the fact-finding board appointed by President Truman in the dispute between a CIO union and the long lines department of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. are working this week and next, against the June 8 deadline set for their report by the White House.

The fact-finders, named under the Taft-Hartley law, are Sumner Slichter, Harvard economics professor, Aaron Horvitz, New York labor relations expert, and Charles A. Horsky, Washington attorney.

The American Union of Telephone Workers-CIO greeted the naming of fact-finders as an "opportunity to air the facts of the case and to bring the telephone workers' story to the public's attention."

President John J. Moran said, "An impartial investigation will prove our contention that the giant telephone monopoly has been remiss in its obligations to the workers, that it has refused to bargain fairly and that the wages of the workers are lagging behind those of workers in other industries."

Spokesmen for AT&T were not so enthusiastic about Truman's move to avert a threatened strike of about 25,000 long lines workers covered by AUTW negotiations. They expressed surprise that Truman had acted without consulting the company. Negotiations have been deadlocked since May 8 when the last contract expired.

-LPA-

- -

NOTE TO EDITORS: First five paragraphs are repeated from Midweek Issue, May 18

- -

AFL Says CIO Should Quit WFTU To Assist
ERP Administration

Milwaukee (LPA) - AFL President William Green last week told Paul Hoffman, Economic Cooperation Administrator, that the AFL would not go along with Joint AFL-CIO representation in the Marshall plan agency so long as CIO continues a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Hoffman is reported to have asked the AFL executive council to give him a list of names from which he might pick an AFL spokesman to serve as labor adviser in the Washington headquarters of ECA. A CIO man was to get the corresponding job on roving ambassador Averill Harriman's Paris staff.

The AFL position is that the strong Communist anti-Marshall plan influences within WFTU make it "inconsistent and contradictory" to give CIO the sort of representation Hoffman proposes so long as CIO is affiliated with WFTU. Green said that the AFL did not object to cooperation with CIO as such, and said that he thought CIO's support of the Marshall plan should prompt it to quit the international body which includes the Russian and other Communist-dominated unions.

The WFTU, the AFL believes, "is definitely and uncompromisingly opposed to the Marshall plan." Continued AFL support of the program was pledged to Hoffman.

To date no announcement has been made of labor representatives either on the public advisory board which will review the progress of the European recovery program, or on the actual staff of the agency.

The European office of the AFL in Brussels last week released a statement declaring that the WFTU "can only serve as an instrument for undermining democracy, while conveniently silencing any voice of protest against Soviet tyranny."

And radio Moscow, true to form, accused the leaders of the AFL of promoting "gangsterism and savage terror" in an effort to be "more reactionary than the capitalists."

-LPA-

- -
NOTE TO EDITORS: Repeat from Midweek Issue, May 18
- -

Unions Hail Jewish State

New York (LPA) - Organized labor last week hailed the establishment of the new state of Israel and demanded the lifting of the arms embargo to permit the Jewish militia to defend itself in battle with Arab invaders.

At a rally sponsored by the Nat'l Committee for Labor Palestine, Jacob Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO, said that several units of the union were prepared to purchase arms for the Jewish militia if such action is legalized.

William Collins of the N. Y. Federation of Labor read a telegram from AFL President William Green which said that the United Nations is under obligation to support the partition of Palestine to which it had agreed.

"I strongly urge that a full measure of support be extended to the Jewish people in Palestine. They should be supplied with arms and fighting equipment in full measure," Green's message said.

CIO Organization Director Allan Haywood delivered President Philip Murray's declaration that "the Jewish state will offer a home to the homeless--to the most persecuted group of the weary men and women, salvaged from the Hitler extermination camps."

The meeting unanimously praised the role of Histadrut, the Jewish labor federation, in creating the Palestinian community. It congratulated President Truman on his prompt recognition of Israel, and called for a lifting of the embargo on arms shipments to the new state.

Over the signature of its chairman, Adolph Held, and its treasurer, David Dubinsky, president of the Int'l Ladies Garment Workers Union-AFL, the Jewish Labor Committee congratulated the veteran Zionist leader, Dr. Chaim Weizmann on his election as president of Israel. "No man living has contributed so much towards its creation as you," they told the universally respected Jewish statesman.

-LPA-

Steel Trust Worried By Court Decision

Washington (LPA) - Steel company moguls and their high-priced lawyers are feeling more than a little uneasy this week. The US Court of Appeals in Chicago has just ruled for the Federal Trade Commission against the Rigid Steel Conduit Ass'n on a basing point case, a case very similar to the one that FTC is preparing against the big steel companies and their front, the American Iron and Steel Institute.

The circuit court said that the practice of a number of companies using the same basing-point price system constitutes an "unfair method of competition" even if full-fledged conspiracy cannot be proved. It followed the recent Supreme Court decision against the cement trust that said FTC has the power to prohibit such practices even when the conduct of the individual companies fall short of clear violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

"Each conduit seller knows that each of the other sellers is using the basing point formula," the court said. "Each knows that by using it he will be able to quote identical delivered prices and thus present a condition of matched prices under which purchasers are isolated and deprived of choice among sellers so far as price advantage is concerned."

That the operation of the association is a "conspiracy" the court didn't really doubt, but it said: "Whether there was conspiracy or not, in determining if such a finding is supported, it is not necessary that there be direct proof of an agreement. Such an agreement may be shown by circumstantial evidence.

"The record clearly establishes the fact that conduit manufacturers controlling 93% of the industry use a system under which they quote only delivered prices which are determined in accordance with a formula consisting of a base price at Pittsburgh or Chicago plus rail freight; purchasers everywhere were unable to find price advantages anywhere."

(MORE)

Among the big companies that were co-defendants with the association are: General Electric, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Republic Steel.

Steel barons know that the practices condemned in this case are modelled upon "big steel's" traditional "Pittsburgh basing-point" system for all primary steel products.

-LPA-

Living Costs Soar To New Alltime High

Washington (LPA) - There's little that's cheering in the government reports on the cost of living. The consumers' price index hit an all-time high on April 15, and more recent wholesale indexes show prices still inching upward. And the Federal Reserve Board predicts higher prices ahead.

With increased spending for the military, a federal deficit, and a larger amount of bank loans, the Federal Reserve Board asserts that "it would be difficult to avoid further increases in prices."

As for food, all of these factors will also press prices higher, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics predicts for the months ahead.

On the cost-of-living front, between mid-March and mid-April, retail prices of goods purchased by moderate-income families in large cities advanced 1.4% on the average, and more than offset the price decline that took place from January to March. The Bureau of Labor Statistics found that retail food prices rose 2.8% in the one month alone, to a point 207.9% of the pre-war (1935-1939) average. Fresh fruits and vegetables went up 6.6%; meats rose 5.2% and dairy products rose 2.3%.

The "miscellaneous" list--newspapers, carfare, hospital and doctors' fees, motor oil, movies, telephones--went up 1.1% in the month.

-LPA-

AFL Hits Lilienthal For Refusal To Act As Strike Looms At Atomic Plant

Washington (LPA) - In the face of a June 7 strike date, there is a deadlock between the Carbide & Carbon Chemical Corp, and the Atomic Trades & Labor Council-AFL over a contract at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory. A Presidential fact-finding board reported last week that no progress had been made during a 60 day "cooling off period."

The AFL unions involved charge that the Atomic Energy Commission has full power to avert a crisis at the Laboratory but has failed to take action. AEC head David E. Lilienthal takes the position that Carbide Corp. has full power to handle its own labor disputes.

The situation has shaped up this way:

On March 1, Carbide & Carbon took over the management of the Oak Ridge laboratory from Monsanto Chemical Co. When it came to signing a contract, Carbide wanted to lower the standards under which 800 production workers and 200 research peopoe had been working.

When bargaining had failed completely, the Atomic Trades & Labor Council announced that they would strike, if necessary, to prevent the lowering of working conditions at the laboratory.

At that point, President Truman, for the first time, used his powers under the Taft-Hartley Act to set up a fact-finding board to investigate the situation. The board reported that a strike was pending that endangered the national safety, so a Federal Court issued an injunction preventing the union from striking.

The injunction has been in force for sixty days now, during which time the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service has attempted to settle the dispute but without success.

The next step under Taft-Hartley is for the NLRB to hold a vote asking the employes of the laboratory whether they are willing to accept Carbide's offer. If they are not willing to accept the offer they will be free to strike on June 7.

(MORE)

The AFL unions, while trying to negotiate, also asked the AEC to set up a uniform program of labor conditions for the atomic plants. Lilienthal has refused, saying that contractors must make their own decisions in operating atomic plants.

Kenneth Scott, representing the Atomic Trades & Labor Council, said that he was amazed at Lilienthal's statement to the fact-finding board. "In effect," said Scott, "he backed the company in its effort to blackjack the 900 workers into accepting conditions worse than they have now. Here was the government, instead of exercising authority over its own plants, giving 'carte blanche' to the private contractors."

"Our members are aroused," he added, "and I know they won't accept any destructions of the gains they have made. They don't want to strike, but unless a solution is worked out they may have no alternative."

-LPA-

CAPTION COPY
Vol. IV No. 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES
1706 G St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

WHAT'S TO LAUGH? Gerard, of the Henry Morgan radio show would probably ask that of Sen. Robert Taft (R.,O.) who was with Morgan (right) at the National Celebrities Golf Tournament. Maybe Henry was trying to influence the Senator with a repeat of the speech he gave the night before at the Young Democrats Dinner on "10 Reasons Why I Wouldn't Be President."

-LPA-

From a WASHINGTON WINDOW
By MARION H. HEDGES

Labor Press Associates
1706 G Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Volume IV No 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

Congress' Assumed Role

by M. H. Hedges
LPA Columnist

No student of political science, or useful citizen, can watch the present Congress, for long, without being aware that Congress has cut out a new role of power for itself. This might be described as assumption of executive and police power.

Our American Constitution is clear upon two points: (1) the division of functions as between legislative, executive and judicial branches of the government, and (2) the series of checks and balances set up as between these branches of the government.

The Congress, predominantly Republican, has seen an opportunity to weaken the President's position by taking over power usually accorded the Chief Executive. Here are some of the encroachments made by the Congress.

(1) Has invaded the administration of the Federal Security Agency and the Labor Dep't by cutting appropriations to a level almost unvelievable, and forcing administrative policies out of keeping with overall policy.

(2) Has undertaken to direct the TVA through a Congressional committee.

(3) Has appointed "watchdog" committees to see that administration of the Taft-Hartley measure is to its liking.

(4) Has intimidated government workers and private citizens by snooping campaigns under the guise of un-American activities.

(5) Has worked out cordial arrangements with big business corporation lobbyists.

This makes a difficult problem for the American voter.

The American Constitution establishes the Congress as a body of representatives of the American people. The Congress is the very vitals of democracy. It must be kept strong, healthy, and responsive to the people's will. An attack upon the present Congress may be made to look like an attack on representative government. But if the representative body has fallen into the hands of specialized interests, it must be brought back to its primal function of representing the will of the people.

When we say that Congress now is usurping the functions of the executive, we must not forget that not very long ago the Congress was crying that the Executive branch of the government was replacing Congress.

The Congress, too, has strong statesmanlike men in it on both sides of the aisle. Senator Aiken, Senator Morse, even Senator Vandenberg are men of excellent timber that put their country above narrow party interest.

Senator Thomas, Senator Cooper, and Senator Sparkman are men of sound judgement and public spirit. But in the main, the Congress is in the hands of narrow men, who seem to consult self-interest above public interest.

The problem of labor is where to put its votes to do the most good. The changing of five faces in the Senate will gove the Senate an entirely new complexion, and new direction. One hundred new fades in the House will make the Congress a strong, representative body.

The Congress can be made to play a new vitalizing role in government, but it it can not do that if it is allowed to become an extra-Constitutional body trying to make policy, and to rule at the same time.

-LPA-

WASHINGTON LABOR REPORT
by Bradford V. Carter LPA

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES
A News Service from Washington for Trade Union Papers
1706 G Street, N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Vol. IV No1 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

$10,000-A Year Men Fight 75¢ Wage Floor

by Bradford V. Carter
LPA Columnist

During a dull moment in the Senate Labor Subcommittee hearings on the wages and hours law, the two Senators on the podium sat unobtrusively doodling on the impressive-looking prints of no-doubt important laws. Most of the men and women at the press table were idly making squares and circles and various pieces of widgets that you make out of cigarette-package aluminum foil.

But one of the reporters was jotting down figures in a really earnest fashion. The witness was still droning on about the dangers of paying 40¢ an hour, and overtime after 40 hours, in the ice industry. So, we turned to the enterprising reporter and asked, "What are you trying to prove?"

"You know how much this fellow gets paid for this?" he wrote on his yellow copy paper. "For a 60-hour week, he's getting $3.20 an hour. If he's not that ambitious, for a 40-hour week, he's getting $4.80 an hour."

William T. Jobe, counsel for the Nat'l Association of Ice Industries, gets a salary of $10,000 a year. He is only one of 25 or 30 industry lobbyists who carefully follow developments on the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Another high-priced lobbyist who's fighting against a 75¢-an-hour minimum wage is Tyre Taylor, who speaks for the southern cotton processing and manufacturing interests in Congress. Taylor soberly told Sen. Ball and the Senate subcommittee that many southern industrial plants would have to close up if a 75¢ minimum wage was adopted.

This spokesman for the penniless southern manufacturers earns the paltry sum of $15,450 a year for representing the Southern Industrial Council, and another $10,000 a year for lobbying against oleo taxes for the Nat'l Association of Retail Grocers. That, counting 60 hours a week, 52 weeks a year of exhausting work (overtime is the work in the Statler and Mayflower cocktail lounges) comes to about $8 an hour.

There are others. There's Joseph King, counsel of the Nat'l Retail Lumber Dealers Association, who makes $9000 a year plus expenses. There are the lobbyists for the American Bakers Ass'n, the Nat'l Federation of American Shipping Inc. (spending $45,000 this year on legislation), the American Retail Coal Ass'n and the American Mining Congress. The retail lumber dealers, the southern pine industry operators--who still in many cases pay 25¢ and 30¢ an hour where they can get away with it--and the national lumber manufacturers, all have their faithful retainers who work hard to kill any improvement of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

There's no doubt that the industry lobbyists have earned their money in this session of Congress. There is no sign that any changes will be made in the Fair Labor Standards Act, either to increase the present absurd minimum wage of 40¢ an hour, or to extend coverage to many industries now immune from the requirements of the law.

Cynical reporters, who perforce follow the operations of the lobbyists on Capitol Hill--though not into the more expensive haunts at the Statler and the old-time hostelries--don't give the credit to the industry spokesmen alone. In this 80th Congress, the newsmen find, Congressmen come cheap.

-LPA-

Vol. IV No. 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

-LPA-

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES
1706 G Street N W
Washington 6, D. C.

- - - - - - - - - - - -

' LONDON LABOR REPORT '
' by David Williams '

WFTU Wins New Lease On Life

London (LPA) - The World Federation of Trade Unions has taken a fresh hold on life. This is the upshot of its recent meeting at Rome, marked by some unusually frank speaking on the part of American, English, and western European delegates.

This outcome was no surprise to careful observers in London. It may be taken for granted that theBritish Trades Union Congress has no desire to take the lead in breaking up the WFTU, any more than the State Department would take the lead in breaking up the United Nations. In both cases, no political strategist in his senses would give the Russians such a trmendous propaganda advantage.

On the part of the Russians, there are strong reasons against any action which would threaten the existence of the WFTU. So long as it remains in existence, it is a barrier to the organization of any other world-wide trade union center, particularly to any center which the AFL might seek to establish.

Further, the Russians still believe that the WFTU will help them establish Communist control of the trade unions in all of Germany, although the Rome decision to postpone the calling of an all-German trade union congress makes this objective more remote than it was. They also believe that through the WFTU they can carry Communist doctrine to the rapidly developing uhions in the colonial world.

The attitude of the TUC is, quite naturally, largely shaped by the feelings of rank-and-file unionists. British workers have, in overwhelming numbers, given their loyalty to the Labour Party, and have firmly rejected the bids of the Communist Party for their support. But they have, at the same time, maintained a long tradition of friendship for the Soviet Union and for Russian workers. Both previous Labour governments (those of 1924 and of 1929-31) were notable for the establishment of more friendly relations with Moscow.

Events of the past three years have cast a distinct chill on this long-standing friendship. But public opinion polls show that this change is superficial, and characterized by disappointment and bewilderment rather than deep-seated prejudice. A few gestures of friendship from the Moscow rulers could change the situation overnight.

Against this background, one can see the error of American suggestions that WFTU membership has meant increased Communist influence in British unions. Quite the contrary. If the leaders of the TUC rejected the WFTU, they would provide Communist candidates for trade union offices with a very useful campaigning slogan. On a platform calling for WFTU membership, such candidates could draw many, many non-Communist votes.

The leadership, of course, would prevail. But when the state of affairs gives the Communists some surefire campaign issues--the wage freeze, for instance--the the canny TUC leaders are not going to give them another, if they can help it.

Long-term prospects for the WFTU, however, remain grave. The divisions are deep and bitter, and the Rome compromises (and decisions to postpone many important issues) hardly to more than put veneer over the cracks. As Mr. Deakin, British President of the WFTU, said: "The problems we have failed to face still present us with obstacles to overcome which will need all our good will and energy if the WFTU is to survive."

-LPA-

Labor Limelight
Labor Press Associates

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES

A News Service from Washington for Trade Union Papers
1706 G Street, N. W. Washington 6, D. C.

Vol. IV, No. 47
Week ending May 22, 1948

NOTE TO EDITORS: The following six items are summaries of important stories in the LPA news sections this week.

NLRB Hews Strict Line

Washington (LPA) - The NLRB this week handed down three decisions which will bring comfort to anti-union employers. One interpreted Taft-Hartley's protection of employers' "free speech" to include forcing workers to listen to anti-union propaganda. Another said that a union may be held responsible for the conduct of its members on the picket line. And finally the board ruled that it has no power to conduct union shop authorization elections in the 13 states which prohibit union security contracts. Each constitutes a "strict interpretation" of the anti-labor provisions of the Taft-Hartley law.

-LPA-

Rail Parley Ends

Washington (LPA) - Consistent refusal of railroad management to bargain in good faith with the Firemen's, Engineers' and Switchmens' unions has resulted in the end of another series of contract talks. Trusting that a temporary anti-strike order will be converted into a long-term injunction, management last week refused to budge an inch from the position it took before the unions' strike call brought Army operation of the railroads.

-LPA-

Chrysler Strike Continues

Detroit (LPA) - The United Auto Workers-CIO filed strike notice for 225,000 GM employes last week while 76,000 UAW members continued their strike against the Chrysler Corp. The union announced that it would be happy to withdraw its wage demands at the Ford Motor Co. if the company would successfully exert its influence on the rest of American industrial management and upon Congress to effect a substantial rollback in the cost of living.

-LPA-

Di Giorgio Strike Head Shot

Washington (LPA) - Five shots were fired thru a window into a strike meeting of the Nat'l Farm Labor Union-AFL at Bakersfield, Calif., last week. Gov. Earl Warren has ordered a "complete investigation" of the violence in which Local President James Price was shot thru the head. NFLU President H. L. Mitchell says that it was a planned job done by hired thugs and lists three groups which might have hired them: the Di Giorgio Corp., Associated Farmers of California, and agents of the Communist controlled Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers Union-CIO.

-LPA-

Atom Strike Looms

Washington (LPA) - A Presidential fact-finding board reported last week that no progress had been made toward solving the labor dispute at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory operated by Carbide & Carbon Chemical Corp. The Atomic Trades & Labor Council-AFL has set a June 7 strike date. Union officials accuse the Atomic Energy Commission of failing to act to avert a crisis.

-LPA-

CIO Public Workers Splits

Atlantic City (LPA) - Altho numbering only a handful of delegates to the union's convention, "right wing" elements in the United Public Workers-CIO, seceded last week and proclaimed a new union of government employes that will organize the unorganized and stick to national CIO policies. They accuse the UPWA leadership headed by Abram Flaxer of being more concerned with "left wing" political maneuvers than protecting the interests of the membership.

-LPA-

Milwaukee Beer Again

Milwaukee (LPA) - The strike which stemmed the flow of Milwaukee's most famous product for 24 days ended last week when members of Local 9, Brewery Workers-CIO returned to work after voting to accept a $6.80-a-week wage boost. Delivery of Pabst, Schlitz, Blatz, Miller Gettleman and Independent beer has now been resumed.

-LPA-

Nat'l Airlines Holding Out

Washington (LPA) - Despite President Truman's appointment of an emergency board to investigate the strike of Nat'l Airlines pilots, the company is still refusing to rehire some of the striking fliers. David Behnke, president of the Airlines Pilots Ass'n-AFL said last week that the union is complying with the President's order to resume work while the board studies the case. But union-hating corporation head G. T. Baker said that the scab pilots he hired to break the strike have "permanent employment" and is rehiring the strikers only as vacancies occur.

-LPA-

- -
NOTE TO EDITORS: Repeat from Midweek Issue, May 18
- -

Wallacite Fired From PAC

Washington (LPA) - Palmer Weber, research director for the CIO Political Action Committee, was fired from his job last week by PAC Director Jack Kroll. Weber has taken a job as Southern Director of the Wallace for President campaign where he will cover the same territory he has been working for PAC. PAC is the political arm of CIO which has vigorously and repeatedly denounced the Wallace third party movement.

-LPA-

May Delegate At Oslo

New York (LPA) - Newly elected President Charles F. May of the Masters, Mates & Pilots-AFL will represent his union at the congress of the Int'l Transport Workers Federation in Oslo, Norway, beginning June 19. Capt. May is from San Francisco.

-LPA-

Medical Monopoly Again

New York (LPA) - The House of Delegates of the New York Medical Society has placed a serious barrier in the way of such consumer-sponsored health care programs as the Health Insurance Plan of New York, approved by the city government, and union-sponsored plans like those of the Int'l Ladies Garment Workers and Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The Society, which wields virtual control over hospital appointments and privileges, has "advised" its members not to participate in any except the half-dozen doctor-controlled plans approved by the Society.

-LPA-

Steel Plant Raises Wages

Syracuse (LPA) - A 10¢-an-hour wage boost was won last week from management at the local plant of Continental Can Co., which employes 700 members of the United Steelworkers-CIO. This is the first break here in the "no wage increase" solid front presented by General Electric, General Motors and Crucible Steel, all of which also have plants here.

-LPA-

Honor Labor Day Founder

Camden, N. J. (LPA) - A fitting memorial shrine to honor Peter J. McGuire, father of Labor Day and one of the founders of the AFL, is proposed by the Central Labor Union of Camden. CLU President Frank B. Hartmann says the unions will campaign for $100,000 to memorialize the labor pioneer.

-LPA-

LPA Photo Mat Service
List for May 22,1948

MATS FOR THE ATTACHED PHOTOS ARE AVAILABLE TO LPA SUBSCRIBERS ON YOUR ORDER

LABOR PRESS ASSOCIATES
1706 G Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

#670 -- 2-column

DIDN'T LAST LONG-- John L. Lewis and the mine operators opened negotiations for a new soft coal contract last week but the meetings broke up the second day when the United Mine Workers leader objected to the seating of Joseph E. Moody, president of the Southern Coal Producers Ass'n. The Southern Ass'n has asked NLRB Czar Robert Denham to obtain a federal court order forcing Lewis to bargain under the Taft-Hartley Act. (l. to r.) Charles O'Neill for the soft coal operators; Harry Moses of US Steel; UMW Secretary-Treasurer John Owens, and UMW President Lewis. (LPA)

#671 -- 1-column

ONE MEAT BALL-- The CIO Economic Outlook doesn't identify the little man in this picture but we think he's the guy in the song, who's obviously working under the present 40¢ minimum wage bill. Unions are plumping for at least a 75¢ minimum in a new bill now before the Senate Labor Committee. (LPA)

#672 -- 3-column

"RESTORING ORDER"-- Here's what happens when employers hire scabs to take jobs of men on strike for two months. The Minnesota Nat'l Guard moved into the strike-bound Swift plant in South St. Paul, Minn. last week at the order of Gov. Luther Youngdahl. A Guard captain (standing in armoured truck) told three members of United Packinghouse Workers-CIO to step aside. When they didn't, soldiers dismounted and arrested the pickets in a burst of violence. (LPA)

#673 -- 1-column

MUSEUM PIECE-- Canned music has replaced live musicians in America and, in the words of President James Caesar Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians-AFL, "The musician is being asked to play at his own funeral." This is from a new booklet "The Record On Records" in which the AFM explains how the present trend concerns the public as well as the union musician. (LPA)

#674 -- 2-column

PRESENT ECA HEAD WITH GRIEVANCE-- Paul Hoffman, Economic Cooperation Administrator, met with AFL officials last week to discuss labor participation in the European recovery program. The boys told him they refused to go along with joint AFL-CIO representation in ECA so long as CIO remained in the World Federation of Trade Unions. (l. to r.) Hoffman; George Meany, secretary-treasurer; Matthew Woll, chairman of the international relations committee, and President William Green. (LPA)

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - PLEASE USE THIS ORDER FORM - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

To : Labor Press Associates, 1706 G Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Send one mat: #670 -- $.45 ____
#671 -- .35 ____
#672 -- .55 ____
#673 -- .35 ____
#674 -- .45 ____

Send via:

__ regular mail (no additional charge) __ airmail special (25¢each) $_____ TOTAL ENCLOSED. . . . . $_____ or Bill at month's end. ._____

NAME _____ PAPER _____

ADDRESS _____ CITY,ZONE,STATE _____

The five mats listed here each week will go to you with the regular weekly service for $2.20 a week or $2.45 airmail special. Let us know if you wish to use this. You can also place standing orders for all non-CIO or non-AFL, or all one-column portraits weekly.

- -

670

674

672

